BP
file AG dinner

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

MEMORANDUM

Date: February 10, 1966

To: Vernon Jordan

From: E. T. Kehrer

Subject: Katzenbach Speech

The attached list contains the list of Labor people I would recommend be invited by VEP to the Katzenbach speech. I have included more than 10 names because I am certain some of these, although they should be invited, may not be able to attend.

ETK:sjs

Earl Davis
Phil Weightman
Al Barkan
Wilbur Hobby
Dan Powell

Saul Miller
AFL-CIO

Earl Davis
Weightman
Fannie Neal - Ala. COPE
Powell
Barkin -

Let know if can come our guest for luncheon
Formal Invitations follow

Mike Bentley
TWUA

February 15, 1966

Mr. E. L. Abercrombie
Laundry Workers Union
157 Forsyth Street, S.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Abbie:

I know you will be receiving an invitation from the Council to attend a luncheon meeting to be addressed by Attorney General Katzenbach on February 28. I simply add my own personal word of invitation and hope that you can make it. I trust it will not be too long before we can get together.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

February 15, 1966

Mr. E. T. Kehrer
Southern Office
Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
40 Marietta Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Al:

On behalf of the Southern Regional Council I want to invite you to be our guest at the luncheon meeting to be addressed by Attorney General Katzenbach.

The luncheon is now scheduled for 12:30, Monday, February 28, 1966 at the Marriott Motor Hotel. You alread know, of course, that Mr. Katzenbach will be addressing a Southwide group interested in voter registration and citizenship participation. He will take the occasion to speak to the region about the Justice Department's pâans and commitments in these important areas.

The Council, Vernon, and I want to thank you for your continued cooperation in this program as in so many others.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

SAME LETTER SENT TO:

Art Hallgren, Vice-President
Florida AFl-CIO

Victor Bussie, President
Louisiana AFL-CIO

W. M. Barbee, President
North Carolina State AFL-CIO

E. T. Kirkland, Sec.Treas.
South Carolina Labor Council, AFL-CIO

Matthew Lynch, President
Tenn. State Labor Council, AFL-CIO

(Addresses attached)

February 15, 1966

Mr. Barney Weeks, President
Alabama Labor Council, AFL-CIO
604 Lyric Building
Birmingham, Alabama 35203

Dear Barney:

I would like to invite you on behalf of the Southern Regional Council to be our guest at a luncheon at which the Attorney General of the United States will be the featured speaker. Mr. Katzenbach will be with us on February 28, 1966. Lunch will be at 12:30 in the Marriott Motor Hotel in Atlanta, at the corner of Courtland and Cain Streets.

The Attorney General will address a group of persons from throughout the South who are especially interested in voter registration and citizenship participation for all peoples. Mr. Katzenbach will speak to the entire region about the Justice Department's plans and commitments in these important areas.

Regrettably, we do not have funds to cover travel costs, but it is our hope that you will be able to join us for this occasion. It would greatly assist our planning if you would let me know if you will be with us onbthe 28th.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

February 16, 1966

Mr. Al Barkan
Committee on Political Education,
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Barkan:

The Southern Regional Council has invited Attorney General Katzenbach to address a Southwide luncheon attended by persons interested in voter registration and citizenship participation. We anticipate a major speech outlining the plans and commitments of the Justice Department in these important areas.

We expect that a number of regional labor leaders will attend the meeting but would of course like especially to have representation from C.O.P.E. itself. I fully realize that your own schedule is not likely to allow for your being an attendee at such an affair but I did want you to know that you would be most cordially welcome as our guest. Since we have worked cooperatively with a number of persons on your staff, as a matter of courtesy and because we hope that some of them may be able to attend, I am sending invitations to them. This list will include Phil Weightman, Earl Davis, Dan Powell, Wilbur Hobby, and Fannie Neal.

Regrettably, we are not able to pay travel expenses for this occasion. I do hope, however, that the travel schedule for you or some of your staff will make it possible for one or more of you to join with civil rights leaders and workers, labor leaders, and leaders from government, business and other walks of life for this meeting.

Lunch is set for 12:30, February 28, 1966, at the Marriott Motor Hotel, at the corner of Courtland and Cain Streets in Atlanta.

On another matter: I am sorry that bad weather, schedules, and health conspired to keep us from having someone from C.O.P.E. at the recent Southern Union Staff Institute sponsored by the National Institute of Labor Education in cooperation with the AFL-CIO Departments of Education and Civil Rights. It was a loss for us all; however, our final judgment was that the program as a whole was a great success.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb
bcc: Vernon Jordan

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

REGION NO. 6, CHARLES H. GILLMAN, DIRECTOR
1026 HURT BUILDING
ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA
JACKSON 4-5001-2

February 16,1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Incorporated
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia, 30303

Dear Emory:

I appreciate your invitation to attend the luncheon to be held at 12:30 p.m. on February 28,1966, but I am sorry I will be unable to attend as we have previously arranged a staff meeting and educational program in Birmingham, Alabama, for that date.

Whenever you have time, it would be nice if you could stop by the office sometime and we could talk a while.

With best wishes, I remain

Fraternally yours,

Charlie

C. H. Gillman
Regional Director

CHG:pg
oeiu-21-afl-cio

T.O. ✓

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
WM. C. BIRTHRIGHT
DAVID J. McDONALD
JOSEPH CURRAN
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
PAUL HALL
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
EMIL RIEVE
MAURICE A. HUTCHESON
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
O. A. KNIGHT
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
HERMAN D. KENIN
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. L. McFETRIDGE
A. J. HAYES
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
KARL F. FELLER
L. M. RAFTERY
JOHN J. GROGAN

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

GEORGE MEANY
WALTER P. REUTHER
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID J. McDONALD
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. F. SCHNITZLER

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D.C. NATIONAL 8-3870

February 16, 1966

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Please let me take this opportunity to thank you and the Southern Regional Council for the invitation to be your guest at the luncheon meeting to be addressed by Attorney General Katzenbach, Monday, February 28, at the Marriott Motor Hotel.

I plan to be present and look forward to hearing about the Justice Department's plans and commitments in the areas of voter registration and citizenship participation.

Very best personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

E. T. Kehrer, Southern Area Director
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department

Suite 1422
40 Marietta Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

ETK:sjs

SA ME LETTER SENT TO: Dan Powell, Memphis; Wilbur Hobby, Durham; Fannie Neal, Washington; and Earl Davis, Washington: all are with C.O.P.E., AFL-CIO.

February 17, 1966

Mr. Phil Weightman
Committee on Political Education,
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Phil:

I would like to invite you on behalf of the Southern Regional Council to be our guest at a luncheon at which the Attorney General of the United States will be the featured speaker. Mr. Katzenbach will be with us on February 28, 1966. Lunch will be at 12:30 in the Marriott Motor Hotel in Atlanta, at the corner of Courtland and Cain Streets.

The Attorney General will address a group of persons from throughout the South who are especially interested in voter registration and citizenship participation for all peoples. Mr. Katzenbach will speak to the entire region about the Justice Department's plans and commitments in these important areas.

Regrettably, we do not have funds to cover travel costs, but it is our hope that you will be able to join us for this occasion. It would greatly assist our planning if you would let me know if you will be with us on the 28th.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

American Federation of STATE, COUNTY, and MUNICIPAL Employees

MADISON BUILDING
1155-15TH STREET N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

JERRY WURF
PRESIDENT

GORDON W. CHAPMAN
SECRETARY-TREASURER

AL GROSS
International Union
General Representative

Southeastern Area Office
1627 Peachtree Road, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30309
Phone: (404) 875-4601

February 17, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

Thank you for your letter of February 15 and the invitation to be your guest at a luncheon February 28 at the Marriott Motor Hotel.

I will be very happy to attend this luncheon.

Sincerely,

Albert Gross

Albert I. Gross
International General Representative

AIG:ap

checked
VK
T.O.

GEORGIA STATE AFL-CIO

CHARTERED BY AND SUBORDINATE TO AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

DISTRICT VICE PRESIDENTS

LOUIE M. NUNN
1ST DISTRICT

MRS. JIMMYE HATCHER
2ND DISTRICT

RALPH C. TOWNSON
3RD DISTRICT

J. W. HARDEGREE
4TH DISTRICT

MRS. MARTHA TRUE
5TH DISTRICT

MORGAN BOWEN
6TH DISTRICT

A. J. SCOTT
7TH DISTRICT

H. G. FITZPATRICK
8TH DISTRICT

OTIS CHILDERS
9TH DISTRICT

J. HAROLD DYE
10TH DISTRICT

15 PEACHTREE STREET, N. E.
ROOM 208
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
525-2793

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

W. H. MONTAGUE, SR.
PRESIDENT

M. J. COUNIHAN
EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT

J. D. (JIM) MOORE
SECRETARY

MRS. LOUISE DEAN
TREASURER

February 17, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Via:

Thank you for your kind invitation to attend a luncheon on February 28, 1966, at 12:30 in the Marriott Motor Hotel in Atlanta, at which the Attorney General of the United States will be the featured speaker.

I will be delighted to attend, and am looking forward to seeing you.

Sincerely,

W H Montague Sr

W. H. Montague, Sr.
President
Georgia State AFL-CIO

WHM:s
opeiu #21
afl-cio

checked
HR T.O. ✓

J. R. DINKINS, 2ND VICE PRESIDENT
TED B. DAVIS, 3RD VICE PRESIDENT
CURTIS V. BULLOCK, 4TH VICE PRESIDENT

JOHN W. JENNINGS, VICE PRESIDENT
W. H. PHILLIPS, VICE PRESIDENT
SAM H. SCOTT, VICE PRESIDENT

EDITH TRUITT, VICE PRESIDENT
J. L. CAPPS, VICE PRESIDENT
J. P. MCKELLAR, VICE PRESIDENT

North Carolina State AFL-CIO

W. M. BARBEE
PRESIDENT

J. R. FRY
1ST VICE PRESIDENT

POST OFFICE BOX 10805 RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA

PHONE 833-6678

February 18, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
Five Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Brother Via:

Thanks very much for your kind invitation dated February 28.

I wish it were possible for me to accept this invitation; however, due to previous commitments, this will not be possible.

Wishing for you a most successful meeting, I remain

Sincerely and fraternally yours,

W. M. Barbee

W. M. Barbee, President

WMB:dd
opeiu 84 afl-cio

checked 2-21
LK
T.O.

Alabama LABOR COUNCIL, AFL-CIO

324-5648 • 604 LYRIC BLDG.
BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA 35203

BARNEY WEEKS, PRESIDENT
A. G. TRAMMELL, SECRETARY-TREASURER
WM. E. MINTZ, EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT

February 18, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I have just returned to my office and found your very kind invitation of February 15, to attend a luncheon in Atlanta on February 28 to hear Attorney General Katzenbach.

I surely do appreciate your thinking of me and wish it were possible for me to attend, but my schedule is so heavy right now, and I am already committed.

Best wishes for a most successful meeting, and warmest regards.

Sincerely,

Barney

Barney Weeks
President

mw

OPEIU-18

Checked 2-21
L.K.
T.O.

COPE
AFL-CIO

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR & CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
AFL CIO

Committee on Political Education

GEORGE MEANY chairman WM. F. SCHNITZLER secretary-treasurer ALEXANDER E. BARKAN national director
815 16TH STREET, N.W. ★ WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006 ★ PHONE 393-0220

February 21, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thank you very much for your invitation on behalf of the Southern Regional Council to be a guest at your luncheon, but due to prior engagements involving our COPE conferences, I will be unable to attend. However, I have delegated a member of the COPE staff, Mrs. Fannie A. Neal, to be present at the affair.

I am sorry that I will have to miss such an informative and important meeting but thank you again for your invitation.

Sincerely,

Phil

Philip M. Weightman

PMW/pl
opeiu #2
afl-cio

cc: Mrs. Fannie Neal

T.O.✓

COPE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR & CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
AFL CIO

Committee on Political Education

GEORGE MEANY chairman
WM. F. SCHNITZLER secretary-treasurer
JAMES L. McDEVITT national director

AREA NO. 3
FLORIDA
GEORGIA
NORTH CAROLINA
SOUTH CAROLINA
VIRGINIA

FROM THE OFFICE OF
WILBUR HOBBY
AREA DIRECTOR
COPE AREA NO. 3
BOX 175
DURHAM, NORTH CAROLINA
HOME PHONE: 383-9351
OFFICE: 681-5927

February 21, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory,

I am in receipt of your letter inviting me to attend the Southern Regional Conference luncheon at which the Attorney General of the United States will be the featured speaker. Please be advised that I plan to attend this luncheon.

I appreciate very much your invitation to this very important meeting.

With kind regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

Wilbur Hobby
AreaDirector

Wilbur Hobby

WH:b

T.C.V

Louisiana
FORMERLY: LOUISIANA STATE LABOR COUNCIL AFL-CIO

afl·cio

OFFICES:
BATON ROUGE
NEW ORLEANS
SHREVEPORT

MAILING ADDRESS: P. O. BOX 58 - BATON ROUGE

February 28, 1966

copy for Vernon J.

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. ~~Via~~ Emory:

I sincerely regret the delay in answering your letter of February 15. I had hoped I would be able to arrange my schedule in order to attend the luncheon but I found it to be impossible. Consequently, I placed the call to personally apologize. I sincerely hope you will understand.

I would have liked to hear the Attorney General's address and to have had the opportunity to discuss with him some of the problems we have had in Louisiana on voter registration. I have been to the Justice Department several times with these and it might have been helpful to have updated our problems with him.

Thank you again, Emory, for the invitation. I hope I will be able to see you soon.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

Vic

Victor Bussie
President

VB:md

March 9, 1966

Mr. Victor Bussie, President
Louisiana AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 58
Baton Rouge, Louisiana

Dear Vic:

Thanks for your call and letter regarding the Katzenbach luncheon.

It would be of interest to us to know what sorts of voter registration problems you have run into in Louisiana that occasioned your going to the Justice Department. Such information would be doubly helpful to us -- one, for research purposes, and two, for making some practical decisions about Louisiana.

Could you write me further or send something you have already written or if you prefer call me or Vernon Jordan, Director of our Voter Education Project collect.

I hope you will get to meet Jordan before too long. You will find him an able operator in the whole field of voter registration and turnout.

I hope to come your way within a month of two.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

MEMORANDUM

TO: N. Morgan

FROM: E. Via

RE: Katzenbach luncheon

Tony Zillovich and Gid Parhan of the Teamsters will come; If there is room, we should also invite R. C. Cook, president of the local Teamsters local.

✓ = attended

Norm Hill also Advisory Committee

Labor - pays 16 checked plus 2 from margin —

KATZENBACH LUNCHEON - LABOR LIST

~~Accepted~~

Name	Accepted	Declined	Maybe
✓ ABERCROMBIE, E. L. (Laundry)	x
[redacted]
~~BUSSIE, Victor~~ (called)		x
✓ BUTLER, R. J. (Atl. Lab. Council)	x
" BUTLER, Herb (UAW)			x - (NST)
✓ CHRISTOPHER, Paul (Reg Dir)	x
✓ Earl Davis (COPE)	X
? DICKINSON, Guy RWDSU			x
✓ GREEN, Herb (UAW)	x
✓ GROSS, Albert AFSCME)	x
~~BARBEE, W. M.~~		x
~~GILLMAN, Charles~~		x
✓ HOBBY, Wilbur (COPE)	x
✓ HANDLER, Jack (ILGWU)	x
✓ KEHRER, E. T. (AFL-CIO)	x
✓ LeCLERC, Fred (visited w. the Hobbs)	X		~~x~~
~~LYNCH, Matt~~		x
✓ LEVINE, Jerome (ICWU)	x
✓ MONTAGUE, W. H., Sr. (GA AFL-CIO)	x
✓ MOORE, Jim Sec. (Ga AFL-CIO)	x	✓ Thomas, Harly — (ICWU)
✓ NEAL, Fannie, Mrs. (COPE)	x	✓ Henderson, Earl — (UAW)
✓ PARHAM, Gid (TEAMSTERS)	x
✓ POWELL, Dan (COPE)			x
? MORAND, Martin (ILGWU)			x
~~WEEKS, Barney~~		x
~~WEIGHTMAN, Phil~~		x
~~RAMSAY, Claude~~		x
✓ ZILLOVICH, Tony (TEAMSTERS)	x
? VINCENT, T. H. (UPWA)			x
✓ Hill, NORM (IUD) (Advisory Committee - VEP)

Labor Ed advisory Ctee

June 30, 1966

MEMORANDUM

TO: Paul Anthony

FROM: Emory Via

For your consideration to be sent to the following persons:

Claude Ramsey
Bill Becker
Paul Christopher
Hank Brown
Jim Youngdahl
Joe Mire
Al Kehrer

Should we mention the period for which the project is funded?

Any other approval of the appointees required?

Attachment

Labor Ed Advisory Ottee

DATE

ADDRESS

DEAR_____:

This letter is to formally request that you serve on the Advisory Committee to the Council's Labor Program. The Program was established in September of 1965 with Emory Via as its director.

In 1965, the Council in cooperation with the National Institute of Labor Education secured a grant from the Taconic Foundation for the labor program. Subsequently, further funds were secured from the Ford Foundation.

The duties of the Advisory Committee Members will be to meet about twice a year for a review of activities and to assist in thinking through future programs and policies. Expenses incurred by attendance at such meetings will be paid by the Council.

We are asking the labor related members of S.R.C. and a representative each from the National Institute of Labor Education and the Civil Rights Department of the AFL-CIO to constitute the Advisory Committee.

Will you please indicate at your early convenience if you will be able to accept this assignment?

Sincerely,

Paul Anthony
Executive Director

PA/km

Kathy:
Can you read the attached letter? If so, would you please make a clean draft for P.A. to consider with a note saying: For your consideration to be sent to the following persons.

Letter proposed for:

Claud Ramsay
Bill Becker
Paul Christopher
Hank Brown
Jim Youngdahl
Joe Mire
Al Kehrer

add note at end of letter & include the 2 questions on the back sheet.

Thanks,
Jim

EV
MS-file

National Institute of Labor Education
at The American University

1911 F STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006
TELEPHONE: 737-1366

OFFICERS

RALPH N. CAMPBELL
PRESIDENT

FRANK P. GRAHAM
LAWRENCE ROGIN
VICE PRESIDENTS

LORENTZ H. ADOLFSON
TREASURER

JOSEPH MIRE
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

N.I.L.E. BOARD OF DIRECTORS

I. W. ABEL
LORENTZ H. ADOLFSON
DONALD BOWLES
RICHARD BRAY
RALPH N. CAMPBELL
EDWARD L. CUSHMAN
HENRY DAVID
JACK FLAGLER
PHILLIPS L. GARMAN
HELMUT GOLATZ
SAMUEL B. GOULD
FRANK P. GRAHAM
ALBERT J. HAYES
CARROLL HUTTON
F. RAY MARSHALL
JAMES E. NOE
JULES PAGANO
LAWRENCE ROGIN
BRENDAN SEXTON
GUS TYLER
JAMES E. WOLFE

Dear Paul,

July 7, 66

Thanks for your letter of July 5th.
I'll be glad to serve on your Advisory Committee for the Labor Program.
Good wishes!

Sincerely yours
Joe

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

REGION NO. 8. PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER, DIRECTOR
216 FLATIRON BUILDING
705 BROADWAY, N. E.
KNOXVILLE 17, TENNESSEE
524-7481-2

EV
MJ - note
& file

July 8, 1966

Mr. Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Paul:

In reply to yours of July 5 I shall be glad to serve on the Advisory Committee to the Council's Labor Program.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely,

Paul

Paul R. Christopher
AFL-CIO Region VIII Director

PRC:lr
oeiu 144 afl-cio

McMATH, LEATHERMAN, WOODS & YOUNGDAHL
ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW
711 WEST THIRD STREET
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS 72201

SIDNEY S. McMATH
LELAND F. LEATHERMAN
HENRY WOODS
JAMES E. YOUNGDAHL

JOHN P. SIZEMORE
SILAS H. BREWER, JR.

AREA CODE 501
FRANKLIN 6-3021

July 11, 1966

Read 7/13/66

EV
MJ

Mr. Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Paul:

In response to your letter of July 5, 1966, I would be pleased to serve on the Advisory Committee to the Council's Labor Program.

I will look forward to receiving further information on this.

Sincerely,

James E. Youngdahl

JEY:ghw

opeiu105aflcio

Arkansas State AFL-CIO

1408 REBSAMEN PARK ROAD
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS MOhawk 3-4164

J. BILL BECKER
President
GEORGE H. ELLISON
Vice-President
E. J. JACOBS
Secretary-Treasurer

July 11, 1966

Read 7/13/66

EV
MJ

Mr. Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Thank you for your letter of July 5th asking me to serve on the Advisory Committee to the Council's Labor Program. I would be most happy to do so and would consider it a privilege.

MJ - note
EV - answer?

I regret to advise you that I will be unable to attend your 1966 Annual Meeting in Atlanta on November 16, 17, and 18. I have a previous commitment that I cannot possibly break.

If you are planning that the Advisory Committee will meet during this period, you might want to find someone else to serve on the Committee since I will be unable to be there. With this reservation I would be glad to accept the appointment.

Always with a good wish, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Bill Becker

J. Bill Becker
President

JBB:jm
opeiu 105, afl-cio

Mississippi AFL-CIO
FORMERLY: MISSISSIPPI LABOR COUNCIL AFL-CIO
133 SOUTH LAMAR STREET
JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI 39201
PHONE 355-1754

July 11, 1966

Recd 7/13/66

EV
MJ

Mr. Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Paul:

I will be happy to serve on your Labor Advisory Committee, per your request of July 5, 1966.

Sincerely,

Claude

Claude Ramsay
President

CR/dm
opeiu 204
afl-cio

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

EV
MJ

July 14, 1966

Mr. Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Paul:

I would be happy to serve on the Advisory Committee to Southern Regional Council's Labor Program.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

Don

Don Slaiman
Director
Department of Civil Rights

DG:ppo

opeiu #2 afl-cio

SAME LETTER SENT TO: Paul R. Christopher, AFL-CIO Region VIII Director
Claude Ramsay, President, Mississippi AFL-CIO, J. Bill Becker, Pres.,
Arkansas State AFL-CIO, James E. Youngdahl, Don Slaiman, Direcdtor, Department of Civil Rights, AFL-CIO,

August 12, 1966

Mr. Joseph Mire, Executive Director
National Institute of Labor Education
at The American University
1911 F Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Joe:

I am very pleased to hear from Paul Anthony that you have accepted appointment to the Advisory Committee of the Labor Education Project. I will be letting you know before too long when we will have our first meeting.

Enclosed is a copy of the six-months report of the Project. It attempts to do little more than to outline the major areas of concern and to detail a number of the programs in which we have been involved. However, I would welcome any comments which you wish to make.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure

Mailing List

Add –

Walt ~~Davis~~ Davis

Steve Ramsey

Ed – Dir TWKA

Make file card

10/17/68 km

Robert Coles
Lewis G. Cowan
Constance Curry
Kenneth L. Dean
Fred Dutton
Marian Wright Edelman
Dorothy I. Height
Harry Huge
Paul Matthias
Charles Pregeon
Ralph Ruiz
David Wells
Peterson Zah

File copy

March 26, 1970

Mr. Al Clayton
306 12th Avenue South
Nashville, Tennessee

Dear Al:

A small surplus has accumulated in our special hunger fund. We continue to make small grants, mostly $500.00, and could dispense all the money without difficulty, mainly in our region. Your help is needed to assist us to get wider geographic coverage. The fund is not large enough to mount any major program so please don't swamp us, but you are invited and encouraged to suggest some possible grantees. We are particularly interested in grantees who can effectively use small grants. You could either send us your suggestions or have them contact us direct. Thank you for whatever help you can give us.

Yours very truly,

James N. Wood, Jr.
Executive Assistant

JNW/km

March 26, 1970

ROUGH DRAFT

~~There~~ a small surplus has ~~been~~ accumulated in our special hunger fund. ~~a small surplus~~. ~~While~~ We continue to make small grants, ~~of around~~ mostly $500.00, and could dispense all the money without difficulty, mainly in our Region. Your help is needed to assist us to get wider geographic coverage. The fund is not large enough to mount any major program so please don't swamp us, but you are invited and encouraged to suggest some possible grantees. We are particularly interested in grantees who can effectively ~~using~~ use small grants. You could either send us your suggestions or have them contact us direct. Thank you for whatever help you can give us.

JW/km

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

National Office: 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W. - Washington, D.C. 20006

202/638-3914

HRDI National Office Staff

President - Julius F. Rothman
Executive Director - Robert M. McGlotten
Assistant Director - Alfred P. Love ✓
Assistant to the Exec. Dir. - Marcia Stein
Director of Job Development - James D. Boyle ✓
National Field Director - Charles R. Hollowell ✓
Communications Director - Olga Corey ✓ Program Analyst - Loretta Leen

add to mailing list

~~addresses for these are the~~ use address above for these persons

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

EAST COAST

REGION I

Paul J. Flynn, Regional Director
44 Bromfield Street, Room 307
Boston, Massachusetts 02108
617/482-1727

BOSTON -

CONNECTICUT STATE -
Donald P. Wrenn
Area Manpower Representative
9 Washington Avenue
Hamden, Connecticut 06518
203/288-0354

REGION II

John T. Burnell, Regional Director
386 Park Avenue South
New York, New York 10016
212/MU5-9125/6

NEW YORK STATE -

NEWARK -
Earl Williams
Area Manpower Representative
744 Broad Street, Room 1120
Newark, New Jersey 07108
201/642-4134

TRENTON -
Joseph Ganie
Area Manpower Representative
900 Beatty Street
Trenton, New Jersey 08611
609/695-2004

REGION III

Ben Stahl, Regional Director
1512 Walnut Street
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19102
215/PE5-9039

CAMDEN -

PHILADELPHIA -

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

EAST COAST

REGION III (cont.)

PITTSBURGH -
Mrs. Minona J. Clinton
Area Manpower Representative
566 William Penn Hotel
William Penn Place
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15219
412/391-2267

REGION IV

James D. Boyle
HRDI National Office
815 Sixteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
202/638-3912

BALTIMORE -

VIRGINIA - PS- 5-70
Vincent Moretti
Area Manpower Representative
1921 Lafayette ~~Boulevard~~
Norfolk, V~~irginia~~ 23509
703/623-4564

WASHINGTON, D.C. -
Mrs. Arline M. Neal
Area Manpower Representative
1148 Seventh Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
202/483-2273

WEST VIRGINIA STATE -
Lawrence Barker
Area Manpower Representative
P. O. Box 646
Charleston, West Virginia 25323
304/343-2501

SOUTH

Peter Babin, III
Reg~~ional~~ Dir~~ector~~, HRDI
1016 Carondelet Building
New Orleans, Louisiana 70130
504/525-5577

ATLANTA -

Area Manpower Representative
501 Pulliam Street, S.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30312
404/874-7928

BIRMINGHAM -
Glen Cole
Area Manpower Representative
1712 Seventh Avenue North
Birmingham, Alabama 35203
205/328-5866/7

MIAMI -
Andrew E. Dann, Jr.
Area Manpower Representative
244 Biscayne Boulevard, Suite 301
Miami, Florida 33132
305/371-4043

NEW ORLEANS -

NORTH CAROLINA STATE - retype
L. G. Holleman
Area Manpower Representative
P. O. Box 10805
Raleigh, North Carolina 27605
919/828-3881

TAMPA -
Harold Reddick
Area Manpower Representative
305 Morgan Street, Rooms 719-720
Tampa, Florida 33601
813/229-1495

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

CENTRAL STATES

Kara Coates, Regional Director
2310 Cass Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48201
313/961-4705
961-4724

AKRON -
Charles T. Anderson
Area Manpower Representative
5 E. Buchtel Avenue, Room 314
Akron, Ohio 44308
216/376-4908

CINCINNATI -
Eddie Campbell
Area Manpower Representative
1015 Vine Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202
513/421-7067

CLEVELAND -
Harold Winbush, Sr.
Area Manpower Representative
715 Prospect Avenue, Suite 564
Cleveland, Ohio 44114
216/621-0908

COLUMBUS -
Clarence Butler
Area Manpower Representative
36 W. Gay Street, Suite 203
Columbus, Ohio 43215
614/224-3344

DAYTON -
Luther Holt
Area Manpower Representative
1512 West Riverview Street (Temp.)
Dayton, Ohio 45407
513/268-6300

DETROIT -

INDIANAPOLIS -
Bernard Hanley
Area Manpower Representative
803 S. Meridian Street
Indianapolis, Indiana 46225
317/638-1597

TOLEDO -
John C. Rober
Area Manpower Representative
912 Adams Street
Toledo, Ohio 34624
419/242-1476

MID-WEST

Charles E. Bradford, Regional Director
2319 Hampton Avenue, Room 108
St. Louis, Missouri 63139
314/644-0322

CHICAGO -
Richard A. Smith
Area Manpower Representative
330 South Wells Street, Room 700
Chicago, Illinois 60606
312/922-2780

KANSAS CITY -
Charles R. Kent
Area Manpower Representative
913 Tracy Street
Kansas City, Missouri 64104
816/471-0870/1

LOUISVILLE -
J. Richard Mahoney
Area Manpower Representative
112 South Fifth Street, Suite 606
Louisville, Kentucky 40202
502/584-2333

MEMPHIS -
William T. Ross, Jr.
Area Manpower Representative
136½ South Second Street
Memphis, Tennessee 38103
901/525-1114

MILWAUKEE -
James Clay
Area Manpower Representative
1012 North Third Street, Room 308
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53203
414/278-7833/4

NASHVILLE -
John Duncan
Area Manpower Representative
631 North First Street, Room 108
Nashville, Tennessee 37207
615/256-3520

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

MID-WEST (cont.)

ST. LOUIS -

WISCONSIN STATE -
Richard Sawicki
Area Manpower Representative
6333 West BlueMound Road
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53213
414/278-7833/4

SOUTHWEST

Michael M. Arnold, Regional Director
1727 Young Street
Dallas, Texas 75201
214/748-2705

DALLAS -

DENVER -
Frank Gallegos
Area Manpower Representative
360 Acoma Street, Room 110
Denver, Colorado 80223
303/744-3124

Delete

HOUSTON -
Donald W. Bridges
Area Manpower Representative
6333 Gulf Freeway, Suite 201
Houston, Texas 77023
713/923-5535/6

OKLAHOMA CITY -
Mrs. Oneida Sawyer
Area Manpower Representative
2504 Meadowcliff Drive (Temp.)
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73106
405/235-3669

PHOENIX -
H. Eugene Carter
Area Manpower Representative
512 West Adams Street
Phoenix, Arizona 85033
602/271-0911

SABINE AREA -
Hugh Davis
Area Manpower Representative
1905 Fifth Street
Port Neches, Texas 77651
713/727-2731

SAN ANTONIO -
Albert Garcia, Jr.
Area Manpower Representative
109 Lexington Avenue, Room 207
San Antonio, Texas 78205
512/225-1569

WEST COAST

Lyle W. Eller, Regional Director
213 Labor Center
201 S.W. Arthur Street
Portland, Oregon 97201
503/224-9352

LOS ANGELES -
George M. Garland
Area Manpower Representative
2130 West Ninth Street
Los Angeles, California 90006
213/381-5611

OAKLAND -
William H. Burks
Area Manpower Representative
595 Sixteenth Street
Oakland, California 94612
415/465-0956

PORTLAND -

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

WEST COAST (cont.)

SAN DIEGO -
Frederick Martinez
Area Manpower Representative
San Diego Hotel
339 West Broadway Avenue, Suite 204
San Diego, California 92101
714/234-4189

SEATTLE -
George Williams
Area Manpower Representative
2800 First Avenue, Room 208
Seattle, Washington 98121
206/623-5393

PHILIP MURRAY BUILDING

PAUL JENNINGS
President

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS

AFFILIATED WITH THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR and CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS AND THE CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

PHONE: 296-1200 (Area Code 202)
1126 SIXTEENTH STREET N.W., WASHINGTON, D.C. 20036

June 13, 1966

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Gentlemen:

Please remove the attached label from your mailing list. Future correspondence should be addressed to:

6-20-66 is

Mr. William Gary, Director of Civil Rights and Minority Affairs
IUE-AFL-CIO
1126 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20036

Thank you for your cooperation.

Yours truly,

Velma W Brock

Velma W. Brock, Librarian
for Al Loewenthal, Executive Assistant to the President

opeiu-2aflcio
vb

PHILIP MURRAY BUILDING

PAUL JENNINGS
President

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS

AFFILIATED WITH THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR and CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS AND THE CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

PHONE: 296-1200 (Area Code 202)
1126 SIXTEENTH STREET N.W., WASHINGTON, D.C. 20036

July 7, 1966

New South
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Gentlemen:

Please remove the attached labels from your mailing list.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Yours truly,

Velma W. Brock

Velma W. Brock, Librarian
for Al Loewenthal, Executive Assistant to the President

opeiu-2aflcio
vb

Have we done this? E.F.V.

What list was she on? See me about replacing her name with Wm Day.

New South
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W.
ATLANTA, GA. 30303

RETURN REQUESTED

MRS GLORIA REAHDON NO
INTL UNION OF ELECTRICAL
-RADIO & MACHINE WORKERS
1126-16TH ST N W
WASHINGTON D C 20036

do you come to peace there on?

New South
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W.
ATLANTA, GA. 30303

RETURN REQUESTED

MRS GLORIA RIORDAN NO
LEGISLATIVE REP
IUE-AFL-CIO-
1126 16TH ST N W
WASHINGTON D C 20036

JOHN H. WHEELER, PRESIDENT
JOSEPHINE WILKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT
RUFUS E. CLEMENT, VICE-PRESIDENT
STEPHEN J. WRIGHT, VICE-PRESIDENT
PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER, VICE-PRESIDENT
RAYMOND M. WHEELER, CHAIRMAN, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
JOSEPH HAAS, COUNSEL
PAUL ANTHONY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
Atlanta 2-8764

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

July 8, 1966

EU: This is Whitfield's thing. Any additions to your list?
JB

Dear Friend:

Our organization is presently conducting a survey to determine who speaks to the white South.

Basically, our aim is to learn what work is being done by you towards reaching the average white Southerner on the subject of race relations.

All information forwarded to us shall be held in strict confidence. Findings will be presented in generalized terms. Cooperating agencies may be listed separately from the findings but there will be no one-to-one relation drawn between the findings and the cooperating agencies.

We shall appreciate your cooperation in filling out and returning to us the enclosed questionnaire, advising whether it would be feasible to send similar copies to your local chapters and providing us with a list of such chapters.

Thank you.

Very truly yours,

Antony Whitfield

Antony Whitfield
Assistant to the Director of Information

AW:js

Enclosure - 1.

Did we provide self-addressed, stamped envelopes?

Notice to use extra space on backs of pages

Return address should be on questionnaire

QUESTIONNAIRE: WHO SPEAKS TO THE WHITE SOUTH?

(Please print or type)

1. What is the main purpose of your organization?

_____

_____

_____

_____

These top 3 things could be changed in follow up

2. Does your organization try to communicate with the general public about race relations? _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

3. On the issue of race relations, do you try to reach a sizable number of: (Check appropriate blocks)

A. Upper income whites ☐
B. Upper income Negroes ☐
C. Middle income whites ☐
D. Middle income Negroes ☐
E. Lower income whites ☐
F. Lower income Negroes ☐

For coding, give these different letters — can't be same as group above —

A. Whites with grammar school education ☐
B. Negroes with grammar school education ☐
C. Whites with high school education ☐
D. Negroes with high school education ☐
E. Whites with college education ☐
F. Negroes with college education ☐

4. What methods do you employ to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations?

A. Door-to-door campaigns ☐
B. Rallies and town meetings ☐
C. Local radio or TV broadcasts ☐
D. Distribution of literature ☐

1) Your own ☐
2) Other sources ☐

} don't split questions by page

Please specify: _____

_____

5. On the issue of race relations, what hindrances to your work do you encounter in your area? _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

6. Are there organized groups that are active in opposing the implementation of civil rights in your area?
Yes _____ No _____. Please comment: _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

7. How effective do you judge the activities of such groups to be?

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☐
C. Somewhat influential ☐
D. Almost without influence ☐

8. Have such organizations hampered the success of your own organization on the civil rights and race relations issues? Yes _____ No _____. Please comment: _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

9. On race relations, what are the problems that you encounter within your own ranks? _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

10. Do you have ways to gauge the effectiveness of your efforts to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations? Yes _____ No _____. Please comment and specify such methods, if any: _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

11. How do you rate your organization in its ability to influence white citizens on race relations?

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☐
C. Somewhat influential ☐
D. Almost without influence ☐

12. Does your organization take an active part in protests or demonstrations which involve the issue of race relations? Yes _____ No _____.

13. Do you feel that demonstrations have a positive or negative effect on the white citizens of your area?
Positive _____ Negative _____

14. Do you feel that demonstrations alert the white citizens of your area or areas to an awareness of problems on the issue of race relations?
Yes _____ No _____. Please comment: _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

15. Does your organization make appeals to civic and public officials on the issue of race relations? Yes _____ No _____.

Are the responses to such appeals generally handled satisfactorily? Yes _____ No _____. Please comment:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

16. On what other issues besides race relations has your organization achieved significant progress? _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

17. Is the handling of race relations relegated to a special committee or sub-committee of your organization? Yes _____ No _____. Please comment: ____

_____

_____

_____

_____

18. Is your organization a membership organization? Yes _____ No _____.

19. If so, what percentage, roughly, of your membership is actively engaged in race relations activities?

_____

_____

_____

_____

20. What is the size of your organization? Please specify whether this size represents the local, state, regional, or national level.

		Local	State	Reg'l	Nat'l
A. 1,000 +		_____	_____	_____	_____
B. 500-1,000		_____	_____	_____	_____
C. 100-500		_____	_____	_____	_____
D. - 100		_____	_____	_____	_____

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years?

Yes _____ No _____

The last two years?

Yes _____ No _____

Please comment: _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes _____ No _____ Please comment: _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

why not last question

_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? _____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? _____

Repeat ok.

_____
_____
_____
_____

File

United Steelworkers of America

1500 COMMONWEALTH BUILDING

Pittsburgh, Pa. 15222

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

PHONE: 471-5254
CABLE ADDRESS: USWA

August 8, 1966

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks for the complimentary subscription to NEW SOUTH. This issue was most interesting. I shall put it in the library of our new staff center where it will be read by staff from throughout the country.

Also, thanks for helping us out in District 36-G. You evidently did your usual excellent job. By the way, District 36-G is no longer. Florida, Alabama and Mississippi have been put in with District 36: headquarters, Birmingham; Director, Howard Strevel. Louisiana has been absorbed by District 37: headquarters, Houston; Director, Jim Ward.

Best personal regards.

Sincerely,

Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.

Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.
Director

FKH:mgm

Fill

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION • AFL-CIO

SOUTHEAST REGION

457 PLASTER AVENUE, N. E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30324
TELEPHONE (404) 872-8161

Louis Stulberg
PRESIDENT

•

Martin J. Morand
DIRECTOR

August 3, 1966

Emery Via
Southern Regional Council
Five Forsyth Street, S. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Emery:

Thanks for NEW SOUTH. Do you know August Meier? I am wondering if he is the same fellow I knew 22 years ago at Pioneer Youth Camp.

Very truly yours,

Marty

Martin J. Morand
Director

MJM:f

AREA CODE 919
762-0584

561

United Transport Service Employees

AFFILIATED WITH THE AFL-CIO
815 RED CROSS STREET
WILMINGTON, NORTH CAROLINA

OFFICE OF
DIRECTOR
SOUTHEASTERN REGION

August 9, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 For-syth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

ck 8-11-66 8-11-66 is

Enclosed you will find a check for $3.00 to cover payment for one year subscription for the book, New South. I am very happy to receive this complimentary copy. It is a very interesting publication and it points out so well the problems of the Negro in the South; but sheds very little hope that the black-man will ever be able to break out of the political and economical dilemna in which the black-man finds, himself.

I had great hopes thirty (30) years ago when I became a member of Organized Labor, but I soon found out that even hear, it was room only for one, maybe two Negroes, if they were of the yes type. Despite all of this I have remain loyal to the Labor move-ment.

I still have hopes that some day the poor white man will realize that only hope for Organizing Labor is for him to join hands with the black-man in one common goal of making a great society in this land in which I love but can not enjoy. Again, I want to thank very much for the book. Looking to hear from you soon. With best wishes, Iam

Very truly yours,

John W. Jennings

John W. Jennings
Regional Director

JWJ/ejs

P.S. Send all publication to my office. The address is 815 Red Cross Street, Wilmington, N. C.

Communications

GEORGE E. GILL
VICE PRESIDENT

FLORIDA
GEORGIA
SOUTH CAROLINA

KENTUCKY
TENNESSEE
NORTH CAROLINA

ALABAMA
LOUISIANA
MISSISSIPPI

CWA

Workers of America

DISTRICT 3 OFFICE
40 PRYOR STREET, S. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
404-523-2917

25

August 11, 1966

April 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
Labor Program
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks very much for your letter of July 28th and your quarterly issue of New South. I appreciate very much your thoughtfulness in wanting to send me a one-year complimentary subscription. However, I thought I should tell you that I am already subscribing to this publication and would not have any use for two copies.

Sincerely yours,

George Gill

George E. Gill
Vice President

G/mfw

August 12, 1966

Mr. Martin J. Morand, Director
I.L.G.W.U. Southeast Region
457 Plaster Avenue, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30304

Dear Marty:

Glad you got the New South. I would guess August Meier you knew 22 years ago. I know people that didn't know anyone 22 years ago. You could reach Meier simply by addressing him at Roosevelt University, 430 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

I will be out of town for a couple of weeks but hope we can get together shortly thereafter. Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

August 12, 1966

Mr. John W. Jennings
Regional Director
United Transport Service Employees
815 Red Cross Street
Wilmington, North Carolina

Dear John:

Thanks forypour good letter and the subscription to the NEW SOUTH. I am glad you enjoyed the complimentary copy.

I hope to be in touch with you some time in the fall. Perhaps we can put our shoulders to the same wheel regarding some of the things you raised in your letter. In the meantime if you have ideas as to how my services might be of use I'd be happy to hear from you.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

LAW OFFICES
ADAIR, GOLDTHWAITE, STANFORD, DANIEL & HORN
1481 CANDLER BUILDING
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

THOMAS S. ADAIR
J. R. GOLDTHWAITE, JR.
MORGAN C. STANFORD
T. EMORY DANIEL
ALBERT M. HORN
J. LEON ADAIR
MICHAEL J. REILY

TELEPHONE
523-2525

August 18, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

past due — billed LS

Dear Emory:

Thank you for sending me the copy of NEW SOUTH; I am already a subscriber to the magazine (unless my subscription has recently lapsed). Being a conservative, I am not certain that I like the new format as well as the old, which seemed folskier and not so academic.

Very truly yours,

A Horn

Albert M. Horn

AMH/hh

Mr. Lee Balliet
School for Workers
University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Dr. Vernon M. Briggs
Assistant Professor
Department of Economics
University of Texas
Austin, Texas

Mr. Dennis A. Derryck
Tutor Corrd.
Apprenticeship Program
Workers Defense League
1646 Fulton Avenue
Brooklyn, New York

Mr. David J. Farber
Assistant Chief
Division of Research
U. S. Department of Labor
Bureau of Appr. and Training
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Ernest Green
Workers Defense League
Apprenticeship Training Program
112 East 19th Street
New York, New York

Mr. Adolph Holmes
Associate Director
Economic Development & Training
National Urban League
14 East 48th Street
New York, New York

Professor Ray Marshall
Department of Economics
University of Texas
Austin, Texas

Mr. Hugh Murphy, Director
Bureau of Apprenticehip &
Training
U. S. Department of Labor
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Winn Newman
Assistant to the Director
Equal Employment Opportunity
1800 G Street
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Herbert A. Perry
Department of Economics
Sacramento State College
Sacramento, California

Mr. Otto Pragan
Assistant Director
Department of Education, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. George Strauss
Associate Director
Institute of Industrial Relat.
University of California
Berkeley, California

Mr. Don Vial, Chairman
Center for Labor Research &
Education
University of California
Berkeley, California

Mr. John A. Welch, Dean
School of Mechanical Industries
Tuskegee Institute
Tuskegee, Alabama

Prof. Jack Barbash
Department of Economics
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wisconsin

Prof. George Hugghand
School for Workers
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wisconsin

Mr. Owen Tapper
School for Workers
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wisconsin

August 22, 1966

Mr. James Stewart
Business Agent
Construction & General Laborers'
Union, Local 576
517 East Broadway
Louisville, Kentucky 40202

Dear Mr. Stewart:

Your good letter of August 18 arrived at a time when Mr. Via is out of the office. It will be brought to his attention upon his return.

Let me thank you for the subscription to NEW SOUTH both for yourself and for Mr. Jackson. I'm putting Mr. Jackson's name on our mailing list and will notify him of it.

I passed through Lexington this summer and thought of you, but lo,you're not in the Lexington directory. Now I know why.

Sincerely,

Joan C. Browning

JB

22 August 1966

Mr. Amos Jackson
President & Organizer
Int'l. Hod Carriers and Building Laborers Union # 265
533 Hale Avenue
Cincinnati, Ohio 45229

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Mr. James Stewart of the Laborers Local 576 in Louisville has informed us of your desire to subscribe to our magazine, NEW SOUTH.

Enclosed herewith is the Spring issue. The Summer issue will be out in a week or so.

You may consider this letter our bill in the amount of $3.00 for a one-year subscription.

Sincerely,

Joan C. Browning

JB

CONSTRUCTION & GENERAL LABORERS' UNION

LOCAL No. 576

Affiliated with the A.-F.-L.-C.I.O.

JAMES STEWART,
Business Agent

517 East Broadway 18 Louisville, Kentucky 40202

G. B. LAKE, Financial Sec'y and Treas.

August 18, 1966

Attention: Mr. Emory F. Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street N. W.
Alanta, Ga. 30303

Dear Sir:

Enclosed find check for 1 year subscription to New South, also a good friend of mine who lives in Cincinnati, Ohio would like to receive 1 year subscription to the New South, his card is also enclosed. He said if you will send him the book he will forward you a check.

I find the New South very interesting and keeps us abreast with the current events and facts in regard to our various problems of today.

We here in Kentucky are very grateful for an excellent job that the Council is doing. Give my regards to the entire staff.

Sincerely yours,

James Stewart

James Stewart
Business Agent

JS/jm

Encl:

Construction & General Labor Union No. 576
517 EAST BROADWAY
Louisville 2, Kentucky
18

LOUISVILLE, KY.
PM
18 AUG
1966
28

Attention: Mr. Emory F. Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street N. W.
Atanta, Ga. 30303

6 September 1966

Mr. John G. Blair
Director of Publications
AFSCME, AFL-CIO
1155 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20005

Dear Mr. Blair:

We have made the changes in our mailing list as requested in your letter of 6 June.

We find that you are not on our subscription list for our quarterly magazine, NEW SOUTH; nor do we receive THE PUBLIC EMPLOYEE. Would you be interested in an exchange of these two publications?

Sincerely,

Joan C. Browning
for the Labor Project

JB

15 September 1966

Professor Lee Balliet
School for Workers
University Extension Building
600 West Kilbourn Avenue
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53203

Dear Lee:

It was good to meet you in Madison even though briefly during the Apprenticeship Conference. Under separate cover I'm sending a copy of the Council's quarterly, NEW SOUTH. I thought you might like to see it in general, and the article by K. U. Smith on testing might be of special interest.

I look forward to working with you on my return to the staff. Please give my good regards to Irv, Keith, and the others.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

aSAME LETTER SENT TO: Dr. Vernon Briggs, U. Texas; Adolph Holmes, National Urban League; Mr. Hugh Murphy, Director, BAT; Prof. George Strauss, U.Cal-Berkeley.

15 September 1966

Mr. David J. Farber, Asst. Chief
Division of Research
U. S. Department of Labor
Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Farber:

I am sorry not to have met you at the recent Apprenticeship Conference in Madison. I thought you might be interested in the Council's quarterly, NEW SOUTH, and especially in the article by K. U. Smith on testing. A copy is being sent to you under separate cover.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

15 September 1966

Mr. Ernest Green
Workers Defense League
Apprenticeship Training Program
112 East 19th Street
New York, New York

Dear Ernest:

I am glad that I had the opportunity to meet you even briefly during the Apprenticeship Conference in Madison. I'm sending separately a copy of the Council's quarterly, NEW SOUTH. I thought you might like to see it and especially the article by K. U. Smith on testing.

I trust you will look us up if you are ever in Atlanta. It is my hope that we can work out some joint project or consultation before too long.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

September 21, 1966

MEMORANDUM

TO: Bob Anderson
FROM: Emory F. Via

Bob,
Would you try to keep it in mind to discuss the contents of the up coming issue of NEW SOUTH when you are relatively certain what will be included. What I am thinking about is a special distribution, if a fair amount of attention is being given to economic and related issues. I would simply want to make sure that enough copies will be available for me to have about a hundred (100) or so.

Thanks.

N.S. 1958

LIST OF LABOR PAPERS TO RECEIVE COMPLIMENTARY SUBSCRIPTIONS TO NEW SOUTH

Leslie Orear, Editor
THE PACKING HOUSE WORKER
608 S. Dearborn
Chicago, Illinois

Irving Kahan, Editor
TEXTILE LABOR
99 University Place
New York 3, N. Y.

Saul Miller, Director of Publications
AFL-CIO NEWS
815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Almon Barbour, Editor
NORTH CAROLINA LABOR AND INDUSTRY
North Carolina Dept. of Labor
Raleigh, N. C.

Oscar Jager, Director of Publications
I.U.D. BULLETIN
815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Al Hartlett, Editor
IUE AFL-CIO NEWS
Philip Murray Bldg.
1126 16th St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Ray Davidson, Editor
UNION NEWS
1840 California St.
Denver 2, Colorado

Editor, SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS
P. O. Box 6156, Acklen Station
Nashville 5, Tenn.

Max Steinbock, Editor
RWDSU RECORD
132 W. 43 St.
New York 36, N. Y.

Editor, DURHAM LABOR JOURNAL
P. O. Box 197
Durham, North Carolina

C. Edmund Fisher, Editor
THE ADVANCE
15 Union Square
New York 3, N. Y.

Dr. Joseph Krislov, Editor
KENTUCKY LABOR NEWS
312 Armory Place
Louisville 2, Kentucky

Leon Stein, Editor
JUSTICE
1710 Broadway
New York 19, N. Y.

Editor, AFL-CIO EDUCATION NEWS AND VIEWS
815 Sixteenth Stl, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Bob Senser, Editor
WORK
21 W. Superior St.
Chicago 10, Ill.

Bruce A. Bishop, Editor
INTERNATIONAL WOODWORKER
1622 N. Lombard
Portland 17, Oregon

Editor, LABOR'S ECONOMIC REVIEW
AFL-CIO Bldg.
Washington 6, D. C.

Saul Miller, Director of Publications
AFL-CIO NEWS
815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Gordon H. Cole, Editor
THE MACHINIST
Machinists Bldg.
Washington 6, D. C.

Carl Leatherwood, Editor
LABOR WORLD
1641 S. Kingshighway
St. Louis,10, Missouri

A. Philip Randolph, Editor-in-Chief
THE BLACK WORKER
217 West 125th St.
New York 27, N. Y.

Patrick E. Gorman, Editor
THE BUTCHER WORKMAN
2800 N. Sheridan Road
Chicago 14, Ill.

Vincent D. Sweeney, Editor
STEEL LABOR
2457 East Washington St.
Indianapolis 7, Indiana

John McCurley, Manager
GEORGIA LABOR NEWS DIGEST
95 Merritts Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Emil Beinecke, Editor
BREWERY WORKER
2347-51 Vine St.
Cincinnati 19, Ohio

Editor, UAW SOLIDARITY
2457 E. Washington St.
Indianapolis 7, Indiana

Mrs. W. C. Kendrick, Editor
THE JOURNAL OF LABOR
Room 100, Atlanta Labor Temple
345 Washington St., S. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Victor K. Ray, Editor
UNION LABOR BULLETIN
Donaghey Bldg.
Little Rock, Arkansas

COMPLIMENTARY SUBSCRIPTIONS TO NEW SOUTH FROM LABOR PROGRAM

1 Mr. Fred Hoehler
Education Director
United Steelworkers of America
1500 Commonwealth Bldg.
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

2 Mr. Larry Rogin, Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. c. 20006

3 Mr. Norman Hill
Staff Assistant
Industrial Union Dept., AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

4 Mr. Roy Reuther
United Auto Workers
8000 E. Jefferson Ave.
Detroit, Michigan 48214

5 Mr. Jack Conway, Director
Industrial Union Dept., AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

6 Mr. Paul Swaity
Textile Workers Union of America
99 University Place
New York, New York 10003

7 Mr. William Oliver
Fair Practices Division
United Auto Workers
8000 E. Jefferson Ave.
Detroit, Michigan 48214

8 Mr. George Gill
Communications Workers of America
40 Pryor Street, S.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

9 Mr. William Gary, Director
Civil Rights
Int'l. Union of Electrical Workers
1126 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

10 Mr. Martin J. Morand
Regional Director
Int'l. Ladies Garment Workers Union
457 Plaster Avenue, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30324

11 Mr. Carroll Hutton, Director
Education Department
United Auto Workers
8000 E. Jefferson Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48214

12 Mr. Wilbur Hobby, Director
C.O.P.E. Area III
P. O. Box 175
103 Corporation Street
Durham, North Carolina

13 Mr. Elwood Taub
Education Director
AFSCME
815 Mt. Vernon Place, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20001

JOHN H. WHEELER, PRESIDENT
JOSEPHINE WILKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT
RUFUS E. CLEMENT, VICE-PRESIDENT
STEPHEN J. WRIGHT, VICE-PRESIDENT
PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER, VICE-PRESIDENT
RAYMOND M. WHEELER, CHAIRMAN, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
JOSEPH HAAS, COUNSEL
PAUL ANTHONY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
JAckson 2-8764

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

July 12, 1966

Mr. Sam Ezelle, Exec. Sec.-Treas.
Kentucky State AFL-CIO
706 E. Broadway
Louisville, Kentucky 40202

Dear Mr. Ezelle:

The enclosed magazine, NEW SOUTH, is the quarterly publication of the Southern Regional Council. This issue will start a one-year complimentary subscription in your name ~~as a small gift~~ ~~of~~ from the Council's labor program.

I think you will find over a year's time that NEW SOUTH will contain a number of articles of special interest to you. It is one good way to keep up with developments within the region and some of the thinking that goes on about the changing South.

Although the Council's main interest centers around problems involving racial relations, you will find that much of the material in the publication relates to other matters as well.

We would be very pleased to hear any comment that you have regarding the magazine.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via /jb.

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Mr. Charlie Harris, President
Florida AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 537
Allapattah Station
Miami, Florida

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

MR. MATTHEW LYNCH, PRESIDENT
TENNESSEE STATE LABOR COUNCIL,
AFL-CIO
226 CAPITOL BLVD., ROOM 205
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE 37219

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

MR. BARNEY WEEKS, PRESIDENT
ALABAMA LABOR COUNCIL, AFL-CIO
604 LYRIC BUILDING
BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA 35203

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

MR. W. H. MONTAGUE, SR., PRES.
GEORGIA STATE AFL-CIO
15 PEACHTREE STREET, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Mr. Harold B. Boyd, President
Virginia State AFL-CIO
102 N. Belvidere Street
Richmond, Virginia 23220

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

MR. VICTOR BUSSIE, PRES.
LOUISIANA AFL-CIO
429 GOVERNMENT STREET
P. O. BOX 58
BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA 70821

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

MR. W. M. BARBEE, PRESIDENT
NORTH CAROLINA STATE AFL-CIO
P. O. BOX 10805
RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Mr. Sinway Young, President
South Carolina Labor Council,
AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 1411
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Mr. Sam Ezelle, Exec. Sec.-Treas.
Kentucky State AFL-CIO
706 E. Broadway
Louisville, Kentucky 40202

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

EV: regarding ELewis's memo of today,

this is the list.

jb

ok

These will need personal letters and the current issue mailed to them. Show me the letters we used earlier

Same letter to: Hoehler, Rogin, Hill, Reuther, Conway, Swaity, Oliver, Gill, Gary, Morand, Hutton and Hobby. See attached list.

July 28, 1966

Mr. Elwood Taub
Education Director
AFSCME
815 Mt. Vernon Place, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20001

Dear Elwood:

The enclosed magazine, NEW SOUTH, is the quarterly publication of the Southern Regional Council. This issue will start a one-year complimentary subscription in your name from the Council's labor program.

I think you will find over a year's time that NEW SOUTH will contain a number of articles of special interest to you. It is one good way to keep up with developments within the region and some of the thinking that goes on about the changing South.

Although the Council's main interest centers around problems involving racial relations, you will find that much of the material in the publication relates to other matters as well.

We would be very pleased to hear any comment that you have regarding the magazine.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:km
Enclosure

Same letter to: Hoehler, Rogin, Hill, Reuther, Conway, Swaity, Oliver, Gill, Gary, Morand, Hutton and Hobby. See attached list.

July 28, 1966

Mr. Elwood Taub
Education Director
AFSCME
815 Mt. Vernon Place, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20001

Dear Elwood:

The enclosed magazine, NEW SOUTH, is the quarterly publication of the Southern Regional Council. This issue will start a one-year complimentary subscription in your name from the Council's labor program.

I think you will find over a year's time that NEW SOUTH will contain a number of articles of special interest to you. It is one good way to keep up with developments within the region and some of the thinking that goes on about the changing South.

Although the Council's main interest centers around problems involving racial relations, you will find that much of the material in the publication relates to other matters as well.

We would be very pleased to hear any comment that you have regarding the magazine.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:km
Enclosure

These do not have to make up bulk mailing

Check to see if receiving →

Barney Weeks (Ala)
Matt Lynn (Tenn)
Sam Egelle (Ky)
Charles Harris (Fla)
Montagues (Ga)
Sinway Young (S.C.)
Harold Boyd (Va)
Millard Barber (D.C.)

Dear :

The enclosed magazine, New South, is the quarterly publication of the Southern Regional Council. This issue will start a one year subscription in your name as a small gift from the Council's labor program.

I think you will find over a year's time that New South will contain a number of articles of special interest to you. It is one good way to keep up with developments within the region and some of the thinking that goes on about the changing South.

Although the Council's main interest centers around problems involving racial relations, you will find that much of the material in the publication relates to ~~a number of~~ other matters as well.

We would be very pleased to hear any comment that you have regarding the magazine.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

New South

Send day after the magazines are actually mailed —

Dear :

Because we are receiving your publication, (name of pub) ,
we would like for you to have a complimentary subscription to our Quarterly, The New South.

I ~~tur tars~~ trust that you will find our publication of interest. We would be pleased to hear any comments that you might have regarding it.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

Are there any publications which we receive gratis that do not receive
New South at this time?

To be sent two days, after the magazines are actually mailed

Dear :

Under separate cover I am sending you a complimentary copy of our publication, The New South. I think the new format of the magazine as a quarterly makes us better able to present thoughtful and useful material.

The current issue contains articles which I believe you will find of special interest. In each issue there will be a handy summary of events entitled "The State of the Southern States."

Frankly, I hope to encourage new subscriptions among a wider group of thoughtful people concerned with Southern developments. Would you look over the copy which I am sending? If you feel it would be useful to you, we would be happy to receive $3.00 for a year's subscription. Simply use the card found in the magazine.

In any event, we would like to hear any comments that you might have regarding The New South.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

All these names have been sent either comp. subs. or a single issue, with the exception of those labels in the envelope marked "Hold."

COMPLIMENTARY SUBSCRIPTIONS TO NEW SOUTH FROM LABOR PROGRAM

Mr. Fred Hoehler
Education Director
United Steelworkers of America
1500 Commonwealth Bldg.
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Mr. Larry Rogin, Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. c. 20006

Mr. Norman Hill
Staff Assistant
Industrial Union Dept., AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. Roy Reuther
United Auto Workers
8000 E. Jefferson Ave.
Detroit, Michigan 48214

Mr. Jack Conway, Director
Industrial Union Dept., AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. Paul Swaity
Textile Workers Union of America
99 University Place
New York, New York 10003

Mr. William Oliver
Fair Practices Division
United Auto Workers
8000 E. Jefferson Ave.
Detroit, Michigan 48214

Mr. George Gill
Communications Workers of America
40 Pryor Street, S.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. William Gary, Director
Civil Rights
Int'l. Union of Electrical Workers
1126 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. Martin J. Morand
Regional Director
Int'l. Ladies Garment Workers Union
457 Plaster Avenue, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30324

Mr. Carroll Hutton, Director
Education Department
United Auto Workers
8000 E. Jefferson Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48214

Mr. Wilbur Hobby, Director
C.O.P.E. Area III
P. O. Box 175
103 Corporation Street
Durham, North Carolina

Mr. Elwood Taub
Education Director
AFSCME
815 Mt. Vernon Place, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20001

Mr. Fred Hoehler
Education Director
United Steelworkers of America
1500 Commonwealth Bldg.
Pittsburgh, Penn.

Mr. Sinway Young, Pres.
S. C. Labor Council, AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 1411
Columbia, S. C. 29201

Mr. Harold B. Boyd, Pres.
Virginia State AFL-CIO
102 N. Belvidere St.
Richmond, Va. 23220

~~Mxxx Sanx Exxitex~~

Mr. 'charlie Harris, Pres.
Fla. AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 537
Allapattah Station
Miami, Fla.

Mr. Barney Weeks, Pres.
Ala. Labor Council, AFL-CIO
604 Lyric Bldg.
Birmingham, Ala. 35203

Mr. W. H. Montague, Sr., Pres.
Georgia State AFL-CIO
15 Peachtree St., N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Mr. Victor Bussie, Pres.
La. AFL-CIO
429 Government Street
P. O. Box 58
Baton Rouge, La. 70821

Mr. Claude Ramsay, Pres.
Miss. AFL-CIO
133 South Lamar St.
Jackson, Miss. 39201

Mr. W. M. Barbee, Pres.
N. C. State AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 10805
Raleigh, N.C.

~~Mr. E. P. K~~
Mr. Matthew Lynch, Pres.
Tenn. State Labor Council , AFL-CIO
226 Capitol Blvd., Rm. 205
Nashville, Tenn. 37219

~~Mr. Kate~~
Mr. James E. Noe
Education Director
Int'l. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers
1200 15gh Street, N.W.
Washington, D C. 20005

Mr. Carroll Hutton, Director
Education Dept.
UAW
8000 Jefferson Ave.
Detroit, Michigan

Mr. Gus Tyler , Edication Director
Int'l. Ladies Garmant Workers Union
1710 Broadway
New York, N.Y. 10019

Education Director
Amalgamated Clothing Workers of Amer.
15 Union Square
New York, N Y. 10003

Mr. Charles Kerns, Education Director
United Electrical Workers
11 E. 51st St
New York, N.Y. 10022

Mr. Helmuth F. Kern, Educ. Director
Amalgamated Meat Cutters of North America
2800 N. Sheridan Rd.
Chicago 14, Ill.

~~Mr. Don Mahony, Pres.~~
~~U----~~
Mr. LeRoy Johnson, Education Dir.
United Packinghouse Workers
608 S. Dearborn St.
Chicago 5, Ill.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Fred Hoehler

~~MR. EMERY BACON~~ ~~NO!~~
EDUCATION DIRECTOR
UNITED STEELWORKERS OF AMERICA
1500 COMMONWEALTH BLDG.
PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Don Slaiman Clerk ?

AFL-CIO
CIVIL RIGHTS DEPARTMENT
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Hart

PROFESSOR HENRY ~~HOYT~~ No
DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE
THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
MADISON, WISCONSIN

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Loemker ?

Professor Leroy Joenher
Department of Philosophy
Emory University
Atlanta, Georgia 30322

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

Larry Rogin

AFL-CIO
EDUCATION DEPARTMENT
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

NO

Mr. Norman Hill, Staff Assistant
Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

I.V.D.

Postmaster: This parcel may be opened for postal inspection if necessary.
Return Postage Guaranteed.

NEW LABELS MADE JULY 12 IN LIEU OF ATTACHED.

Mr. Fred Hoehler
Education Director
United Steelworkers of America
1500 Commonwealth Bldg.
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Mr. Larry Rogan
AFL-CIO
Education Department
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. Don Slaiman
AFL-CIO
Civil Rights Department
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. Norman Hill
Staff Assistant
Industrial Union Department,
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Professor Henry Hart
Dept. of Political Science
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wisconsin

Professor Leroy Loemker
Department of Philosophy
Emory University
Atlanta, Georgia 30322

Mr. Sinway Young, President
South Carolina Labor Council,
AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 1411
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Mr. Harold B. Boyd, President
Virginia State AFL-CIO
102 N. Belvidere Street
Richmond, Virginia 23220

Mr. Henry C. Kake, Research &
Education Director
Kentucky AFL-CIO
706 E. Broadway
Louisville, Kentucky 40202

Mr. John M. Defee
Representative
Papermakers
Route 1, Box 377
Bastrop, Louisiana

Mr. Lee Case, Secretary
Tennessee Labor Council
226 Capitrl Blvd.
Room 205

Mr. Lee Case, Secretary
Tennessee Labor Council
226 Capitol Blvd.
Room 205
Nashville, Tennessee

Mr. Ed Lashman, Staff Assistant
COPE, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. Norman Hill, Staff Assistant
Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. Sam Ezelle, Exec. Sec.-Treas.
Kentucky StateAAFL-CIO
706 E. Broadway
Louisville, Kentucky 40202

Mr. Charlie Harris, President
Florida AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 537
Allapattah Station
Miami, Florida

Mr. Hubert N. Jackson, Chief
Intergroup Relations
Public Housing Administration
Housing and Home Finance Agency

Mr. A. Frederick Smith
Deputy Regional Director of Urban Renewal
Housing

Mr. Hubert N. Jackson, Chief
Intergroup Relations
Public Housing Administration
50 7th Street, N.E., 721-A
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. A. Frederick Smith
Deputy Regional Director of
Urban Renewal
Housing and Home Finance Agency
50 7th Street, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia

EEOC?

Mr. John M. Heneghan
Department of the Navy
50 7th Street, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. Phenizee F. Ransom, Jr.
U. S. Department of Labor (BES)
1371 Peachtree Street, N.E.
Room 632
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. Hugh A. Brimm
U.S. Army Materiel Command
Atlanta Army Depot
Forest Park, Georgia

Mr. Horace A. Bohannon
Atlanta Regional Office
Post Office Department
Federal Annex
Atlanta, Georgia

Comp.

Mr. Roy Reuther
United Automobile Workers ...
8000 East Jefferson Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48214

Mr. William Dodds
United Automobile Workess
8000 East Jefferson Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48214

Comp.

Mr. Jack Conway, Director
Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Comp.

Mr. William Oliver
Fair Practices Division
United Automobile Workers
8000 East Jefferson Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48214

Mr. William T. Ross, Jr., Sec.-Treas.
S.E. Printing Trades Conference
3478 Faxon Avenue
Memphis, Tennessee

Mr. Edward C. Sylvester
Office of Federal Contract
Compliance
Washington, D. C.

Comp.

Mr. Paul Swaity
Textile Workers Union of America
~~44 East 23rd Street, Rm. 316~~
~~New York, New York~~ 10010

Mr. E. Vincent Suitt
USAF ATCMD - AFSC
41 Exchange Place, S.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Mr. Daniel A. Powell, Director
Area V, C.O.P.E., AFL-CIO
5298 Revere Road
Memphis, Tennessee

Mr. Aaron Henry, President
Mississippi N.A.A.C.P.
213 Fourth Street
Clarkesdale, Mississippi

Mr. Albert M. Horn
Adair, Goldthwaite, Sanford,
Daniel & Horn
1431 Candler Building
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Comp.
Mr. George Gill
Communications Workers of America
40 Pryor Street, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. William Clitheroe
International Association of Machinists
Glenn Building, Rm. 808
120 Marietta Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. Jack Handler
I.L.G.W.U.
457 Plaster Avenue
Atlanta, Georgia 30324

Mr. Alan Kistler
Assistant Director of Organizing
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Comp.
Mr. William Gary, Director
Civil Rights
International Union of Electrical,
Radio and Machine Workers
1126 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20036

Mr. Virgil A. Stokes
408 McCain Drive
Monroe, Louisiana

Mr. Robert J. Peters
Route 2, Box 35-H-3
Bartow, Florida

Mr. Jimmie Lee Williams
409 53rd Street
Fairfield, Alabama

Professor Richard Hocking
Department of Philosophy
Emory University
Atlanta, Georgia 30322

Professor Malcolm Jewell
The University of Kentucky
Department of Political Science
Frankfort, Kentucky

Professor Frank K. Gibson
Department of Political Science
The University of Georgia
Athens, Georgia

Professor Leroy ~~Joenher~~ Loemker
Department of Philosophy
Emory University
Atlanta, Georgia 30322

Professor Charles Haunshell
Department of Political Science
Emory University
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. James E. Stewart
1818 Dumesnil Street
Louisville, Kentucky 40210

Mr. Wallace G. Wickliff
514 S. Park Street
Bellefontaine, Ohio

Mr. Keith McAliley
Route 1, Box 643B
Carmel, Indiana

Mr. Elbert Robinson
1818 Hinson Avenue
Mobile, Alabama

Mr. L. E. Gore
35 North Estate Drive
Greenville, South Carolina

Mr. Fred C. Robinson
229 Flora Avenue
Rome, Georgia 30161

Mr. Kenneth W. Lax
1610 Commerce Bldg.
Fort Worth, Texas 76102

Mr. John J. Jennings
1311 Ardmore Drive
Greensboro, North Carolina

Mr. Robert W. Lee
83 W. Lakewood Drive
Fenton, Missouri 63026

Mr. Frederick W. Cory
404 Tannel Blvd., Apt. 2-J
Chattanooga, Tennessee

Mr. Hugh Owen
2503 Clearpark Drive
Memphis, Tennessee 38127

Mr. John J. Early
462 Hogan Road
Nashville, Tennessee

Mr. Hub Cope
214 North First Street
Mayfield, Kentucky

Mr. Willis G. Robinson
Route 2, Box 920
Connelly Springs, North Carolina

Mr. Michael Volk
5317 Kingfish Street
Orlando, Florida

Mr. Lawson C. Chitty
P. O. Box 847
Dade City, Florida 33525

Mr. Merlin Taylor
Industrial Training Advisor
Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training
U. S. Department of Labor
1371 Peachtree Street, N.E.

Miss Alice I. York
Representative, South East
Region, ILGWU
Route 3
Cullman, Alabama

Mr. George Dixon, Vice-Pres.
Int'l. Longshoremen's Assn.
505 Davis Avenue
Mobile, Alabama

Mr. E. J. Jacobs, Sec.-Treas.
Arkansas State AFL-CIO
1408 Rebsamen Park
Little Rock, Arkansas

Professor Malcolm Jewell
Department of Political Science
University of Kentucky
Lexington, Kentucky

Professor Malcolm Jewell
Department of Political Science
University of Kentucky
Lexington, Kentucky

Mr. William E. Allen, Secretary
Florida AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 7097
Tampa, Florida

Mr. Herbert C. Green
Education Representative
United Automobile Workers
1776 Peachtree Street, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia

SENT NS FROM LP
JUNE 16, 1966

MR. BARNEY WEEKS, PRESIDENT
ALABAMA LABOR COUNCIL, AFL-CIO
604 LYRIC BUILDING
BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA 35203

MR. ART HALLGREN, VICE-PRES.
FLORIDA AFL-CIO
P. O. BOX 537
ALLAPATTAH STATION
MIAMI, FLORIDA

MR. W. H. MONTAGUE, SR., PRES.
GEORGIA STATE AFL-CIO
15 PEACHTREE STREET, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

MR. VICTOR BUSSIE, PRES.
LOUISIANA AFL-CIO
429 GOVERNMENT STREET
P. O. BOX 58
BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA 70821

MR. CLAUDE RAMSAY, PRESIDENT
MISSISSIPPI AFL-CIO
133 SOUTH LAMAR STREET
JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI 39201

SENT NS X FROM LP JUNE 16, 1966

MR. W. M. BARBEE, PRESIDENT
NORTH CAROLINA STATE AFL-CIO
P. O. BOX 10805
RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA

MR. E. T. KIRKLAND, SEC.-TREAS.
SOUTH CAROLINA LABOR COUNCIL,
AFL-CIO
119 SOUTH PARKER STREET
COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA 29201

MR. MATTHEW LYNCH, PRESIDENT
TENNESSEE STATE LABOR COUNCIL,
AFL-CIO
226 CAPITOL BLVD., ROOM 205
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE 37219

MR. M. C. WESTON, JR., DIRECTOR
UNITED STEEL WORKERS OF AMERICA
SUITE 334
1776 PEACHTREE STREET, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

MR. CHARLES GILMAN, REGL. DIR.
AFL-CIOSENT NS FROM LP JUNE 16, 66
HURT BUILDING
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

MR. R. J. BUTLER, SECRETARY
ATLANTA LABOR COUNCIL
250 10TH STREET, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

MR. J. HARLEY THOMAS, VICE-PRES.
INT'L. CHEMICAL WORKERS UNION
CARNEGIE BUILDING
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Wmp.

MR. MARTIN J. MORAND, REGL. DIR.
INTERNATIONAL LADIES GARMENT WORKERS UNION
457 PLASTER AVENUE, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30324

MR. AL GROSS
COUNCIL OF ATLANTA CITY EMPLOYEES
A.F.S.C.M.E., AEE-CIO
160 CENTRAL AVENUE, S.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

MR. JEROME LEVINE
INTL. CHEMICAL WORKERS, JOINT COUNCIL # 3
1014 EDGEWOOD AVENUE, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

MR. GUY DICKINSON, REPRESENTATIVE
RETAIL, WHOLESALE & DEPARTMENT STORE WORKERS UNION, AFL-CIO
1014 EDGEWOOD AVENUE, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

DR. VIVIAN HENDERSON, PRESIDENT
CLARK COLLEGE
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30314

FATHER LOUIS TWOMEY, DIRECTOR
INSTITUTE OF HUMAN RELATIONS
LOYOLA UNIVERSITY
NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA 70118

MR. GERALD E. SIEFKEN, ASST. DIR.
INSTITUTE OF HUMAN RELATIONS
LOYOLA UNIVERSITY
NEW ORLEANS,LOUISIANA 70118

MR. EARL DAVIS
COPE, AFL-CIO
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

MR. PHIL WEIGHTMAN
COPE, AFL-CIO
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

PROFESSOR KEITH DIX
SCHOOL FOR WORKERS
UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION
THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
MADISON, WISCONSIN

AFL-CIO
EDUCATION DEPARTMENT
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

AFL-CIO
CIVIL RIGHTS DEPARTMENT
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

AFL-CIO
DEPARTMENT OF RESEARCH
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, DC 20006

AFL-CIO
DEPARTMENT OF LEGISLATION
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

AFL-CIO
COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

AFL-CIO
HOUSING DEPARTMENT
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

AFL-CIO
INDUSTRIAL UNION DEPARTMENT
815 16TH STREET,N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. CO 20006

AFL-CIO
BUILDING TRADES DEPARTMENT
815 16TH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

MR. E. H. WILLIAMS, DIRECTOR
REGION VII, AFL-CIO
1015 CARONDELET BLDG.
NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA

MR. ROBERT STARNES, ASST. DIR.
REGION VII, AFL-CIO
133 SOUTH LAMAR STREET
JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI

MR. PAUL CHRISTOPHER, DIRECTOR
REGION VIII, AFL-CIO
216 FLATIRON BUILDING
705 BROADWAY, N.E.
KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE

MR. CAREY E. HAIGLER, ASST.DIR.
REGION VIII, AFL-CIO
SUITE 207
2121 COMMONWEALTH AVENUE
CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

MR. LESTER GRAHAM, DIRECTOR
REGION XVII, AFL-CIO
1318 CONTINENTAL NATL. BANK BLDG.
FORT WORTH, TEXAS

PROFESSOR HENRY HOYT
DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE
THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
MADISON, WISCONSIN

MR. BOB WESTERVELT
332 SOUTH MCDONOUGH BLVD.
DECATUR, GEORGIA 30030

Comp.
MR. CARROLL HUTTON, DIRECTOR
EDUCATION DEPARTMENT
UNITED AUTOMOBILE, AEROSPACE AND AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENT WORKERS OF AMERICA, AFL-CIO
8000 JEFFERSON AVENUE
DETROIT, MICHIGAN

MR. JAMES E. NOE
RESEARCH AND EDUCATION DIRECTOR
INT'L. BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS
1200 15TH STREET,N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

MR. EMERY BACON
EDUCATION DIRECTOR
UNITED STEELWORKERS OF AMERICA
1500 COMMONWEALTH BLDG.
PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA

MR. HERBERT BUTLER
UAW
1776 PEACHTREE STREET, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

MR. EARL HENDERSON
UAW
1776 PEACHTREE STREET, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

MR. T. H. VINCENT
UNITED PACKINGHOUSE FOOD AND ALLIED WORKERS, AFL-CIO
353½ LUCKIE STREET, N.W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ COPE REGION II
P. O. BOX 185

MR. WALTER DAVIS, DIRECTOR
COPE AREA II
RETAIL CLERKS BUILDING
2424 EUCLID
CLEVELAND, OHIO 44105

Comp
MR. WILBUR HOBBY, DIRECTOR
COPE AREA III
P. O. BOX 175
103 CORPORATION STREET
DURHAM, NORTH CAROLINA

PROFESSOR DAN POLLITT
SCHOOL OF LAW
UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA
CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA

PROFESSOR RAY MARSHALL
DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS
UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS
AUSTIN, TEXAS

MR. PAUL SWAITY
EDUCATION DIRECTOR
TEXTILE WORKERS UNION OF AMERICA
99 UNIVERSITY PLACE
NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10002

MR. WILLIAM L. ABBOTT
EDUCATION DIRECTOR
UNITED RUBBER, CORK, LINOLEUM
AND PLASTIC WORKERS OF AMERICA
87 SOUTH HIGH STREET
AKRON, OHIO

MR. JOSEPH C. CORCORAN
EDUCATION DIRECTOR
UNITED ASSOC. JOURNEYMEN AND APPRENTICES OF THE PLUMBING AND PIPEFITTING INDUSTRY OF THE U.S.
AND CANADA, AFL-CIO
18 AMUNDSON AVENUE
MT. VERNON, NEW JERSEY

MR. ABRAHAM WEISS
RESEARCH DIRECTOR
INT'L.BROTHERHOOD OF TEAMSTERS
25 LOUISIANA AVENUE, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20001

MR. Elwood Taub
~~MR. THOMAS J. COSGROVE~~
EDUCATION DIRECTOR
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE,
COUNTY, AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES
815 MT. VERNON PLACE, N.W.,
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20001

PROFESSOR THOMAS DYE
DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE
UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA
ATHENS, GEORGIA

PROFESSOR WILLIAM COLLINS INSTITUTE OF GOVERNMENT
UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA
ATHENS, GEORGIA

PROFESSOR DAVID BROILES
DEPARTMENT OF PHILOSOPHY
UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA
ATHENS, GEORGIA

File

MAILING LIST DISTRIBUTION

CAT. NO.		NUMBER OF STENCILS
1.	Chamber of Commerce	589
2.	School Superintendents	810
3.	Interagency	226
4.	Board	101
5.	Labor	114
6.	State Groups (and Cooperating Organizations)	14
7.	Research List	202
8.	All Purpose	401
9.	Mass Media	305
10.	Government Agencies and Congressmen	84
11.	Education Associations	55
12.	Libraries	787
13.	Blue Ribbon	204
14.	Student Newspapers	120
15.	Student Council Presidents	124
16.	Internationals	26
17.	State Advisory	126
18.	Bank Presidents
	FCR	57
	VIP	5
19.	Paid Subscribers

PRESS RELEASE

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
522-8764

FOR RELEASE TO EVENING PAPERS:
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1970

ATLANTA -- Atlanta experienced "a collapse of public leadership" as it confronted a court order for full integration of the public schools, a research report in the monthly publication SOUTH TODAY concludes.

The report on developments leading up to court orders for faculty and student integration contrasts the city's response in late 1969 and early 1970 with its performance almost a decade earlier when school desegregation began.

Atlanta recently has experienced a "leadership vacuum," said SOUTH TODAY, which is published by the Southern Regional Council. The schools transition came at a time when the civic-business leadership of the 1960s was still "smarting from the wounds" of rejection in the October city elections and before new leaders in City Hall had taken firm hold of their new duties, the report says.

U. S. District Judge Frank Hooper had called for integration plans on Dec. 16, SOUTH TODAY reports, but for weeks "there was little but silence from Atlanta's political, business, civic and religious leaders on the impending developments." In the meantime, students were marching in the streets and urging defiance of the law, and Gov. Lester Maddox was calling for school boycotts. Although the public school system was being direly threatened by this revolt, the report says, by mid-January nothing had been done "to prepare the city's residents for what was coming."

Judge Hooper had ordered that the faculties of all schools in the Atlanta system be made 57 per cent black and 43 per cent white by early February. He subsequently granted a delay until March 4.

The "taciturnity" of the city's business leadership as teachers, students and parents were rallying to the Maddox position especially noteworthy, the report says. It says that leading business figures and the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, often credited with helping to create a climate of racial tolerance in the 1960s, were "faced with a crisis of potentially city-wrecking proportions, and by mid-January all they had mustered was a sickly resolution urgaing calm and support of the school board, which not all of the Chamber's board of directors would even sign."

Young leaders have emerged to fill some of the leadership vacuum, the report concludes. It especially notes the roles played by Good Government Atlanta and Better Schools Atlanta, two organizations which in recent months "have had enormous influence on the city's future." Good Government Atlanta hand-picked a number of candidates for the Board of Aldermen and Board of Education and the support of black voters helped most of them to victory.

The report also criticizes the Atlanta Board of Education's performance before January, saying its attorneys over a span of 12 years had made "more than 290 legal maneuvers designed, overall, to slow the movement of Negroes to white schools," thus precipitating the eventual order from Judge Hooper for faculty integration on the basis of percentages. A slate of reform candidates won half the seats on the school board in the recent elections, but the problems it inherited through the laggard conduct of the old board are formidable, the report says.

The report notes that 1970 is an election year in Georgia and candidates for governor were among those countenancing defiance of the law. It says that in addition to Gov. Maddox, a Democrat who hopes to remove a constitutional ban against a second term, candidates who encouraged the forces of resistance with their first public comments about the impending school integration were State Compt. Gen. James L. Bentley and State Sen. Oliver Bateman, likely opponents for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, and former State Sen. Jimmy Carter, a Democrat.

"The only state politicians to speak out loudly, clearly and immediately for reason were former Gov. Carl Sanders, a Democratic gubernatorial candidate this year, and former Gov. Ernest Vandiver," the report says.

And, it adds:

"As of mid-January, residents of Atlanta had seen very little evidence of concern on the part of the city's leaders, who were, for the most part, strangely quiet. Outgoing Mayor Ivan Allen did say that Atlanta's people always faced crisis with "wisdom," and incoming Mayor Sam Massell did call for calm and a "positive approach," the report notes, but during the month from mid-December until mid-January neither offered strong public leadership in the crisis.

The report was compiled by William Winn. SOUTH TODAY is a monthly publication dealing with problems of race and poverty, as well as regional socio-economic trends and their background.

# #

PRESS RELEASE

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
522-8764

FOR RELEASE TO
MORNING PAPERS:
SUNDAY, JUNE 21, 1970

ATLANTA -- Southern school officials are now hearing tougher talk from the Nixon administration's school enforcement officials than they were hearing a year ago, despite earlier talk about neighborhood schools.

That is the conclusion of Paul M. Rilling, who recently resigned as Southeastern regional civil rights director of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare because of dissatisfaction with the administration's posture on civil rights. Mr. Rilling's views are expressed in an article which will appear in the July issue of South Today, monthly publication of the Southern Regional Council.

Mr. Rilling charges the administration with a "shoddy performance" in school desegregation matters during the past year, but he says there is reason to believe it will be more tough-minded in September. In "capitulating to segregationist pressures a year ago," he says, the administration repeatedly said total desegregation should take place in September, 1970.

"Administration spokesmen are now boxed in by their own rhetoric of a year ago," he writes. ". . . Now their own credibility is really on the line."

He notes that Jerris Leonard, assistant attorney general for civil rights, and Robert C. Mardian, staff director of the President's cabinet-level committee on school desegregation, have been touring the South talking to school officials.

He adds:

"At meetings with school officials this summer Mr. Mardian and Mr. Leonard have teen talking tough. They offer no relief for districts asking for more time, beyond the fall of 1970. For all their criticism of 'overzealousness' on the part of the Office of Civil Rights personnel under the Johnson administration, they are now talking in very much the same accents as did HEW representatives during the summer of 1968. In fact, being less experienced in the nuances of Southern rhetoric, their statements sometimes sound tougher than anything said by their predecessors."

Mr. Rilling writes that the desegregation plans now being approved by HEW provide for completely unitary systems by September. "Although there is lip service to the concept of 'neighborhood schools,'" he says, "Mr. Leonard has made it clear that school zones are expected to be drawn so as to maximize desegregation.... There have been fewer special political exceptions this year than there were a year ago."

Mr. Rilling sees the next school year as the most crucial one yet in school desegregation in the South. "It will either see the end of effective resistance and the achievement of complete desegregation throughout most of the deep South; or the progress of desegregation will come to a halt with fateful consequences for the South and the nation," he writes.

The former enforcement officer says the Nixon administration's "failure of will last year cost the federal government credibility and valuable time, but it was not decisive." He adds: "The Supreme Court has spoken clearly, but where stands the executive branch? Where stands the President of the United States?"

Unless the Justice Department files statewide desegregation suits in the South immediately, he says, it will be too late for this "major lever being applied by the government" to do its job by September.

The Southern Regional Council, publisher of South Today, is a foundation-supported agency in the human relations field.

PRESS RELEASE

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
522-8764

FOR RELEASE TO
MORNING PAPERS:
SUNDAY, JULY 5, 1970

ATLANTA -- The welfare departments of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and Florida are the biggest slum owners in those states, the Southern Regional Council says in a new report.

The report in the Council's monthly newspaper, South Today, says these states have become slum owners in an attempt to recoup some of their welfare expenditures by enforcing liens or claims against the property-owning poor. The lien/claim laws provide that welfare recipients must put a "voluntary" lien on their property so that the state can be assured of repayment upon the death of the client.

The laws have the effect, says the report, of discouraging many needy people from applying for welfare payments. The report suggests this was the principal motivation behind the states' passage of the laws.

"Once the recipient dies," says the article, "and the state gains title to the land, the property is not sold for at least six months and sometimes two to three years pass before they are disposed of at forced auction. Since they cannot be rented or leased during this period, they deteriorate like festering sores enhancing the squalor of the city or country slum--a fitting monument to the welfare system's concern for the poor."

Among the points made by the study:

--Welfare departments not only own substandard housing, they contribute to its deterioration.

--The lien law operating in neighborhoods where property values are most threatened robs the poor person of his motivation to maintain his property.

--While efforts were made in many state legislatures this year to abolish the lien law system, only Virginia's was successful.

--Nixon welfare proposals included a provision that would deny federal funds to states with lien/claim laws. But this provision was eliminated in the version passed by the House and pending in the Senate. The South Today report says the chances of eliminating the lien/claim laws this year are now slight.

According to the South Today report, under some of the "first class" lien laws the state takes out the amount it paid the welfare client in public assistance when the lien property is finally sold at auction. But the federal government pre-empts between 75 and 80 per cent of this amount to recover its contribution to the state's Old Age Assistance and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled Programs. For the two-year fiscal period, 1966-68, North Carolina recovered $3,885,694 before the federal share was taken out, less than one per cent of the total welfare expenditure by the state.

Supporters of the lien system freely admit that the direct recoveries are not sufficient to justify the lien laws, says the report. The real financial benefits that accrue are in the deterrent effects of the law, since the liens keep thousands of people from applying for public assistance.

The report charges that the welfare department, an agency charged with the responsibility of administering to the needs of the destitute, has become "one of the primary perpetuators, if not actual architects, of the Southern slum."

It also states that those states in the South which have lien laws are precisely those states which have some of the highest land values in the region due to their industry or tourist trade. The same holds true for states with lien laws outside of the South, such as New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Massachusetts.

Perhaps the best way to ameliorate the welfare slum, the report suggests, would be a negative property tax developed along the lines of the negative income tax to provide the resources as well as the incentive to improve ghetto homesteads. People with poverty-line (or lower) incomes could be rewarded for making improvements on substandard property through a tax rebate to partially cover the costs.

"Poor people would no longer be punished with higher taxes for improving their property; instead they would be encouraged to maintain their homesteads. The poor themselves then should participate in the planning and implementation of ghetto housing rehabilitation," says the report.

The report was written by Robert Troy, who teaches political science at Georgia Tech, and Gary Elwell, who has worked with community organization in poor areas throughout the country.

The Southern Regional Council, founded in 1944, is a foundation-supported research and information agency dealing with human relations problems.

# #

RDC - Publicity

TORONTO DAILY STAR

1/18/71

The blacks' struggle returns to the South in search of a policy

1/18/71

By BRUCE GARVEY
Star staff writer

ATLANTA — What do you do when the lunch counters and the libraries are all integrated? When blacks are voting their leaders into office and semi-integration of the schools has stilled the cry for classroom desegregation?

Atlanta's civil rights leaders now are groping for Phase Two of their campaign for racial equality.

With Martin Luther King gone and the notion of separate development sweeping the black community, the problem has Atlanta's black leadership in a quandary. The south's civil rights movement is stalled at the crossroads, with the bigger racial nationalism of northern Negro militants coming up fast.

While the Black Panthers preach their quasi-Marxist philosophy and duel with the police, southern black leadership is agreed on one thing—the solution to America's racial crisis lies in the deep south, where it all began.

Bruce Garvey

The Negro in the U.S.

Bitterly disillusioned by Atlanta's vaunted progress toward racial equality — legally and physically a fact: spiritually a facade young civil rights leaders here cling to the belief that King's Christian non-violence is still the best hope.

Despite President Richard Nixon's slowing down of school integration, the huge government civil rights bureaucracy assembled during the 1960s grinds on toward racial equality with a ponderous momentum of its own. But it moves so slowly that the men whose protests created it see their own hold on the aspirations of black America as tenuous and slipping.

"There still seem to be ways out in the south, integration's still a force here whereas in Detroit and Newark they've had it," says Clarence Wright, a young community worker for the Southern Regional Council.

"After all, integration has made life a lot better for an awful lot of people tribute something to the other side." He grimaces at Atlanta's proud claims of school desegregation.

In the suburbs and rural hinterland busing is "either a dirty word or a God-send," according to one education official. "It's a God-send for diluting concentrations of blacks," she added, "Spreading them around a bit thinner, I mean."

In Atlanta—as in every city in America—the trend is to a white migration to the suburbs, leaving a decaying black city. Yet it's here in the south that the blacks say the racial battle will be fought and won. Already the great migration from the rural farms to the northern cities has been turned around.

"There's a move back to the south and the kind of people who are moving back seem to be intelligent," says civil rights worker Leon Hall.

Bought 1,000-acre farm

"I'd say that by the mid-70s it will be a very serious move—there's room to operate in the south. In the north it's like floating in a river of daggers and swords and you don't find out where they are until one is in your back. In the south you know where you stand, once you get outside Atlanta. You know who the enemy is. And there's land available—the land is here. By the mid-70s, I think there'll be a serious thrust put on a demand for land."

The militant Black Muslim movement has already pioneered the idea of land acquisition. The Muslims bought a 1,000-acre farm in St. Clair county, Ala. Last year and weathered the fury—and the poisoned cattle—from local whites. Last month, the Muslims announced a new purchase of 556 acres in Calhoun, County, Ala., for $99,613.

Civil rights pioneers such as Hall swallow their disappointment in the failings of integration by looking on 10 years of protest as the education that has paved the way "for the present-day new militancy."

The great argument is which direction the new racial equality thrust will take.

"It has to be in the form of mass activities," believes Hall. "It's absurd that we aren't doing some of these things today. The risk is much greater now but the gains are much more greater too. After Kent State, I suppose that it may mean slews of black people will be literally slaughtered—but we've got to be prepared to do it. Local demands have got to be made in a mass form."

on the aspirations of black America as tenuous and slipping.

"There still seem to be ways out in the south, integration's still a force here whereas in Detroit and Newark they've had it," says Clarence Wright, a young community worker for the Southern Regional Council.

"After all, integration has made life a lot better for an awful lot of people here and we don't have the intense, urban hopelessness that there is in the north."

Yet "Butch" Wright, a big, brawny young man, agonizes over his commitment to King's methods and the articulate, cynical arguments of militants such as the Panthers that so often are almost irrefutable.

Schools explosive issue

While Atlanta found a willing place for its black citizens in a booming, expanding economy, the city's experience with the explosive issue of school integration reeks of the doubts that bother Butch Wright.

"Take the example of my wife," he says. "She teaches at Dykes high school. It's in a fancy white neighborhood and it's almost strictly white—yet the teachers have been integrated. The only blacks the white kids out there know are the teacher and the janitor."

Atlanta showed its willingness to meet desegregation standards with a massive shuffling of teachers—800 black and 800 white teachers were suddenly transferred around the city's schools to create standard faculties that were 57 per cent black and 43 per cent white.

The same thing didn't happen with the student bodies, however. By some quirk of fate, a years-old local statute ruled that no child could be bused to a school if it was less than two miles from his home.

No fleet of buses

The result was that Atlanta didn't have any fleet of bright yellow school buses whose daily comings and goings have caused racial havoc all over America.

No buses meant no busing and that meant semi-integration at best. Where it has happened, Atlanta's desegregated schools—and they've been more than nominally desegregated for years—have been a comparative model of racial harmony.

Yet there are still all-black schools and predominantly black schools and their standards are woefully lower than their white counterparts.

"It's sad, really, you know," said a lecturer at the overwhelmingly black Atlanta University Centre. "I've got bright black kids who can think and grasp concepts but some of them can barely read of write."

This professor left white-establishment Princeton after 30 years in Ivy League colleges two years before his retirement. "So I could perhaps con-defenses, believes that. It's absurd that we aren't doing some of these things today. The risk is much greater now but the gains are much more greater too. After Kent State, I suppose that it may mean slews of black people will be literally slaughtered—but we've got to be prepared to do it. Local demands have got to be made in a mass form."

A key factor will be the posture adopted by King's old Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

"In the spring SCLC will either emerge either as a speakers' bureau or a very dangerous animal," says Hall.

Put on the defensive

"But all this talk of separatism is no good—I live in a bi-racial society and if improvement means working with you, I'm prepared to do it. One of the damaging things about the Panthers is that they've put black people on the defensive. We were always on the offensive with King throwing things in the face of white America that it hadn't been slapped with before.

"The only 'ism' I will tolerate is humanism—not separatism, communism or any other ism. I'm having enough trouble getting out from under the nigger label without having another one pinned on me."

"It's right," says Clarence Wright, "it's no good putting yourself in a box in America. If you do that, you're one dead nigger. Communications is the answer and you need them as much as I do."

'I have a dream . . .'

It's a passionate defence of Martin Luther King's philosophy, the guiding spirit of the civil rights movement that has brought black Americans progres that 10 years ago was only a dream.

But King's dreams are still far from fulfilled in America.

In his most famous address, King declared: "I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slaveowners will sit down together at the table of brotherhood . . . I have a dream that one day even the state of Mississippi, a state sweltering with the heat of oppression, will be transformed into an oasis of freedom and justice.

"I have a dream that my four little children one day will live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character."

King's great Christian faith and eloquence still inspire the south and Butch Wright. Yet the great void between the dreams and the realities makes Wright shrug sadly and admit:

"There ain't a black person in the south who'd be yelling for integration if we could get decent black schools.

"Hell, you stay on your side of the fence and I'll stay on mine. That's fine by me."

Time Left to Avoid Ghettos of Blacks In South, Council Says

* * *

Human-Relations Group Claims Enough Land Available, but Questions if It Will Happen

7/19/71

By a WALL STREET JOURNAL Staff Reporter

ATLANTA—Southern cities still have time "to avoid the mass concentrations of black people in central cities that have made Northern cities so rigidly ghettoized," according to a report of the Southern Regional Council, a human-relations organization based here.

"Enough land is still available in the suburbs of most Southern cities to easily accommodate the dispersal of housing for poor and moderate-income people," says the report, entitled "Equal Housing Opportunities in the South."

However, the report questions whether this will happen. It notes that "thoughtful urban planners" are worried that "the nation will become so absorbed with the idea of housing production, per se, that equal opportunities in housing will be forgotten or deliberately shunted aside," which the report says would be "particularly tragic" in the South.

The report is critical of federal enforcement of open housing regulations, particularly by the Federal Housing Administration. It accuses the agency of reinforcing segregation by not permitting FHA-backed low and moderate-income housing projects in white suburban areas.

The report notes that President Nixon, arguing that "black" and "poor" aren't necessarily synonymous, recently indicated he doesn't believe low and moderate-income housing should be forced into outlying residential areas because of suburbanites' fears "of crime, violence, drugs and the other conditions from which so many of those who are trapped in the slums themselves want to escape."

The report concedes that these conditions exist and that Mr. Nixon probably is correct in his assessment of the suburban mood. However, it argues that by "injecting such considerations without at the time defining in a more compassionate, understanding way their interrelationship to poverty and the need for federal involvement in its eradication, President Nixon simply gave credence to the stereotype of blacks and the poor as undeserving members of society."

The report also is critical of "the entire real estate industry in promoting practices that deny blacks access to housing outside of traditional black areas," which has enabled individual real estate agents to hound whites into leaving neighborhoods into which black families move. "Whites interviewed in connection with this report were bitter in their condemnation of white and black realtors," the study says.

The report says 25 neighborhood groups exist in the South today to promote open housing by fighting real estate block busters and by working to maintain or improve their neighborhoods. "This is a vital concern because cities often cut back on services in areas into which blacks have moved," the report says.

"Such areas may also be fair game for rezonings, conversions to multiple occupancy, allowing entry of more commercial enterprise, and a number of other actions which were somehow not so appropriate when the area was all white."

Dunbar Book Wins Award

The Southern Regional Council has announced that "Our Land Too" by Tony Dunbar has won the Council's 1971 Lillian Smith Award which is presented annually for a distinguished literary work on the South and Southern affairs. The award this year includes a $500 honorarium.

Dunbar's book, describing life in a black community of rural Mississippi and in a coal mining section of Kentucky, is the product of the author's observations and insights as a field worker with the poor in both localities.

"Our Land Too" was published by Pantheon Books, division of Random House, last spring.

Atlanta Constitution
1/2/72

RDC pub.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A SORT OF NADER'S RAIDERS

Southern Regional Council To Get Facelift, New Chief

By PAUL BEEMAN

The Southern Regional Council (SRC) one of the oldest functioning biracial organzations in the South, is about to get a new director and a little plastic surgery as well.

Though changes are not expected to be drastic, by early fall the face of the organization should no longer show what some might have thought were crow's feet. The rest of the new look includes a sharper nose.

Dr. Vivian Henderson, president of Clark College and chairman of the SRC's Executive Committee, said the group found itself in need of self-evaluation after the Voter Education Project (VEP) moved out from under its supervision.

"It's no secret," Henderson said, "I've never been happy with the fact VEP separated from the SRC. It had program value, prestige value. It is a very solid program and John Lewis (VEP executive director) is doing a fine job."

AFTER THE administrative split, Henderson said a challenge came from some of the younger members of the Council of 100, the biracial group that is the heart of the SRC and that determines the agency's course. "They weren't satisfied with what we're doing. They said we weren't involved," Henderson said.

"It was a good, legitimate, forceful challenge, from which no one could turn away," Henderson said. "We set up the mechanism for evaluation and included a task force of both members and outside experts."

They asked themselves what was their mission? Do we have the same goals we had 25 years ago? Are they the right goals? Are our procedures outmoded?

"We concluded," Henderson said, "that some of our aims and goals are still viable. While the South had become a part of the nation, it still has problems characteristic of the region. We did not have to alter our aim of harmony and bringing the races together to work out problems.

search and training programs and operated experimental and demonstration projects in manpower development.

When the North Carolina Fund ended in 1969, Esser became Southern adviser on grants and projects for the Ford Foundation. Ford contintor to the SRC's efforts, havues to be the largest contribuing granted $417,000 this year.

Since the announcement of his appointment early this year, Esser has been wrapping things up on several Ford projects and setting in motion his plans for the SRC.

A Virginia native, he fully agrees on the uniqueness of the South's problems and the need for private organizations such as the SRC in tackling them.

While in Atlanta recently, he said there are far more such organizations in other regions. "The South is underinstitutionalized in this area," he said.

"Now that the legal barriers are down . . .," he said, "the problem is to try and achieve a balance which recognizes the worth of the individual."

HE SAID that far more federal resources than private resources are being used to combat social problems, but that it is important the organizations not fiscally bound to governmental policies flourish at least in a monitoring capacity.

He would do nothing to alter the SRC's role as monitor he said. There will be no significant alteration in the SRC's publishing and information program which includes publishing its own monthly newsletter, "The South Today," and its own quarterly magazine, "The New South."

Lofty though it may sound, Esser hopes the SRC could function as a major role-player in efforts toward "a sound economy with equitable systems of benefits and a responsive government."

He looks at the South optimistically. "The opportunity we have is that despite history, we are now in a position to build a society that is strong and has a strong sense of justice. We can do this

DR. VIVIAN HENDERSON
'Deal With Solutions'

GEORGE H. ESSER JR.
Seeks a Place for the Poor

at student and professor levels for a summer, a semester, even a year.

Some expect Esser's previous work with the private North Carolina Fund and with the Ford Foundation, to mean instant money for the SRC.

Esser makes no such promise, claiming that if the SRC succeeds in coming up with worthwhile and meaningful

DIRTY PHOTO CONTEST ANNOUNCED

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The conservationist Izaak Walton League of America is seeking photographs for a "Dirty Picture Contest."

League officials say the subject is pollution, not pornography, and "any insult to the environment is fair game in this contest."

The contest offers $100 in cash awards. Only residents of the Portland metropolitan area are eligible.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Mrs. King Plans Wednesday Talk To Hungry Club

Coretta Scott King will speak at the Butler Street YMCA Hungry Club Forum Wednesday at noon.

Mrs. King, the widow of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., has published numerous articles and is the author of "My Life with Martin Luther King Jr." She is the recipient of numerous awards and honorary degrees and has the distinction of being the first woman to deliver the graduation address at Harvard University.

Her subject for the forum will be taken from the book by Dr. King, which she forwarded, "Where Do We Go From Here?"

Gwinnett Woman Killed in Crash; 3 Seriously Hurt

A 55-year-old Gwinnett County woman was killed Friday when the car in which she was a passenger collided with another car at the intersection of Thomas Mill Road and Bogan Road in Gwinnett.

The victim was identified by police as Mrs. Carrole Revis of Route 2, Buford, Ga.

Her husband, William Revis, and 14-year-old son, Jerry Revis, both were seriously injured, as was Harold Wilkerson, 23, of Buford, who was a passenger in the other vehicle.

New $91,000 Gun

LONDON (AP) — The British

Treason Counts Filed Against German Women

KARLSRUHE, Germany (AP) — The federal prosecutor brought treason charges against two women, one of them a former secretary of a Cabinet minister. They are accused of betraying official secrets to East Berlin.

Prosecutor Ludwig Martin said Irene Schultz, 51, and Ingeborg Weber, 44, will be tried by a Duesseldorf court on charges of treason, breach of secrecy, bribery and falsification of documents.

The Schultz woman was working as a secretary in the office of former Science and Education Minister Hans Leussink when she was arrested in February 1970. Her job gave her access to ministry secrets, including documents on West German cooperation with other governments on research projects.

Martin said the other woman, who lived in Cologne under the name Liane Lindner, was dispatched to Bonn in 1959 by the East German secret service. Her objective was to set up a spy ring with the Schultz woman and Wiedemann.

NEW!

OFFICE AND WAREHOUSE IN ATLANTA

NOW AVAILABLE

AMAZING LIQUID-PLASTIC ROOFING

GENUINE 15-YR.! ELASTOMERIC ROOFING

Save Money!

HOMEOWNERS . . . Don't Pay RIDICULOUS PRICES FOR ROOFING!

This amazing material is a modern Jet-age thermoplastic which stays flexible and pliable in temperature changes from minus 80 degrees to 300 degrees above to protect your roof.

ALL ROOFS

HOMEOWNERS DON'T PAY RIDICULOUS PRICES FOR ROOFING!!

Since 1944 this type of plastic coating has been used almost exclusively by the bigger industries of this country. This is the first time this product has been offered to homeowners in the South. You will be amazed at the money you can save, the beauty that can be shown on your roof. Attics can be made cooler, the heat is reflected off the roof. You have your choice of colors and payment plans. Investigate this fabulous scientific advance in plastics before you do anything about your roof —NO MATTER WHAT KIND OF ROOF YOU HAVE!

- SLATE
- ASPHALT
- PITCH
- ASBESTOS
- TIN
- ALUMINUM
- PITCHED ROOFS
- FLAT ROOFS
- SHINGLE ROOFS

ABSOLUTELY NO OBLIGATION FOR FREE ESTIMATE

SPECIAL PRICE FOR FLAT ROOFS!

15 YEAR GUARANTEE! against leaking

Due to defective material or faulty workmanship.

PHONE 482-2923

involved," Henderson said.

"It was a good, legitimate, forceful challenge, from which no one could turn away," Henderson said. "We set up the mechanism for evaluation and included a task force of both members and outside experts."

They asked themselves what was their mission? Do we have the same goals we had 25 years ago? Are they the right goals? Are our procedures outmoded?

"We concluded," Henderson said, "that some of our aims and goals are still viable. While the South had become a part of the nation, it still has problems characteristic of the region. We did not have to alter our aim of harmony and bringing the races together to work out problems.

"WE CONCLUDED that we needed to restructure our efforts somewhat and develop a new thrust. It became apparent that we think in terms of the problems of the poor, not just blacks.

"Things have changed rapidly in the last 10 years. The lunch counter issue and issues such as that are now dead." He explained there are now laws which deal with many of the problems about which the SRC once levied its efforts.

"Traditionally," Henderson said, "the SRC has done a hell of a job in information services, probing and surfacing problems, putting them in the public eye." He cited the SRC's well-known reports on hunger and the police killing of demonstrating students at Orangeburg, S.C.

"Even so, we want to go beyond that, broaden our scope, deal with solutions—develop a program actively involved in ferreting out solutions.

"It was felt we should be more catalytic in our role, although we do not intend on becoming a lobby group."

INSTEAD of a big staff, the organization probably will continue with a small nucleus of staffers, with efforts built around a series of task forces, Henderson said.

To call it a sort of Nader's Raiders dealing with Southern problems of race and poverty would be a fair comparison, Henderson conceded.

The hunger problem surfaced about three years ago. Had it been now, according to Henderson, a task force probably would be assigned.

A task force, he said, could attack such problems as availability of health services. "It could take three months maybe even a year to surface a problem and activate a solution. We would pursue a problem down to where we can't go any further.

"Esser, I think, has the equipment to push us in that direction," Henderson said.

Esser is George H. Esser Jr., 51, the man who becomes executive director of the SRC in May. Since graduating from Harvard Law School in 1948 he has lived in Chapel Hill, N.C., where for 15 years he was associated with the University of North Carolina.

IN 1963 he became director of the North Carolina Fund, which during its six years of operation oversaw and supported 11 community action programs, carried out re-ity.

He would do nothing to alter the SRC's role as monitor he said. There will be no significant alteration in the SRC's publishing and information program which includes publishing its own monthly newsletter, "The South Today," and its own quarterly magazine, "The New South."

Lofty though it may sound, Esser hopes the SRC could function as a major role-player in efforts toward "a sound economy with equitable systems of benefits and a responsive government."

He looks at the South optimistically. "The opportunity we have is that despite history, we are now in a position to build a society that is strong and has a strong sense of justice. We can do this more successfully than the cities in the North and communities in the Far West.

"THE SOUTH is an area with a relatively undeveloped human resource. One of the problems we have is to determine how we can help this (poor) part of our society find a place for themselves and their children within our society. There is still some sense of frustration (among the poor)."

Even if the poor are provided quality education, "Are there going to be opportunities for them when they complete that education?" he asks.

Esser said he hopes that by the time he takes over in May he will have some positive recommendations about areas that need exploration.

One of the problems he is considering is how the ghetto can be eliminated as our cities are built. "I don't know of anyone thinking about how a city, if it really wants to, can practically open up development so housing opportunities are really equal."

"As we look at long-range issues I hope we can involve the talents of our universities," he said.

HE SAID he is familiar with a number of research programs in Southern universities which would be interested in working on such projects and hopes to tap these resources

GEORGE H. ESSER JR.
Seeks a Place for the Poor

at student and professor levels for a summer, a semester, even a year.

Some expect Esser's previous work with the private North Carolina Fund and with the Ford Foundation, to mean instant money for the SRC.

Esser makes no such promise, claiming that if the SRC succeeds in coming up with worthwhile and meaningful prophets, the monies will come. "There is relatively little money in philanthropy today," he said, and but a small amount of that is given for exploration of social difficulties.

Data Processing Course Set At Cobb School

The Marietta-Cobb Area Vocational-Technical School will begin two evening classes Monday, in data processing technology and electricity.

Data processing students will progress over a period of quarterly work into full computer programming.

The basic electricity class will be fundamental to persons interested in moving into the areas of electrical technology, electronics technology and radio and television repair.

There are also limited openings in the following classes: machine shop, welding, drafting and design technology, mechanical technology and business education.

Interested persons should phone the admission office at 422-1664 after 4 p.m.

Kined in Crash, 3 Seriously Hurt

A 55-year-old Gwinnett County woman was killed Friday when the car in which she was a passenger collided with another car at the intersection of Thomas Mill Road and Bogan Road in Gwinnett.

The victim was identified by police as Mrs. Carrole Revis of Route 2, Buford, Ga.

Her husband, William Revis, and 14-year-old son, Jerry Revis, both were seriously injured, as was Harold Wilkerson, 23, of Buford, who was a passenger in the other vehicle.

New $91,000 Gun

LONDON (AP) — The British army has unveiled what it claims is the best light field gun in the world. It said the 105 mm gun fires up to six 35-pound shells a minute with a range of 10.5 miles, and costs $91,000.

plastic which stays flexible and pliable in temperature changes from minus 80 degrees to 300 degrees above to protect your roof.

ALL ROOFS

HOMEOWNERS DON'T PAY RIDICULOUS PRICES FOR ROOFING!!

Since 1944 this type of plastic coating has been used almost exclusively by the bigger industries of this country. This is the first time this product has been offered to homeowners in the South. You will be amazed at the money you can save, the beauty that can be shown on your roof. Attics can be made cooler, the heat is reflected off the roof. You have your choice of colors and payment plans. Investigate this fabulous scientific advance in plastics before you do anything about your roof — NO MATTER WHAT KIND OF ROOF YOU HAVE!

- SLATE
- ASPHALT
- PITCH
- ASBESTOS
- TIN
- ALUMINUM
- PITCHED ROOFS
- FLAT ROOFS
- SHINGLE ROOFS

ABSOLUTELY NO OBLIGATION FOR FREE ESTIMATE

SPECIAL PRICE FOR FLAT ROOFS!

15 YEAR GUARANTEE! against leaking

Due to defective material or faulty workmanship, we will repair or replace the work free of charge

PHONE 482-2923
Call Anytime 7 Days a Week (Including Sat. & Sun.)

PLAST-I-GUARD PRODUCTS
6440 Hillandale Road, Atlanta, Ga.

DAN RIVER CARPET BONANZA

SUN. 12-6
MON. 9-9

Wall to Wall Super Values

Values To $8.00 — $3.99 Sq. Yd.

We Cut To Custom Sizes — $4.99 SQ. YD. — VALUES TO $9.00

SIZE	DESCRIPTION	WAS	NOW PER SQ. YD.
12x88	Regal Blue Velvet Plush W/Pad	$8	$3.99
12x51	Cherry Red Twisted & Durable	$7	$3.99
12x60	Blue & Green In Pattern Elegance	$8	$3.99
15x30	Thick Polyester Russett Shear	$8	$3.99
15x60	Deep Celery Green Nylon Twist	$8	$3.99
12x52	Green Stripe Waterproof Commercial	$8	$3.99
12x40	Rich Italian Green Nylon Mini-Shag	$8	$3.99
12x44	Inca Gold Nylon Twist	$8	$3.99
12x87	Moss Green Smooth Plush W/Pad	$8	$3.99

SIZE	DESCRIPTION	WAS	NOW PER SQ. YD.
12x85	Willow Green Heavy Shag Plush	$9	$4.99
12x83	Red On Red Spaghetti Shag Beauty	$9	$4.99
12x44	Rich Italian Green Velvet Plush	$8	$4.99
15x92	Sky Blue Heavy Polyester Tip Shear	$9	$4.99
15x51	Heavy Pattern Nylon Cortez Gold	$8	$4.99
15x80	Burnt Orange Polyester Heavy Pattern	$9	$4.99
12x88	Green Lagoon Nylon Plush W/Pad	$9	$4.99
12x41	Candy Stripe Den Carpet	$8	$4.99
12x66	Gold Tones Tripple In Nylon Shag	$8	$4.99
12x118	Fire Red Thick Pattern Nylon	$8	$4.99

INDOOR OUTDOOR
$1.88 sq. yd.
First Quality
5.00 Value

SIZE	DESCRIPTION	WAS	NOW PER SQ. YD.
12x80	Three Golden Shades in Heavy Shag	$11	$5.99
12x55	Twisted Beauty In Deep Blue Tones	$10	$5.99
15x46	Fire Red Heavy Polyester Shear	$11	$5.99
15x77	Forrest Elegant Tip Shear Polyester	$10	$5.99
12x46	Dune Beige Durable Nylon Twist	$10	$5.99
12x110	Red-White and Blue Shag	$11	$5.99
12x75	Harvest Tones in Heavy Acrylic Shag	$10	$5.99
12x74	Red Hot Shag	$10	$5.99
12x100	Shades Of Green and Olive Shag	$11	$5.99
12x25	Moss Green Shades in Heavy Shag	$10	$5.99

$5.99 SQ. YD.
VALUES TO $11.00

REMNANTS
$19 to $69

Below is a partial Listing of over 2,000 Remnants at Doraville
Subject to Prior Sale

SIZE	DESCRIPTION	WAS	NOW
9x12	Sunshine Gold Nylon Shag	$118	$49
12x13.6	Off White Heavy Pattern Nylon	$135	$44
9x12	Spanish Gold Embossed Design	$85	$39
12x24	Blue Pattern Den Carpet	$192	$69
12x10.6	Tri Color Gold Shag Beauty	$135	$79
15x14	Dune Design Embossed Nylon	$169	$59
15x8.2	Spanish Bronze Embossed W/Pad	$125	$44
10x12	Forrest Green Indoor-Outdoor	$69	$19
9x12	Red Pattern Kitchen Carpet W/Pad	$89	$39
6x15	Deep Royal Blue Wool Plush	$130	$39
12x12.10	Silky Deep Bronze Gold Shag	$148	$59
12x9	Shades of Deep Blue in Designer Shag	$129	$39
12x12	Plush Polyester Shag Golden Olive	$165	$54
12x14.10	Earthtone Commercial Nylon	$159	$49
12x12.6	Olive Bronze & Gold Spaghetti Shag	$129	$59
10x9	Blye Tweed Area Rug Bound	$120	$29
15x9	Deep Kelly Plush Pattern	$179	$69
12x12	Spanish Gold Luxurious Shear	$149	$55
12x10	Ruby Red Indoor-Outdoor	$64	$19
12x12	Floral Pattern W/Pad	$139	$39
6x7.6	Brown Indian Design Area Rug	$69	$19
3.6x12	Rose Pattern Axminster Runner	$69	$19

CARPETS BY RALPH CURRIE

4196 N.E. EXPRESSWAY 458-0023
I-85 North, Doraville, Ga.

NORTH SPRINGS PLAZA 252-8804
Roswell Rd., Sandy Springs
(Closed Sunday)

RDC - Reports 1972

TO: Eugenia Kemp

FROM: Emory F. Via

DATE: April 13, 1972

RE: SRC NEWSLETTER

Resources Development Center

Exploratory work has been done in the past few weeks toward establishing a special Task Force Project on Education. The proposed project would deal with current pressing problems in public education to bring fresh and dramatic emphasis to the region's continuing need for desegregated quality education.

Manpower and Labor Education Division

Emory Via served on a panel at the national conference of the Urban League's Labor Affairs Division. The main presentation in that section was made by Executive Committee Chariman Vivian Henderson. Alexis Herman and Paulette Norvel of the Black Women Employment Project also attended the conference.

We have provided consultative and program planning assistance recently to Georgia State University and the National Alliance of Postal Employees for an upcoming labor education institute. Emory has also been planning a training session with a section of the Laundry Workers Union.

Bundy Says Division Giving Way to Reform

By PHIL GAILLY

McGeorge Bundy, president of the Ford Foundation, said here Thursday he believes that the nation's divisiveness is giving way to a period of reform and reconciliation.

"It seems to be in the nature of American society that periods of reform and reconciliation follow periods of divisiveness," he told the National Jewish Welfare League meeting at the Regency Hyatt House. "I think we are seeing evidence of such a movement now.

"We are learning once again that issues that initially seemed to divide and polarize can be attacked in ways that lead to reconciliation. Law and order advocates and those who see the poor as victims of law enforcement can agree, for example, on the need for prison reform both for its effect on the prisoner and its value to society.

"Improving police departments can be as much of a benefit for those who legitimately complain of police brutality as to those who are fearful of walking the streets at night. A reform of the welfare system can be made to serve the need of its clients for meaningful work and also to meet their needs for adequate food and shelter. Cleaning up the environment can help provide jobs for the jobless and stimulus to the economy."

Bundy said the civil rights struggle and the Vietnam war have spawned a new habit "of critical examination of all those aspects of society which fall short of our professions of democratic faith."

He added, "We are better

Staff Photo—Al Stephenson

SEES 'RECONCILIATION' McGeorge Bundy

most institutions. But it is not right to denounce as racist the man or woman who has to move over or wait for his promotion longer and who says, 'Why me?' "

Another speaker, Dr. Eugene B. Borowitz, editor of Sh'ma and professor of Jewish thought at Hebrew Union College in New York, said a Jewish cultural explosion in the United States is likely in the next decade.

"Two factors combine to make this view possible," he said. "First is the increased ethnic self-confidence in the Jewish community. A greater proportion of Jews than we have yet seen in American Jewry, particularly young people, are determined to shape their life through their Jewish heritage.

"Secondly, the cultural experience and know-how of the Jewish community is at an all-time high."

lead to reconciliation. Law and order advocates and those who see the poor as victims of law enforcement can agree, for example, on the need for prison reform both for its effect on the prisoner and its value to society.

"Improving police departments can be as much of a benefit for those who legitimately complain of police brutality as to those who are fearful of walking the streets at night. A reform of the welfare system can be made to serve the need of its clients for meaningful work and also to meet their needs for adequate food and shelter. Cleaning up the environment can help provide jobs for the jobless and stimulus to the economy."

Bundy said the civil rights struggle and the Vietnam war have spawned a new habit "of critical examination of all those aspects of society which fall short of our professions of democratic faith."

He added, "We are better off for all the new groups, young and not so young, that have found their voices in the last decade even if what some of them say falls short of the wisdom of Solomon . . . The extremes of the right and left have little lasting appeal to the American majority, and they do not believe that explosive issues like busing can reverse the steady progress the American society has made toward social justice. We are learning once again that issues that seem to divide and polarize can be attacked in ways that lead to reconciliation."

Bundy, an adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, said, "The accommodations required of American society to overcome gross inequality often seem to fall heavily on those least able to bear them."

In the labor market, for example, he said the competition is keenest not in the higher reaches of corporate life, but on the assembly line and in the craft unions. Scatter-site public housing is more likely to be targeted for lower and middle-income neighborhoods than more affluent residential areas.

"As the price of higher education increases," he continued, "families of moderate means feel they need financial aid too, no matter that on the hard evidence minorities need scholarships even more.

"When a middle-class white student fails to get admitted to his first-choice college, or a teacher is passed over in promotion to a principalship, and blacks or Spanish-speaking candidates are favored for these positions, is there a measure of injustice in the effort to widen justice?

"Racial minorities do still have a long way to go to make up for lost time. They are still grossly underrepresented in most institutions. But it is not right to denounce as racist the man or woman who has to

"Secondly, the cultural experience and know-how of the Jewish community is at an all-time high."

EV - Res. Seminar Folder
Business Week
June 6, 1970

The Northeast cuts its losses

A decade ago, many economists and even more politicians were predicting that the migration of American industry would produce a crisis. Manufacturing plants, attracted by the climate or favorable tax and labor policies, were shifting to the South and West. The Northeast and Midwest feared the switch would become an inexorable movement that would denude the "heartland" and leave pockets of poverty in its wake.

Today, there still are alarmists, but they have little evidence to go on. Particularly in the past five years, according to a new study by the McGraw-Hill Economics Dept., the older regions very nearly have held their own. Only in the Middle Atlantic states has the share of manufacturing employment dropped significantly, and that merely an edging down from 24% to 22% of total jobs in industry.

In the future, the McGraw-Hill study says, industrial growth in the South and West "will not be at the expense of the Northeast but in addition to it."

Growth. Between 1953 and 1963, according to the study, states south of the Mason-Dixon Line and west of the Mississippi River grew much more rapidly than the rest of the country. Their share of total manufacturing employment rose from 34% to 42%.

Since 1963, the group of states has grown only a little faster than older industrial regions, the study found. Its share of total manufacturing, at 44% in 1968, is expected to climb to 47% by 1975.

The defense industry is perhaps the biggest single factor behind the shifting regional manufacturing patterns. Much of the West's earlier growth in employment was based on missile-oriented defense procurement. The war in Vietnam, however, slowed the trend toward sophisticated equipment and revived demand for more conventional arms. By 1968, this trend had cut ordnance employment in the West from 71% of the national total to 65%. In contrast, New England moved from 16% of defense industry employment in 1963 to 21% in 1968, while the Middle Atlantic states improved their share of total ordnance jobs from 8% to 12%.

Forward look. By 1975, with the war in Southeast Asia over and the anti-missile missile program in full swing—ac-

The gradual migration of industry

New England

Regions that will lose ground

	Percent of total U.S. employment
	1963	1968	1975
Ordnance	16%	21%	16%
Furniture	4	3	2
Machinery	10	8	7
Textiles	11	9	8
Apparel	7	6	4
Rubber & plastics	18	14	12

Middle Atlantic

	1963	1968	1975
Machinery	21	20	18
Electrical equip.	28	25	23
Transportation equip.	12	11	9
Instruments	52	48	46
Tobacco	18	17	15
Apparel	44	41	39

East North Central

	1963	1968	1975
Stone & glass	25	23	21
Machinery	41	40	38
Electrical equip.	32	30	28
Transportation equip.	41	37	35
Apparel	7	5	4
Petroleum & coal	18	18	16

Southeast

Regions that will gain ground

	Percent of total U.S. employment
	1963	1968	1975
Furniture	35%	37%	39%
Stone, clay & glass	21	23	25
Electrical equip.	9	11	13
Transportation equip.	9	11	13
Apparel	28	33	36
Rubber & plastics	6	11	13

West Central

	1963	1968	1975
Machinery	12	15	18
Electrical equip.	6	9	11
Instruments	2	2	3
Apparel	9	9	10
Rubber & plastics	2	3	4
Leather	13	13	14

Western

	1963	1968	1975
Ordnance	71	65	71
Stone, clay & glass	11	12	13
Machinery	8	9	10
Food	15	17	18
Paper	9	11	12
Petroleum & coal	19	23	26

Data: McGraw-Hill Economics Dept.

cording to the assumptions of the McGraw-Hill study—the 1963 pattern will reassert itself. This will account for most of the growth in jobs on the West Coast between now and 1975 and a good part of the relatively weak performance of the East Coast.

Other shifts in regional employment patterns will be gradual: the continued erosion of the Middle Atlantic regions as a chemical producer in favor of the Southeast; the continued expansion of machinery production in the West Central states; a moderate drift of the apparel industry to the Southeast.

The real problem lies in the movement away from the cities

The new areas, in fact, are going through very nearly the same life cycle as the older industrial heartland: the development of a few key industries—defense in the West and textiles in the South—has formed a base around which other manufacturing enterprises can grow. In other words, what appears to be the continued migration of industry actually is a process in which the newer areas gradually are deepening their industrial base. As a result, the nation's industrial profile is being strengthened, at least on a regional basis. There are fewer gaping holes in the distribution of manufacturing activities, and the economy is less vulnerable to volatile swings in regional demand than it was a decade ago.

Inner change. The real problem posed by the migration of industry, consequently, is not the shifts among regions covered by the McGraw-Hill study. Instead, it is the persistent movement, within the primary regions, away from the established urban centers and out to "satellite" cities. Here a revolution in the technology of transportation—the private auto and a massive highway network—has been the root cause of an industrial exodus.

The migration from the city has been particularly marked in two supporting activities of manufacturing concerns, research and storage; both these functions have little need for the specialized business services offered in the central city. But the suburbs are drawing businesses with the lures of cheaper land, lower starting costs and more congenial living conditions.

Counteracting the movement of factory employment from the inner city, New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles are gaining as focal points for corporate headquarters. In fact, the current building boom in Manhattan attests to the growing desire of many companies to centralize executive offices in New York where they are closer to the city's financial, advertising, and communications centers. ■

Alternative military budgets

'Minimum deterrence'—Strategic forces based on Polaris-Poseidon. Minuteman and manned bombers are phased out. Reduction in general purpose forces. Armed forces number 2.3-million men. 1972 spending: $42.2-billion.

'Streamlined'—Deferral of Safeguard and phase-out of B-52's. New programs are funded by reduction of older ones. Armed forces number 2.5-million men. 1972 spending: $59.4-billion.

'Postwar baseline'—Reduction of general purpose forces to 1965 level. Strategic forces maintained at 1970 level. Armed forces number 2.7-million. 1972 spending: $70.5-billion.

'Postwar Superiority'—Heavy ABM commitment. Stepped up procurement of missiles, F-106x's. Expanded R & D. Armed forces number 3.5-million. 1972 spending: $93.6-billion.

Data: University of Maryland

Smaller defense budgets will hit these industries

These industries will gain from a peacetime economy

ECONOMICS

The peace bonanza that went bust

So far, the promised post-Vietnam dividend has mostly meant lost jobs

The peace dividend, the fiscal bonanza that was supposed to come with the end of the Vietnam war, has turned out so far to be a bittersweet reward.

In the past year, the war has wound down enough for military spending cuts to have a measurable economic impact. At the 1968 peak, according to Defense Secretary Melvin Laird, operations in Southeast Asia were costing nearly $30-billion annually. By July of this year, the cost was down to around $18-billion.

The $12-billion difference has not represented much of a dividend for the Nixon Administration, however. Cutbacks of military programs have brought real distress to the defense industry, while inflation has so raised costs that the Pentagon budget is only about $4-billion less than the record $77.9-billion of fiscal 1969.

Rather than emphasizing, as Democrats did, the opportunities involved in the conversion to a peacetime economy, Republicans have had to own up to the costs that the shift imposes on at least some sectors of the economy.

Part of the problem is that where the Democrats assumed that the conversion would take place in the context of a full employment economy, the Republicans have had to manage the switch while simultaneously deflating the economy. Tight monetary and fiscal policies produced economic slack just as military payrolls and defense procurement were beginning to feel the knife. The combination has worked out to an unappealing 5% unemployment rate.

With the fall elections only two months away and no relief in sight, Administration officials are trying to throw much of the blame for bulging jobless rolls on the "reordering of priorities" that led to the defense cuts. In the past year, about 400,000 military and 100,000 civilian employees have been released by the Pentagon and nearly 400,000 more jobs in defense-related industry have dried up. "It is not hard to see where much of the current increase in total unemployment has come from," President Nixon says.

More to come. If the Administration is right, more unemployment is on the way. Robert Moot, Defense Dept. comptroller, estimates that by June another 750,000 jobs will disappear in the defense establishment, bringing the "peace dividend" in employment terms to 1.65-million lost jobs.

Clearly, some industries and thousands of individuals are in for a wrenching experience. The aerospace industry is already a disaster area. Some small—and several not-so-small—research and development companies are wondering if they will survive until the next contract. Defense suppliers are out shopping for civilian orders to take up the slack.

For society as a whole, however, this slack is a true "peace dividend". It represents real resources that can be put to work elsewhere in the economy. The crucial question is how long the shift will take and how painful the adjustment process will be for particular industries and groups of workers.

Most economists are inclined to be optimistic about the conversion problem. "The U. S. economy is sufficiently strong and resilient to absorb the impact of various likely military spending cutbacks without major dislocations," declares a comprehensive study recently completed for the U. S. Arms Control & Disarmament Agency.

The study relied heavily on econometric models constructed at the University of Maryland and the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Finance. The models make alternative forecasts for the economy in 1972, assuming different patterns of defense spending. The alternative defense budgets ranged from a low of $42.2-billion (in 1972 dollars) to a high of $93.6-billion. For the smaller budgets, the models assumed some type of offsetting tax reduction.

Not surprisingly, the $42-billion budget helped to generate the highest level of unemployment. But even there, unemployment was only 4.8%. A $70.5-billion defense budget, slightly less than the Administration's request for the current fiscal year, was consistent with an unemployment rate of just over 4%—without any compensating fiscal or monetary actions.

"Both models suggest that the U. S. economy could adjust to cuts in defense expenditures far greater than those expected, with unemployment rates which could generally be considered tolerable. The likely application of monetary, fiscal, and other compensatory policies could be expected to reduce these unemployment rates even further," says Bernard Udis of the University of Colorado, who coordinated the project.

The Administration was caught astride a deflating economy

The pattern of industrial output would, of course, vary considerably with different patterns of defense spending. The Maryland model, based on an input-output framework that takes into account both direct and indirect effects of the alternative budgets, comes up with some striking contrasts for the economy in 1972 (chart). In particular, it suggests that lower defense spending could produce a consumer boom by way of income tax reductions. It seems probable, however, that much of the peace dividend will be absorbed by additional government programs, such as urban renewal. To the extent that this happens, there would be a different list of gainers, though the losers would be the same.

Impact. Three of the alternative budgets were cranked into a version of the Maryland model to determine regional and state impact, which in some cases was severe. Even with compensatory programs, 14 states experienced at least 5% unemployment with either of the two lower budgets. For some defense-oriented cities, the projected jobless rates were frighteningly high. With a $59.4-billion budget, Lawton, Okla., would have a 1972 unemployment rate of 17.1%; Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis., 12.5%; Fayetteville, N.C., 12.2%; Salinas-Monterey, Calif., 11.9%; and San Diego, Calif., 10.4%. That same budget, however, probably would generate a low rate of 1.4% in Lansing, Mich., and Jersey City, N. J.

In general, the arms control studies indicate that individuals would be more able than companies to make the adjustment.

Assistant Treasury Secretary Murray Weidenbaum, who worked with the group before coming to Washington, concludes that some major defense companies will have serious problems shifting to civilian markets. Two major problems, he says, appear to be a lack of management motivation (they prefer the lower risks of military production) and a lack of capability. The major defense concerns often have low capitalization, little marketing capacity, and limited experience in producing high-volume output at low unit cost.

The switch. Most of the workers in defense-related industries have jobs that

This announcement is not an offer to sell or a solicitation of an offer to buy these securities. The offering is made only by the Prospectus.

New Issue

$200,000,000

Westinghouse Electric Corporation

8⅝% Debentures, Due September 1, 1995

Price 99¾%
and accrued interest

Copies of the Prospectus may be obtained in any State only from such of the undersigned and others as may lawfully offer these securities in such State.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. — The First Boston Corporation

Dillon, Read & Co. Inc. — Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Incorporated

Salomon Brothers — Blyth & Co., Inc. — Drexel Harriman Ripley Incorporated duPont Glore Forgan Incorporated — Eastman Dillon, Union Securities & Co.

Goldman, Sachs & Co. — Halsey, Stuart & Co. Inc.

Hornblower & Weeks-Hemphill, Noyes — Kidder, Peabody & Co. Incorporated

Lazard Frères & Co. — Lehman Brothers — Loeb, Rhoades & Co.

Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis — Smith, Barney & Co. Incorporated

Stone & Webster Securities Corporation — Wertheim & Co.

White, Weld & Co. — Dean Witter & Co. Incorporated

Bache & Co. Incorporated — Crédit Lyonnais Corporation

Paribas Corporation — SoGen International Corporation

August 28, 1970

Pressure mounts in Congress for a formal conversion program are easily turned to nondefense work, the Udis group concludes. And it adds, "The specialized concept of defense workers does not appear to be useful, and special policies for him do not seem necessary." What is needed, Udis says, is a better functioning labor market and maintenance of high levels of overall employment in the economy.

An earlier study by John Cambern, an economist with the arms control agency, and David Newton, an occupational analyst with the U. S. Employment Service, reached essentially the same conclusions. They studied occupational skills at two California missile plants and found that nearly two-thirds of the jobs could be transferred to a nondefense industry, but that relocation might be necessary. Most of the remaining employees held jobs with no counterparts outside defense industries. Some retraining would be required before these workers could switch elsewhere.

But Cambern and Newton added a caveat: "While case studies of actual layoff situations at Boeing, Republic Aviation, and Martin Marietta indicate that the transition period after layoff is difficult, major efforts should be devoted to mobility assistance and to income maintenance programs that will ease hardships during this period."

Official reaction. The Nixon Administration apparently is not about to propose any special program to ease the conversion period. One interagency committee studied the question last year, came up with no recommendations, and quietly faded away. Another, under Defense Secretary Laird, is still at work. But Congressional pressures are mounting for a formal conversion program.

Last month, Senator Edward Kennedy proposed a way to help one group of employees and businesses through a difficult time. He wants a three-year, $450-million program to retrain the scientists, technicians, and management personnel now engaged in defense-related research and development so that they can "redirect their talents to resolving our pressing domestic problems, restoring the integrity of our environment, and enhancing the quality of our lives."

But the most important aid to conversion is a full-employment economy, something that the Nixon Administration cannot deliver right now. While basic monetary and fiscal policies have become much more expansionary, some real push will be needed to absorb further impact of the defense cuts already in the works. ■

9/16/70

MEMO

TO: Paul Gaston

FROM: Emory F. Via

RE: Arrangements for Research Seminar

Attached is a copy of the letter and of the information sheet sent to invitees to the research seminar.

Would you be so kind as to follow the invitation with a phone call at your earliest convenience to the following:

312-395-3884 Weld ~~Carter~~ COMING

703-526-5111 Edgar Toppin CAN'T COME home: 703-526-6275

716-275-2052 Eugene Genovese CAN'T COME home: 716-288-0573

609-452-~~3000~~ 4832 Gary Orfield ? PROBABLY WILL KNOW IN 3-4 days

Made the above calls:

Phone, Gaston, 9/16/70,

(Carter) - Coming

Toppin - NO

Genovese - NO

Orfield - Probably, will know in 3-4 days

THE FORD FOUNDATION
320 EAST 43RD STREET
NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

DIVISION OF
EDUCATION AND RESEARCH
SPECIAL PROJECTS

September 28, 1970

Doctors Vivian Henderson and Paul Anthony
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Viv and Paul:

I appreciate very much your kind invitation to participate in the research seminar on October 9 through 11. I only wish I were able to accept. To my deep regret, because of a prior commitment, I am unable to be present.

I wish the conference much success.

All good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Samuel DuBois Cook
Program Officer

THE FORD FOUNDATION
320 EAST 43RD STREET
NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

DIVISION OF
EDUCATION AND RESEARCH
SPECIAL PROJECTS

September 28, 1970

Dr. Emory F. Via
Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

It was good to chat with you via the phone the other day. I now understand what happened to the invitation to attend the research seminar. It was sent to my home.

I appreciate very much your kind invitation to attend the seminar. I regret that, because of prior commitments, I am unable to accept.

I wish the seminar much success.

All good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Sam

Samuel DuBois Cook
Program Officer

Information Sheet

RESEARCH SEMINAR

sponsored by

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
in cooperation with

The Ford Foundation

DATES: October 9-11, 1970

PLACE: Sheraton-Biltmore Hotel, Atlanta, Georgia

ACCOMMODATIONS: Will be arranged through the Council at the Sheraton-Biltmore Hotel.

EXPENSES: Travel, Room, and Meal expenses will be reimbursed

PROGRAM

PROGRAM: Informal group discussions

Friday, October 9
4:00 p.m.	Arrival and check-in
5:00 p.m.	Social Hour, SRC Suite
6:00 p.m.	Group Dinner
7:30-10:00 p.m.	Discussion--Seminar Room A & B
Saturday, October 10
9:00-12:00	Discussion (Coffe/coke available)
12:30 p.m.	Group lunch--Seminar Room C & D
2:00-5:00 p.m.	Discussion
5:15 p.m.	Social Hour, SRC Suite
Dinner	On your own
Sunday, October 11
9:00-12:00	Discussion (Coffee/coke available)
12:00 p.m.	Adjournment of seminar

For information, contact:

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
Phone No. : (404) 522-8764

Information Sheet

RESEARCH SEMINAR

sponsored by

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
in cooperation with

The Ford Foundation

DATES: October 9-11, 1970

PLACE: Sheraton-Biltmore Hotel, Atlanta, Georgia

ACCOMMODATIONS: Will be arranged through the Council at the Sheraton-Biltmore Hotel.

EXPENSES: Travel, Room, and Meal expenses will be reimbursed

PROGRAM

PROGRAM: Informal group discussions

Friday, October 9
4:00 p.m.	Arrival and check-in
5:00 p.m.	Social Hour, SRC Suite
6:00 p.m.	Group Dinner
7:30-10:00 p.m.	Discussion--Seminar Room A & B
Saturday, October 10
9:00-12:00	Discussion (Coffe/coke available)
12:30 p.m.	Group lunch--Seminar Room C & D
2:00-5:00 p.m.	Discussion
5:15 p.m.	Social Hour, SRC Suite
Dinner	On your own
Sunday, October 11
9:00-12:00	Discussion (Coffee/coke available)
12:00 p.m.	Adjournment of seminar

For information, contact: Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
Phone No. : (404) 522-8764

Roster of Participants in Research Seminar

sponsored by

Southern Regional Council, Inc.

in cooperation with

THE FORD FOUNDATION

Angell BEZA	Director, Research Services of The Institute for Research in Social Science University of North Carolina Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514
David BROWER	DO.
Weld S. CARTER	Executive Secretary TRED (Committee on Taxation, Resources, and Economic Development)
Anthony J. CATANEESE	Director, Urban Simulation Laboratory Georgia Institute of Technology 225 North Avenue, N.W. Atlanta, Georgia 30332
Fred R. CRAWFORD	Director, Center for Research in Social Change, Emory University 1380 South Oxford Road, S.E. Atlanta, Georgia 30322
Moye W. FREYMANN	Director, Carolina Population Center University of North Carolina Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514

John A. GRIFFIN	Director, Southern Education Foundation 811 Cypress Street, N.E. Atlanta, Georgia 30308
Vivian HENDERSON	President, Clark College Chairman, Executive Committee, Southern Regional Council, Inc. 240 Chestnut Street, S.W. Atlanta, Georgia 30314
Tobe JOHNSON	Director, Undergraduate Program in Afro-American Studies, Atlanta University; Professor of Political Science, Morehouse College Box 43, Morehouse College Atlanta, Georgia 30314
Alex B. LACEY	Dean, School of Urban Life Georgia State University 33 Gilmer Street, S.E. Atlanta, Georgia 30303
James R. LEUTZE	Assistant Professor of History University of North Carolina 2133 Lakeshore Drive Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514
John LEWIS	Director, Voter Education Project, Inc. 5 Forsyth Street, N.W. Atlanta, Georgia 30303
C. Eric LINCOLN	Professor of Sociology and Religion Union Theological Seminary 3041 Broadway New York, New York 10027

Herman H. LONG	President, Talladega College Talladega, Alabama 35160
F. Ray MARSHALL	Chairman, Department of Economics University of Texas Austin, Texas 78712
Ruby G. MARTIN	Washington Research Project 1823 Jefferson Place, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20036
John MONRO	Dean, Freshman Studies Miles College Birmingham, Alabama 35208
Thomas H. NAYLOR	Professor of Economics Duke University Durham, North Carolina 27706
Eugene ODUM	Director, Institute of Ecology University of Georgia Athens, Georgia 30601
Gary ORFIELD	Professor of Politics Princeton University Princeton, New Jersey 08540
Carol VAN ALSTYNE	Assistant Director for Program Development, Low Income Housing Development Corporation of North Carolina P.O. Box 1108 Durham, North Carolina 27702

FORD FOUNDATION STAFF

George ESSER	National Affairs Division Ford Foundation 212 East Rosemary Street Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514

Lucy WATKINS	National Affairs Division Ford Foundation Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL STAFF

Robert ANDERSON	Editor of Publications Editor of New South
Paul ANTHONY	Executive Director
Arthur CAMPBELL	Associate Director, Planning and Housing Project
Reese CLEGHORN	Director, Leadership Project; Editor of South Today
Paul GASTON	Research Director
Emory F. VIA	Director, Resources Development Center
Pat WATTERS	Director, Research and Information
James N. WOOD	Executive Assistant
Clarence WRIGHT	Director, Community Organization Project

Notes: Research Seminar

Questions, issues, concerns:

- --how to focus research on problems, based on idea that resources would be wasted without comprehensive approach
- Knowledge → facts no-good without action to accomplish objectives
- group questioned traditional approach of educating people to change attitudes.
- Survey research → potential influence on political process.
- must consider immediate vs institutional change
- need to view political process as instrument of change.
- ~~use vese~~

Suggestions:

- establish Research Clearinghouse to:
  - (a.) find & fill gaps in knowledge (e.g. there is little knowledge of discrimination in rural non-farm employment)
  - (b.) increase sharing of information
  - (c) bring about a division of labor (e.g. colleges, operating agencies, private [SRC]) in doing research.

to there logical division of labor)

(d) find financing for needed research projects.

— Persuade Fed. govt. to collect more data pertinent to South's problems.

— Develop a matrix for determing Purpose & objectives of research.

①

Institutions	Problem Areas
1. Economic	1. low per capital income
2. Political	2. Rural poverty
3. social	3. Substandard housing
4. others	4. Environmental Pollution
	5. Others

② Examine

la. institution in light of problems → determine policy implications

③ Generally, should be more conscious of how to eliminate "Institutional obsolescence" without contributing to ideological isolationism. One question to be answered: Are inst. policies aggravating problems.

— Toward Determination of [meaning] word Research

-- how to give Black community leverage on power structure.

-- is the overlock of operational research
-- Need to develop basic info. on level of Education.
-- Basic research needed to give perspective to [newspaper] reporting.

- info. to affect regional policies must be coupled w/ research at community level.

- develop [regional] information system -- network to insure that basic info. on South is available; analysis might lead to development of programs, or might influence policies.

- Problem areas needing research:
  Education
  Population - migration, distribution, employment, education, housing

Impact of Movement of People
↳ Mobility Trends → (1) Rapid Transit
(2) Communications technology
(3) others

- Research aimed at institutions should be considered as basic strategy.

- establish research potential of exist. institutions.
- Initiate student info. gathering on issues affecting movement of Blacks to satellite communities.
- Determine new ways of guiding urban growth

- Begin research in Local Areas:
  1. delivery of health services
  2. " " housing programs
  3. Evaluative research of programs (e.g. Title I - Ruby Martin)
  4. Identify impediments to successful implementation of policy
  5. surface problems
  ~~(6) Interrelation~~

- How can Black colleges become more involved in doing research? (will their role include monitoring public policy?)

- Explore relationship of property tax to building.
- what is the degree of Black participation in setting priorities of research on race-oriented problems

- research: feasibility of marginal economic enterprises as leverage devices (how to reach econ. independence)

- research in pivotal areas: e.g. racial discrimination in education — State Dept. of Education hire no Blacks in key positions — thus a key area to concentrate in effort to change employment practices.

- develop Network of Black & white graduate students to work on particular problems → who can coordinate these student research teams? _____.

Research Clearinghouse

1. Education	1. research available
2. Population	2. its present use
3. Economic Development	3. function
4. Communications	4. areas for action
5. Enabling techniques

Clearinghouse would:

a. develop prospectus of desired research
b. steer money to research organizations
c. develop research problems & ideas.
d. serve as information center / conglomerate data bank.
e. help release existing resources
f. alleviate dearth of applied research
g. find soft money for conducting research.

Priorities:

1. Delivery of Services by those inst. affecting rural housing.
2. Resources for Research
3. Effect of technology in transportation & communication on mobility trends
4. Long range effect of fed. programs (ineffective use of, barriers to implementation
5. Identify & coordinate network of researchers.

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

John Lewis

TO: EY

COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION PROJECT

The Community Organization Project of the Southern Regional Council has functioned as a source for informational and technical assistance for poor indigenous groups in the south. This project has provided small grants (seed money) to groups and organizations developed by poor people in various communities in our region. The objectives of the Community Organization Project ~~has~~ have been: (1) to provide technical assistance to existing and developing poor organizations; (2) to assist communal groups and organizations in the drafting and writing of proposals; (3) to assist communal groups and cooperatives in recruiting consultants or experts for certain special problem areas.

During the past decade, community organization has become one of the most important mechanisms for mobilizing poor people and getting things done. It has helped to develop meaningful programs for poor people by enabling them to develop their own human resources. This brings out undiscovered abilities and new leadership in poor communities. There is a great need for encouragement. There remains a great number of communities that lack support, socially and financially in order to accomplish their goals. Some poor communities are untouched and uninformed about their rights to participate in the decision-making process in their region. It will take time, money and energy to accomplish these ends. There are still existing in our society, poor blacks and whites who are starving, working for low wages and living in bad housing. There is a great deal to be done and poor people can do it for themselves if they are given the opportunity and resources.

The Community Organization Project has discovered through its endeavors, that a large number of poor organizations are developing in the south with little or no financial support or technical assistance. They usually consist of poor persons who have become dissatisfied with their conditions and have decided to do something. In many cases, these groups are uninformed about governmental procedures, and operations. Sometimes they become discouraged about the lack of support, accomplishments and eventually disolve their organization. If persons of experience were accessible to local organizations that couldn't afford technical assistance, this would be a step in correcting the organizational problems of poor people. However, we have tried in the past year to help such groups and organizations to become more realistic in dealing with their problems. In some instances, our limited resources have prevented us from responding to the needs and demands requested by these poor people.

Securing funds from large funding sources is becoming more and more difficult. The smaller and the least recognized poor groups and organizations do not know how to apply for funds from large foundations or agencies. There is a need for a regional program designed to help groups and organizations to develop programs that are within reason for larger support. Many groups need technical assistance in the drafting of proposals, securing trained persons, and developing a program that is applicable to local conditions. It will take money in the essential stage for groups to develop this kind of awareness. In some instances, many groups need funds immediately to sustain their organization. The need becomes urgent and they do not have time to wait for funds from larger sources. Larger sources must review, evaluate and vote on proposals before taking any type of action. (?)

We recognize that seed money is only the beginning for community development. Yet, it is a starting point for some communities and with the hope that something can be done to upgrade their conditions. The Community Organization Project can play a significant role in bringing about social change in the lives of southern poor people. It can function as an emergency source for some communities and a consultant for others. This project can also function to assist foundations and agencies in locating communities in need of help. In the past, we have accompanied foundation representatives who have expressed an interest in some communities in Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Mississippi and others.

Recently, the Community Organization Project revised a Community Organization Handbook to be distributed to various organizations and agencies. This is a simple step by step guide for persons beginning work as community organizers. The Urban League, poverty programs, and other private organizations and agencies are using the Handbook for training sessions and for information.

During the past year, the Community Organization Project ~~have~~ has awarded 25 grants to various organizations, both black and white. We have made grants ranging from the support of a day care center in the black belt of Alabama to the support of poor white organizations for business development in the Appalachain area. Recently, one organization received its license from the state for the operation of a day care center.

In the coming year, the Community Organization Project will function as an information agency for poor groups who requested our assistance. Hopefully, this project can provide technical assistance to such groups developing in the south. It is necessary to help groups with developing programs and gaining local support needed for their programs. We will assist community groups in the writing and drafting of proposals and hopefully become involved with groups in the field, which will allow us to gain insight into the problems of various communities . It is essential at this point because of the present law regulating the use of foundation grants. Instead of giving grants, we will provide technical assistance.

THE HOUSING AND PLANNING PROJECT

During the first half of 1969, this project continued essentially as a one-man operation, directed by Moreland Griffith Smith, FAIA. On June 1, 1969 Arthur C. Campbell, Planner, started his services with the Southern Regional Council. This culminated a long process of working toward enlargement of the scope of the Housing and Planning Project as well as to reinforcing SRC's service with black professionals.

Mr. Campbell is a native of Waugh, Alabama. He was born and raised there and is a product of Montgomery County's school system. From there, Mr. Campbell went to Tuskegee Institute from which he has a Bachelor of Science in Architecture. Mr. Campbell has also completed his academic work for his Masters in Planning at Georgia Tech and he is now in the process of winding up his thesis.

In spite of the enactment of the first Federal Civil Rights Housing Law, there has been non-compliance, as has been the case with all of the other civil rights laws. Attitudes have hardened, resistance techniques have been perfected, the mood of the country has moved ever to the right. Since the Federal Government is seen as a monster handing down decrees from afar, it becomes increasingly important to work to change the attitudes on the grass roots level.

Local fair housing groups have sprung up all over the country. These can be used as vehicles for change. The SRC Housing and Planning Project will continue to work with these groups to soften community attitudes and to bring about the enactment of local housing laws. Some of these groups have obtained foundation funds to aid Negroes in financing integrated housing. This aspect needs to be broadened.

In the past, throughout the South, there has been considerable dispersion of Negro residential areas. However, the southern pattern has changed rapidly in recent years to parallel more closely urban solutions in the North. Interstate Highways and rapid transit as well as railroads are at present, commonly designed to prevent easy access between white and Negro neighborhoods. Further, buffer zones force circutious patterns of circulation. This creates a great hardship in time and money for Negroes going to and from work. The Housing and Planning Project has and will of course, continue to work with local planning groups to stress the desirability of more free and equal circulation.

The idea has been raised that there is a great need for an indepth study of one sample city. This would doubtlessly show how the placement of freeways and urban renewal has been determined -- the displacement of Negroes in relation to whites, the percentage in rejected alternatives. Case histories of the machinations of real estate boards and of the FHA should be included. Also, in this report should be included case histories of suits which have taken place against real estate people and landlords. SRC's reports get wide publicity and are effective instruments for change. Such a report would provide a solid base from which to work in effecting change in the area of housing.

The open occupancy legislation opens up opportunities for bolder solutions for total city planning -- land use, intra-city transportation, inter-neighborhood communication, proximity of jobs to housing -- which can contribute to a healthier economic base and thus appeal to the business interest within the city.

If we are to have an open society, urban planning is a necessity. As an illustration: The implementation of school desegregation would be greatly facilitated if neighborhoods were desegregated. The SRC project cannot make an impact solely through its own efforts alone. Resources and staff are inadequate. It will, however, continue to work in this area, and especially seek to influence others to take up this fight. It will seek to develop financing for research papers that will call attention to the need for action, and thus enlist others in this cause.

It is proposed to continue the Housing and Planning Project, trying to encourage the private sector to participate in urban planning areas in order to broaden the base of interest within the city in order to reach all economic strata. It is felt this can be done by encouraging the awareness of the American Institute of Planners, the American Institute of Architects, the Chamber of Commerce, as well as the neighborhood organizations, in addition to organizations which SRC has advised and worked with such as:

1. Southwest Atlantans for Progress
2. The Housing Committee - Houston Council on Human Relations
3. New Orleans Consortium
4. The Arkansas Council on Human Relations
5. The Georgia Council on Human Relations
6. The North Carolina Council on Human Relations
7. The South Carolina Council on Human Relations
8. the Tennessee Council on Human Relations

9. The Virginia Council on Human Relations
10. The American Friends Service Committee
11. Ansley Park Fair Housing
12. Metropolitan Atlanta Housing Conference
13. The Mayor's Committee on Housing Resources
14. The Mayor's Code Committee
15. HUD, Nationally and Regionally

In recent months, it appears that past efforts to obtain cooperation from the national and state professional societies is bringing fruit and in the months to come, we will be able to report more substantial efforts by the AIP and the AIA in education and employment of minority groups.

The Housing and Planning Project will also continue to circulate the seven (7) publications:

1. Neighborhood Stabilization
2. A Home of Our Own
3. Mr. Mayor - Slum Ghettos in Your City: Can we solve our housing dilemma?
4. Neighborhoods where Human Relations Began
5. A Guide to Programs for Better Homes and Neighborhoods
6. Atlanta Residential Patterns

7. A Report to the Mayor

It is hoped that the Housing and Planning Project will be able to revise and update these in the near future.

HOUSING AND PLANNING SINCE JUNE, 1969 AND ITS FUTURE

Two summer interns working with this program did an evaluation of youth participation in Model Cities while actually conducting a program in which young people participated.

Housing and Planning, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Campbell developed a filing system for project materials.

Arthur Campbell participated in a tour of European new towns sponsored by Urban America, Inc. This tour was to familiarize participants with the new town concept and industrialized building. He is presently working with a Tenant's Association in Harlem, Florida (Cleviston). Engaged in evaluating the circumstances in Harlem to help determine what route the community should take to get new housing built. We will probably become involved in preparing preliminary site plans and preliminary design of structures.

We will begin surveying small towns (5,000 population and below) throughout the south to determine what kind of advocacy planning assistance our program might provide. Such surveys should provide some insight into the following areas:

1. What community groups exist and how effective have they been?
2. Who has the responsibility for housing planning and implementation?
3. Adequacy of the Housing supply
4. What housing programs are presently underway?
5. What are the obstacles to solv ing the town's problems?
6. How well has housing problems been defined and documented by existing data?
7. How much concern is there about town problems?
8. What policies exist relative to housing?
9. What are the town's or the community groups objectives?
10. What planning activity is underway?
11. What kind of assistance does the town or community group need?
12. What problems are apparent that the city need to be made aware of?

Dear Miss Fancher:

I enclose a copy of a letter I wrote to Supt. Trammel in response to the article printed in the Los Angeles Times. I called the Times to ask if they could tell me which Court I might write to where Pat Conroy is planning to plead his case. The Editors suggested I send it to you believing that you would know where it might be at least a drop in what I hope will be a large bucket of outrage, and might have some impact. I sincerely hope it does.

Sincerely yours,

Patricia G. Baker

Patricia G. Baker

Pat
J.J.D.
Betsy

614 San Lorenzo Street
Santa Monica, California
90402

November 15, 1970

Supt. Walter Trammell
County School Board
Beaufort, South Carolina

Dear Mr. Trammel:

I am deeply indebted to Miss Betsy Fancher and the Los Angeles Times for printing the story of the dismissal of Pat Conroy from his teaching task on Daufuskie Island.

I feel deep and unqualified despair at the system of priorities this country so often sets for itself. I fear so deeply that we may never learn how to be human. I see men frightened by another man's dedication; jedous of another's freedom to do what he deeply feels; restricting the freedom of others so that they may feel more comfort in their own inadequacy and impotency.

There is no profession more fulfilling to me than that of watching those with whom I work, whether children or adults, expand their own horizons, discover worlds withing themselves full of ideas and potentialities they never dreamed existed before, to find that there is a beauty in life and that there is hope for each individual to blossom, and perhaps to learn that his life may possibly have meaning. Each of those children has a model in Pat Conroy of how he might grow up and use his life. All this Pat Conroy apparently cared about very much. What do you care about?

What incredible rationality gives you and the School Board any shred of self-respect for this cruel action? I hope that every outraged citizen of this country deluges you with letters conveying their shock.

Why is it so hard in this country to be kind, to work freely, unencumbered by small minds, more interested in status than self-esteem? I feel such contempt and such frustration and such sorrow that there are so many like you in positions of power everywhere.

What is so strange to me is that the alternative way of behavior you have open to yousis to expand with pride that you are lucky enough to have such a teacher in your system. You have a teacher, a real teacher, and you choose to nail him to a cross. Must it continue throughout history to be thus until we are destoyed by oun own blindness? I urge you to reinstate Pat Conroy to his task of love.

I am sending a copy to Pat Conroy and to friends in Health, Education and Welfare in Washington, D.C.

I hope my letter will give some help to the people of Daufuskie Island.

Sadly,

Patricia G. Baker

Patricia G. Baker

February 3, 1971

Mr. William J. Thomas
3920 Carpenter Court
Studio City, California 91604

Dear Mr. Thomas:

John Foley of the Los Angeles Times forwarded your letter to me, and I do appreciate your interest in Daufuskie and your criticisms, which were well taken. They reveal a concern for the barrier islands which I also share. I have done a book on the, "The Lost Legacy of Georgia's Golden Isles" which will be published by Doubleday Feb. 12 and which contains much of the history which you mentioned, and much of the present too. My family settled on Daufuskie before the Revolution, then moved on to a Sapelo Island plantation and I spend most of my spare weekends on the coast.

Having come of age on the Constitution and felt the heavy yet kindly blue pencil of Ralph McGill, I can only say I share your respect for accurate journalism. As a journalist of 20 years, you humble me--as a teacher of journalism, this is probably all to the good. As for the Conroy story, it is quite accurate and quite tragic. My story was followed up by Newsweek's Southern Bureau Chief, Joe Cumming, and his report was much the same as mine.

With sincere thanks for your interest.

Sincerely,

Betsy Fancher
Associate Editor

BF/rh

February 3, 1971

Mr. John Foley
Executive News Editor
Los Angeles Times
Times Mirror Square
Los Angeles, California 90053

Dear Mr. Foley:

Thanks for forwarding the letter from Mr. Thomas. Having just finished a book on the barrier islands for Doubleday, "The Lost Legacy of Georgia's Golden Isles," which deals explicitly with the Gullahs, the Port Royal Experiment, etc., I felt I was on solid ground. Much of this has already been published as background for our report on hunger in the Beaufort area, etc., and seemed superflous to include in the Conroy story.

Thanks for defending me--I will write Mr. Thomas as I do deeply appreciate his interest in the islands. But we spent many hours with Pat Conroy--both myself and the Council staff and having grown up under Ralph McGill, I have to challenge his allegations that the story was based on any distortions of fact, or lack of background material. Sadly, it's all too true. Conroy has lost his suit to be reinstated and a Newsweek Bureau Chief, Joe Cumming, tells me that on his latest trip to Beaufort he learned that the Daufuskie islanders who spoke in Conroy's defense had not received their Social Security checks in December.

We have had a tremendous response to the story from lawyers, school children, teachers, film people and other writers.

Again, thanks for your letter.

Sincerely,

Betsy Fancher
Associate Editor

BF/rh

Jan. 27, 1971

Dear Mr. Thomas,

I appreciate the time and effort you took to respond to Betsy Fancher's piece on Daufuskie and its problems. I am forwarding your letter to her for her possible edification.

Incidentally, I checked Miss Fancher's credentials via various sources and worked directly with her.

Also incidentally, I am an old southern boy myself, Mississippi, and I get back there about every two years.

Sincerely,

John Foley
Executive news editor

William J. Thomas

3920 Carpenter Court
Studio City
California 91604

January 12, 1971

The Editor
Opinion Section
Los Angeles Times
Times Mirror Square
Los Angeles, California 90053

Dear Sir:

The editor who placed the article Daufuskie---"No Man an Island," in the Opinion Section of The Los Angeles Times, Sunday, November 15, 1970, date line Beaufort, South Carolina, obviously has no knowledge of the subject.

It was based on fragments of truth, deliberate intent to deceive, distortions of fact and lack of background information.

My old city editor, the great Stanley Walker, would have sent both writer and editor back to the scene to get complete facts. Tell Betsy Fander to dig through the morgues until she finds articles by Meyer Berger, Ishbell Ross or Virginius Dabney and learn something about journalism.

Semi-tropical Daufuskie Island nestles in Calibogue Sound,. One side faces the Atlantic Ocean, another affords an excellent view of the downtown Savannah, Georgia, skyline, probably no more than 12 miles distant. That is closer than I am to downtown Los Angeles from Studio City.

(more)

From Daufuskie, one can watch ocean vessels entering and departing the Savannah River channel or a constant stream of commercial and pleasure craft cruising the Intra-coastal Waterway that touches the island's shores and extends from the populous Northeast to Florida and the Gulf of Mexico. Daufuskie is not isolated.

I visited Daufuskie Island many years ago in my boyhood. Then, as now, it was canopied by tall pines, spreading live oaks, palmettoes, chinquapin, sassafras and other foliage. If it were in the South Pacific, travel agents would go into ecstacies over a beautiful spot.

At that time, there probably were only two or three white families on the island. All other inhabitants were Negroes of the famous Gullahs, who also populated most of the sea islands chain along the South Carolina and Georgia coasts.

Steamers making the regular run between Savannah and Beaufort provided passenger and freight service to all the islands along the route.

In the year 1900, I would venture to estimate, the Gullahs made up at least 75%, perhaps 80%, of the population of Beaufort County. Hilton Head Island, to which your writer referred, was about 98%. Many other islands reached a total of 100%.

Late in 1959 I went exploring and had a man row me across Lucy Point Creek to Coosaw Island in St. Helena Sound. (The motor ferry, operated by the county, had been wrecked a few weeks before by hurricane Gracie and not yet restored to service.)

(more)

No white man had lived on Coosaw Island during the previous 90 years. I talked with some of the natives, who speak the Gullah dialect which you probably could not understand. One elderly woman deplored the migration of many young persons to Northern cities.

"They'll come back," she told me, hopefully. Wise old woman.

At that time, Coosaw Island had a one-room, one-teacher school house, very old and heated by a single stove. The school teacher, a very dedicated woman who commuted from Port Royal, explained that the school was maintained for the benefit of children in the early grades, to spare them the trip across Lucy Point Creek, sometimes hazardous in bad weather, with its reversing currents. Older students were ferried over to board a bus which transported them to a very handsome school on St. Helena Island. Since my visit, I've heard that a bridge has been built so the one-room school has passed into oblivion.

Coosaw is another charming island.

These islands, long separated from the mainland by broad, meandering tidal rivers, represent an interesting page in New World history. Fought over for centuries by Indians, Spaniards, French, English, Confederates and Union forces, they were turned over almost exclusively to the Gullahs during and after the War between the States.

Most of the white people fled before Northern occupation forces, never to return. The land was divided largely into "ten acres and a mule" farms and given to the Gullahs. So it remained until rather recently.

(more)

Education missionaries moved down from the North to establish schools for the ex-slaves and their children. The Federal government, church organizations and private institutions supported them. At least two of the schools still thrive in Beaufort County. In time, as a public school system was developed through the years, the Gullahs had a choice of public or private schools, both free.

Many of these missionaries remained and, as did others who went to Hawaii in earlier years, they bought land cheap, went into farming and commerce. Their descendants are prominent citizens of the community now. Your writer probably would describe them as "Southern aristocrats." A-hem.

Ten years ago, my wife and I visited in Bluffton where we had many enlightening conversations with persons connected with the schools. They volunteered the information that Daufuskie Island did not have a population large enough to justify an all-service school, so the state boarded children of high school age in Bluffton homes so these children could have the advantages of attending the very good local high school. The problem, they told us, in both Daufuskie and Bluffton, was to induce these very children to remain in school.

Now, your writer referred to "posh Hilton Head Island, a residential resort."

Sports Illustrated, reporting recently on the $100,000.00 Heritage Golf Tournament, called Hilton Head the hottest thing east of Las Vegas. S.I. said that there now are six championship golf courses on the island.

(more)

All this has happened within fifteen years or less.

Hilton Head is one of the largest islands on our Atlantic Coast south of New York. Remember, it was populated almost exclusively by the Gullahs, with scarcely enough white people there to count.

About fifteen years ago, private capital started something. A corporation was formed, built a bridge (since acquired by the South Carolina Highway Department) to the island and began developing it. The growth has been phenomenal, according to magazine and newspaper accounts that have come to my attention.

Your article reports that a new school is under construction on Hilton Head, and I am not surprised. There must be a need for it with a growing population, just as new schools are being built in San Fernando Valley and all across the United States. We have a thing called population explosion.

Now, two parting comments.

Your article and many others refer to the lack of privies in some of the rural, isolated areas. The writer neglected to mention that privy homes and priviless homes have been and are being replaced by modern cottages with inside plumbing. Also, lumber is plentiful and cheap and anyone could knock together a privy in half a day.

It seems sad to me that natives of these beautiful islands are leaving God's great outdoors to move into slum areas of Northern cities.

The man who rowed me to Coosaw Island told me that he had tried to live in a big northern city.

"I came back home," he said. "Folks down here take time to live."

# #

Wm. J. Thomas

February 22, 1971

Mrs. O. Benjamin Sparks
364 Walnut Avenue, S. W.
Roanoke, Virginia 24016

Dear Mrs. Sparks:

We certainly appreciate your comments and your interest in our publication. I am passing your letter on to Betsy, who is out of the office this week making appearances in connection with her new book on the Golden Isles.

Pat Conroy's address is 403 Hancock St., Beaufort, S. C. 29902. I am certain that he would appreciate hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Reese Cleghorn
Editor

RC/rh

Signed in Mr. Cleghorn's absence

Betty

Answer

Paul and Gwen Dubov

5700 RHODES AVENUE - NORTH HOLLYWOOD, CALIFORNIA 91607

Feb. 25, 1971

Dear Miss Fancher!

Yesterday's mail brought us NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC, and in it a photograph taken on Daufuskie -- in tragic juxtaposition to the affluence of the region. Again, we were deeply touched and affected by it.

We're writing mainly to inquire how things are going. Have you firmed a deal for a film? And a book -- when and where may we find a copy of it? Most interested to read it.

Our regards to Mr.Conroy. Hope he has met with success in his lawsuit.

This story must be filmed. If, for any reason, the proposed motion picture deals do not materialize, remember -- we are still vitally interested.

Best wishes,

Sincerely,

Gwen Dubov -

Gwen and Paul Dubov

721 N. Alfred #103
Los Angeles, Calif. 90069
10 April 1971

Miss Betsy Fancher
SOUTH TODAY
c/o Southern Regional Council
Five Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Miss Fancher:

I have read with great interest an article of yours published in the Los Angeles Times about Mr. Pat Conroy, a teacher on Daufuskie Island during 1970 and his subsequent dismissal by the Beaufort County School Board.

I work for a film company here in Hollywood, and I believe Mr. Conroy's story is of great interest and importance. If you have any information as to the present whereabouts of Mr. Conroy, I would appreciate it if you could send me his address. Many thanks.

Sincerely yours,

Tak Fujimoto

TAK FUJIMOTO

Los Angeles Times
TIMES MIRROR SQUARE
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA 90053

Dear Miss Fancher,

I thought you might be interested in this letter from one of the readers of your article on Daufuskie which I reprinted in The Times Nov. 15.

John Foley

The Firing Of Daufuskie Teacher Upheld By Resident Judge Rhodes

Pat Conroy, the dismissed Daufuskie teach, lost his suit for reinstatement against the board of education last Thursday.

W. L. Rhodes, Jr., resident judge of the Fourteenth Judicial Circuit, handed down the decision rejecting Conroy's suit.

Carl Hendricks, Jr., one of Conroy's two attorneys, expressed his "extreme disappointment," saying that the discharge was unjustified and should have "far-reaching consequences." "Beaufort is losing a fine, talented boy," he continued. "Teachers coming here in the future will think twice," said Hendricks.

Judge Rhodes' ruling was that "the Board of Education did have good and sufficient reasons for dismissing" Conroy. However, the judge took issue with the school board's provision that Conroy could resign only if he did not appeal the board's decision; this, Rhodes called, "coercive."

He, therefore concluded that Conroy "shall have the right to present for acceptance his resignation to the school board, and it shall be accepted by the Board," providing it is presented "prior to the expiration of five days after a final disposition of this case by the Courts." However, he is entitled to no compensation from the Board beyond September 18, 1970 (his last official working day).

The judge cited Sections 21-230 and 21-230.1, which grant authority to a county board of education to discharge teachers "when good and sufficient reasons for so doing present themselves." "Therefore, said Rhodes, "The basic issue to be determined by this Court is whether or not in this case the said County Board had good and sufficient reasons for discharging the petitioner (Conroy) from his position as a teacher in the school system."

Conroy, a 26-year-old Beaufort native, taught children at the Daufuskie school in grades five through eight. Dr. William E. Dufford, a University of South Carolina faculty member and long-time friend of Conroy's, asked Conroy to assist him as a member of desegregation team in Jasper County. Conroy joined him during the school week of September 21 through September 25, 1970.

According to Conroy, his primary motive in accepting this temporary employment was to use the money he earned ($65 per day) for the purpose of taking the Daufuskie school children on a field trip to Atlanta. Conroy emphasized in his testimony the need for getting the children off the remote island and letting them see the outside world. Conroy appeared to be well-liked by the students and his September dismissal prompted a protest boycott of the school for several days afterwards.

A primary "bone of contention" in the case was Conroy's failure to notify any administrative superior, other than a VISTA substitute teacher. Said Judge Rhodes, "There is no question here but that Conroy did not follow the procedure required by contacting his immediate supervisor prior to the time of his taking leave. There is further no question in my mind, but that such a policy is reasonable and essential to the orderly operation of school system."

At press time, Hendricks, Conroy's lawyer, said that they had not yet made a decision on whether or not to appeal. Conroy's other lawyer is George G. Trask. Attorneys for the school board are Julian S. Levin and Ladson F. Howell.

Dear Betsy,

Here is the first exciting installment —

I hope it is what the council desired —

The typist was rapid and careless.

The mistakes are innumerable.

The punctuation is terrible.

Hope all is going well with everyone.

Love,

Pat

[Note that this ms. - with numerous revisions - may be found on pp. 13-16 of Conroy's THE WATER IS WIDE, N.Y., Dell Publish'g. Co., 1972.]

Portrait of Daufuskie

Daufuskie is an island off the South Carolina mainland not far from Savannah, Georgia. The west side of the island is fringed with the green, undulating marshes of the southern soast; the east side is bounded by the Atlantci ocean. Shrimp boats ply the waters around her and fishermen cast their lines along her bountiful shore. Deer cut through her forests in quick, silent herds. The great southern oaks, with their heavy shocks of moss and imposing bulk, stand broodingly on her banks. The island and the waters around her teem with life. There is something eternal and indestructible about the tide-pocked shores and the dark, rather threatening silences of the swamp in the heart of the island. Daufuskie is beautiful because man has not had time to destroy this beauty and his civilization has not yet engulfed the island in its relentless purge of nature.

The twentieth century has basically ignored the presence of Daufuskie Island. Because of deep and turbulent rivers and sounds, no bridge connects Daufuskie with the mainland. Anyone who sets foot on the island comes by water, or more improbably, by air. The roads of the island are unpaved and rutted by the passage of wooden oxcarts, still a major form of transportation. The island is populated with black people who depend on the sea, the hunt, and their small gardens for a living. The hand pump, long a hackneyed image of the old south, serves up questionable water to these residents who dwell in their small, familiar houses. Sears and Roebuck catalogues perform their classic function in the crudely-built privies which sit, half-hidden, in the tall grasses behind the shacks. Electricity came to the island several years ago and there is something unquestionably moving about the line of utility poles coming across the marsh, moving, perhaps, because electricity is a bringer of miracles and the journey of the faceless poles is such a long one, and such a humane one. But there are no telephones (electricity is enough of a miracle for one century), nor can one communicate to the island except by letter or short-wave radio. By necessity, Daufuskie remains aloof and apart from the world beyond the river.

Yet the world is rapidly coming to the island. Directly across Calibogue Sound sits the fat and pompous Hilton Head Island. Hilton Head was an island inhabited primarily by blacks and the similarity between Daufuskie and Hilton Head was considerable. But a bridge linked Hilton Head to the outside and the white men with burnished dreams of empire busily set about to make the island an Eden for the retired captains of northern industry. Hotels spawned on the white beaches like toads and golf courses wormed through forests and over land-filled swamps. The black people of the island sold their land cheaply and quickly to the high-pressure whites who saw the gold mine by the shacks and in the woods. Hilton Head developed rapidly; the island now stinks of wealth and golf-fed prosperity; the island lies pocked with cypress-garmented houses and late model cars. Country clubs abound and exclusivity is the password as the furred ladies of the greying gentlemen watch a golf tournament by the ten million dollar marina and the string of rainbow condominiums which look directly across Calibogue Sound at Daufuskie Island. Black people still live on Hilton Head, and they make nice ornaments and maids and bootblacks. It is only a matter of time before Daufuskie will receive her gift of bridgedom, and the great trek of the wealthy will begin.

Daufuskie is not a large island, nor an important one, but it represents an era and a segment of history that is rapidly dying in America. The people of the island have changed little since the Emancipation Proclamation. Indeed, many of them have never heard of this proclamation. They love their island with genuine affection, and have watched with alarm at the migration of the young to the city, to the lands far away and far removed from the island. In the forties, over eight hundred people lived and worked on the island; today, the population numbers barely over the hundred mark. The people are very young or very old for the most part. The others have gone to search for jobs. The island is dying and the people know it.

In the parable of Daufuskie there was a time when the black people supported themselves well, worked hard, and lived up to the sacred tenents laid down in the Protestant ethic. Each morning the strong, young men would take to their bateaus and search the shores and inlets for the large clusters of oysters which thrived in abundance on the island's perimeters. The men brought the oysters to the factory, where the women and old men shucked the oysters into large jars. Daufuskie Oysters were world famous. An island legend has it that a Czar of Russia once ordered Daufuskie oysters for an imperial banquet. The white people propogate that rumor. The blacks, for the most part, would not know a Czar from a fiddler crab, nor would they care. But the oysters were good, and the oyster factories operating on the island provided a substantial living for all the people. Everyone worked, everyone made money, and everyone was content to remain isolated and removed from the trends which shook the rest of America.

Then a villain appeared. It was an industrial factory, stationed on a knoll above the Savannah river many miles away from Daufuskie. The villain spewed its excrement into the river, infected the creeks and as silently as the pull of the tides, crept to the shores of Daufuskie Island. Pollution, mankind's gift to the world that spawned him, came to dwell in the waters around Daufuskie, As every good health inspector knows, the unfortunate consumer who gums an infected oyster is flirting with hepatitis. Someone took samples of the waters around Daufuskie, analyzed it under a microscope, and reported it to the proper officials. Soon after this, white signs appeared by the oyster banks forbidding anyone to gather the oysters. The oysters around the island were now as worthless as grains of sand. The muddy creatures which had provided the people of the island with a way to keep their families alive were placed under permanent quarantine. The factory in Savannah kept spitting its waste into the river and was soon joined by other factories. Since a factory has no soul, it could not be moved to understand the destruction its coming had wrought. But when the oysters became contaminated, the island's only industry collapsed almost immediately. The great migration began. A steady flow of people faced with starvation moved to the cities. They came in search of jobs. Few cities had any intemperate demand for professional oyster-shuckers, but the people were somehow assimilated. Houses surrendered their tenants and signs of sudden departure were rife in the interiors of deserted homes. The people left reluctantly, but they left permanently, and returned only on sporadic visits to pay homage to the relatives too old or too stubborn to leave the island. As the oysters died, so did the people. The factories on the Savannah river were prime movers in island genocide.

The people who remain earn their living haphazardly. Some survive off Social Security checks or welfare payments. Operation Mainstream, a project of the O.E.O., offers three jobs for island males, but the jobs last for only two years, and then, according to the theory of the program, the men will be trained sufficiently to enter into a suitable occupation. On Daufuskie, there are no jobs for blacks for which to train. The public school on the island provides two islanders with jobs, one a cook, the other a janitor. The only other jobs available on the island belong to the three-man crew who ferry a government-owned boat to the mainland each day. There are no other jobs on the island.

Several white families dwell on the island in a paternalistic, but in some ways, symbiotic relationship with their neighbors. Socially, their lives do not touch the blacks, but they sometimes hire the blacks to perform tasks about their houses. One white family is particularly interesting. They control every major job on the island. Lance Burn is a small, beefy man who has gained a monopoly over the state-controlled jobs on the island. At one time or another, he had been magistrate, game warden, director of Economic Opportunity, road-grader, civil defense director, and poll watcher. The few jobs he has been unable to garner for himself have gone to his wife Billie. She is the postmaster, the school bus driver, and substitute teacher at the school. Together, they have formed a powerful dynasty and rule the island like Persian satraps. The island's short-wave radio is located in the Burn's kitchen, so any message transmitted to or from the island is monitored by them. They also control most of the transportation facilities of the island. One of the island's most durable games is trying to guess how much revenue the Burns' reap in one fiscal year.

Less than ten years ago, the Burns' had a school-age boy on the island. Beaufort County built a one-room school house and hired a teacher to come to the island to teach in a one-student school. No one action seems to indicate more fully what crimes have been oommitted in the name of segregation than this one structure, known on the island as the "white school house." The blacks live on, people of the sea, and people of the hunt on an island with a white cemetery and a black one, with a white schoolhouse and a black one; with a peeling, weathered church without a preacher and without a deacon; with a future without much hope for change. They have few jobs and few prospects for getting any more. They do have their land and their knowledge that someday a bridge is coming; possibly from the west, across the chain of islands toward Bluffton, or maybe from the south toward Savannah. Meanwhile, they can stare across Calibogue Sound at the condominiums and the yachts, the golf courses and the country club. It is only a matter of time before the deer will be driven from the island and the white men will want ~~their~~ the peoples' land for the seventeenth green. Already, the white men own all the waterfront property on the island. Already, a polo-playing millionaire has bought up the northern third of the island. Time is now the great enemy. For those of us who love the island and care for the people, the coming of the cadillacs and condominiums is an unspeakable obscenity. Yet we know the people need the jobs, no matter how demeaning they are.

NPR COLLECT

Newsweek, N.Y.C.Y

Telex (or UX)

Education Re: Pat Conroy, Daufuskie Island teacher

From Cumming

"It is not possible to spend any prolonged period visiting public school classrooms," said Charles E. Silberman before the Mondale Committee on Equal Education, "without being appalled by the mutilation visible everywhere, ...mutilation of spontaneity, of joy in learning, of pleasure in creating, of a sense of self..."

Examples of how to overcome this mutilation are as rare despite all the talk of a revolution in education. And when they occur in public schools they are likely to be feared rather than embraced. A young teacher in Beaufort County, South Carolina fought against this mutilation and inadvertently uncovered how deeply rooted it is in the system. The invidious thing is that this mutilation is perpetrated by the good intentions of people whose lives have been truly dedicated to "the improvement of education."

A young white male teacher, Pat Conroy, was inexperienced enough in the wise ways of education to react with anger to the mutilation he found when he reported for work in the two-room school house on the remote South Carolina coastal island called Daufuski. School board officials took a patronizing view of the young man who seems to have discovered "what we've been knowing for years" and they remained unimpressed with Conroy's zest and imagination with which he began to develop ways to touch the benighted black kids of Daufuskie. As he began to touch their awareness in a way that might have gone on to become an experiment as beautiful and important as Robert Dennison of "The Lives of

NPR COLLECT

Newsweek, N.Y.CY

Telex (or UX)

Education Re: Pat Conroy, Daufuskie Island teacher

From Cumming

"It is not possible to spend any prolonged period visiting public school classrooms," said Charles E. Silberman before the Mondale Committee on Equal Education, "without being appalled by the mutilation visible everywhere, ...mutilation of spontaneity, of joy in learning, of pleasure in creating, of a sense of self..."

Examples of how to overcome this mutilation are as rare despite all the talk of a revolution in education. And when they occur in public schools they are likely to be feared rather than embraced. A young teacher in Beaufort County, South Carolina fought against this mutilation and inadvertently uncovered how deeply rooted it is in the system. The invidious thing is that this mutilation is perpetrated by the good intentions of people whose lives have been truly dedicated to "the improvement of education."

A young white male teacher, Pat Conroy, was inexperienced enough in the wise ways of education to react with anger to the mutilation he found when he reported for work in the two-room school house on the remote South Carolina coastal island called Daufuski. School board officials took a patronizing view of the young man who seems to have discovered "what we've been knowing for years" and they remained unimpressed with Conroy's zest and imagination with which he began to develop ways to teach the benighted black kids of Daufuskie. As he began to touch their awareness in a way that might have gone on to become an experiment as beautiful and important as Robert Dearison of "The Lives of children", he set up vibrations counter to the established system that eventually and inevitably and tragically (not so much for Conroy or even the kids, but for us all) led to him being fired.

Daufuskie Island is one of these remoter, mysterious, beautiful, old coastal islands, muffled in Spanish moss, where a remnant of gullah-accented black people are all that is left of a past of ante bellum cotton plantations of which no structural remnant is left.

Pat Conroy, now 25, is kid-next-door young man with an Irish face, a quick, easy smile, a snub nose, clean brow line, oldest of seven, Catholic family, father a marine aviator, a colonel now in Viet Nam. Because his father was stationed nearby Conroy attended the last two years of high school in Beaufort, S.C., county seat which has Daufuskie Island. He was a popular student and won a basketball scholarship to the Citadel, the rugged military school in Charleston which is deep seated in southern and especially South Carolina history.

After graduating in 1967 he came back to Beaufort and taught a special English classes at Beaufort High School. For reasons that are not easily identifiable, Conroy was possessed of ceaseless energy and urge to engage more deeply in revolence. He applied for the Peace Corps.

At this point in the saga the accounts of Conroy and the school superintendent Dr. Walter Trammell, 55, diverge. I talked to both at great length and both avoided direct assaults on the other. Yet they were clearly antagonists. I can only account for the inevitable schism by saying they simply belonged to different consciousnesses, different mind sets. Or does this come down to simply different generations. I must say that Dr. Trammell's record as a skilled and dedicated professional seems unassailable. Yet, there was something faintly disingenuous the way he would continue to speak of Conroy as "Walter Trammell twenty years ago", or pondering the decision to fire him by "thinking of my own 26 year old son...."

NPR COLLECT

Newsweek, N.Y.C.

Telex (or UX)

Education Re: Pat Conroy, Daufuskie Island teacher

From Cumming

"It is not possible to spend any prolonged period visiting public school classrooms," said Charles E. Silberman before the Mondale Committee on Equal Education, "without being appalled by the mutilation visible everywhere, ...mutilation of spontaneity, of joy in learning, of pleasure in creating, of a sense of self..."

Examples of how to overcome this mutilation are as rare despite all the talk of a revolution in education. And when they occur in public schools they are likely to be feared rather than embraced. A young teacher in Beaufort County, South Carolina fought against this mutilation and inadvertently uncovered how deeply rooted it is in the system. The invidious thing is that this mutilation is perpetrated by the good intentions of people whose lives have been truly dedicated to "the improvement of education."

A young white male teacher, Pat Conroy, was inexperienced enough in the wise ways of education to react with anger to the mutilation he found when he reported for work in the two-room school house on the remote South Carolina coastal island called Daufuski. School board officials took a patronizing view of the young man who seems to have discovered "what we've been knowing for years" and they remained unimpressed with Conroy's zest and imagination with which he began to develop ways to teach the benighted black kids of Daufuskie. As he began to touch their awareness in a way that might have gone on to become an experiment as beautiful and important as Robert Dennison of "The Lives of

#1 11:10 AMEST

EDUCATION DAUGHERTY

ATLANTA CUMMING

PAT CONROY

1-143-71

DR. WALTER TRAMMELL, 55, IS ONE OF THE OUTSTANDING SUPERINTENDENTS IN THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA. HE CAME TO BEAUFORT TO BECOME SUPERINTENDENT IN 1968 AFTER AN IMPRESSIVE RECORD OF 20 YEARS IN THE JOB AS SUPERINTENDENT, 30 YEARS IN PUBLIC EDUCATION. HE COMES FROM THE PIEDMONT SECTION OF THE STATE, WAS A POOR BOY WHO WORKED HIS WAY UP THROUGH THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY INTO MANAGEMENT. THEN, AFTER A WAR-TIME SERVICE IN THE NAVY, HE GAVE UP A CAREER IN THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY TO GO INTO PUBLIC SCHOLLSOLS, "TO DEDICATE MY LIFE TO HELPING THE CHILDREN OF SOUTH CAROLINA." HE SAYS HE HAS TURNED DOWN MANY OFFERS TO GO INTO MANAGEMENT AT HIGHER SALARY THAN HE IS MAKING IN EDUCATION.

FROM MY INTERVIEW WITH HIM IN HIS MODERN OFFICE IN THE QUAINT, CHARMING PRE-REVOLUTIONARY TOWN OF BEAUFORT I WOULD EASILY BELIEVE THAT HE IS AN EXCELLENT ADMINISTRATOR. HE BEGAN THE INTERVIEW WITH A LONG, SILENT, FROSTY BLUE-EYED STARE OVER HIS HALF GLASSES, FIXING ME WITH A WOULD-BE SHREWD APPRAISING GLANCE. I COULD SWEAR THAT HE HAS DONE THIS MANY TIMES BEFORE AND WHEN PAT CONROY TOLD ME HIS STAFF WAS TERRIFIED OF HIM I COULD UNDERSTAND THAT THIS IS HIS WAY. IT IS PART OF THE OLD TEXTILE TRADITION OF PLAYING CONTROL BALL.

FOR FOUR HOURS TRAMMELL HELD FORTH FOUR, SAYING NICE THINGS FOR THE RECORD, DOWNRIGHT BUTTERY PRAISE FORTHIS YOUNG MAN'S IDEALISM, "JUST LIKE ME WHEN I WAS THAT AGE," BUT THEN OUT OF THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MOUTH SUCH THINGS AS "OF COURSE, TEACHERS LIKE TO BE OPOPUPOPULAR AND YOU CAN ALWAYS JUST TAKE CHILDREN ON FIELD TRIPS AND BE THEIR FAVORITE."

"HIS TEACHING METHODS WE APPROVED OF," HE SAID ON THE SUNNY SIDE. "THEY WERE TREMENDOUS. AS FAR AS SDEVELOPMENT, EXPERIMENTATION. HE WAS ABLE TO FINANCE A FIELD TRIP TO WASHINGTON AND SAVANNAH. THIS IS EXCELLENT. FOR CHILDREN WHOSE ACADEMIC CAPABILITY IS LIKE THEIRS THIS TYPE OF THINGS [illegible]

FAVORITE."

"HIS TEACHING METHODS WE APPROVED OF," HE SAID ON THE SUNNY SIDE. "THEY WERE TREMENDOUS. AS FAR AS SDEVELOPMENT, EXPERIMENTATION. HE WAS ABLE TO FINANCE A FIELD TRIP TO WASHINGTON AND SAVANNAH. THIS IS EXCELLENT. FOR CHILDREN WHOSE ACADEMIC CAPABILITY IS LIKE THEIRS THIS TYPE OF THING IS MOST NEEDED. BUT THAT'S JUST A SMALL PART OF PREPARING A CHILD TO READ."

THEN HE POINTED OUT PROUDLY HIS "SCOPE AND SEQUENCE" PROGRAM WHICH HE HAD WORKED OUT TO GUARANTEE (TO PARENTS AND TAXPAYERS) THAT SCHOOL CHILDREN AT EACH GRADE LEVEL WOULD BE "EXPOSED TO THESE SKILLS."

THEN HE TAPPED THE HARD REDDISH BROWN MANILA NOTEBOOK WHICH PRESCRIBED HIS PROCEDURES, WORKED OUT FROM TWENTY YEARS OF EXPERIENCE, INCLUDING HIS YEARS AT COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, NEW YORK, GETTINGS HIS PHD

"THIS IS THE HEART OF THE SYSTEM," HE SAID. "THE REASON I TOOK ACTION WITH MR. CONROY WAS HENOT IN HIS CLASSROOM TEACHING. IT WAS THAT HE IGNORED SCHOOL BOARD POLICIES, DELIBERATELY DISREGARDED THE WRITTEN PROCEDURES. MR. CONROY IS A DEDICATED, WONEDERFUL YOUNG PERSON. HE HAS QUALITIES WHICH WE NEED. BUT HE HAS TO LEARN THERE'S SOMEBODY IN THE WORLD BESIDES HIM."

ONE ANCIENT NEGRO GRANDMOTHER ON DAUFUSKIE I TALKED TO NAMED BLOSSOM ROBINSON, SAID IN THE EMPHATIC, DRAMATIC SINGSONG GTONES OF GULLAH DIALECT AS WE SAT IN HER TINY KITCHEN: "MISTER, THIS IS A NUMBER ONE MAHN. HE IS DE BEST MAHN WHO TEACH ON DIS ISLAND. YOU TALK TO HIM, YOU TALK TO A MAN WHO TEACH CHILDREN. THAT MAN TAKE MY CHILD TO AWASHINGTON. THAT MAN TOOK THEM CHILDREN, TOOK THEM TO BEAUFORT, A PLACE THEY NEVER BEEN BEFORE. THAT MAN, HE TEACH THEM CHILDREN TO SWIM. THAT MAN HERE, HE TEACH THEM THE KIND OF THINGS THEY GONNA NEED WHEN THEY LEAVE DAUFUSKIE. I BORN AND RAISED HERE ON DAUFUSKIE AND MY DADDY AND GRANDDADDY BORN HERE AND I SAY WE AIN'T NEVER HAD A TEACHER LIKE THIS MAN."

THE CHARLESTON (S.C). POST EDITORIALIZED IN SUPPORT OF CONROY AND WERE BOLD ENOUGH TO SUGGEST THAT THERE WAS SOMETHING MORE THAN CONROY'S FAILURE TO ADHERE TO THE SYSTEM..." ...THERE MAY BE OTHER THINGS BEHIND THE BOARD'S ACTION," THE EDITORIAL CONCLUDED. "PERHAPS IT WAS MR. CONROY'S DECISION TO TAKE TWO DAUFUSKIE CHILDREN INTO HIS HOME IN A BEADFORT WHITE NEIGHBORHOOD..."

AND THAT LEADS TO THE QUESTION OFTHE SPEED WITH WHICH PAT WAS MADE A-1 BY HIS DRAFT BOARD AND EVE N WHY JOE AND BLOSSOM ROBINSON, WHEN WE TALKED TO THEM, HAD NOT RECEIVED THEIR SOCIAL SECURITY CHECK FOR TWO MONTHS. COULD IT BE BECAUSE THEY WERE STRONG SUPPORTERS OF CONROY?

CONROY?

CONROY'S LAWNER, GEORGE TRASK, SUMMED IT UP THIS WAY: "THIS IS DEFINITELY A CASE OF A CREATIVE INDIVIDUAL WHO HAS RUN AFOUL OF THE SYSTEM AND THE SYSTEM IS NOT FLEXIBLE ENOUGH TO ACCOMMODATE HIM."

IN THE COURT HEARING, BEFORE AN EQUITY COURT, NO JURY, IN WIHICH CONROY SOUGHT TO BE RE-HIRED, THE SCHOOL BOARD MADE MUCH OVER THE ARTICLE BY BETSY FANCHER, AND HOW SHE HAD GIVEN THE IMPRESSION CONROY HAD WROUGHT MIRACLES. THE BOARD CWENT OUT AND TESTED THE KIDS HE HAD TAUGHT AND CAME UP WITH THE SAME BELL CURVE OF SOME BRIGHT, SOME DUMB, MOST HALFWAY, THAT ANY GROUP WOULD PRODUCE. THEY--AND TRAMMELL WITH ME---HIT HARD HOW MUCH THE REALITY WAS SHORT OF THE IMPRESSION GIVEN IN THE PIECE. I TALKED TO SOME OFTHE KIDS AND, INDEED, THEY DIDN'T ALL KNOW THE CAPITOLS FOR ALL THE STATES BUT I COULD SEE THEY HAD FUN TRYING TO MEMORIZE THEM AND THE ONE GIRL AND BOY I TALKED TO ABOUT IT WERE BETTER THAN I WAS. QUICK, WHATS THE CAPITOL OF IDAHO. AND THEY STILL TALK ABOUT THE TUNE WITH THE BUMBLE BEE AND RICHARD CORY THAT MAN "WWHO "WENT HOME AND PUT A BLLET THULLET THROUGH HIS HEAD."

PAT'S PLACE HAS BEEN TAKEN BY A 24-YEAR-OLD WHITE MAN, A FRIEND OF PAT'S BUT ONE WHO CALLS HIMSELF CONSERVATIVE. MIKE MCEACHERAN (MUST CHECK IF USE),. PAT AND I VISITED HIS CLASS BECAUSE MRS. JOHNSON WAS AWAY. PAT HAS BEEN THREATENED WITH ARREST IF HE GOES AROUND THE SCHOO SO PERHAPS SHOULD MENTION. THE KIDS WERE OBVIOUSLY DELIGHTED TO SEE PAT (SEE PIX). MIKE HAS D BEEN GIVING AN EXERCISE TO THE OLDER AND BRIGHTER KIDS. ON THE BLACKBOARD WERE A LONG LIST OF WORDS LIKE "BIOLOGY," "EPIDERMIS," "PERSPIRATION" AND THE STUDENTS WERE WRITING THEM DOWN AND LOOKING UP THE DEFINITION IN THE DICTIONARY. THEIR HADWNDWRITING WAS STRIKINGLY NEAT BUT THEIR HEARTS WEREN'T REALLY IN THE PROJECT. I TALKED TO MIKE AND HE WAS DISCOURAGED. "YOU KNOW, PAT AND I HAVE THE OPPOSITE PHILOSOPHY ABOUT TEACHING. I THINK YOU'VE GOT TO PREPARE THEM TO FACE THE OUTSIDE WORLD WITH READING, WRITING.." HE SAT DOWN ON ONE OF THE CHILD-SIZED CHAIRS AND SHOOK HIS HEAD. "BUT SOMETIMES I DON'T KNOW WHAT'S THE RIGHT WAY."

AS WE LEFT PAT SAID TO MIKE. "CHEER UP. EVERY TEACHER HAS DAYS WHEN HE FEELS HE'SNOT DOING ANY GOOD. LISTEN, YOU'VE GOT TO HANG IN THERE MAN. WE'RE COUNTING ON YOU...."

ENDIT

CONROY?

CONROY'S LAWNER, GEORGE TRASK, SUMMED IT UP THIS WAY: "THIS IS DEFINITELY A CASE OF A CREATIVE INDIVIDUAL WHO HAS RUN AFOUL OF THE SYSTEM AND THE SYSTEM IS NOT FLEXIBLE ENOUGH TO ACCOMMODATE HIM."

IN THE COURT HEARING, BEFORE AN EQUITY COURT, NO JURY, IN WIHICH CONROY SOUGHT TO BE RE-HIRED, THE SCHOOL BOARD MADE MUCH OVER THE ARTICLE BY BETSY FANCHER, AND HOW SHE HAD GIVEN THE IMPRESSION CONROY HAD WROUGHT MIRACLES. THE BOARD CWENT OUT AND TESTED THE KIDS HE HAD TAUGHT AND CAME UP WITH THE SAME BELL CURVE OF SOME BRIGHT, SOME DUMB, MOST HALFWAY, THAT ANY GROUP WOULD PRODUCE. THEY--AND TRAMMELL WITH ME---HIT HARD HOW MUCH THE REALITY WAS SHORT OF THE IMPRESSION GIVEN IN THE PIECE. I TALKED TO SOME OFTHE KIDS AND, INDEED, THEY DIDN'T ALL KNOW THE CAPITOLS FOR ALL THE STATES BUT I COULD SEE THEY HAD FUN TRYING TO MEMORIZE THEM AND THE ONE GIRL AND BOY I TALKED TO ABOUT IT WERE BETTER THAN I WAS. QUICK, WHATS THE CAPITOL OF IDAHO. AND THEY STILL TALK ABOUT THE TUNE WITH THE BUMBLE BEE AND RICHARD CORY THAT MAN "WWHO "WENT HOME AND PUT A BLLET THULLET THROUGH HIS HEAD."

PAT'S PLACE HAS BEEN TAKEN BY A 24-YEAR-OLD WHITE MAN, A FRIEND OF PAT'S BUT ONE WHO CALLS HIMSELF CONSERVATIVE. MIKE MCEACHERAN (MUST CHECK IF USE),. PAT AND I VISITED HIS CLASS BECAUSE MRS. JOHNSON WAS AWAY. PAT HAS BEEN THREATENED WITH ARREST IF HE GOES AROUND THE SCHOO SO PERHAPS SHOULD MENTION. THE KIDS WERE OBVIOUSLY DELIGHTED TO SEE PAT (SEE PIX). MIKE HAS D BEEN GIVING AN EXERCISE TO THE OLDER AND BRIGHTER KIDS. ON THE BLACKBOARD WERE A LONG LIST OF WORDS LIKE "BIOLOGY," "EPIDERMIS," "PERSPIRATION" AND THE STUDENTS WERE WRITING THEM DOWN AND LOOKING UP THE DEFINITION IN THE DICTIONARY. THEIR HADWNDWRITING WAS STRIKINGLY NEAT BUT THEIR HEARTS WEREN'T REALLY IN THE PROJECT. I TALKED TO MIKE AND HE WAS DISCOURAGED. "YOU KNOW, PAT AND I HAVE THE OPPOSITE PHILOSOPHY ABOUT TEACHING. I THINK YOU'VE GOT TO PREPARE THEM TO FACE THE OUTSIDE WORLD WITH READING, WRITING.." HE SAT DOWN ON ONE OF THE CHILD-SIZED CHAIRS AND SHOOK HIS HEAD. "BUT SOMETIMES I DON'T KNOW WHAT'S THE RIGHT WAY."

AS WE LEFT PAT SAID TO MIKE. "CHEER UP. EVERY TEACHER HAS DAYS WHEN HE FEELS HE'SNOT DOING ANY GOOD. LISTEN, YOU'VE GOT TO HANG IN THERE MAN. WE'RE COUNTING ON YOU...."

ENDIT

to Mike

Bill Green
5062 Calderon Road
Woodland Hills
Califronia

November 21, 1970

Betsy Fancher
5 Forsyth Street N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Betsy,

Once again I would like to compliment you about the excellent article on Pat Conroy. Perhaps if enough information is revealed about similar conditions then we can truly have equal opportunity for everyone.

Regarding our telephone conversation this week, I will try to outline my idea so you will understand the objective and some of the problems involved in making a motion picture from the very beginning. The motive is to make money of course, but also to produce a film that makes a strong case for equal opportunity. If we transpose your story to film, it can't be anything but sucessful.

The most important first step is writing a script or detailed outline about the story. With this script I can present a preliminary budget and find the financial backing. As I mentioned on the telephone I know of two sources who I think will be interested and many others who will at least talk to me about this kind of project. The budget for a film of this nature; shooting on location, using local people, small cast and crew... would be around 600 to 800 thousand dollars. I realize those figures may sound high to you, but in terms of motion pictres that is considered a low budget. The money market is very tight now, especially for the motion picture industry, but I feel confident that the money would be available with a good script and a known actor involved.

In-so-far as shooting the film is concerned, I have the experience as well as the necessary logistics.....Cast, crews, equipment, budget and production control, and an Attorney to handle the distribution contracts and other legal problems. The actual production is easy enough to work out when we have a green light to shoot.

I think your story about Daufuskie will make an excellant dramatic film using the South Carolina location and local people. We may have a problem getting the School Board's support, but we'll just work around them. With this story on film we have a chance to do something positive about Pat Conroy's dedication to better education for all children and be financially sucessful as well. I hope you are as excited about this project as much as I am.

Sincerely yours,

Bill Green

Bill Green

Paul — Reply? B.F.

12 / 7 / 70

Dear Miss Fancher,

Our History class teacher read us your article in "The Los Angeles Times" about the situation on Dafuskie Island. As we are deeply concerned and sympathetic, we would like to know more about it. However, we know enough about it to feel that the school board was very wrong in dismissing that teacher.

We can not understand how such an outstanding teacher, not to mention a wonderful human being, could be replaced by a person who has very little knowledge, and probably very little experience in teaching.

We would all like very much to help to correct this terrible error. We are sure that the people of the Island are suffering deeply because of this act.

If it concerns funds for a boat, we will gladly start a collection. If the school board needs to be pressured, we will do so. Whatever it is that we can do, please let us know.

A letter from you telling us of what service we can be will be greatly accepted. We hope it will be soon.

It's a shame there are not more people like that teacher around, and we feel that there is a lesson for every one to learn from your article.

All the students in the class wrote a letter to you and we combined them into one, so that the feelings expressed to you on this letter are mutual.

We will be looking forward to receiving a letter from you very soon as to what we can do to help.

Very Sincerely Yours,

Nino King,
Dave Wickham,
and the students of
Mrs. Natalie Taksar's
U.S.History class at:
James Monroe High School,
9229 Haskle Ave.
Sepulveda, California
91347

Character kids

University of Missouri - Columbia

1004 Elm St.
Columbia, Mo. 65201

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION
Labor Education Program

Telephone
314 449-9171

December 7, 1970

The Honorable Ernest F. Hollings
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Hollings:

I first saw the Beaufort area 18 years ago when I was at Parris Island. It is truly sad how little has changed for many of the residents in all these years.

I cannot bring myself to believe that the people of South Carolina care so little for human life that someone will not correct the conditions related in the story enclosed. It frankly makes me sick to read it, and I can only hope that your reaction will be one of disgust and of determination to correct this situation.

Having lived in Georgia for the past two years, I am well acquainted with the kind of thinking that causes situations like this. I trust that the leadership, concern and integrity of a United States Senator can make a difference if they are applied to instances of injustice.

I wonder how many would make the effort that Mr. Conroy did?

Yours truly,

Stanley E. Kravit
Specialist and Instructor
Labor Education Program

SEK:jw

Enclosure art from back pg of ~~Atlanta~~ South Today

ERNEST F. HOLLINGS
SOUTH CAROLINA

BANKING AND CURRENCY
COMMERCE
POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE

United States Senate

WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

December 16, 1970

Mr. Stanley E. Kravit
University of Missouri-Columbia
1004 Elm Street
Columbia, Missouri 65201

Dear Mr. Kravit:

Thank you for your comments on the problem of hunger in America.

The problem of eradicating hunger is really a lack of awareness on the part of both the people and their leadership. It is thus encouraging to receive comments from concerned citizens such as yourself. I hope you will do everything possible to make your sentiments known on all levels of government. Be assured of my continuing commitment to wipe this disgraceful blight from our land.

Again, my appreciation for taking the time to write.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely,

Ernest F. Hollings

Ernest F. Hollings

EFH/se

paul dubov

5700 rhodes avenue - north hollywood, california - poplar 9-4006

January 7, 1971

Dear Miss Fancher:

Not having heard from you -- a note of query.

We're still interested in the story of Mr. Conroy. Have you seen him, talked with him again, and how does he feel about it?

Your second article reinforced our faith in the possibility of a project.

Hope to hear from you, be the answer Yes or No.

Sincerely,

Paul and Gwen Dubov

University of Missouri - Columbia

1004 Elm St.
Columbia, Mo. 65201

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION
Labor Education Program

Telephone
314 449-9171

January 7, 1971

The Honorable Ernest F. Hollings
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Senator Hollings:

I am returning to you a copy of my original correspondence and enclosure along with your reply. I can only conclude that there was a mix-up somewhere and that, as a result, you were under the impression I had written to you concerning hunger.

There undoubtedly is hunger on Daufuskie Island, however, my letter was concerned with the illiteracy and indifference which cause hunger and poverty. Why should officials in Beaufort County deprive the Island people of the opportunity to benefit from Mr. Conroy's teaching and idealism? What can possibly be the basis for the outrageous actions described in the December, 1970 "South Today" which I am also enclosing?

The idea of keeping a man unemployed and changing his draft status to 1-A to punish him for his social concerns is reprehensible and intolerable in a democratic society. There is no issue more important than the preservation of Constitutional rights and every evidence of concern by an elected representative becomes an admonition to State officials to respect these rights.

I know something of and appreciate your efforts to deal with the problem of hunger, however, the permanent solution of this problem would seem to be equipping people to earn a living through education and opportunity. The people of Daufuskie Island do not seem to have had a great deal of either and perhaps we can now see why.

Yours truly,

Stanley E. Kravit
Specialist and Instructor
Labor Education Program

SEK:jw

Enclosures

University of Missouri - Columbia

1004 Elm St.
Columbia, Mo. 65201

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION
Labor Education Program

Telephone
314 449-9171

January 7, 1971

Read ~ Return

Mrs. Betsy Fancher
Associate Editor
South Today
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mrs. Fancher:

I was greatly disturbed by your articles on Pat Conroy and, as a result, have had the enclosed correspondence with Senator Hollings. Since this does not appear promising--I didn't really think it would--I would like to know what is being done to assist Mr. Conroy.

If you have any information on his legal situation, I would appreciate it and perhaps something can be done to aid him financially. I am also enclosing a copy of a situation in Kentucky that may interest you.

Yours truly,

Stanley E. Kravit

Stanley E. Kravit
Specialist and Instructor
Labor Education Program

SEK:jw

Enclosures

1-16-71

From the desk of:

WILLIAM F. MARSCHER

TO:

Copy to

Fancher

Daufuskie Teacher Dismissal Upheld

VPC 1/16/78

HAMPTON—A circuit judge has upheld the decision of the Beaufort County School Board to fire Daufuskie Island school teacher Pat Conroy after a preliminary hearing on a reinstatement suit.

Fourteenth Circuit Judge William L. Rhodes Jr. said in a letter received Friday by Conroy's lawyers that the reasons stated by the board were sufficient for the dismissal of the 24-year-old Citadel alumnus.

The charges were: (1) "disregard of instructions"; (4) "insubordination"; (3) "gross neglect of duty", and (4) "conduct unacceptable for a professional educator."

Conroy asserted that he had been dismissed because of a personality conflict with his principal.

It was noted that Conroy had once taken a week's leave from his school duties without having the proper authority to do so. However, Conroy's lawyers contested it had been stated in his contract that he was allowed ten days of leave each year.

Conroy had taken the leave to work at a desegregation center in Jasper County which was sponsored by the University of South Carolina. Conroy stated that he was working there so that he might make some additional money to fund a trip for his school children.

Representing Conroy in the hearing were Beaufort lawyers George G. Trask and Carl C. Hendrix Jr.

Man, Dog Join In Attempt To Save Cat

BEAUFORT—James Watson Jr. was driving down Boundary Street recenly when he noiced a Pekingese standing over something in the road.

Watson, son of Jim Watson, who owns the Itty Bitty Farm on St. Helena Island, discovered that the dog was standing over and protecting a yellow and white cat. Afer puling he injured animal in his car, Watson noticed the dog following him for a couple of blocks before turning back.

Despite efforts to save the cat, the animal died that night.

"I love animals very much and could never pass an injured animal by without helping it," James said.

Teacher Firing Upheld By Judge

1/16/71 Chas. Evgn. Post

By JACK LELAND
Evening Post Staff Writer

BEAUFORT — A circuit judge's ruling upholding the Beaufort County School Board's dismissal of a teacher may be appealed.

Pat Conroy, former Daufuskie Island teacher, and his attorney said today the ruling by Judge William L. Rhodes Jr. probably would be appealed to the S.C. Supreme Court. The judge, in effect, said that reasons stated by the board at a two-day hearing in Hampton last month were sufficient causes for dismissal. Conroy has 10 days to perfect an appeal.

Judge Rhodes, in his ruling, said there "is no question" but that Conroy did not follow the established procedures of the board. He said he found the board's procedure directives "reasonable" and stated that "chaos" would result if boards did not have established regulations that were enforced.

THE JUDGE said that all parties concerned were convinced that Conroy was "a dedicated and gifted teacher". However, he said, Conroy's letters, read at the hearing, indicated that the teacher "rebelled at any attempt at authority over him."

Conroy, a former Beaufort High School teacher, was in his second year at the two-teacher Daufuskie Island school when he was discharged by Superintendent Walter Trammell last September. The board upheld Trammell's action in October. Conroy then filed suit to have the action reversed.

Trammell and the board charged Conroy with disregard of instructions, insubordination, gross neglect of duty and conduct unacceptable for a professional educator.

THE ISSUE developed after Conroy was assigned to the lonely island post. He said he found that the pupils, all Negroes, were unprepared for even rudimentary grammar school work and were almost totally unaware of the history, geography or modern development of the United States.

Conroy then initiated a self-approved program of bringing outside educators to the island to instruct the children. He also brought over from the mainland motion pictures and recordings and taped music to play for them.

He obtained financing for trips to the mainland for the children, including one to Washington, D.C. Last September, in what was a move to earn enough extra money to take the pupils to Atlanta, Conroy took a one-week consultant's job with a University of South Carolina school integration seminar in nearby Jasper County.

He asked a VISTA worker on the island, a college graduate, to substitute for him that week but he did not obtain permission from the "head teacher" a Daufuskie or the administrative offices. It was his contention that he could take 10 days "personal leave" without going through regular channels.

Daufuskie Hearing

Conroy's Qualities Extolled

By JACK LELAND
Evening Post Staff Writer

HAMPTON — A S.C. circuit judge yesterday took under advisement a suit for reinstatement by a Beaufort County school teacher fired in September.

Judge William L. Rhodes gave legal counsel for Pat Conroy and the Beaufort County Board of Education a week to file written briefs in the case.

Conroy had filed suit for reinstatement last month after the Beaufort County Board of Education affirmed his firing by County Superintendent Walter Trammell.

Dr. Trammell said yesterday in an emotion filled voice: "I would give anything in the world if this had not happened. Pat Conroy has some of the finest qualities I've ever seen in a teacher. He had his weaknesses, of course, but the public school system needs teachers with the qualities he possesses."

Trammell told the court he had broken up the night he had told Conroy he was fired.

"Have you ever seen a grown man cry," he asked a questioning lawyer. "Well I cried over this. I share Pat Conroy's dedication for these poor people. Thirty years ago, when I was just out of college, I was very much like Pat Conroy. I went back to the cotton mill town I grew up in and tried to help the kids there."

"But," he said, "I have an obligation to the whole county. We have rules and regulations and they cannot be deviated from. Years ago, I realized I had to work through the system. Pat hasn't realized that yet."

JUDGE RHODES interrupted to ask Trammell if the Beaufort school board has "gradations of disciplinary action for teachers."

Trammell replied: "No sir. We don't expect to have to discipline teachers. We have none except outright discharge or permission to resign."

Earlier the court heard other witnesses for the board. Monday was taken up with witnesses for Conroy.

Lance Burn, magistrate on Daufuskie Island, told of the fluctuations in the arrival and departures of the Daufuskie Island school boat which was assigned to Conroy. The boat was kept at Burn's dock through an arrangement with the school board. One issue concerned whether Conroy attended his classes regularly; whether he was on time and how often he used the boat for commuting from the island.

H. E. McCracken, supervisor of the Bluffton area schools, described his relationships with Conroy and the Daufuskie school. He said a visit to the school on one occasion revealed that Conroy's classroom was "disorderly, not what we wanted in the way of organization and in a state of dishevelment."

McCRACKEN also discussed the boat and gasoline expense issue. He said, however, that the matter of expenses was not "in my division. The bills went to the central office." McCracken said he would estimate the cost of a round trip to the island in the outboard rig would cost about $2.50 a day. At issue was a bill of $36 received one month and which was described by a school official as exorbitant.

Conroy's lawyers tried to draw McCracken out on the per pupil costs of instruction on the island 10 years ago when it had a single white child attending a one-teacher school while about 60 Negro pupils attended the two-room school that operates today. However, Rhodes ruled that the question of costs in 1961-62 "are in no way relevant to this case."

The white school was closed after the lone child finished the eighth grade. Today, only Negro children attend the island school.

McCracken also said Conroy did not attend an organizational meeting of the Bluffton area schools although "I had particularly asked him to do so." McCracken said that, while it was not a part of Conroy's contract, "I understood he was to live on Daufuskie and commute each weekend."

JOHN FENWICK, principal of Bluffton High School, said he had filed recommendations for use of the boat after Trammell asked him to look into the matter. Fenwick said he recommended that the boat be used for one round trip a week except in emergencies.

He said the issue was not one of fuel alone but maintenance. He said the boat sank once and a new motor had to be purchased and that there were a lot of "bent propellors" that had to be replaced.

Fenwick said he had a conference with Conroy last Jan. 7. After the conference, he said he realized Conway was still using the boat almost daily. However, he said, he did not feel it was his responsibility to report it.

Trammell also said that he understood Conroy would live on Daufuskie and commute on weekends.

He said he received a letter from Conroy early in Sept. 1969, shortly after The Citadel graduate took the island post.

"The letter indicated complete consternation with what Pat found on the island. I attributed his feelings to the fact that this was the first time he had come in contact with conditions in the public schools in such rural areas as Daufuskie."

Trammell commented: "I did not disagree with Pat's philosophy of teaching with emphasis on experimental learning. I thought he was doing exactly what should have been done. He talked with me about the trip he took the kids to Washington and I approved of it all the way. However, he never came to me with his plans for the proposed trip to Atlanta and that's where we ran into trouble."

CONROY had testified Monday that he accepted a five-day counselling post last September with a desegregation team from the University of South Carolina. He was paid $65 a day. He had discussed this with his pupils ahead of time and told them he would use the money to take them to Atlanta on a field trip.

Conroy failed to notify Mrs. Julia Johnson, the principal of the two-teacher Daufuskie school, or any other school official. Instead, he told Mrs. James Strand, a VISTA volunteer on the island and an accredited substitute teacher, of his plans and arranged with her to work for him.

When Trammell was told of Conroy's absence for the five days, he called him and told him he was discharged. The board subsequently affirmed the firing.

Trammell said: "I felt it was a complete breach of contract and I so stated in my letter to him that I felt it was grounds for immediate dismissal."

In answer to questions, Trammell said he was not surprised to learn that Daufuskie Island seventh graders could not read at even the first grade level." He said: "I'm appalled at it, of course, but it isn't peculiar to Daufuskie, it exists in other areas of Beaufort County and elsewhere in the state."

JUDGE RHODES asked about Conroy's use of the term, "personal leave" to describe his absence. Trammell said: "Under the rules existing then a teacher was allowed two days personal leave. What concerned me here, and I think this is the real heart of the matter, is that I was aware that the parents and pupils on the island wanted Conroy to teach. I wanted him to teach also, and as much as anyone. I went along with everything Pat wanted and what the parents requested. What shocked me was to discover that he was not on the island teaching, which was where he should have been. I did not know he had legal counsel for Pat Conroy and the Beaufort County Board of Education a week to file written briefs in the case.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Conroy had filed suit for reinstatement last month after the Beaufort County Board of Education affirmed his firing by County Superintendent Walter Trammell.

Dr. Trammell said yesterday in an emotion filled voice: "I would give anything in the world if this had not happened. Pat Conroy has some of the finest qualities I've ever seen in a teacher. He had his weaknesses, of course, but the public school system needs teachers with the qualities he possesses."

Trammell told the court he had broken up the night he had told Conroy he was fired.

"Have you ever seen a grown man cry," he asked a questioning lawyer. "Well I cried over this. I share Pat Conroy's dedication for these poor people. Thirty years ago, when I was just out of college, I was very much like Pat Conroy. I went back to the cotton mill town I grew up in and tried to help the kids there."

"But," he said, "I have an obligation to the whole county. We have rules and regulations and they cannot be deviated from. Years ago, I realized I had to work through the system. Pat hasn't realized that yet."

JUDGE RHODES interrupted to ask Trammell if the Beaufort school board has "gradations of disciplinary action for teachers."

Trammell replied: "No sir. We don't expect to have to discipline teachers. We have none except outright discharge or permission to resign."

was kept at Burn's dock through an arrangement with the school board. One issue concerned whether Conroy attended his classes regularly; whether he was on time and how often he used the boat for commuting from the island.

H. E. McCracken, supervisor of the Bluffton area schools, described his relationships with Conroy and the Daufuskie school. He said a visit to the school on one occasion revealed that Conroy's classroom was "disorderly, not what we wanted in the way of organization and in a state of dishevelment."

McCRACKEN also discussed the boat and gasoline expense issue. He said, however, that the matter of expenses was not "in my division. The bills went to the central office." McCracken said he would estimate the cost of a round trip to the island in the outboard rig would cost about $2.50 a day. At issue was a bill of $36 received one month and which was described by a school official as exorbitant.

Conroy's lawyers tried to draw McCracken out on the per pupil costs of instruction on the island 10 years ago when it had a single white child attending a one-teacher school while about 60 Negro pupils attended the two-room school that operates today. However, Rhodes ruled that the question of costs in 1961-62 "are in no way relevant to this case."

The white school was closed after the lone child finished the eighth grade. Today, only Negro children attend the island school.

McCracken also said Conroy

JOHN FENWICK, principal of Bluffton High School, said he had filed recommendations for use of the boat after Trammell asked him to look into the matter. Fenwick said he recommended that the boat be used for one round trip a week except in emergencies.

He said the issue was not one of fuel alone but maintenance. He said the boat sank once and a new motor had to be purchased and that there were a lot of "bent propellors" that had to be replaced.

Fenwick said he had a conference with Conroy last Jan. 7. After the conference, he said he realized Conway was still using the boat almost daily. However, he said, he did not feel it was his responsibility to report it.

Trammell also said that he understood Conroy would live on Daufuskie and commute on weekends.

He said he received a letter from Conroy early in Sept. 1969, shortly after The Citadel graduate took the island post.

"The letter indicated complete consternation with what Pat found on the island. I attributed his feelings to the fact that this was the first time he had come in contact with conditions in the public schools in such rural areas as Daufuskie."

Trammell commented: "I did not disagree with Pat's philosophy of teaching with emphasis on experimental learning. I thought he was doing exactly what should have been done. He talked with me about the trip he took the kids to Washington and I approved of it all the way. However, he never came to me with his

day. He had discussed this with his pupils ahead of time and told them he would use the money to take them to Atlanta on a field trip.

Conroy failed to notify Mrs. Julia Johnson, the principal of the two-teacher Daufuskie school, or any other school official. Instead, he told Mrs. James Strand, a VISTA volunteer on the island and an accredited substitute teacher, of his plans and arranged with her to work for him.

When Trammell was told of Conroy's absence for the five days, he called him and told him he was discharged. The board subsequently affirmed the firing.

Trammell said: "I felt it was a complete breach of contract and I so stated in my letter to him that I felt it was grounds for immediate dismissal."

In answer to questions, Trammell said he was not surprised to learn that Daufuskie Island seventh graders could not read at even the first grade level." He said: "I'm appalled at it, of course, but it isn't peculiar to Daufuskie, it exists in other areas of Beaufort County and elsewhere in the state."

JUDGE RHODES asked about Conroy's use of the term, "personal leave" to describe his absence. Trammell said: "Under the rules existing then a teacher was allowed two days personal leave. What concerned me here, and I think this is the real heart of the matter, is that I was aware that the parents and pupils on the island wanted Conroy to teach. I wanted him to teach also, and as much as anyone. I went along with everything Pat wanted and what the parents requested. What shocked me was to discover that he was not on the island teaching, which was where he should have been. I did not know he had left for a week until the week was over.

Trammell commented on a joyful reunion Monday in the courtroom between Conroy and two 12-year-old Daukuskie Negro pupils who testified.

He said: "If I had not been aware of the deep feeling of the people of the island for Conroy, that touching scene would have convinced me and anyone else. Still, I have to stick by the rules."

Conroy and Trammel shook hands and chatted briefly at the end of the hearing.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Multi-Channel Newsletter

VOLUME III NUMBER 39 DECEMBER, 1970

PLACES IN SOUTH CAROLINA--DAUFUSKIE ISLAND ELEMENTARY GET ANTENNEA

Daufuskie Island is a small 2 by 5 mile island located at the furtherest southeast point of South Carolina. A 45 minute ride from Bluffton, S.C. will take you to the island "forgotten by man."

Since increasing the power on Charleston ETV channel 7, a project was undertaken in cooperation with the Beaufort County School System to install an antennea at the two room school house located at the center of the island. Though modern conveniences are not a reality on Daufuskie Island, it cannot be said with any credability that they are a forgotten people.

The 1970 census showed a grand total of 170 people living on the island. The school children (ranging from grades 1-8) live on the island with their grandparents. Most of the young people have gone to the mainland to find work. Eleven years ago the last surviving "industry," an oyster factory, was closed due to the magnitude of pollution coming to the island from Savannah, Georgia. Oysters were no longer available and the ones that did come in were not fit to eat. The only "general store" on the island also closed some 10-15 years ago. Free boats are now supplied to the islanders (3 a week to Savannah and 2 a week to Bluffton) for shopping trips. Barges facilitate bringing to the island such large objects as several cars, one school bus, a piece of road equipment and one mobile home.

The school children are offered the same curriculum as any other child in the state of South Carolina. They stay in school from 8-3 which is a little loner than the average school child. This is because grades 1-4 and 5-8 are in the same rooms The children eat breakfast and lunch at the school and return to their homes at 3:00. Being funded by several different titles, they have been able to purchase a tv set, an overhead projector and many other types of A-V equipment. They have not previously been able to receive South Carolina ETV but have been viewing Savannah ETV channel 9.

Having four and three grades together in one room does not disturb the teaching methods as would be suspected. Each of the two teachers have 15-20 students in her classroom and therefore each child will still get the personal attention he may need during the day. The most inconvenient part of teaching could possibly be the confusion stemming from trying to keep up with books on three to four different grade levels. The rooms, however, are large enough to divide the children into their own section and keep each child working at his own pace.

Once through with the 8th grade, the children are sent to the mainland to live with their parents (in most cases) and continue their education. Most of the children that are leaving the island now never return for the obvious reason--that being the lack of industry to employ these people. It was predicted by one of the islanders that in some 15 years all of the people will be gone because the old ones will have died and not many more will have been born. Last year there were 38 children in the school and this year there are 34. The 1970-71 school year brought in only 2 new first graders. They don't know how many, if any, will be coming into the first grade next year. The past 10 years has shown a slow but steady decrease in the school enrollment.

As soon as the children file out of the school yard several of the adult citizens file in behind them for their adult education classes on Tuesdays and Thursdays for two hours. After installation of the antennea, it is hoped that these adults will be able to meet back at the school in the evening hours to watch TV High School. Mrs. Julia Johnson, the principal of Daufuskie Island Elementary, was very excited about the possibility of being able to use S.C. ETV in many different ways. Mrs. Johnson feels there are many more offering which she can use over the S.C. ETV Network that are not available to her from Georgia--one of these being the TV High School series.

SOUTH CAROLINA EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION NETWORK
2712 MILLWOOD AVE. • COLUMBIA, S. C. 29205 •

While visiting the island it only seemed proper to try to catch a little of the local flavor. Mrs. Johnson sent us out to meet Mrs. Sarah Grant the oldest and probably the most colorful surviving citizen. We saw her down on the public dock as we were leaving, trying to catch her supper. She claims to be 82 years old, but gets arounds like a spry 50. She had forgotten many of the stories of the island which were a reality and not history to her as she grew up on the island. When asked if she knew the origin of the name of the island she only replied, "I met the island here when I came." She knows very little of her own background other than the fact that her mother was brought to the island as a slave to the Fripp family many years ago--however, Mrs. Sarah knew that she was born free. She has been told that her grandparents were brought to the nearby mainland directly from Africa.

In 1913 when Mrs. Sarah was a young girl everyone was allowed to pay .25 per task of land (the amount of land one person can work in one day) to use as their own. At that time Daufuskie Island was the supplier of produce for such islands as Tybee and Hilton Head. (Research done since the trip to the island turned up the fact that these people on Daufuskie Island and Hilton Head raged an intense civil war prior to this time. Hilton Head settlers were on the side of the Whigs and Daufuskie Islanders were Torries.)

The lighthouse was built on Daufuskie Island about 1870. At this time three plantation owners lived on the island, Fripp, Stoddard and Webb. The name of the island had more than likely been established many many years before this time. Daufuskie Island is an Indian name which means Island of Blood--this was derived from the battle of bloody point where every indian on the island, with the exception of two, were massacred by the white settlers. Bloody point is on the southeast end of the island and is no longer inhabitated.

When the lighthouse was built there were 5-600 blacks living on the island and 53 registered white male voters. This would assume that at least 53 adult women lived on the island plus their children (two or three per family). With these figures, it is estimated that at least 1,000 people occupied the island at this time.

The island as it stands today is very thick with brushes which have grown up over the past half century. At that time you could see from one end of the island to the other because all of the land was plowed. Today anyone wishing to have even a small garden must stand guard 24 hours a day to keep the deer off their land.

The most astonishing factor to those of us on the trip was the educational level of the children. Though led to believe Daufuskie was very much cut away from civilization, we found these people very well adjusted and very "normally" developed scholastically. Our astonishment could only be credited to our own lack of confidence in our fellow man. They have forced themselves to "keep in touch" with the "outside" world and naturally having access to radio and television they have progressed at the same rate any other group of people on any other tract of land. They have a very distinct advantage over most in that they don't have the busy traffic and the constant ringing of telephones. The lack of telephones has not harmed these people in any way--they told us a story of a woman who had a stroke the other week and within 20 minutes she was in the hospital in Savannah, Georgia. The access of a short wave radio and the helicopters in the coast guard, give these people all the modern civilization they need. Observations made by the editor.

EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE BETS SUCCESSFULLY THAT STUDENTS CAN LEARN BY WATCHING COMMERCIAL TV

Can a magazine that says commercial television programs are educational win support from teachers? The answer is yes, as shown by the fact that Teachers Guides to Television is starting its third year and is now on the press with its fifth issue.

Recognizing the diverse needs of teachers, the Guides for the Fall Semester contain lesson plans on programs ranging from Beethoven's Birthday to the Great Mojave Desert. They are flexible and may be used for many grade levels and in many subject areas.

The fall issue, released in October, contains outlines for several regularly scheduled weekend morning shows for children. Included are Tomfoolery (NBC), a new animated series based on selections from classics (such as Lear's nonsense verse and Lewis Carroll's alphabet) set to music; Hot Dog (NBC), a series on how everyday things (like baseball gloves, guitars, bicycles, etc.) are made; In The Know (CBS), a series of animated mini-documentaries, inserted throughout the Saturday morning schedule, on subjects such as where table salt comes from, how steel is made and how gliders fly; Discovery (ABC), an award-winning program taking youngsters around the U.S. and the world.

Teaching guides have also been developed from the following outstanding special programs: Beethoven's

The ETV Guide is an informational publication of the staff of the S.C. Educational Television Commission, 2712 Millwood Avenue, Columbia, S.C., 29205 and is published four times in January, three times in February, six times in March, four times in September, October and November, and three times in December. It is distributed free of charge as a service to the citizens of the state interested in educational television activities and programming. Second Class postage paid in Columbia, S.C.

Said one parent: "No wonder our first grader does not want to come home early as first graders are allowed to do. He begs to stay at school."

Another parent said Mrs. Stringfellow "makes my child so happy. He even dislikes Saturdays."

Mrs. Stringfellow is a native of Fairfield County. She began teaching at Lowrys in Chester County in 1937. Her school duties then included making fires in a wood stove and sweeping floors -- for $85 a month. Mrs. Stringfellow has also taught in Great Falls and Rock Hill.

Her husband is William R. Stringfellow, Jr. They have three daughters and a grandson.

One of South Carolina's leading educators, Winthrop College Dean of Education Jack H. Boger, has observed South Carolina's Teacher of the Year in the classroom.

"Here is a teacher who brings meaning and purpose to the lives of children who work with her," Dr. Boger said.

Mrs. Stringfellow succeeds James Knox Braboy of Dillon County School District No. 2 as South Carolina Teacher of the Year. This year's selection committee for State Teacher of the Year included Mrs. Mary A. Mace, principal of South Kilbourne Road Elementary School in Columbia and State Teacher of the Year in 1965; Dr. Amelia S. Roberts, dean of the School of Education at South Carolina State College; and George E. Dreher, director of public affairs for the South Carolina State Chamber of Commerce.

SECA INSTRUCTIONAL TELEVISION PREVIEW HELD IN SOUTH CAROLINA

The second annual Southern Educational Communications Association ITV preview weekend was held November 21 and 22 at the South Carolina ETV Network in Columbia. The program has been established to bring together the 15 member networks to combine efforts for in-school programming. Thirty-five members from the 15 states ranging from Maryland to Texas including Hawaii were present at this meeting. A total of over 50 persons were in attendance.

The results of this years meeting were the establishment of a regional library and the possibility of future combined effort productions. The talk of a lending library was brought up at last years screening, but was not actually established until this years meeting. Any of the 15 member networks can borrow or loan to any other network, any series which belongs to them, or any series which they wish to use in their own state. The participating stations (states) have decided to investigate the possibility of combining efforts to make major productions. Where three or four different local level series have served the purpose, combined efforts on the part of all states could make one series which would create a much more generalized and powerful series--to be used region wide as opposed to state-wide.

Each state represented in the program was asked to submit 2 programs from any given series or any two subjects. A total of more than 36 tapes were viewed during the two day period. Subject areas covered were, Music, Language Arts, Math, Art, Languages, Literature, English, Science, Social Studies and In-service series.

Programs viewed were severely criticized by these specialists. Each participant was given an evaluation sheet for each program seen. The check list endeavored to help producing stations see themselves as others see them. Each person was asked to remember, however, that all series were produced to meet a goal in a local situation. The evaluation sheets consisted of four major divisions: Content, Visuals, Teachers and Technical Quality. Under these four divisions, several alternatives were offered.

The purpose of these ITV specialists and directors getting together is to get an objective criticism from those outside of the situation. These are the best in the field and should be able to give the most helpful criticism on subject areas. They know the needs of their own states, yet may miss in their own productions the goals they are most trying to reach.

Trawler Capt. Dave brings S anta Claus to isolated island.

No Sleigh To Daufuskie

Santa Claus Travels

By JACK LELAND
Evening Post Staff Writer

DAUFUSKIE ISLAND — What has about 80 legs, is about 16½ years old, is black and white and wears a bright red suit?

It's a bi-racial group of about 40 Middleton High School students from Charleston playing Santa Claus to Daufuskie's 50 or so kids.

Yesterday, on the eve of Christmas Eve, two weeks of gathering and wrapping more than 200 presents was culminated in a meeting of the Middleton group and the islands kids.

Outwardly it was just about the most "un-Christmassy" Christmas you ever saw.

Santa Claus not only was black but he arrived by boat — not jingle jangling through the air — and before the day was over took a ride in an ox-cart with the island's own venerable Santa — Johnny Hamilton.

There was none of the traditional canned music and snow. In fact, the lush green growth on the island and temperatures in the high 70's lent a summerlike air to the scene.

There were no neon lighted displays in front of stores because the island has no stores.

It was an unplanned, unpremeditated and almost unheard of Christmas.

The idea evolved in an Afro-American Study Club at Middleton High after Mrs. Katrina Buksha, club sponsor, and another teacher, Marion Toatley, called attention to an Evening Post news story about Daufuskie Island.

News of the project spread throughout the school and pretty soon almost everyone was involved. A problem of storage arose as the number of presents passed the 200 mark. Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, of which Mrs. Buksha is a member, gave a large box of wrapped gifts.

Then the hard facts of life hit home. Daufuskie is not an easy place to get to. It is separated from the mainland by some 16 miles of sound, marsh and rivers. There is no regular boat service to this, the southernmost of South Carolina's inhabited barrier islands. To add to the problem, the only boat serving the island, a military surplus cabin boat, gave up the ghost and refused to run.

Efforts to get a boat from the Coast Guard and Navy came to naught as did a try for a helicopter from the Air Force.

Then a telephone call to Orion Hack, president of the Hilton Head Corp., (on the island north of Daufuskie) brought quick results. In 30 minutes Allen L. Engelhardt, a Connecticut Yankee and retired South American mining engineer, made his Santa Claus distributes gifts to Daufuskie Island children.

s. By Trawler, Oxcart

fast cruiser available and everyone relaxed.

Just before Christmas Santa Claus suits are much in demand. After several refusals by organizations owning suits, Col. Dennis D. Nicholson of The Citadel produced one almost at the same time that Mrs. Buksha was getting one owned by the Town of Mount Pleasant. The result was the only known Santa Claus with two pairs of trousers.

Again at the last minute, the Hilton Head trawler, Capt. Dave was made available. Owned by David Jones and skippered by Capt. James Murray, it joined Mr. Engelhardt's "La Abundancia" for the run to Daufuskie. This was the same trawler that sailed 800 miles last year to Washington, D.C. to dramatize threats of pollution in the area.

Meanwhile out on the island, two University of California (Santa Cruz branch) students were rounding up the island kids in a rusty pick-up truck to meet the boat. A good many had gone to the mainland for Christmas shopping but about 30 came to the party.

Atop the high bluff overlooking Cooper River, they waited as the two boats came up from Calibogue Sound with a red suited and white bearded black Santa on the bow of the Capt. Dave.

Santa, Middleton High senior Jerry Fields, approached the shining eyed youngsters with a hearty "ho ho ho," and, all of a sudden, everyone knew that Christmas had arrived two days early.

It was a scene that jumped the centuries, crossing racial barriers that a century of freedom had not eradicated and opening avenues of communication that these young people never knew existed.

In an era when young people are too often associated with violence, drugs and rebellion, the Middleton High students found involvement" in something completely different — the face to face, hand in hand, helping of their fellow men.

The older people involved were drawn irresistibly into the scene and feelings long unremembered came to life.

There was no "speechifying." There was no need for words. And, while Santa Claus and his gifts were welcomed, the greatest welcome was for a former island teacher, Pat Conroy of Beaufort who came back for the first time in three months.

Conroy has been discharged as teacher in September when he and the school district administration had differences. He is appealing his discharge and this was his first trip to Daufuskie since Sept. 18.

He was literally swarmed over as he walked up the dock in a scene that caused world - weary grownups to get misty eyed.

When Santa completed his work, the Middleton High girls served cookies and fruit and Santa said: "Ho. Ho. Ho. It's time to go."

As the two boats headed eastward toward this modernized world of Hilton Head, the little group of blacks and their gaily colored packages soon became just a blob on the shoreline but within the hearts of those departing, something had been born.

Just as 2,000 years ago, the first Christmas message came a-borning into the world with a revolutionary idea that it is indeed more blessed to give than to receive, so at Daufuskie Island yesterday that meassage was reaffirmed.

As Tiny Tim would have said, "God Bless Us every one."

Conroy

RAYMOND M. WHEELER, PRESIDENT
JOSEPHINE WILKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT
C. G. GOMILLION, VICE-PRESIDENT
LUCIUS H. PITTS, VICE-PRESIDENT
FRANK SMITH, VICE-PRESIDENT
VIVIAN W. HENDERSON, CHAIRMAN, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
JOSEPH HAAS, COUNSEL
PAUL ANTHONY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Southern [illegible], Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. [illegible] 30303

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

[1-23-71]

Dear Mr. Kravit,

Your letter was received today---I opened it just as I was talking to Pat Conroy. Right now he is waiting a decision on a suit he filed to be xx reinstated as the teacher on Daufuskie. The Judge was to have ruled Jan. 1, but has not. Meanwhile, the local draft board is breathing down his nekk. He owes his local attorney, George Trask, about a thousand dollars and he does indeed need some sort of financial assistance. The Council employed him for a month to do a study on the people of Daufuskie which we hope to publish in South Today. I do wish you would contact him yourself for he can tell you far better than I the many pressures which confront him now. I have passed your letter on to Dr. Emory Via and our director, Paul Anthony who appreciate your interest and I know would be glad to help you, as would I, in anything you want to do to aid Conroy. He is a fine teacher, a fine human being and I say this as a long time reporter with a cynic's eye. Thank you for writing. Pat's address is 403 E. Hancock St., Beaufort, S.C., his home phone number, 803-524--6425.

Sincerely,

Betsy Fancher

Betsy Fancher

1-23-71 Wrote for addr cc. Send copy all writers To NAACP Legal def Fund.

See Peters, MU sou. com
Write Conroy

314/442-5216

STANLEY E. KRAVIT
217 WEST BROADWAY
APT. C-28
COLUMBIA, MISSOURI 65201

February 2, 1971

Mrs. Betsy Fancher
Associate Editor
SOUTH TODAY
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mrs. Fancher:

Enclosed is a copy of my letter to Pat Conroy. I hope some of this will pay off. I also have two suggestions.

Can you send copies of your articles to as many student newspapers as possible, particularly the campuses that have shown an inclination to take an active interest in matters of social conscience? Also, there is a newspaper that serves the Boston area students, some 60,000 plus; and while I don't have these names and addresses, I thought you might. Most papers that pick up on this will use Conroy's address and state that a fund is set up for him or that people should contact him.

Secondly, I wonder if you or your associates can open up some paid speaking opportunities to Conroy. Again, the campuses nearby would be a possibility since student associations often have funds for speakers' fees.

I will let you know if I achieve anything here.

Sincerely yours,

Stan Kravit

Stanley E. Kravit
Specialist and Instructor
Labor Education Program

SEK:nmj

Enclosure

cc: Pat Conroy

STANLEY E. KRAVIT
217 WEST BROADWAY
APT. C-28
COLUMBIA, MISSOURI 65201

T. K. Lloyd
May Kash
Sally Tate
Doyle Nichols
Jabyle Adams
Prabeth Mayes
Jerry Ireland

COLUMBIA, MO 65201
FEB 5
PM
1971

—COLUMBIA-BO
—SESQUICENTE
—150 SHOW-YOU
EISENHOWER USA

Mrs. Betsy Fancher
Associate Editor
SOUTH TODAY
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

314/442-5216

STANLEY E. KRAVIT
217 WEST BROADWAY
APT. C-28
COLUMBIA, MISSOURI 65201

February 2, 1971

Mr. Pat Conroy
403 E. Hancock Street
Beaufort, South Carolina 29902

Dear Mr. Conroy:

We are subscribers to South Today and I learned of your problems from Betsy Fancher's articles. My wife and I know, from personal experience, what you are up against; and we would like very much to help you out.

Please accept the amount enclosed for your personal use on the basis that your battle is part of a larger effort toward freedom and decency in this country.

I have also done the following things and while I cannot assure any results, I hope you will benefit directly:

I wrote twice to Senator Hollings, first in reference to the first article. His first reply was a mix-up as to who he was answering. A copy of my second letter and his last reply are enclosed.

I wrote to the N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defence Fund and sent copies of the articles. I hope you are being helped by the American Civil Liberties Union or some organization of this type.

This morning I spoke to representatives of the University of Missouri Students Association and student newspaper and I will try for an article and an appeal for support to the student body.

I am in the process of sending the articles to an executive of the American Teachers Association in the hope that they will print something in their national newspaper and perhaps take a direct interest in your situation.

The articles will also go to the St. Louis Post Dispatch and to Missouri's two Senators. And, I may be able to offer an article to the various labor newspapers both in Missouri and elsewhere. Finally, there are a few other contacts that may help.

I wish some of this was more immediate and more practical, but I would like to keep trying and I hope you will keep me informed.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Very truly yours,

Stanley E. Kravit
Specialist and Instructor
Labor Education Program

SEK:nmj

Enclosures

SOUTH TODAY

A Digest of Southern Affairs

ATLANTA, GA. VOL. 1, NO. 1 JULY, 1969

20¢

'Our children are spat on. Our children are called ugly names. They have been slapped, been put in jails. Homes have been burned. All because our children wanted a dignified education. And by you having all the power invested in you and we are humble servants of this country, we ask you to do your duty."

A Special Report by PAT WATTERS

These words, intended for the ears of U. S. Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, spoken by Mrs. Marie Bracy of Wetumpka, Ala., were an eloquent summary of one part of the message brought by 30 Southerners to Washington on July 1. The other part of their message, a desperate last-minute effort to persuade the administration not to weaken its announced policy on school desegregation guidelines and enforcement in the South, was a simple statement about the gravest danger inherent in a new federal retreat.

It was not a threat. Mrs. Victoria DeLee of Dorchester County, S. C., summed it up: "We are responsible. The next group won't be."

They were, indeed, the ultra-respectable voices of local leadership of the Negro struggle in the South, and from start to finish of their demonstration, all seemed aware of the danger to the responsible approach they still believe in. How much there in Washington in encounters with government and the press did they become aware that not just their own people but all of America has lost the ability to respond to and respect their kind of approach?

They traveled to Washington in a chartered bus, these responsible Southerners, most of them Negroes, most of them acquainted in the most intimate way possible with the past failure to enforce federal school desegregation law: They were the parents of children and some of the children themselves who had tried at the first local opportunity to integrate schools, and had suffered the consequences of continued lack of real integration and continued lack of protection against intimidation and reprisal.

To see them together on their bus was like seeing some gathering of an aristocracy, their names familiar, even legend some of them, from the years of their struggle to make American law mean what it says. They were, as to be expected, calm and sure, unafraid, unfooled, and were more, were in various way models of various Southern virtues—humor, gregariousness, charm, manners, dignity.

Winifred Green, Hayes Mizell and David Jacobs of the Southern staff of the American Friends Service Committee had informed them of reports that HEW and the Justice Department planned to soften what seemed a hearteningly stern demand for real integration of schools across the South this fall. They had a ready answer when told of plans of some to go to Washington and protest. "Why yes, they called me on Saturday morning and we were ready to go Sunday morning," said Mrs. Bracy. She was accompanied by her daughter, Deborah, survivor of harassments and one jailing

To Page 7

Billy Hargis

Turn Ye Radio On!

THE RADIO message of the radical right comes through stronger in the South than anywhere else. Billy James Hargis is the big man. By Reese Cleghorn. Page 3.

ATLANTA MAGAZINE

Gov. McNair

Orangeburg

A Story of Police Panic

THE ORANGEBURG tragedy—three students killed, 27 wounded—is a case study of what can happen when "law and order" becomes a nightmare of police panic. By Jack Nelson. Page 8.

Los Angeles Times

Also Inside:

THE FREEDOM Quilting Bee of Alberta, Ala., now three years old, has brought better earnings, more dignity and New York contracts to a band of women engaged in an old folk art. Page 6.

The Birmingham News

THIS AND other co-operatives offer hope for many of the rural poor, but there are failures. Page 2.

BLACKS DRAW heavier sentences than whites. Page 2.

And Coming:

IN COMING issues will be reports on new efforts by businessmen to break old job discrimination barriers, as through the National Alliance of Businessmen; new black capitalism undertakings; and the plight of a neglected minority: the white poor.

Campuses In Crisis

YOUNG KELLY Alexander of the University of North Carolina wants to change "the system" but to work within it. For that, he is called "Negro" by some other black students; it is a term as derisive as "nigger." A spirit of separatism is growing among black students on Southern campuses. By Phil Gailey. Page 4.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

A CRY FROM THE DELTA

IN THE BACK yard of one of the most powerful congressmen, Jamie L. Whitten of Mississippi, hunger and early death mock the beauty of flaming sunsets and full moons. By Robert Coles and Harry Huge. Page 5.

THE NEW REPUBLIC

What Is SOUTH TODAY?

REPORT ON REPORTS

Unfair Sentences

A clear pattern of sentence disparity between black and white offenders exists in the administration of Southern justice.

A Southern Regional Council report entitled "Race Makes the Difference" is based on research compiled in the summer of 1967 by law students working for the Council's Project on Crime and Corrections.

Seven states are examined in the report: Arkansas, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia. Of the remaining four Southern states, Texas was not included because the large number of Mexican-Americans in the Texas population would have made clear black-white comparisons difficult. Florida was eliminated because its prison population is untypically transient. Louisiana and Mississippi officials did not respond to requests for cooperation.

The report, drawn from 1,205 cases, shows that the average sentence for black offenders for all crimes was 16.8 years; for whites, 12.1. For crimes against persons, the averages were 22.8 years for Negroes and 20.6 for whites. For crimes against property, Negro sentences averaged 7.4 years and white sentences 5.9 years.

The report also notes:

"Beyond the more obviously deplorable inequities outlined here, another even more serious consideration is raised. In a time when the cry of law and order has attained almost the level of the national motto, we would point out that true respect for law begins with the impartial administration of justice. To the individual men and women who make up the grim statistics which compose the bulk of this report, that respect has long since been lost. To a generation of youth who have seen the treatment given their elders, that respect may never begin at all."

"Race Makes the Difference" is available from the Southern Regional Council. Single copy 30¢; bulk copies 20¢.

Black Youth

A sample of 688 students from five all-black schools in Atlanta was surveyed in a study by the Southern Regional Council to determine the attitudes, values, and opinions of Negro youth in a wide range of areas.

"Black Youth in a Southern Metropolis" concludes that "the considerable social tension and sense of crisis which currently pervade American society have undoubtedly had considerable impact on the young people in our sample. . . . This survey may well have captured the sense of confusion and transition among black youth which a perusal of the popular press readily reveals as being prevalent in the nation as a whole."

Attitudes about Negro-white relations, civil rights approaches and organizations in general revealed that the average respondents did not approve of separatist, Black Power, or defeatist views, nor did a very high percentage indicate willingness to participate in a riot. "However," the study states, "an absolute majority of the respondents felt that 'if things don't get better in Atlanta, there will be riots.'"

The respondents' perceptions of their environment reflect a considerable degree of dissatisfaction. Some 34 per cent rated two-thirds of the listed neighborhood facilities and services negatively.

This low to low-middle socio-economic group tended to place high value on qualities commonly associated with middle-class status. Some 96 per cent of the students indicated that they intend to remain in high school until graduation. Some 86 per cent indicated they wished to continue their education beyond the high school level.

The number who live in female-centered domestic situations (38 per cent) was higher than might be anticipated from previous studies conducted elsewhere.

Delinquency was admitted by only a small minority of the sample, though, contradictorily, 41 per cent agreed with the statement "Sometimes you have to cheat a little to get what you want."

Though most of the students surveyed tended to support basic religious views and values, there was less agreement on statements relating to the influence and impact of the church.

"Black Youth in a Southern Metropolis" may be ordered from the Southern Regional Council. Single copy 50¢; bulk copies 40¢.

Co-ops for the Poor

Southern co-operatives, as a means of raising the economic standard of living for the poor, need to be strengthened, expanded and subsidized on a long-term basis, according to a report issued by the Southern Regional Council.

There are at least 40 "poor people's co-operative movements" in the South, but only 15 or 16 are significant efforts. About 15,000 people are involved in the Southern co-ops. Most are black.

(See the story on Alabama's Freedom Quilting Bee, one of the most successful cooperatives on page 6.)

Co-operatives, or associations formed to enable members to buy or sell to a better advantage by eliminating middlemen's profits, were examined in the report to see to what extent they have helped Southern poor people meet their basic needs.

Al Ulmer, who has served as a consultant to various co-ops, wrote the report. The immediate problems with most poor people's co-ops, he says, result from poor accounting procedures, bad management, conservative leadership and insufficient operating and development capital.

If co-ops do not help to obtain more money, decent housing, land for farms and industry, adequate food, education, political and economic power, and a measure of security, then they fail in meeting the basic needs of the poor people, Ulmer says.

"Probably no other more hopeful, more creative effort to remedy basic inequities in the South has ever been undertaken by the people who are victims of those inequities than the cooperative movement," he says.

Overwhelming problems of housing, illiteracy, lack of employment, and racism suggest that unless co-ops can be large enough and sufficiently strong to take on these immediate oppressive situations on a community-wide basis, co-ops will continue to be small, poorly understood and poorly supported.

"As yet few of the co-ops have reached the poorest of the poor, the people without land, jobs of adequate food," Ulmer says.

"Cooperatives and Poor People in the South" may be obtained from the Southern Regional Council. Single copy 30¢; bulk copies 20¢.

Delta Prisons

No permanently effective penal reform has taken place in Arkansas, Louisiana or Mississippi, where state prison farms are operated and expected to be self-supporting.

A Southern Regional Council report, entitled "The Delta Prisons: Punishment for Profit," concludes:

"The three states put together could not, out of presently available funds and facilities, provide the components of one prison which would meet minimum national standards set forth by the American Correctional Association."

The self-supporting nature of these penal institutions is cited as the major reason for the deplorable and inhumane conditions found. "The administrators are without funds and the prisoners are without hope," the report says. "There are pitifully few meaningful education or training programs."

Old and inadequate housing, dining and hospital facilities were commonly found, as were lack of mechanization, a dearth of paid personnel, and unjustifiable work quotas. It was also found that discipline is frequently maintained by brutal methods such as flogging, isolation, and, in some instances, electrical torture.

The prison facilities studied were Cumins Farm, which is the main unit of the Arkansas State Penitentiary; Angola Prison in Louisiana; and the Mississippi State Penitentiary at Parchman.

In each of these states, the report said, there were statutory requirements that all facilities, operations and artifacts be segregated, an unconstitutional practice.

"The Delta Prisons: Punishment for Profit" may be ordered from the Southern Regional Council. Single copy 30¢; bulk copies, 20¢ each.

About South Today

You may be receiving this first issue of SOUTH TODAY because you regularly receive mailed materials of the Southern Regional Council. Or you may be receiving it because you are on a new list of leaders in the South which the Council has compiled in an effort to broaden its contact with people of goodwill who are concerned about their region and its future.

Our circulation, at the outset, is 10,000. We hope it will be enlarged. But this is an experimental publication at this stage. In determining its usefulness and its future, we will closely watch the response of our readers. (We hope you will return the coupon on page 8, telling us what you think.)

In choosing a list of leaders in the South to receive a SOUTH TODAY, we have not pretended to be comprehensive. But the list includes a broad range of business, religious, professional, governmental, union and civic leadership. The leaders we have chosen are white and black, middle-class and grassroots.

The Southern Regional Council is a biracial, non-sectarian, non-profit, private organization supported by foundations and individual contributors. It was founded in 1944 by a group including the late Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University; the late Ralph McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution; Bishop Arthur J. Moore, of the Methodist Church; the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University; and the late Dr. Howard W. Odum, of the University of North Carolina.

It works through research, information, education and experimental field programs. A statement of purpose adopted in 1951 and in 1962 states:

"The South of the future toward which our efforts are directed is a South freed of stultifying inheritances from the past. It is a South where the measure of a man will be his ability, not his race; where a common citizenship will work in democratic understanding for the common good; where all who labor will be rewarded in proportion to their skill and achievement; where all can feel confident of personal safety and equality before the law; where segregation will be recognized as a cruel and needless penalty on the human spirit and will no longer be imposed; where above all, every individual will enjoy a full share of dignity and self respect, in recognition of his creation in the image of God."

For 25 years, the Council has been a believer in the power of information and in the proposition that ours will become a far better region as it turns its eyes upon itself without blinders. This belief rests, of course, upon faith in the ultimate goodwill of those, white and black, who call themselves "Southerners." The publication and distribution of SOUTH TODAY are based upon that premise.

SOUTH TODAY

A Digest of Southern Affairs

SOUTH TODAY is published by the Leadership Project of the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta, Ga. 30303. The Southern Regional Council, founded in 1944, is a research and information agency devoted to the attainment of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South. President: John H. Wheeler, Durham, N.C. Chairman, Executive Committee: Raymond M. Wheeler, Charlotte, N.C. Vice Presidents: Josephine Wilkins, Athens, Ga.; Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn.; Charles G. Gomillion, Tuskegee, Ala.; Lucius H. Pitts, Birmingham, Ala. Executive Director: Paul Anthony.

REESE CLEGHORN
Editor

KATHERINE S. GRIFFITH
Assistant Editor

TURN YE RADIO ON!

Old Elixirs Are Selling Better Now

By Reese Cleghorn

From Atlanta Magazine

Traveling through the Deep South you still find the countryside broken here and there by a crudely painted sign that says "Sinners Will Burn in Hell" or a handsome billboard that urges one and all to "Impeach Earl Warren." But the signs are not the main message these days. To get the full treatment, you must follow the advice of that old hillbilly song whose refrain was a wild voice yelling "Turn ye radio onnnnnn, Turn ye radio onnnnnn!" In or near the small or medium-sized towns, the airwaves crackle constantly with the jeremiads of angry radio preachers and political medicine men selling the old elixirs.

In fact, there are days when, if you keep moving the finger on the dial as you travel through the South, you may listen to the messages of the far right almost without a lapse. They are often but not always fitted into the context of fundamentalist religion. Although most of the broadcasts originate elsewhere, they have become distinguishing characteristic of this region, as much so as the "Sinners Will Burn in Hell" signs. Nowhere else do the Revs. Billy James Hargis and Carl McIntyre, for instance, have such an extensive radio audience.

Hargis, who has been known to weigh in at 260 just before a bout with the devil, is the biggest man in more ways than one on this circuit. At a Hargis rally at the Sheraton Biltmore in Atlanta, a warm-up man came on first to tell about "this strange, sickening world in which we live." He told the audience that the Fair Play for Cuba Committee had been registered in Washington while Robert F. Kennedy was attorney general. This apparently was part of his evidence for his subsequent charge that Kennedy "can become an American Castro." He worked over the National Council of Churches, said "our colleges think we are out of step" because a Communist named William Z. Foster has rewritten American history, and offered a "tonight only" special subscription rate for a publication of Hargis' Christian Crusade. Then came Mr. Hargis himself, dramatically down the center aisle amid ovation. His pitch this time was race. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was an "Uncle Tom for special interests," he said at one point, and "a Pied Piper to lead the American Negro into the camp of communism," he said at another. The NAACP does not speak for Negroes, he said. ("They have never allowed a Negro to head their organization.") The country had already largely succumbed to communism, and only people like those in the Christian Crusade could lead it back to safety.

Hargis has fancied the title of "Dr. Hargis." The institution that gave him his first honorary doctorate was something called the Defender Seminary in Puerto Rico, founded by a well-known pro-Nazi, anti-Semitic evangelist named Gerald Winrod. Another doctorate came from an institution designated by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare as a "degree mill." Hargis dropped out of an Arkansas college after less than two years. But he speaks as a confident authority on many matters of worldwide import; it is difficult to imagine him without an emphatic answer to any question. He is the most important of the evangelists of the radical right, and therefore one of the most influential voices in the South.

The extremist message that pours so voluminously from these radio programs varies little with the source. The standard line has it that America's basic institutions—the schools, churches, government, press—are in the hands of Communists and fellow-travelers. From there it goes on: fanatic opposition to the United Nations, the poverty program (or any government social program), the Supreme Court, and civil rights legislation. There are proposals to alter basically the federal system, as for instance, by putting the courts under congressional control, or simply by dismantling the federal government by repealing the income tax and simultaneously barring the government from professional and business services (as the Liberty Lobby's Liberty Amendment would do).

These voices are not mere curiosities, not in the South at least. President Kennedy was to have said, in the speech he did not deliver in Dallas on November 22, 1963, that increasingly the country is hearing from "those who confuse rhetoric with reality and the plausible with the possible." They are, he said, "voices preaching doctrines wholly unrelated to reality." We cannot expect that everyone will talk sense, he said. "But we can hope that fewer people will listen to nonsense. . . ." Actually, more people now are listening to nonsense of the radical rightest variety than were listening in 1963, if Southern radio stations' offerings are any index. A recent estimate was that 7,000 programs of the radical right are heard weekly on radio and television stations across the nation, a large portion of these in the South.

Billy Hargis

Hargis' "Christian Crusade Radio Ministry," a daily program, was down to about 50 radio stations and a few television outlets when President Kennedy's speech was written. In 1964, it bounced back with more than 100 stations. In 1965, it had 237 stations in 37 states, Canada, and Mexico. In 1967, it had 208 U.S. stations, 86 of which were in the South. The Southern stations accounted for 41 per cent of Hargis' total.

Although he falls short of Hargis in total impact, the Rev. Carl McIntyre leads the field among rightist radio evangelists in the South as well as in the nation. About half the stations using his "Twentieth Century Reformation Hour" are in the Southern states. The program had 313 stations in 1962. By 1964 the number had reached 448 (with 201 of these, or 45 per cent in the South). By 1965, the number exceeded 600.

A large part of McIntyre's appeal is to those who dislike the National Council of Churches and the direction in which almost all the major Protestant denominations have been moving recently. He himself was barred from continued service as a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (now the United Presbyterian Church) in 1936. The church's highest governing body, the General Assembly, accused him of defaming the character of fellow Christians, causing "dissension and strife," and engendering suspicion and ill will.

The success of the extremist radio programs in the South is shown in other figures, as well. "Life Lines," a daily program supported by H. L. Hunt's petroleum and food concerns, had 500 stations in 1967, with 236 of these (47 per cent) in the South. The same year, 65 per cent of the radio stations broadcasting Clarence Manion's "Manion Forum" (101 of the 155) were in the South. The Citizens Councils Forum had 150 stations nationally, with a heavy concentration in the South. The number of stations carrying Howard Kershner's "Commentary in the News," sponsored by Christian Freedom Foundation, Inc., is currently uncertain. But in 1962, 43 of the 148 stations, or 29.1 per cent, were in Southern states. His total had risen to 362 stations in 1965, including substantial increases in the South.

Few people, of course, would dispute the right of even the most extreme propagandists to present their views. The question that arises is whether the stations which are heavy with the appeals of the rightwing radicals offer a balance of any kind or rebuttals. Under the Federal Communications Commission rules, stations must present opposing viewpoints. But the process of challenging their presentations is sometimes difficult.

So the programs of the radical right have become the common stuff of the airwaves in the South. This part of the country, obviously, is ripe for their appeal. Its old order is changing rapidly and many people, cut adrift from outlooks and status that had given them security in the past, are looking for easy explanations in a world that is increasingly baffling to them. Many of the pressures are more intense in the South; for instance, those caused by the movement from a rural to an urban life. Between 1950 and 1960, the increase in urban population for the country as a whole was 29.3 percent; in the South, it was 40.1 percent.

Some of the values that had gone with rural life do not seem to apply as well in the cities. If a man is reluctant to change, and if he sees others getting ahead with values very different from his, he may be quite ready to believe Mr. Hargis' explanation that satanic forces have taken charge. After all, what else explains it? Good people such as himself, a man may think, are being wrongly deprived of what was always rightfully theirs, and the country is going to hell.

Mr. Hargis knows what to say to that man: "The only people that I ever met in my life that I think are worth knowing are these little ol' Bible-believing Christian people who love the Lord and who love America and they're willing even in their feeble way to the best of their ability to give their lives in the defense of both. They're the only people I want to know, and they're the ones I want to hold my hand as I walk through the Valley of the Shadow of Death."

Carl McIntyre

They will have to take that walk, of course, despite the machinations of such companions of the devil as the United Nations, the American government, most of established religions, and the atheists who have taken over everywhere.

Through these messages more people are led to despise what is theirs, to distrust everything around them, and to become further convinced of their own impotence and their country's weakness. Taken on their face, these preachments suggest revolution as the only effective reply; but since they do not really urge that (except in the case of some of the para-military fringe groups), the extremists simply make people more frustrated and more alienated from their country. It is not a creative maladjustment that Mr. Hargis and his fellow super-salesmen of the far right bring about.

The old-timer who put "Sinners Will Burn in Hell" on pine trees was exercising his right to say his piece and pronounce his judgment. It was clear and simple. He had a Satan in mind, but the Satan presumably was not Washington, D.C., or the Church. He presumably used the pine tree with the permission of the owner; if he did not have that permission, the owner could pull down the sign. The "pine trees" used by Mr. Hargis and numerous competitors selling similar lines are the public airwaves, and the South seems less disturbed about that than any other part of the country. The South is, of course, used to those things. ST

Separatist Sentiment Grows -- This Time It Is Black

Southern Campuses in Crisis

By Phil Gailey

In THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

SOME white students in Morrison dormitory are befuddled when they see the small dorm room occupied by Kelley Alexander Jr., a 20-year-old black junior at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

On the concrete block walls of his room are quotes from firebrand Rap Brown, a Humphrey-Muskie bumper sticker, a quote from Warren G. Harding and a Time Magazine cover of LBJ with a penciled moustache that makes the former president resemble Adolph Hitler.

Black militants on campus call him a "Negro."

"That's their way of saying Uncle Tom," smiled Alexander, a husky young man who is the third generation of a North Carolina family active in civil rights. His father is president of the state NAACP.

Alexander is one of two black students left in the campus NAACP organization. Black students pulled out last year and formed the more militant Black Student Movement.

Alexander, who has served as state vice president of the NAACP, plans to leave the campus organization next year to devote more of his time to the Committee for the Advancement of Minority and Disadvantaged Students, an ad hoc group which is trying to "develop some motivation among disadvantaged students (blacks, Indians and poor whites) to attend a university and to legitimize state institutions as valid sources of higher education."

Alexander tries to work within the system at UNC. He admits it is sometimes frustrating.

For example, he formed a committee of moderate black students who submitted a list of concerns to the university administration. There was only a feeble response from the administration and 30 days later black militants presented their demands to the university—many of them basically the same as Alexander's suggestions, which received little publicity.

They included a scholarship program for culturally disadvantaged students, the admission of more blacks, and curriculum changes.

"The administration should have responded before the Black Student Movement made the headlines," Alexander said.

There is a growing "awareness among black students of the inequities in the system here," he said.

The other Negro member of the campus NAACP, John Parker, 17, of Kings Mountain, N.C., is the first Negro to serve in the student legislature.

Alexander and Parker are part of a movement on campus to get the administration to admit more "high risk" students. They are involved in other projects, but they seldom make the headlines.

"It's time people start considering long-range solutions as well as the short-range ones," Alexander believes. "Black people are losing sight of the fact that expediency has only led us into deeper water."

Alexander deplores the black demands for "resegregation," including black dorms and a black studies program for blacks only.

"I am of the old-fashioned school that whites need black history and culture more than blacks," he said.

Alexander said he was concerned over the growing separatist movement among blacks.

"I want to work for a world where certain principles are upheld—not a black and white world. If we can't have this, there's nothing worth living for.

"I'll tell you another thing," he added. "I'm frustrated by the white liberals who, in trying to do what they think is right, support the movement toward resegregation under the guise of black identity and consciousness.

"Militant? I'm already militant. It doesn't express itself in rhetoric. But if I fail in my lifetime to change this system, then we've had it. If there are no changes, my grandfather, and my father, and I have been proved wrong. There's nothing left then but to try the other way."

Alexander, who has been involved in civil rights sit-ins and demonstrations since he was 10, is a "Negro" (or Uncle Tom) to black militants who have lost patience with working within the system.

That is one view. At the University of South Carolina in Columbia, another black student, Tony Chitty, sees things another way.

"It was a great sin for the integrated university to bring black students into a world where they cannot relate," he says. "I came here as a freshman and tried like hell to be white. The whites never accepted me from the beginning and soon I was alienated from my black friends. Let's face it. The university doesn't relate to the black student even when he tries to be a good nigger."

The frustration and isolation of Tony Chitty is shared by other black students in predominantly white universities.

At Duke University, Chuck Hopkins, leader of the campus Afro-American Society, recently told a meeting of faculty and administration: "The black student is faced either with accepting the educational structure as it is and seeking his real self outside of it; or he can rebel at the lack of himself in the educational structure with extreme expressions of militancy; or he can attempt to have some of his own ideas and culture which are inherent in his blackness incorporated into the overall structure of the educational institution."

Blacks are increasingly becoming separatists.

On scores of college campuses across the South and the rest of the nation, black students have presented demands to college administrations. The demands are basically the same with a few local modifications—a black studies program, black dormitories, the admission of more blacks and others.

In most cases, black militants have little to do with white radicals.

At the University of North Carolina, Students for a Democratic Society leader George Vlasits said: "We have problems working with the black students originating from the old liberal idea of black and white together."

UNC radicals and black militants occasionally share a common cause, as they did in supporting a strike by cafeteria workers on the Chapel Hill campus, but there is no permanent relationship between them.

The black student, like the black citizen, is restless. There are undercurrents of anger and militancy that haven't yet surfaced. "We're not angry," said Reginald Hawkins, head of the Black Student Movement at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, "but we're not satisfied. I think most of us have covert anger that will come out when the situation arises."

There are examples of colleges where blacks have made progress—even though they describe it as "tokenism."

At Duke University, blacks will for the first time this summer be involved in recruiting Negro students. Black students have been named to a committee considering a black studies program for Duke. At nearby UNC in Chapel Hill, students can start working this fall toward a bachelor's degree in the new Afro-American Studies program.

Black students have been named to student-faculty committees at the Chapel Hill campus. "Right now we're on about every committee that has anything to do with black students," said one black student leader.

Both Duke and UNC will double their black enrollment this fall and will take in more "high risk" students. Each campus has had less than 200 black students this year.

In some cases, concessions were made after militants acted, and in others, the administration moved trying to avert turmoil.

At the University of Georgia, black students have practically no representation in university affairs, and even more serious, a perilous lack of communication exists between the administration and black students.

Out of frustration and in some cases defeat, black student movements are beginning to shift their emphasis from the campus to the community around it.

UNC black students and some white radicals supported cafeteria workers in a strike over wages. In the end, the workers, almost all black, won the support of most of the faculty and student body and a salary increase from $1.35 to $1.80 an hour. UNC administration said it did not know the workers were being deprived of overtime and pledged to pay overtime for more than 40 hours.

At Duke, UNC and the University of Florida, black campus groups are working in local ghettoes, tutoring students and taking them on field trips, and working with high school students in getting black courses in the curriculum. UNC blacks received a $4,000 grant from the student legislature to help finance their community program.

Hawkins doesn't agree that black students on northern campuses are more militant than those in Southern colleges.

"I think our movement here at UNC is comparable to what's going on up North," said Hawkins. "We don't have any black nationalist groups down here, but I think blacks on this campus are willing to do anything if they feel nothing is being done."

"One thing about the black students," admitted a University of South Carolina administrator recently. "They've made the white conscious of his total citizenship in society. The white student is beginning to see that as long as the black is not free, neither is he. It's sad that just at the time when both sides are seeing their common plight, they are growing more apart." ST

And on Black Campuses . . .

ROBERT TERRELL

In New South

At the beginning of the fall, 1968, term, a group of students (at the Atlanta University Center) formed an organization called "The Ad Hoc Committee for a Black University." . . .

Shortly after it was organized, the Ad Hoc Committee submitted a list of demands to each of the six college presidents. The list contained the following statement:

"As black students in the Atlanta University System, we strongly feel that our present situation in America dictates that certain basic changes occur in the present make-up of our institutions. We view our problems as the same ones which enslave the bodies and minds of Africans all over the world. European culture has crushed all but life from blacks from the time it appeared on African soil to this very day! Slavery ended 100 years ago! But, it is completely apparent to all of us that a more subtle form of slavery has continued to exist. The so-called 'Negro College,' with the Atlanta University system high on the list, continues to function as one of the main tools used by our oppressors to perpetuate the cruel colonization of Africans in America. In essence, our sincere desire for growth, truth, and a relevant education has been used against us."

While this statement does not reflect the complete sentiments of all students in the Center, it represents the view of many. Most students agree with its basic intent. A petition, circulated by the Ad Hoc Committee to ascertain the percentage of students supporting its goals, indicated that well over 50 per cent of the students are in sympathy with the Ad Hoc Committee. ST

A Cry from the Delta

by ROBERT COLES and HARRY HUGE

in The New Republic

photos by AL CLAYTON

IN May of 1967 six physicians—one of us was one of them—spent time in Mississippi's Delta. Dozens of homes were visited; children and their parents were given medical examinations; and the conditions of life that thousands of American citizens still must take for granted were observed and written down. In July of 1967 a committee of the U.S. Senate heard it all—the hard-to-believe medical facts that again and again had to be insisted upon; Americans go hungry every day, become malnourished, die because they didn't get enough food and the right kind of food and fall sick and never, never at all see a doctor; American children possess bloated bellies and swollen ankles, even suffer from kwashiorkor and marasmus, diseases that mark the very last stages of starvation and that are associated with countries like Biafra or cities like Calcutta.

Mississippi's two senators were given a chance to cross-examine the doctors, but declined to do so. Mississippi's governor, Paul Johnson, sent out doctors of his own, well-established and conservative ones, to make the same rounds the other doctors had, to find out whether their charges had any substance. Eventually they, too, submitted a report to the Senate, and in essence said the same thing:

"In summary, the situation as observed in Humphreys County does not appear to be markedly different from that in Leflore County. Here, also, there are persons who are under-housed, under-fed, under-educated and under-employed. Some of them lack sufficient medical care and hospital facilities, and many are virtually unemployable."

Sen. John Stennis responded with a bill aimed at feeding the nation's hungry and providing the Senate with more scientific information about who is hungry, where, and to what extent. His bill easily went through the Senate, but somehow became stalled for months in the House of Representatives where other Mississippians also wield great power, among them Mr. Jamie L. Whitten, who ranks third among the 51 members of the House Appropriations Committee and is a member of the Appropriations subcommittee for National Defense, for Public Works and most important, for Agriculture.

For 15 years Mr. Whitten has been chairman of that Agriculture subcommittee, a position that has given him a decisive say in everything the government does and does not do with and about our farms, our enormous surpluses of food and our hungry citizens. The testimony of the six physicians before the Senate and their report "Hungry Children," issued by the Southern Regional Council, may have brought national attention to conditions in Mississippi and may even have moved the state's senators, but from the very beginning those doctors had been warned of the congressional facts of life. After their survey was finished they left Mississippi for Washington, where they were told by a high official of the Agriculture Department that they, and all the hungry children they had examined, and all other hungry Americans, thousands and thousands of them, would have to reckon with Mr. Jamie L. Whitten, as indeed must the Secretary of Agriculture—whose funds come to him through the kindness of that same Mr. Whitten.

Since then Jamie L. Whitten has given some ground, but not all that much to critics of the government's various efforts to get food to extremely poor families. True, the price of food stamps went down somewhat, and the government pressured reluctant counties in various states to accept the food stamp program, all of which came about because of the Senate's hearings in 1967 and 1968, strongly pushed by Sens. Clark and Robert Kennedy, and because of the forceful comprehensive and unnerving publication put out by the Citizen's Board of Inquiry into Hunger and Malnutrition in America—the board's members were drawn from business, labor, the churches and the various professions—and finally because of the CBS commentary, "Hunger in America," which for an hour without letup presented an almost unbearable spectacle of extreme want and distress among many different people (of all races and creeds) in many regions of the nation.

We recently visited Mr. Whitten's district. We had no interest in once again taking note of the state's difficulties, so often in the past used by self-righteous critics to divert themselves from some of their own problems, far nearer at hand than the Delta's. But Jamie Whitten and his good friend Congressman Tom Abernathy—their districts adjoin one another—have repeatedly demonstrated that they have every intention of ignoring needs and demands of thousands of people who live far away from Mississippi. Hungry men, women and children in Appalachia or in Texas or on Indian reservations in Arizona or in the poor sections of our large Northern cities are denied food they need because a congressman like Jamie L. Whitten can frighten federal officials and prevent the Congress from acting quickly in the face of a medical emergency, a social disaster, and not the least in this powerful and wealthy nation, a moral outrage.

Mr. Whitten's district is made up of several tiers of Mississippi's northern counties. The district's western section contains some foothills of the Appalachians, including Woodall Mountain, at 806 feet altitude, the highest point in the state. Nearby is the fine, relatively progressive city of Tupelo and, about 40 miles eastward, Oxford with Faulkner's lovely home and the University of Mississippi. Further eastward the Delta begins and with it mile after mile of farmland and, of late, pasture land.

Day after day we went through that territory, accompanied by white and black people who were born and have lived all their lives in Mr. Whitten's 2nd Congressional District. We went to Savage, Miss. We went all through Tunica County and Tallahatchie County, where Mr. Whitten was born (in the little town of Cascilla), and where he still lives (in the county seat of Charleston). We talked with children and parents in Panola County and Yalobusha County where school districts under orders to desegregate or lose federal support have earned a possible reprieve from the Nixon Administration. Later we left Mr. Whitten's district for Mr. Abernathy's.

Just outside of Savage, Miss., and just inside Tunica County we spent an afternoon with a family who see, maybe, three or four hundred dollars in the course of an entire year. They live off the road in a broken down shack of wood on the sides with a slanted, rusty tin roof on top. They have a coal stove for heat and cooking. They have no electricity, which means no refrigerator as well as no lights. They lack running water. They use a shallow, contaminated well, which is "just a mile or two off." They lack even an outhouse. Several relatives have gone North, but the word has come back that it's much better there in some ways, but no great paradise in others.

What is life like for them in Tunica County? What do they eat? How is their health? "Oh, we're getting along," we are told for a start by a tall, large-boned mother of five who speaks much too softly at first, but several hours later almost like an old fashioned orator, at last with an audience of countrymen to address. Then came the qualifications about "getting along," and an afternoon of them could have been a week of them, a year of them:

"Every morning the first thing I think about is what I can do to feed the kids. I don't have no money coming in. My husband, he works for him, and you know the bossmen around here, they'll give you some things and they won't give you others. We can use this house, it's his. He told us last year that as long as we didn't get any smart-alecky ideas in our heads, we'd be alright here; but if we did, we could go on up to Chicago where the niggers belong, and the mayor up there, he'd be taking care of us just like they do down here in Mississippi. The bossman don't give us much money, but there'll be ten dollars one week, and maybe five the next, and he gave us 20 for Christmas, I'll say that for him. He don't want us trying to vote and like that—and first I'd like to feed my kids, before I go trying to vote. . . .

"But it's no good. The kids aren't eating enough, and you'd have to be wrong in the head, pure crazy, to say they are. Sometimes we talk of leaving; but you know it's just no good up there either, we hear. They eat better, but they have had things up there

'First, I'd Like To Feed My Kids . . .'

I hear, rats as big as raccoons I hear, and they bit my sister's kid real bad. It's no kind of country to be proud of, with all this going on—the colored people still having it so bad, and the kids being sick and there's nothing you can do about it and like that. No sir, there's no doctor hereabouts for them or me or anyone like us. . . ."

"You people talk about the vote. To me what counts is if I could be able to feed us better and we'd see a little money each Saturday or even the beginning of each month, or so. My girl come home and told me we haven't been slaves since way back, according to her teacher. And I said, yes, that sounds real good. But when it gets cold, she can't go to school, because there's no shoes for her and we have to stay close to the stove. . . ."

It is possible to find out who has everything and who has nothing in Tunica County where that woman lives and which Mr. Whitten represents. Out of a population of 16,826, 79.1 per cent of it black, no less than 13,500 make less than $3,000, and 11,370 see less than $2,000 a year. Only 1,506 people receive public assistance, though—and only 6,307 have been allowed to participate in the food stamp program. The median income in the county is $1,260 per year and the infant mortality rate per 1,000 live births is 64.5, some three times the national average and utterly in keeping with figures that come out of the world's poorest, most "underdeveloped" nations. In Mr. Whitten's home county, Tallahatchie, the figures are similar: out of 24,081 residents 18,800 make less than $3,000 a year, 15,197 makes less than $2,000 a year, but only 6,710 get food stamps. Blacks make up 64 per cent of the population and 74.4

To Page 6

In Alabama, Hard Work Makes a Co-op Succeed

by CAROLYNNE SCOTT
The Birmingham News

With a fair sampling of fabric swatches from sewing baskets across the state, a number of old-timey patterns like Eight Point Star and Robbing Peter To Pay Paul, and a large measure of determination, the Freedom Quilting Bee of Alberta, Ala., began in the spring of 1966 to piece together a a reputation for itself and a living for its members.

Now celebrating its third birthday, the Bee has brought national fame to Southwest Alabama as a center of folk art, established a profitable contract with Bloomingdales of New York City, exhibited its work at the Smithsonian Institution's Folklife Festival twice, and become the subject of a doctoral dissertation. But more importantly, the quilting co-op has raised the earning power of its members from 25 cents an hour to over $1.00 per hour. It has given whole families, subsisting in the Black Belt on less than $800 annually, economic relief and hope for the future. And in the process, it has graduated to Super-Dazzle broadcloth and electric sewing machines for the piecework.

The story of the co-op goes back to one quilt flapping on a clothesline in the Black Belt. Mrs. Eugene Witherspoon, manager of the co-op, tells it this way:

Father Francis X. Walter, an Episcopal priest who directs the Selma Interreligious Project, saw the quilt and tried to talk to its maker. The old woman ran away, thinking he meant trouble. Nevertheless, Father Walter persisted in trying to interest women of the area in banding together to make some quilts, as a means of economic advancement for their families. Quilting in the Black Belt was a common practice, stretching back 140 years and usually involving family groups of four.

Mrs. Witherspoon heard of his going around and wrote him a letter indicating her interest in such a venture. He contacted her, saying it "sounded like she meant business."

In March, 1966, the first group of over 150 quilters met in the Antioch Baptist Church in Camden and got organized. Before a year was up, the Bee had made $6,000. After expenses of material, thread, supplies, etc., are put back into the co-op's till, the women get the balance. Since its founding, the Bee has increased family income for many of its members by over 50 per cent while providing a cottage industry, a job to be done at home. Others come in to work at the quilting bee office, an 80-year-old two-room-plus-dogtrot tenant house in Alberta.

Except during harvest season when some must "go to the field," there are usually eight women quilting at the Alberta office, 16 at Gee's Bend, eight at Gastonburg, and eight in Beatrice. In addition to old favorite patterns, the women sew a special line of made-to-order beauties designed by a New York artist and toy designer, Mrs. Sara Stine. These quilts, as do all the co-op's, come in baby, single, double and king sizes and, additionally, are made of Liberty of London Egyptian cotton and rich shades of velveteen.

While the co-op's early efforts went for $10 per quilt (and many lesser items like dashiki shirts, mini-dresses, sunbonnets, pot holders, aprons, still go for considerably less), the handsome special line quilts bring anywhere from $50 to $75 each. In the old favorite quilts, which range in price from $37.50 to $45, the following American quilt patterns are available: Monkey Wrench, Brick Layer, Robbing Peter to Pay Paul, Cup and Saucer, Dove in the Window, Dutchman's Puzzle, Crow Foot and Rocky Road to California.

"Quite a few like the old original patterns better," says Mrs. Witherspoon, who is always happy to show quilts already made up or to take orders for others more in keeping with the buyer's particular decor. A thriving mail-order business (Route 1, Box 72, Alberta) has evolved from the word of mouth advertising of satisfied customers, and this also keeps the co-op manager busy.

Now it looks like a new center for the co-op is just around the corner. Mrs. Witherspoon and the co-op president, Mrs. Callie Young, are looking forward to the day when the whole operation can be moved into a new $20,000 concrete block structure. This dream was brought a little closer to reality recently when the co-op members spent two frantic days preparing sample articles requested by Bloomingdales of New York City. Stanley Selengut, who has provided marketing skills and represented the co-op in the East, flew down with patterns for sample pillow shams, dust ruffles, cafe curtains and quilts. This was the culmination of his long-time work at interesting a very large store in the co-op.

If Bloomingdales is pleased with the co-op's efforts, orders will follow and another "long-haul, small hope project," as Father Walter calls it, will have paid off. The very fact of having Selengut associated with the co-op was a small hope project at first. A promoter and broker of crafts worldwide, Selengut, who has served such diverse groups as the State Department, Zuni Indians, OEO, Poor People's Corporation of Mississippi, General Learning Corporation and Holiday Magazine, offered to fly down at his own expense and see the co-op's work more than two years ago. At that time, the co-op was financially unable to take his advice, which undoubtedly would have been to recommend expansion and new products.

Much later that year (1967), it was learned that a successful cooperative enterprise, the Southern Consumers of Lafayette, La., had received a Ford Foundation grant to assist poor people's cooperatives. Contact was made with the director of that organization, Father A. J. McKnight, who looked over the Bee's operation, heard the plans of Selengut and Mrs. Stine, and gave the co-op a grant of $2,000 for management subsidy and a loan of $5,000 which could be repaid at 3 per cent interest at the rate of 10 per cent of annual profits.

The special line quilters were organized, receiving training from Mrs. Stine; and Selengut Associates began to buy fabric for the group in the New York market, in addition to representing it before prospective buyers, such as Bloomingdales.

Shortly after affiliating with Selengut, the co-op learned that Miss Jeri Richardson, a native of Mississippi and graduate of the University of Alabama now studying at Indiana University, had chosen the co-op as her topic for a doctoral dissertation in art education. Now, Father Walter and the Freedom Quilting Bee look forward to using her efforts when seeking future foundation grants.

There are still certain hurdles to overcome, such as lack of telephone service in the "rurals," inadequate storage facilities of the present location, the unending need for scraps of material, the ingrained suspicion of politicians that such co-ops are somehow subversive, and the difficulty of teaching new skills to old fingers, but chances are that the third birthday of the Bee will be anything but a sad occasion. ST per cent of the population is poor. Median income for the county is $1,588. Yet only 2,367 people are on public assistance.

A Cry From the Delta. . .

From page 5

Counties such as those Jamie Whitten represents have sent thousands of hurt, sad, bewildered, hungry and frightened people North and West; but those counties also continue to present us with a surprisingly large number of our poor people. By and large we tend to equate "poverty" with our urban ghettos, but one government estimate has our urban poor (some 18 million) making up 55 per cent of all the nation's poor with the rural poor (over 15 million) about 45 per cent of the total. It is one thing to be poor in a big city, and another thing to be poor in, say, Mr. Whitten's congressional district.

We asked a friendly professor at the University of Mississippi whether we had any right to come in as outsiders, do our work —one of us lived in the state two years doing that work—then leave and have our say. A reply was instantly forthcoming:

"These people, the people you've seen these past days, desperately need people to speak for them. Their congressmen don't; in fact, their congressmen have worked day and night to kill dozens of programs that are aimed at the poor. Anyone with half a brain in his head knows that the only way we've come as far as we have in this state is because all those 'outside agitators' have bothered us and bothered us and bothered us, at least they did for a while.

"To be honest, I'm worried that they've forgotten us of late; and they've forgotten what a man like Whitten does, not only to keep our people 'in their place' but other people all over. Isn't he an outside agitator? Isn't he interfering in the lives of others, in their struggle for a decent life? But we don't hear it put that way, I'm sorry to say. . . ."

Yes, as we drove through Mr. Whitten's district we once again saw what the professor loves: the rich, alluvial earth; the quiet of a rural state; the flaming sunsets and the full moons that are a rich orange-red rather than a pale yellow, and that hang unnervingly low enough for a sharecropper to have asked us, "Why do they say it's so far to get to the moon, when it seems as though you could touch it if you went and climbed up that tree over there?" We had to leave the road to find that sharecropper, drive along those unpaved, dusty pathways that bring the visitor out of one world and into another.

The grazing cattle, the silos, the fine ranch houses, the quaint and nicely kept-up churches, the endless stretches of open land, the cotton gins and cotton wagons, the colorfully decorated grain elevators and tractor companies give way to—well, all that the statistics we have mentioned imply. It is awful, and for all the efforts of our writers, for all the studies and reportage and photographs and documentaries, there is something indescribable about the sadness and pain and stubborn willfulness and slyness and cynicism and resignation and resourcefulness and hope and bitterness that exist side-by-side in such people whose ambiguities and inconsistencies are more than matched by those to be found in America.

(Reprinted by permission of The New Republic, c. 1969, Harrison-Blaine of New Jersey, Inc.) ST

Washington . . . From page 1

during her integration experience, now a college student.

The bus, hired by the Friends Service Committee, left Jackson, Miss., early in the morning on Sunday, June 29, and, picking up Mississippians and Alabamians along the way, arrived in Atlanta Sunday night. There, Georgians joined the group and they continued on the next day, picking up South Carolinians as they went, and arrived in Washington in the early hours of Tuesday morning. The bus had air-conditioning difficulties in the 90-plus heat. But after scant sleep, they were gathered at 9:30 that Tuesday morning around a table in the William Penn House, vigorous and enthusiastic, ending their strategy and devotional session with a stirring rendition of "Leaning On the Everlasting Arms." They were all pledged to non-violence and committed to going to jail if necessary.

THEY got back on their bus and drove through the rush-hour Washington traffic, passing brick tenements and flag-flying government buildings, looking out on traffic jams and sidewalks full of people, the balding young men in their dark summer suits carrying their briefcases, seeing the capitol dome up ahead. They sang a little: "Riding along/With my mind/Set on freedom/Halleluuu— Halleluuu— Hallelujah."

They unloaded in front of the big Justice Department building and behind Mrs. Sallie Hadnott of Prattville, Ala., elected on the bus ride as their spokesman, walked unnoted among government workers and tourists into the building and went up to the fifth floor ("Don't block the hall, y'all," one of the women cautioned at the elevator) and quickly, quietly, suddenly filled the outer office of Atty. Gen. Mitchell. A long-faced, lugubrious aide greeted them. They wanted to see Mr. Mitchell because of the reported "retreat of this government" on school desegregation. When he urged them to talk with "experts" in the department, they replied they had been talking with such "experts" for five years to no avail. They pulled one chair into the center of the room, placed a manila envelope marked "Attorney General Mitchell" on it, and began execution of their plan to address their grievances to the attorney general in absentia.

First, Mrs. Hadnott read their prepared statement, an eloquent two pages which included these words: "We have done what we were told to do by the agencies of government charged with enforcing the law: we have waited, we have endured, we have answered violence with non-violence, we have sent young children through lines of hostile, hating adults. We have done all this because we believe in the law, in the education that makes useful citizens.

Mrs. Hadnott

"We are here now because we still believe in these things. But we wonder if our government does any more. . . ."

THEN, one by one they got up and told their stories of having been victimized by the failure of national government to enforce its own laws.

Mrs. Annye Braxton of Demopolis, Ala.: "Our children are sent to school with no protection from the federal government. They are harassed, beaten. We don't have even tokenism in Alabama . . . I appeal to you, Attorney General, to do the right thing. I am afraid of what will happen if you don't."

Mrs. Victoria DeLee of Dorchester, S.C.: "We decided not to go with this any further. My son has been beaten, has come home from school bloodied. You say you've got a law. We tried to enforce it. My house has been shot in time and time again. I have been non-violent. I have tried to be law-abiding."

Willie West of Yazoo City, Miss., a frail man capable of standing up for years to the worst of local intimidation and reprisal, choked up and cried. He said a white school official had told a white student with whom his son had fought: "You should have stomped hell out of that nigger." The other people murmured in sympathy, encouraged him to go on. He told of losing his job after he protested about the incident, of being unable to find another job or get welfare or other assistance, of his children sick and no way to get medical treatment, of his children having to stay home from school for lack of clothes to wear. "I had a job, was doing fine until the children went into the white school . . ."

By now, extra guards and what appeared to be plainclothesmen were in the halls outside the office. Numbers of newsmen had been attracted, and television lights were playing on the speakers.

Upon the scene, visibly upset, came now Jerris Leonard, assistant attorney general for civil rights. He attempted to persuade the group to leave the office and hold a discussion in an assembly room. They refused. The Rev. C. Mifflin Smith of Lancaster, S.C., drew himself up in portly, middle-class, middle-aged dignity and said to Mr. Leonard: "I will not go until I see the attorney general, and I won't be threatened. I'm no hippie."

As soon as they were certain Mr. Leonard brought no word from the attorney general, they continued their recitals to the empty chair and television cameras, ignoring intermittent pleadings that they leave. They apologized to the empty chair for the 15-minute interruption. "But then—we've been waiting 15 years." At one point, Mr. Leonard cried out to them, "This is not fair to people in here trying to work. It's not fair to us." Mrs. DeLee, whose home was burned in reprisal for civil rights activities, shouted back at him: "Mr. Leonard, do you know what fair is?"

'What Do We Tell Our Children Now?'

ON went the stories of the incredible failure of the national government to uphold its own laws. Donald Dickerson, a white teacher in Mobile whose contract was not renewed after he supported black student demonstrators this year, told how he had come to understand what Negroes meant when they spoke of the white power structure. Dorothy Young of Sylvester, Ga., told the shameful story of being given an indeterminate sentence (now under appeal) to a juvenile detention home for allegedly cursing a white boy among her tormenters in a barely desegregated high school.

Over and over, these Southerners referred back to the basics of their belief—the United States Constitution, the Bible. Often, too, they stressed the importance of politeness in this confrontation. When Mr. Leonard interrupted Mrs. Hadnott in one of her recitals to make "one more appeal" that they leave, she gave an impassioned answer that this was not a dictatorship, but a democracy.

Mr. Leonard, angrily trying to interrupt, the television cameras taking it all in, moved forward and put his feet up on the empty chair, apparently without thought. There were mocking cries, "You're stepping on the attorney general." Mrs. Hadnott, in the tone Negro Southerners reserve for unruly children and the feeble-minded, said quietly, "Put your foot down, please," and he did.

Finally, there came a firm offer. The attorney general would grant them a 15-minute audience at 4 o'clock in the conference room, Great Hall—if they would leave now (about noon). Otherwise he would not meet with them, and their staying would be a violation of the law. They caucused several times and finally told Mr. Leonard that they would not leave, but would end their speeches and sit silently and without disturbing the secretary in the room (still ignoring them), like any other citizens waiting to see a public servant.

In caucuses and otherwise, they had repeatedly shown the terrible mistrust, suspicion they had come to feel towards agents of their federal government. At one point, too, they spontaneously displayed to soberly listening reporters what the press had come to mean to them. Someone had proposed that only designated spokesmen give information to reporters. But the point was made that much of what they had come for was to tell their individual stories to the nation. "We know what the press has done for years," one man said. "They're not going to tell it like it is."

Finally, an hour before the 4 o'clock appointment, disconcerted Justice Department aides presented the group sitting in the reception room an ultimatum: Get out or be arrested. They held a caucus and agreed that each person should act according to his practical interests. About half remained in the room, ready for jail. Then, as they related it later, laughing, there ensued an incredible scene with Jerris Leonard telling them they were to be removed from the building, and Lee Pellerzi, assistant attorney general in charge of administration, countermanding him, telling them that it was time for the appointment and they could go on to Great Hall. There they joined the others, seated and listening solemnly to Atty. Gen. Mitchell saying, "I want to welcome y'all to the Justice Department. I understand you have a few things you want to say to me. Within the time limits we have set, I want to hear them. . . ."

He sat informally on the edge of the platform before them and listened as they began their presentation. Mr. Jacobs read the prepared statement, his voice heavy with feeling at the end where it denounced the rumored retreat and said: "What do we tell our children now? How can these superintendents and school boards who have tried, some of them under threat of loss of prestige and even, in some cases, their jobs, face now those who have been hostile to school integration and tell them that doing the right thing is no longer supported in Washington?"

Then Mrs. DeLee got up, tall, regally proud, and spoke many of the same words she had spoken to the empty chair, declaring at one point: "We don't want this burning, this killing and what not. Our Negroes are being killed. We're tired of it. We're sick of it. I've got a boy in Vietnam . . ." And Mr. West, still full of emotion but not telling this time of what the white man said to his son, spoke in a voice full of a profound respect for the occasion, the high office of the man he addressed: "You can't help what has already happened. But you can change things so it won't happen any more . . . . " He concluded: "I hope you will enforce the laws. If you don't make them, they will never move down there. I thank you for this opportunity."

Atty. Gen. Mitchell, first seated, then standing with his elbow on a lectern, had seemed to listen intently and gravely to all their earnest words. He stared into those shrewd, stubborn Southern faces speaking truth to him. A lot of Southern naivete, hope, continuing faith waited his response.

He spoke. He said he appreciated hearing the statements. He never addressed himself to their crucial request about guidelines and deadlines. He made the remarkable statement that they "would be better advised to watch what we do rather than listen to what we say" about enforcement.

Back when Mrs. DeLee was speaking, he had stared up sharply as she said: "We are so sorry, so sorry that our appearance here caused so much disturbance—the way we were treated in your office . . . threatened with arrest," and then asked the children who had suffered from real lawlessness to stand up so he could see them. Now, when he spoke almost the first thing he mentioned was the "disruption" of his office. "I suggest," he said with the tone of an aggrieved man, "the next time you want to see the attorney general, you let us know about it in advance."

John Mitchell

All the day's events had been attended by an unusually large number of reporters—from the wire services, networks, news magazines, local papers and television and radio, Southern capitol correspondents, the New York Times. But in a time when rioting and revolutionary rhetoric are the commonplace of protest and pressure on governments, the peaceful and orderly demonstration of these responsible Negro Southerners (which may really have seemed intimidating to the attorney general of the United States) was not top news. They got bare mention on the networks. Mr. Mitchell's attempt to persuade Congress that day (the reason he was so long out of his office) to weaken another bastion of Southern civil rights, the Voting Rights Act, was given more prominent attention. The demonstration made page 8 of the Star, page 4 of the Washington Post. It merited a photograph but no story on page 24 of the New York Times. The stories in both the Atlanta Journal and Atlanta Constitution came much closer than these bigger-city papers to telling what really happened. Perhaps if there had been arrests or some unruliness or even violence from the demonstrators, they would have received more serious press attention. But as so often in the sad past, if that had happened, the real meaning of their appearance in Washington would have been even further lost. The stories of people who had suffered for a nation's irresponsible administration of law, the faith of a people yet in law, in government, in orderly process—these were the important things.

One wire service reporter was convinced that the demonstrations had postponed an announcement about the guidelines and deadline planned for that very afternoon. It came two days later. The administration would allow more excuses for failing to meet the September, 1969, integration deadline. It would rely far more on court orders (always time-consuming) than fund cutoffs for further desegregation. Most observers considered this the retreat and sellout that had been rumored, a new betrayal of all that the group of responsible Southerners had spoken out for. Administration spokesmen insisted it was not. Time would tell whether the voice of responsibility has any more relevancy at all in the land.

Orangeburg

A Tragedy of Police Panic And Official Defensiveness

By Jack Nelson In The Los Angeles Times

A defense attorney told the jury, "No matter how you view it, it was a tragedy."

And no matter how you view it, it was slaughter—so well documented by undisputed evidence that every juror had to be aware of it.

The jury in federal court (in Florence, S.C.) has acquitted nine state patrolmen who claimed self-defense in the Feb. 8, 1968, killing and wounding of Negro college students at Orangeburg, S. C. But despite the verdict, the state of South Carolina stands convicted of horrendous mistakes in dealing with unruly demonstrations. Also, the seven-day trial raised grave questions about police crowd-control methods.

The indiscriminate shooting, the use of a deadly type ammunition, the failure to fire warning shots or to use alternative methods of crowd control, and the lack of discipline in a difficult and potentially dangerous situation—all of these are critical points raised by the Orangeburg case.

It was the nation's first trial involving charges of excessive use of police power in controlling unruly campus demonstrations. The evidence it developed could well be used in a law enforcement manual as describing a bad example of crowd control.

The jury (10 whites, two blacks) was a serious-looking group that listened intently to the evidence in what obviously was a difficult case for the government to prosecute. The state had already done all it could to cover up its tragic mistakes. No inquest or grand jury investigations were held and the only arrest was that of a Negro militant who earlier had told newsmen he would be the scapegoat if trouble developed.

Moreover, the jury was well aware that Gov. Robert E. McNair had repeatedly defended every aspect of the police action as necessary to protect life and property and that a federal grand jury had refused to indict the patrolmen. The trial was held after criminal informations (warrants) were filed by the Justice Department charging that the patrolmen violated an old civil rights statute prohibiting lawmen from trying to impose summary punishment in the line of duty with the intent to deprive a victim of life or liberty without due process of law.

Former U. S. Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark, who ordered the filing of the informations last December, was aware it would be extremely difficult to obtain a conviction. He knew the patrolmen had every right to be where they were and to try to restrain the students from leaving the campus en masse and entering a town plagued earlier by student violence.

He felt deeply about the questions the case raised concerning the legal limits of police power, however, and he thought they deserved an airing in court.

In addition to publicly exonerating the patrolmen, the trial served up a scapegoat to salve the public conscience. The patrolmen had reacted to mankind's oldest instinct—self-preservation—after students whipped into a "frenzy" by Cleveland Sellers of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee had charged at them hurling epithets and missiles, their attorneys claimed.

Although there was no evidence showing Sellers was leading the students when three were killed and 27 wounded by a sustained volley of gunfire, everyone familiar with the state's official version of the case anticipated he would be blamed. Had not McNair's personal representative on the Orangeburg situation (attorney Henry Lake) publicly blamed it on Sellers?

Sellers was arrested and charged with inciting to riot and with assault with intent to murder a patrolman who was struck by a missile several minutes before the patrol opened fire. But he has not been brought to trial and the defense did not provide any evidence at the trial here linking Sellers to the attack on the patrolman, who was the only officer injured.

A defense attorney told the jury that the trial was perhaps a good thing for the patrolmen so that their names could be cleared.

In some respects each of them unquestionably was as big a scapegoat as Sellers for they were not responsible for loading their shotguns with deadly double-aught buckshot, nor were they primarily responsible for some of the other mistakes, such as inadequate training (the patrol commander testified that in riot training there had been no emphasis on indiscriminate firing into a crowd), poor discipline generally, and the failure of any patrol official to have command of the situation.

The state government exerted itself in trying to cover up its tragic blunders, and it also went all out in trying to clear the patrolmen. The top officials of the patrol and the state law enforcement division sat near the defense table while two young Justice Department attorneys from Washington, D.C., sat at the prosecution table.

Five of the patrolmen, including two lieutenants and a captain, were promoted after the shootings and the defense attorney called the jury's attention to the promotions. The state's only two Negro patrolmen—both hired since the tragedy—showed up in uniform for the last few days of the trial They fraternized with the patrolmen on trial and sat where they could be seen by the jury. One of the Negroes, who is stationed 140 miles away, stayed at the same motel as the defendants.

Here is some of the undisputed evidence the trial developed:

—In the city of Orangeburg (pop. 13,000) the night of the shootings, 450 national guardsmen and 127 state patrolmen, augmented by scores of local police and sheriff's deputies, were on duty. At the South Carolina State College campus where the shootings occurred there were 66 patrolmen, all ostensibly trained in riot control, and 45 national guardsmen, as well as a number of other officers, state and local.

—The number of students involved in the confrontation ranged from 100 to 200. Testimony by most witnesses corroborated the government's contention that there were about as many officers as students.

—The students were moving toward a line of patrolmen on an embankment at the edge of the campus and the nearest ones were still at least 75 feet away when the group was caught in a crossfire of shotguns and pistols. Some witnesses said the students had been "walking," others said, "going at a fast walk," and some used the word "charging."

—All nine defendants fired at the students, some on orders and some after hearing other patrolmen fire, according to their own statements to the FBI. One of them fired a .38 revolver six times and the others fired shotguns. Five discharged their shotguns at least twice. They fired at no particular target—just into the crowd.

—Of the three students killed and 27 injured, all but one and possibly two others were shot from the rear or side. Some were shot while lying on the ground, others while running or crawling away. Some were almost 100 yards away when hit.

—No warning shots were fired, although evidence showed that two nights earlier a crowd of students throwing rocks at passing cars fled when a single patrolman stepped from a car and fired a warning shot into the air. Nor did the patrolmen use tear gas they had on hand or try to warn the students with a loudspeaker which was on the scene.

—The shotguns were loaded with double-aught buckshot—each shot is about the size of a .32 caliber bullet—instead of the lighter and less lethal birdshot normally used in crowd-control situations.

A preponderance of evidence disputed defense contentions that the students fired upon the patrolmen first. Although some witnesses said they heard gunfire or what they thought was gunfire coming from the campus just before the police opened fire, a great majority said they heard none.

No firearms were confiscated from students and no witnesses testified to seeing a student with a weapon. None of the officers, guardsmen, policemen, firemen or newsmen, nor any of their vehicles, were struck by gunfire.

There was evidence that some of the students were hurling missiles at the patrolmen, but the overwhelming evidence was that relatively few missiles were thrown just before the shooting.

The only patrolman injured was felled by a missile—a heavy wooden railing—four to five minutes before his fellow officers, some of whom told the FBI they thought he had been shot, opened fire.

The evidence showed that no students continued to move forward after the first shots were fired, yet the overwhelming evidence was that the patrolmen continued to fire for eight or more seconds. Several witnesses said the firing lasted only a few seconds, but a television cameraman who switched on his camera after the first volley filmed 6¾ seconds of the firing.

Most witnesses said the shooting lasted 10 to 20 seconds and several students who were injured said they were hit, fell to the ground, got up to run and were hit again.

The state forces had every reason to be prepared to cope with student violence that night. They had been in Orangeburg for two days, since shortly after violence occurred outside a segregated bowling alley where students had demonstrated. Patrol and local officials, testifying to the tenseness of the situation, said some storekeepers, who feared students would carry out threats to "burn down the town," had armed themselves and were guarding their stores.

The trial showed that the patrol was ill-prepared and that it panicked. If this fact and other points raised by the Orangeburg tragedy are pondered by law-enforcement officers everywhere, the trial of the Orangeburg case could serve a broader and more important purpose than the clearing of the patrolmen.

For as Justice Atty. Charles Quaintance told the jury, "Policemen have a difficult job and they need more support, but not support to write a blank check under difficult circumstances."

(Copyright, 1969, by the Los Angeles Times. Reprinted by permission.) (ST)

Your Opinion, Please

We would like to know your reactions to SOUTH TODAY. We also would like to have your suggestions, and names of others to whom you think this publication should be sent. Would you complete this form, put it in an envelope, and mail it to us, along with your name and address as stamped alongside this coupon?

I think SOUTH TODAY ☐ will be useful to me. ☐ serves no purpose.

My opinion of the first issue is that it ☐ presents information that should be presented. ☐ tells me little I did not know. ☐ is hogwash.

Some subjects I would like to see covered: . . . . . .

. . . . . .

Other remarks: . . . . . .

. . . . . .

If you want to suggest the names of others to whom SOUTH TODAY might be sent, please list them on an attached sheet.

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Address Correction Requested)

ATLANTA GA.

Bulk Rate
U. S. Postage
PAID
Permit No. 1085

SOUTH

ATLANTA, GA. VOL. I, NO. 2 AUGUST, 1969

20¢

Black Votes

Gains Are Being Won, But Law Is Expiring

Sheriff Amerson

Mayor Lee

Mayor Evers

THE VOTING Rights Act of 1965, due to expire next year, has produced major change in the South. But there is uncertainty about the future of the act and of black voter registration. A Special Report for SOUTH TODAY by Marvin Wall. Page 6.

MAP SHOWS white and black registration in Southern states. Tables indicate the changes since 1960. Page 6.

CURRENT attention to the voting act recalls the bloodshed and struggle required earlier this decade to establish the right to vote in much of the South. Page 7.

Memphis

Tie Your Growth To Racial Progress, Consultants Say

MEMPHIS, still bearing the scar of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination, has been told by a firm of consultants that its future can be bright. Highest on the priority list in the firm's recommendations: Bring about genuine improvement in racial relations, and look to full development of the city's black labor force. By James Chisum. Page 8.

THE COMMERCIAL APPEAL

A Banker And the Slums

Lane

FLAMBOYANT Atlanta banker Mills B. Lane has launched his own black capitalism program, with low-interest loans (and community cleanups). Page 5

Business Week

'Southern Consciousness'

"SOUTHERN consciousness" seems to be growing. I notice that now it is even being articulated by the white student radicals who make up the Southern Student Organizing Committee. They are accusing some of their cohorts in student radicalism of being "Yankees" and "scalawags;" yes, and even lamenting the burning of a Confederate flag in South Carolina. What have we here?

SSOC, or "Sock," as this earnest group is called, is a peculiarly Southern branch of the New Left. Its members see the corruption in our Way of Life, and unlike others who choose to defend it and still others who choose to "drop out," they try to do something about it. But they, like their black friends in various struggles, have the trouble Ralph Ellison wrote about in his novel Invisible Man: "Negro Americans are in a desperate search for identity. . . . Their whole lives have become a search for answers to the questions: Who am I? What am I? Why am I? And Where?"

So now SSOC has come to its own doctrine, a correlate of "black consciousness." It is "Southern consciousness," which presumably is both black and white. "We affirm our identity as a people who have a heritage of struggle against the powerful and unresponsive forces which have controlled our region. . . . We are proud of ourselves, our land, and our history. We are going to take it back. Liberate the South!" A declaration by the Ku Klux Klan or the Citizens Councils? No, words from a SSOC statement earlier this year.

(Since this article first appeared, SSOC has been dissolved. Its espousal of "Southern consciousness" apparently was one factor producing internal

To page 7

Business: Finding the Ghetto?

AMERICAN business is becoming much more involved in social problems, and the Nixon administration hopes for more. By Alan Otten. Page 4.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

MARSHALL Bass, a Negro colonel, quit the Army to oversee promotions and training for R. J. Reynolds' 12,000 employes. He is no "house nigger." By Jack Nelson. Page 4.

Los Angeles Times

ROGER Lewis, president of General Dynamics, states the case for business involvement. Page 5.

The Lyceum at Ole Miss

OLE MISS AGAIN

DEAN JOSHUA M. Morse had brought new distinction to the University of Mississippi School of Law. It was educating more black students, and some of its professors were helping bring legal services to the poor. Political pressures mounted. Now the dean is out, and the law school again faces academic investigation. By Ken Vinson. Page 3.

MISSISSIPPI FREELANCE

Also Inside:

THE SOUTH has made less effort than any other region to support its public schools. Page 2.

URBAN housing needs are being emphasized. But the nation's worst housing conditions are still in the rural South. Page 2.

A LIST of recent articles about Southern, racial and poverty problems. Page 2.

REPORT on reports

Rural Housing

The most prevalent bad housing conditions in the nation continue to be in the rural South, a report by the U.S. Department of Agriculture indicates.

A 10-county area studied in South Carolina has shown meager improvements since the 1960 census, despite various housing programs enacted by Congress to improve the quality of housing. Some 50 per cent of the rural homes in the study area were substandard in 1966, compared to 57 per cent in 1960 and 60 per cent in 1950.

The report indicated that the least improvement in housing conditions occurred among Negroes, who occupy most of the substandard housing in the survey area.

"Although nonwhite families represented 45 per cent of the 1966 populations, they occupied 78 per cent of the substandard dwellings," the report said. "Ninety-four per cent of the homes tenanted by nonwhites and 70 per cent of the homes owned by them were substandard."

"In contrast 48 per cent of the homes rented by white families were substandard," the report said. "But only eight per cent of those occupied by owners (white) were in this condition."

Nationwide, housing conditions in rural areas are worse than housing conditions in urban areas.

"In 1960," the report said, "about half of the substandard housing units in the United States were in rural areas even though less than 28 per cent of the occupied housing was rurally located."

Substandard homes in rural areas typically lack adequate plumbing, according to this report. "This deficiency implies a chronic threat to community to health."

"It would take about $78 million (based on 1966 costs) to correct the housing conditions in the 10-county study area alone," the report concluded. This would provide satisfactory homes for about 30,000 low-income families.

Research on the area in South Carolina, which turned up many conditions typical of rural housing nationwide, was a joint effort by Clemson University, Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State University, and the USDA's Economic Research Service.

School Support

The South made the least effort of any region to support public schools during 1967-68, reports the National Committee for Support of the Public Schools.

The NCSPS Fact Sheet also shows that the South is making less of an effort to support public education now than it did 10 years ago. Among the 11 Southern states, only Virginia has improved its national ranking. It moved from 41st in 1957-58 to 30th place in 1967-68.

The South continues to be the lowest region in ability to finance public schools. The region's average estimated current expenditure per pupil, $477, is far below the national average of $634.

"The willingness of a state to provide educational services can be measured by the amount of local and state revenues for public schools as a percentage of total personal income," the national committee suggests. Using this measure, it ranks states according to effort for education.

Except for Louisiana, all Southern states fall below the national average in effort. Nationally, state and local spending for public schools is 4.6 per cent of per-capita personal income. Georgia, North Carolina and Mississippi tied for 38th place in effort. They allocate the equivalent of 4.2 per cent of their personal income for public education.

Alabama is one of the eight states in the nation allocating less than 4 per cent. It is 48th in its ability to finance schooling and 43rd in effort. Per-pupil expenditure is $376.

Ranked seventh in effort, Louisiana leads the South by allocating 5.5 per cent of its personal income for education. South Carolina is ranked 19th in effort, Florida 30th, Arkansas and Texas 34th, and Tennessee 42nd.

The National Committee for Support of the Public Schools, in its seventh year, has 1,600 citizen leaders in education in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. Its main concern is adequate financial support for a quality education. The NCSPS office is Suite 102, 1424 16th St., N.W., Washington, D.C.

NEW SOUTH, a quarterly review of Southern affairs, is published by the Southern Regional Council in February, May, August and November. Subscription: $3.00 per year. Single copies: $1.00, less in quantity or for reprints of articles.

Some Articles

A sampling of recent magazine articles relevant to the South and its problems:

CITIES

"The Role of the Business Economist in Urban Problem Solving," by Walter A. Coupre in Business Economics, May 1969, pp. 21-3.

"Tax Exempt Property: Another Crushing Burden for the Cities" by Harold B. Myers in Fortune May 1, 1969, pp. 76-9.

"The Urban Coalition, a Progress Report," by T. Keith Glennan in The Conference Board Record, May 1969, pp. 37-40.

EDUCATION

"Irony in the South: Black Schools Suffer More than White Ones in Federal Fund Cutoff," by Neil Maxwell in The Wall Street Journal, April 25, 1969, p. 1.

EMPLOYMENT

"Mr. Charlie's Town: Powerful C. A. Cannon Rules Kannapolis, N.C., But He Faces Challenge," by Neil Maxwell in The Wall Street Journal, April 29, 1969, p. 1.

"Outreach: Skills for Minority Youths," by Robert M. McGlotten and Doris Gibson Hardesty in the American Federationist, April 1969, pp. 13-18.

HOUSING

"An Assembly-line Answer to the Housing Crisis," by Walter McQuade in Fortune, May 1, 1969, pp. 99-103.

INCOME—GUARANTEED

"Guaranteed Annual Income. A Placebo or a Cure?" by Ben W. Heineman in The Conference Board Record, May 1969, pp. 26-36.

"The Economic Impact of Income Maintenance," by Gilbert W. Fitzhugh in The Conference Board Record, May 1969, pp. 26-36.

"Guaranteed Income Instead of Creaking Welfare System," by L. P. Hardwick in Finance, May 1969, pp. 42-4.

INCOME TAX

"Lightening the Tax on Low Incomes: Administration's Proposed Allowance for the Poor," in Business Week, May 17, 1969, pp. 156.

NEGROES

"He Makes the Ghetto Make Money: Black Entrepreneur James Hurt is the Driving Force Behind New Negro Owned Business in St. Louis," in Business Week, May 10, 1969, pp. 154-5.

POVERTY

"Accessories after Facts: the Poor People's Campaign Did Accomplish Something Significant," by Eric Blanchard in Christianity & Crisis, Jan. 6, 1969, pp. 332-5.

"Ethnic Power: Nationality Groups Aim to Vie With Negroes for Government Aid; They Say Display of Concern for Poor Whites Would Lessen Racial Antagonism," by Monroe W. Karmen in the Wall Street Journal, April 24, 1969, p. 1.

"Maximum Feasible Moynihan." Economist, Feb. 1, 1969, pp. 33-4.

WELFARE

"The Revolt of the Welfare Poor: Will the Result be Increased Oppression or Meaningful Change?" by Paul Younger in Christianity & Crisis, Jan. 6, 1969, pp. 329-32.

SOUTH

A Digest of Southern Affairs

SOUTH TODAY is published by the Leadership Project of the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta Ga., 30303. The Southern Regional Council, founded in 1944, is a research and information agency devoted to the attainment of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South. President: John H. Wheeler, Durham, N.C. Chairman, Executive Committee: Raymond M. Wheeler, Charlotte, N.C. Vice Presidents: Josephine Wilkins, Athens, Ga.; Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn.; Charles G. Gomillion, Tuskegee, Ala.; Lucius H. Pitts, Birmingham, Ala. Executive Director: Paul Anthony.

Reese Cleghorn, Editor Katherine S. Griffith, Assistant Editor

Some of the articles used in SOUTH TODAY have been edited for length. We welcome clippings which may be of use. They should indicate the date and the publication from which they came.

About South Today

"Congratulations," wrote a Tifton, Ga., lawyer after he received the first issue of SOUTH TODAY. Then, referring to segregationist Roy Harris' weekly newspaper, he added: "You've got a fine Augusta Courier in reverse!"

"The paper is full of lies and propaganda," wrote somebody in Spartanburg, S. C., who didn't give his name.

A Charleston lawyer found our coupon's "is hogwash" too mild a comment to check and inked in: "Stinks."

Favorable opinions of SOUTH TODAY were not so colorful or entertaining. But we received more good replies than bad ones. Ten to one.

"God knows we need as much writing and information as we can get of this kind." That was the way many of them went. And: "I find the information very useful in dealing with local problems."

Readers liked the kinds of articles we are reprinting.

Francis Hayes of Hampton, Va., wrote: "My opinion is that this presents most useful information. While much that I know, still it amplifies and gives new insights into situations about which I know very little."

Another Virginian wrote: "Even though I have been aware of most of that presented, the awareness has been pretty superficial and the paper is helpful in clarifying the issues in a concise and apparently responsible way."

A large number of our favorable replies came from clergymen, though we also had good comments from many businessmen, lawyers, newspapermen, and professors.

One Florida clergyman suggested: "A tremendous number of concerned people are now shell-shocked, disillusioned and exhausted, can't think of anything else to do, and what they have done seems to have produced such meager results. That needs to be tackled in print, if at all possible, so people will want to give themselves to try again—and not opt out."

Other subjects for future issues were suggested: the negative income tax, evaluation of urban renewal programs in the South, organizing the poor for collective action, employment practices, legal services for the poor and for agricultural workers, community development corporations, results of leadership training programs, and school desegregations problems.

"You shouldn't lack for subject matter," wrote Burton B. Fagan in Arlington, Va., "Sock it to 'em."

We hope that you will continue to send us your suggestions and comments.

We have a circulation of about 10,000. Approximately half of these names are receiving Southern Regional Council publications for the first time. Your suggestions of additional names for our mailing list will be welcomed. We began with a carefully compiled list of leaders: civic, religious, business, union and professional leaders, black and white, grassroots and middle class. We shall appreciate receiving the names of other people who are in some way leaders in their communities and who would be receptive to information about basic issues and problems facing the South.

On page eight there is a coupon similar to the one in last month's issue. Clip it out, along with your own name and address beside it. If we have not yet had your evaluation, please let us have it. — Kitty Griffith.

The Law School at the University of Mississippi

Ole Miss Law: Another Dean, Another Way

By KEN VINSON
In Mississippi Freelance

SEVEN years ago Dean Bob Farley of the University of Mississippi Law School claimed the law was on James Meredith's side. Gov. Ross Barnett added Farley's name to his black list, and Dean Farley, once president of the Mississippi State Bar, moved on to more compatible Florida.

In July Ole Miss' current law dean, Joshua M. Morse III—the Poplarville lawyer who succeeded Dean Farley and put liberal Yankee Yale graduates on the law faculty, civil rights in the curriculum, black students on Ford Foundation scholarships and bile in the craw of State College Board Tories—became dean at Florida State. Morse will make considerably more money, and will escape the slings and arrows of outraged Mississippi segregationists.

Seventy-year-old M. M. Roberts, successful Hattiesburg lawyer and State College Board president, worked hard to put his young friend Josh Morse at the head of the Ole Miss law school. Trustee Roberts—a Ross Barnett appointee and Ole Miss law school alumnus who thinks much of constitutional law is a pinkish plot—had good cause to think that Mississippian Morse was a safe and sound replacement for the heretic Farley.

Morse's ancestors came to Mississippi early and populated the state with Establishment preachers and lawyers. Dean Morse's father once shared Poplarville law offices with the The Man Bilbo.

Morse himself lawyered for 15 years in South Mississippi courts without exhibiting tendencies subversive to the Mississippi way. He held high office in the state bar. And as a freshman law professor at Ole Miss when Gov. Barnett battled the Kennedys, Morse did not join Dean Farley and other university faculty in public protest.

But as law dean, Morse shook things up. First he strayed North and enrolled in the Yale Law School. He did a year's graduate work in "law, science, and policy," charmed Ivy League Yankees with Southernbred stories and irreverent Old Testament quotes, soaked up Yale's social gospel and picked up five Yalies for the Ole Miss Law faculty.

In 1965 the Ford Foundation pumped half a million dollars into Morse's law school. The dean told Ford: "This law school can be tremendously influential on the political thought and action of the state of Mississippi. . . . Many of the problems which plague the University of Mississippi and our state stem from a provincial outlook. Our students are accustomed to examining every question in light of its impact on Mississippi culture rather than taking a broader view."

With Ford funds Morse hired more Yalie instructors. The Morse mood created a new willingness to listen to outside opinions. Law students and faculty put Bobby Kennedy in the Ole Miss coliseum with 4,500 eager-to-listen students. Aaron Henry, Charles Evers and Fannie Lou Hamer spoke at the law school.

Thirty law professors from Harvard, Yale, Columbia and NYU spent two weeks each summer on the Ole Miss campus lecturing on constitutional law and the like. The students responded; new courses on political and civil rights, legal services for the indigent, student rights, social legislation and international law had plenty of takers.

Yale's Law Dean Louis H. Pollak, one of the visiting faculty members, said that the Ole Miss law school "is at the threshold of becoming a focus for the kind of thinking that can bring Mississippi into the 20th century." Time magazine praised the New South's law school.

Federal and private grants came to the law school to establish public defender and legal-services (Office of Economic Opportunity) programs. And for the past three years proportionately more blacks attended the Ole Miss law school than any non-Negro law school in the U.S.; two black graduates are now running for city offices in Jackson. Ebony featured the law school—with pictures yet—and M. M. Roberts wrote his fellow trustees on the college board, saying "I'm embarrassed by my law school."

Last spring the volcano that had been steaming under Morse's Yale-at-Oxford erupted. The North Mississippi OEO Legal Services Program, funded through and operated by the law school, filed a school desegregation suit in Holly Springs (which the U.S. Fifth Circuit recently decided in favor of the indigent black plaintiffs). The state bar association, the college board, the legislature, shocked at this betrayal from within, turned on the law school.

For some time legislators had been griping about ". . . socialistic, if not Communistic, doctrines at the law school;" they welcomed an excuse for blasting Morsism.

The (college) board was irritated when a law professor represented the American Association of University Professors and got Federal District Judge Claude Clayton to declare unconstitutional a state law demanding that teachers sign organizational membership affidavits. After this the college board, tired of losing in court, told the faculty that hereafter all moonlighting must be okayed by the chancellor in writing.

The state bar, even before last summer, tried to kill the law school's legal-services program. Bar commissioners passed some rules saying in effect that unless OEO legal-service programs are controlled by local lawyers, then lawyers working with legal services may be penalized.

When bar members met last June in Biloxi, they were fighting mad at the law school's legal-services program for filing the school desegregation suit. At the annual Ole Miss alumni luncheon, at which the dean traditionally speaks, Morse was told to keep his mouth closed.

Then came last summer's big crackdown on the law school. The bar and legislature leaned on the college board, which pressured Ole Miss Chancellor Porter Fortune, who in turn forced legal services out of the school. Fortune told law teachers that they would be paid only if they refrained from working in the OEO program.

Law professors Luther McDougal, Mike Trister and George Strickler ignored the chancellor's warning and were taken off the payroll on June 30.

Other dissenting law teachers were denied the general raise given in September to the rest of the University faculty. Out-of-state faculty recruiting has been curtailed; several of the current faculty are leaving. Yalie Trister, who stayed in Oxford to direct the legal-services program after it was refunded through Mary Holmes College, told Time: "The great experiment at the law school is almost dead."

. . . The American Association of Law Schools, together with the AAUP, has begun a formal investigation of complaints by Ole Miss law professors of political interference. If these organizations find violations of academic freedom, censure and loss of accreditation could result.

An important witness for the AALS-AAUP investigating committee will be State Sen. William E. Corr of Sardis. Corr testified in the Jackson Daily News that "the legislature would intervene into the administration of the Ole Miss law school only as a means of last resort." In April of last year Senator Corr presided over a closed hearing of the Senate Universities and Colleges Committee at which Dean Morse was put on the grill.

Corr was concerned about Ole Miss teachers' "informing citizens . . . of their civil rights and their constitutional rights." The transcript of the hearing reveals how much Sen. Corr wanted the law school out of legal services: "If we do (lose accreditation), let's lose it and then get it back as soon as possible." And then: "I hope no press releases are made on this or no statements made to the press."

When Dean Morse warned the Senate committee about the possible effects of

Morse

Fortune

political interference, Corr assured that "if this committee reports anything out, I don't think it will address itself directly to that (legal service) . . . there are many other ways in which we could remove you from that without ever mentioning the legal services organization. One would be to move the law school to Jackson."

Chancellor Fortune promised to help the Senate committee keep its hearing a secret. And a few weeks later Fortune, denying in federal court that pressure from the legislature or college board or bar affected his decision, cut off the law school's legal services program and its faculty participants. Most of the university community seemed to support the chancellor, reasoning that the university's appropriation from the legislature would suffer if the law school were not curbed.

Even Rebel football coaches are reportedly concerned: Parents may object to sending their athletic sons to a college that harbors such a law school.

A new law dean will soon be selected for Ole Miss. Mississippi preservers of the Old South, after striking out with Farley and Morse, will no doubt scrutinize candidates for Morse's job more closely than Birchers looking for a successor to Earl Warren. ST

The Antidote Is Bunkley . . .

After Mississippi Freelance's first article on the law school was published, a new dean was chosen. The newspaper reported:

"THE old guard got what it wanted," one Ole Miss law professor said, "an antidote to Josh Morse."

Bunkley

That antidote is J. William Bunkley, who replaced the controversial Morse as dean of the Ole Miss law school. Morse has resigned to become dean at Florida State.

Bunkley, a '46 graduate of the law school and a teacher there ever since, was nominated by Chancellor Porter Fortune and unanimously approved by the board of trustees.

Fortune's nomination of Bunkley, an undistinguished don't-rock-the-boat type, was an ill-concealed slap at the wishes of the law faculty, which had earlier ranked Bunkley fifth among five UM candidates in an advisory poll taken by Fortune. Bunkley drew five "acceptables" (including his own), 11 "unacceptables" and three abstentions.

In addition to pacifying the legislature and the board, both of which had fought Morse's attempts to pull the school out of its traditional provincialism, Bunkley's nomination elated the athletic department. Rebel coaches, concerned that the law school's reputation as an enclave of liberalism was costing them recruits, had campaigned for their man at alumni gatherings across the state.

There is, however, a slim chance the case is not over; the AAUP and at least two academic accrediting agencies had expressed interest in the deanship appointment, and Fortune's blatant disregard of the faculty's recommendations should further whet that interest. ST

Business:

Is It Now Moving In?

By ALAN OTTEN
In The Wall Street Journal

"IT is certainly among the most significant domestic developments of the last few years, right up there with Negro militancy and campus protests."

Thus does a top Nixon adviser describe the spreading social awareness of the American business community and its increasing involvement in "do-good" social schemes.

The press daily documents the trend. Major firms comb the slums for school dropouts and hard-core unemployed to hire and train. Companies undertake to restore and rebuild slum areas near their plants. Firms push hard to raise Negroes into their executive ranks. Young businessmen spend their evenings helping train new Negro entrepreneurs. Banks ease loan standards for new firms in depressed areas. Companies voluntarily install new air or water purification devices, contribute to local beautification programs.

"The change is truly dramatic," says Daniel P. Moynihan, President Nixon's assistant on urban affairs, drawing the contrast with his days in the Kennedy administration. He cites an example of business awareness: "Obviously, one of our worries is what happens to the recently hired hard-core unemployed if the economy should slow down a little. Well, when you meet with a group of businessmen, they're likely to bring up something like that before you do—they've already been thinking of ways to cushion the impact on these people."

Obviously there are many motives for this deepening desire to "do good." As has been pointed out repeatedly by government and non-government commentators, substantial profits may result when building materials firms try new housing techniques, rail equipment makers help with mass transit, book publishers and laboratory suppliers get involved in education experiments, banks and utilities help set up businesses in depressed areas. Firms operating Job Corps centers learn training techniques that can be adapted for private clients. Companies in job-training projects truly need the new workers.

Moreover, it's good public relations and good customer relations to be identified with these do-good efforts. Negro consumers can't help but feel more kindly disposed toward firms that are known to be hiring Negroes or otherwise helping the Negro community. Increasing black militancy, in fact, threatens boycotts against food chains, department stores and even manufacturers that haven't done enough. And Negro unrest can ultimately explode in rioting that burns down stores and factories.

"Businessmen used to think the poor were a problem for social workers and foundations and maybe even government," says a Cabinet member. "Today, many have come to see that unless they do something about urban decay, there may be no future for their businesses."

Selfishness, however, is by no means the whole story. More and more businessmen have come to believe, out of fairness and justice and common sense, in the need to provide jobs and decent housing for the urban poor, to make cities pleasanter places to live in, to keep our air and water clean, to make it easier to move around. Filth and riots and sit-ins may have been needed to make them see their responsibility, but see it they have.

As usual, the heads of the largest corporations have tended to take the lead—the major manufacturers, the big banks, the large utilities and retailers. They are run by a new breed—not owners but trained managers, often with past government service.

Increasingly, the road to recognition as a business statesman lies through deep involvement in social projects and pioneering solutions to social problems. "It's great to have Don Kendall heading up the National Alliance of Businessmen," a presidential aide notes. "When he calls to ask a company to lend one of its executives or to do a little more hiring among hard-core unemployed, the guy on the other end knows he's hearing from a close personal friend of the President, and he begins to see a White House dinner party in the wings for himself and his wife."

This already-deepening involvement of businessmen in social schemes underlines substantial questions about the need for tax-incentives to encourage them to do still more.

There has always been the basic issue of whether the tax system should be used this way, or whether, if the ends are good, more direct federal help shouldn't be granted. There have always been far-reaching doubts about some of the underlying assumptions of the tax incentive proposals; do we really want, for example, to encourage firms to put plants in the slums? After all, bitter zoning fights have raged for decades to prevent factories from coming into the central cities.

And now the question arises whether tax incentives can do that much more good—or whether they will not merely provide an added and unnecessary bonus for business efforts already under way. Tax incentive advocates argue it can still help a lot—that even socially minded executives must justify their action on a profit-and-loss basis to their stockholders, or that extra tax write-offs will help tip the decision for a businessman trying to make up his mind.

Despite their chief's campaign pledge last fall to apply the tax-incentive approach very widely, some Nixon men fear that, in order to tip the scale this way, the tax benefits would have to be so hefty as to make the cost to the government astronomical. Some think, for example, that four-year or five-year tax write-offs—in other words, depreciation at a fat 25 per cent or 20 per cent annual rate— would have to be allowed on new plants and equipment in slum areas before firms would undertake the high costs and high risks.

With so many businessmen already devoted to helping meet social problems, the administration might want to think extra long before adding expensive tax credits to the incentives that quite clearly exist.

(Reprinted from The Wall Street Journal, March 18, 1969.)

Black Executive:

He Makes His Own Way

By JACK NELSON
In The Los Angeles Times

WHY would a Negro Army colonel who long felt insulated from racial prejudice give up a brilliant military career and return to his native North Carolina to become a personnel executive of a company dominated by whites?

"I began thinking about the problems of other Negroes and the unequal opportunities outside the military," says Marshall Bass, "and I began wondering why I was just enjoying the insulation and doing nothing. For 24 years I never really felt that a decision was made for or against me because I was black—and honest to God, it's a good feeling."

One of Bass' main worries when he sought civilian employment was that a large company might try to exploit him, as some firms have other Negroes, and hire him as "window dressing" or as what often is called "the house nigger."

On the contrary, he found a firm that put him in charge of eliminating employment discrimination, supervising whites as well as Negroes. And, as a company spokesman said, "Let's face it, we've got some redneck employees."

Take it from Bass, it takes a firm commitment and follow-through action by top management to end discrimination in employment practices. He saw it work in the Army, then retired to March of 1968 to help make it work in the largest company in Winston-Salem—R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

As manager of personnel development for the firm, Bass oversees all promotion and training for about 12,000 employees, including top-level management.

Today Reynolds has one of the best records of equal employment opportunities in the nation. And that is because the firm is overcoming what a civil rights official in the Justice Department recently said was one of the main problems in discrimination by large firms—failure of top management to communicate its antibias commitment to middle and lower management levels and see that it is carried out.

Not many years ago Reynolds had only a few Negro white-collar workers. Today it has 302—an increase from 238 a year ago. Of all vacancies on salaried payrolls—clerical, technicians, professionals and executives—filled in 1968, 17.5 per cent were filled by minorities. And promotions of minorities in blue collar ranks during 1968 was 29 per cent.

"We're maintaining the same ratio in 1969 and we don't believe another major company in the United States is coming close to that, says a Reynolds spokesman. "We are forcing the issue, purely and simply, and don't mind saying so. Our policy is not so unique, it's just that we're seeing that it's implemented. Most companies stop after adopting the policy and leave it up to middle management to carry out."

"We recently selected 10 men, including four Negroes, from factory jobs and trained them to be biochemical lab technicians in the research department," reports a company official. "All are now doing excellent work in that department and frankly we had just not been able to hire this kind of employee on the outside in the quantity we needed.

"Also, our shipping docks used to be all-black but we adopted a policy of hiring everybody at the same level and the docks are fully integrated now and have some Negro foremen over whites. We honestly believe we have improved the efficiency of our shipping operation."

He said company officials at first feared there would be a white employee backlash to firm antibias policies but it turned out to be a minor problem. "One thing that negated the backlash," he said, "was that most of the rednecks tend to be older employees and we found that some of them had been passed over by promotions for one reason or another and many of them have benefitted from the training programs, too."

The spokesman said Bass has had "a tremendous impact" on the company. In addition to directing antibias personnel activities, he has brought in top Negro leaders, educators and executives to discuss discrimination problems with Reynolds' officials.

Since Bass joined the firm, it has retained a black advertising agency and has hired a Negro, D. Parke Gibson, author of "The $30 Billion Dollar a Year Negro," as a marketing consultant.

"We're moving toward what's not only morally right, but what's economically sound," says Bass.

(Copyright 1969 by the Los Angeles Times. Reprinted by permission.)

Banker:

One in Atlanta Goes to the Slums

From Business Week

MILLS B. Lane, Jr., president of the Citizens & Southern National Bank, Georgia's largest, is a local legend. Not only are his ties inscribed "It's a wonderful world," he also booms this message as a greeting to visitors and phone-callers. He once tethered sheep in the banking room of his main downtown branch to stimulate interest in sheep-grazing. His casual dress, ebullient personality, relentless optimism, and attention-grabbing antics insured that when he decided to involve his bank in coping with social problems, the effort would come clearly stamped with his personal style.

Last May, Lane, other bank people, assorted business friends, and students donned work clothes and moved into Vine City, a run-down Atlanta slum neighborhood, with rakes, shovels, and trucks. Before it was over, Lane's people had picked up and hauled away 300 truck loads of junked cars, beat-up washing machines, old beds, and other trash. Lane distributed garbage cans and new chain-link fencing to replace falling-down eyesores that had been torn down and taken away.

Meanwhile, similar activities were under way in six other Georgia cities—bringing to 12 the number of Georgia cities where Lane has sponsored a slum cleanup.

"Cleaning up slum neighborhoods is expected to become an annual event," says Lane, "But the most important part of our plan is what follows the clean-up."

What follows amounts to a modest-scale, private enterprise drive for slum renewal, backed up by Lane's personal commitment and the resources of his bank. It includes first-mortgage and second-mortgage loans to low-income families to buy or renovate their homes; loans to low-income entrepreneurs who want to start their own businesses; buying slum properties and converting them into housing and recreational facilities.

Lane's program got started last year with a pilot effort in Savannah, his home town. White and Negro college students led a slum cleanup drive and C&S established a Community Development Corp. to handle mortgage and business loans. Lane's bank funded the CDC with $1-million, plus a commitment for $10-million, shared in part with the Negro-owned Carver State Bank in Savannah.

In the past year, the CDC has financed 24 businesses, the purchase of 45 homes, and the renovation of 800 more, for a total investment of $1,750,000 in Savannah's slums. This year its capital is being enlarged to more than $3-million. Lane says the $10-million "will not be a ceiling. We will spend whatever is necessary to do the job."

Loans in the past year were all "high-risk." None have defaulted. "We have had to extend some of the payments for 30 days, but no one has missed a payment yet," says C&S director of Community Development Robert F. Clayton.

The CDC has also financed a grocery store bought by a Negro bread salesman from a white; a combination beauty and barber shop; a dry cleaning plant; a record and music store; and several restaurants. One of the restaurants, Jimmy Washington's Soul Foods, has done so well it is looking for space to expand.

Part of the success of the loan program so far lies in Lane's approach to the borrowers. "We teach a man how to run a business," he says. "We don't just lend him money and turn him loose."

As for home loans, the average loan runs about $9,000, with one as high as $12,200 and one as low as $1,200. None of the borrowers had ever owned a home before. "Many of these people were bankrupt at one time," says Clayton, "but they were paying more for rent than a house payment would have been, if they had been able to save enough for the down payment."

The CDC makes a second-mortgage loan to cover a down payment, then places a conventional loan through the bank for the rest of the cost. Re-payment schedules are stretched out to make the monthly payment one the family can handle.

This money, of course, counts as a deductible business expense, but figuring that the bank earned $24-million last year before taxes, the program will cost shareholders about two weeks of annual earnings.

As his Savannah Plan bore fruit, Lane started thinking early this year of expanding it. He made a color film of the Savannah program for showing to businessmen's groups in other Georgia cities and settled upon 12 cities where C&S has branches or affiliates to participate. This is Lane's "Georgia Plan"—and it includes smaller cities because he feels their problems are just scaled-down versions of big-city headaches.

Lane works as hard at his project as he once did collecting antique automobiles. Once "retired" from public speaking, he now makes frequent appearances to show his color film and talk about the Georgia Plan. He has shown the film to such groups as the Urban League, the Philadelphia National Bank, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Reserve City Bankers Assn., and Federal Reserve Board. He estimates some two-million people have seen the film. One goal is, frankly, to interest outside investors. "If the insurance industry wants to put $1-billion in the slums," asks Clayton, "why not buy a package of our low-income loans?"

Reprinted from the May 24, 1969, issue of Business Week by special permission. Copyrighted ©1969 by McGraw-Hill, Inc.

—Photo-Illustrate, Inc.

SYMBOLIC? It was black and white together when banker Lane and community organizations sponsored a cleanup in an Atlanta black ghetto.

Why:

A Corporate Leader States the Case

In Dateline

The following comments are excerpts from an article by Roger Lewis, president of General Dynamics Corp., in Dateline, a publication of the National Association of Manufacturers:

. . . The problems which face business and industry are complicated, and they are changing rapidly. Business and industry will be much more responsive to the crisis of change, and we will get much farther much faster, if we attack our social problems from a posture of enlightened individual initiative at the local level. For those of us who would like a more specific road map and would like to act in concert, there are three areas, national in scope, where urgent aggressive attention will be beneficial.

First, business has got to start acting as though it understands its capabilities and is prepared to assert leadership by making things move. . . .

Second, business must stand up and be counted a good example of community citizenship. There is no new land, new water, or new air on the face of the earth, and if this planet is to continue to be habitable and if we, the people, are to enjoy the pursuits of life, liberty and happiness, business and industry must at least see to it that our air, our water—yes—our towns and our cities are left no worse than we found them.

Third, it is absolutely necessary to get the underprivileged within the large minority groups of our population into the mainstream of American economic life without further delay. Negroes, Mexican Americans, Puerto Ricans and Indians have equality under law. However, large numbers in each group are denied equal economic opportunity.

What is needed is a nationwide approach to the central and controlling element of the problem—jobs. It is recognized that the cultural and educational levels of many of these people do not qualify them for jobs in business and industry.

The large number of these people will require a commitment from a large number of business leaders to attack these problems in their own businesses. It may not solve the problem, but it will set the solution in motion. It is a unique opportunity for business to demonstrate what it can do without the government and to evolve a working partnership between government and business wherein each does what it can do best in the solution of great national problems.

black votes

1965 Act Facing Test

A few weeks ago, rural and poor Greene County, Ala., witnessed a sight unlike any it had seen in its 153-year history. There was Sheriff William E. (Big Bill) Lee, white, posing for photographers with his arm draped across the shoulders of SCLC's Ralph D. Abernathy and taking a lesson in giving the "soul power salute" from Hosea Williams.

The occasion was the official counting of Greene County's votes (watched by federal observers) as control of the county passed from whites to Negroes.

When the Voting Rights Act of 1965 went into effect four years ago this month, only 452 Negroes were registered to vote in Greene County. That was less than 11 per cent of the black voting-age population of 5,001.

White names on the voting lists in Greene County, however, totaled 1,736—which was 87 more than the white voting-age population.

Then, on Aug. 6, 1965, President Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act. It was passed after a shocked nation saw Alabama white

A Special Report

By MARVIN WALL

men on horseback brutally attacking Negroes seeking the vote in Selma, and after Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., led a historic march from Selma-to-Montgomery.

In Greene County, black registration shot past white registration within a matter of months. By March of 1966, it totaled 3,781—nearly 2,000 of whom had registered with federal examiners sent in under the Voting Rights Act. In 1966, nevertheless, only one Negro was able to win election in Greene County: The Rev. Peter Kirksey, elected to the county school board.

But in a court-ordered special election just a few days ago, Negroes sought and won six posts—four on the county commission and two on the school board.

While Greene County cannot be called typical—it now is the only county in the South where Negroes control both the county governing board and school board—it illustrates the political rise of Negroes in the South under the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

In Alabama as a whole, only 23.6 per cent of the voting-age Negroes were registered before the act. This figure was more than doubled within seven months. By April of 1966, nearly half of the black adults in Alabama were registered. By the summer of 1968, the figure was 56.7 per cent.

In Mississippi, of course, the transformation has been even more dramatic Only 6.7 per cent of Mississippi's voting-age Negroes were registered to vote in August of 1965. By the summer of 1968, that figure had soared to 59.4 per cent.

In the six states wholly covered by the Voting Rights Act, registration has gone from 30.9 per cent of the black voting-age population to 57 per cent. Despite this gain, however, black registration still lags far behind white registration: 79.2 per cent of those of voting age.

Overall, black registration has nearly doubled in the six states covered—an increase of 740,000.

In 1965, just before the Voting Rights Act went into effect, the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council counted 72 black elected officials in the South. Now the total is nearly 500. In hamlets all over the South and in some of the major cities, Negroes are winning places in local government similar to those won by the black candidates in Greene County, thanks largely to the voting law. (Among them are Sheriff Lucius Amerson of Macon County, Ala., Mayor Charles Evers of Fayette, Miss., and Mayor Howard Lee of predominantly white Chapel Hill, N. C., shown on page 1.)

In short, the act has been highly successful legislation. Even some of its most vigorous foes—including Sen. Sam Ervin of North Carolina—agree to this. Some say it is one of the most successful civil rights bills of all time. Former Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark aptly called it "a bold experiment in democracy."

With such an impressive record and so much more remaining to be done toward giving Southern Negroes equal voting rights, it would stand to reason that the Voting Rights Act—or some legislation very much like it—should remain on the books until the political rights of Southern Negroes are clearly established. However, this is not the case. The future of the Voting Rights Act is by no means secure.

A bill to extend the Voting Rights Act for five more years was approved by the House Judiciary Committee on July 17 by what was described as an "overwhelming" voice vote. However, the extension still has to clear the House Rules Committee, and it faces an uncertain future on the House floor.

In the Senate, hearings on extension of the Act began in a subcommittee headed by Sen. Ervin on July 9. The outlook in the Senate Judiciary Committee is not so bright. Supporters of the extension measure figure that they can win in the Judiciary Committee by a slim one-vote margin.

But even if the bill to extend the Act clears the House and the Senate Judiciary Committee (whose chairman is Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi), it faces the growing likelihood of a filibuster in the Senate. Hence the urgency with less than a year left before the present Act runs out of getting early action in the House and moving an extension bill to the Senate floor.

Meanwhile, the present act's future has been clouded considerably by a series of proposals from the Nixon administration. These proposals were presented to a House subcommittee on June 26 by Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell. Instead of simply extending the present act, the administration would:

1. Make the act's ban on literacy tests national at least until Jan. 1, 1974.
2. Eliminate residency requirements for voting in presidential elections.
3. Extend to every state the attorney general's authority to assign federal examiners and election observers to a locality.
4. Give the attorney general national power to review state election-law changes and file suits against discriminatory laws.
5. Create a presidential advisory committee to study voting discrimination and "other corrupt practices."

Atty. Gen. Mitchell reasons that the right to vote is "no longer a regional issue" and now is "a national concern." He explained to the House committee that he could not support a simple five-year extension of the Voting Rights Act because it amounts to "regional legislation."

Supporters of a five-year extension immediately charged that the administration was fogging the issue. Several acknowledged that the administration legislation might have some desirable features, but quickly added that these should be considered apart from an extension of the 1965 Act. Congressman McCulloch said the administration bill "jeopardizes the chances of passage of voting rights legislation."

Southern senators did not rally around the Nixon proposals, but they at least dispensed some left-handed praise. Sen. Ervin called the administration bill "only a little less objectionable." Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina commented: "If we have to have some voting rights bill, I would hope it would be the administration's."

That the administration had been undecided in its approach was signaled when Atty. Gen. Mitchell within six weeks postponed five scheduled appearances before the House subcommittee before he finally testified. This, along with the administra-

To page 7

Southern Voter Registration in the 1960s

PER CENT ELIGIBLE BLACK PEOPLE REGISTERED, 1968: 50-60% 60-70% 70-80% 80-90%

Map by Marge Manderson

The Changing Electorate in the South

		1960	1968
ALABAMA	Negro	66,009	273,000
	White	860,073	1,117,000
ARKANSAS	Negro	72,604	130,000
	White	517,897	640,000
FLORIDA	Negro	183,197	292,000
	White	1,819,342	2,195,000
GEORGIA	Negro	180,000	344,000
	White	1,020,000	1,524,000
LOUISIANA	Negro	159,033	305,000
	White	993,118	1,133,000
MISSISSIPPI	Negro	22,000	251,000
	White	478,000	691,000
NORTH CAROLINA	Negro	210,450	305,000
	White	1,861,430	1,579,000
SOUTH CAROLINA	Negro	58,122	189,000
	White	480,973	587,000
TENNESSEE	Negro	185,000	228,000
	White	1,300,000	1,448,000
TEXAS	Negro	226,818	540,000
	White	2,078,500	3,532,000
VIRGINIA	Negro	100,100	255,000
	White	866,794	1,256,000
TOTAL	Negro	1,463,333	3,112,000
	White	12,276,127	15,702,000

Figures compiled by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council

'Telling It Like It Was'

Many risks and much idealism went into the work that produced the Voting Rights Act and the registration that followed it. (Thirteen men and women were killed in the voting struggle.) Some of the voices from the field now come ringing back, reminding us of what it was all about:

"We feel that we are engaged in a psychological battle for the minds of the enslaved. Our criterion for success is not how many people we register, but how many people we can get to begin initiating decisions solely on the basis of their personal opinion."

—Charles Sherrod, from Southwest Georgia, 1962

"It is literally understood that anyone who works for a white man in Terrell County (Ga.) and registers to vote can expect to lose his job."

—Jack Chatfield, from Southwest Georgia, 1963

"The shooting and arrests and other harassments weren't enough to stop the people because they had lost enough fear to continue their efforts. Then came the firings and economic reprisals. This was the breaking point in Ruleville. We had to turn our efforts from voter registration to relocating families and finding funds to sustain people . . . ."

—A report from Ruleville, Miss., 1962

"Negroes who couldn't read and write stood in line to tell the registrar they still wanted to vote, that they didn't have the chance to go to school when they were small and anyway Mr. John Jones can't read and write either and he votes . . . . We were relieved at the absence of immediate violence at the courthouse, but who knows what's to come next . . . ."

—Robert Moses, from Greenwood, Miss., 1963

"Some of them had walked from as far as 20 miles to get here. . . . I asked the people if they would like to vote. Some didn't know what voting was."

—Ida Holland, from Greenwood, Miss., 1963

"Complaints on discrimination in applying the Louisiana voter registration laws and in defiance of the voting section of the new civil rights law are filed daily with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Justice Department. No action of a strong affirmative nature is ever taken. However, we shall push on, and on, and on."

—A report from Louisiana, 1964.

(Quotations from CLIMBING JACOB'S LADDER, by Pat Watters and Reese Cleghorn. Harcourt, Brace & World, Inc., 1967.)

Black Votes . . .

tion's broad substitute provisions, caused Rep. William F. Ryan to charge June 27 on the House floor that the attorney general was guilty of "delaying tactics" — charges which Mr. Mitchell denied in a second appearance before the House subcommittee July 1.

In any event, the element of time is important. The threat of a Senate filibuster means that steps along the legislative path must come as early as possible if Congress is to reach a decision before the act expires next August.

What would happen if the Voting Rights Act is not extended? Nothing can be predicted with certainty, but Southerners experienced in observing the region's politics can say what likely would happen.

A recent Supreme Court decision apparently would bar any Southern state from again imposing literacy tests within the immediate future, since all of these states have had, and continue to have, separate and unequal schools.

However, states and counties covered by the Act conceivably could take the steps to order complete re-registration. This would wipe all registration off the books, black and white, old registration and new.

Without the possibility of federal protection through the assignment of federal examiners to assist Negroes with registration, blacks would be at an immediate disadvantage.

For one thing, many Southern Negroes retain deep (and, often, justified) fears of going to the courthouse to register. The courthouse is where the sheriff holds sway. The courthouse also houses the courts, the tax officials, the welfare officials (virtually all of whom are white) and others who can fill a black man with dread whenever he comes to the courthouse for any reason.

Black people much prefer the convenience of registering with federal examiners. Another trip to the white-controlled courthouse is one that many blacks simply would not make. Thousands of names put on the voting lists at great risk, as well as thousands of others added under the Voting Rights Act, would be erased from the registration rolls, perhaps forever.

Contrary to the opinion evidently held by many, federal examiners have been sent to a relatively small number of counties in the states covered. Of 556 Southern counties covered by the Voting Rights Act, only 64 have been designated by the Justice Department for federal examiners.

However, the existence of the Act undoubtedly has had its effect on registrars in many of the other 492 counties. The possibility—real or imagined—that federal examiners would be assigned no doubt has influenced some of these registrars to be more careful than they would have been otherwise. If the Act expires, this influence will be lost.

Registrars then would be able to go back to "the old way" of doing things. They could go back to holding irregular and inconvenient office hours, of closing their offices without notice, and of using slow-down tactics when large numbers of Negroes come in to register. (Indeed, some of this still occurs in the South today anyway.)

All of this, coupled with the old tactics of physical and economic threats, likely would return Southern Negroes to their former position outside the political process in the South. Remedies for Negroes would return to the old, tedious, expensive and frustrating case-by-case method.

Moreover, states and localities covered by the act no longer would feel the restraining federal hand if they desired to adopt laws and election procedures designed to disfranchise Negroes. Faced with this, and the loss of a black registration base with which to enter a campaign, many of the nearly 500 black elected officials in the South would be consigned to a brief tenure.

Congressional Quarterly says the debate over the Voting Rights Act shapes up as the major congressional battle over civil rights legislation for this year. But the issue is even more drama-laden than that. Nothing less than the political future—and with it, much of the social and economic future—of Southern Negroes is at stake. ST Consciousness . . .

From page 1

dissension and greater hostility from other student radicals.)

This kind of "Southern consciousness" is narrow and ideological, limited by a class-warfare view of the world. But there is more to SSOC's perception of the South. It sees that the South has a heritage of personalism within a folk culture (black and white), placing high value on man-to-man relations on the very personal level. And it sees that the growth of cities and industrialism threaten this heritage, much of which had its origins in Southerners' closeness to the land and the frontier.

This sudden transmutation of a very small band of Southern student radicals may not be, in itself, of much importance. But the SSOC change is, I think, an interesting evidence of a new awareness that the South has something unique to give the nation, but that this something is threatened by the impersonal forces of industrialization, machines, and urbanization.

In recent years the South's noisiest "defenders" have not been working to defend this humanistic, religious, and history-conscious uniqueness, but to defend the region's old wrongs. These defenders of the worst in us now are being slowly overcome or outlived. As the democratic ideals embodied in the Constitution have been extended daily in a region which often has resisted them, there has been a frenzy and a paranoia. But as the Constitution prevails (a development still, it seems, some distance in the future), and as the frenzy dies, it may be possible for the South to stop fighting changes that are good and start fighting changes that are not, to rediscover and nurture its special virtues rather than compulsively defend its anti-human, anti-democratic aberrations.

Let us hope there will be no further berating of "Yankees" and "scalawags." But there should be more attention to what will happen to the region's character and its worthy differences if it continues to come under the sway of industrial and business conglomerates; in fact, under the sway of bigness of all kinds that subdue what is highly personal, human, ornery, and individual, that suppress a Bible-related sense of good and evil in order to gain more efficiency and productivity, and that further remove man from nature and the land.

Suppose the South does have a distinctive culture and that its leading elements are a special awareness of evil (which often makes it violent in its guiltiness); of history (which it has always been up against); of language (which it has exalted through a great literature, great story-telling, and the election of great demagogues); of personalism (which it nurtures with little courtesies and large generosities); and of the land (which forces upon men a greater respect for time and a sense of the natural order of things). These qualities are threatened by a highly-organized sosiety whose values are shaped by machinery and the cult of productivity.

The South can go on, slipping further into this vortex, or through a greater sense of its own identity, it can attempt to preserve its uniqueness. "Southern consciousness" cannot turn back urbanization and industrialization, and no one should wish for that, since we have benefited from both. But perhaps this consciousness will survive the abuses of the region's political aberrations of the past century, abuses which often have made more thoughtful people wish to be done with "Southerness," and will emerge as something positive: a useful bulwark against the depersonalizing forces of our time. Then, maybe, you can call it "soul."

There also are "Southern consciousness" stirrings in academe. Southern universities lately have been, at best, emulators of Eastern universities. They have adopted the standards and the emphases established elsewhere (which usually have been, in fact, superior). This too, has been a form of colonization, probably with more good results than bad so far. But are Southern universities to have no uniqueness, no special role to play in relation to the worthier parts of Southerners' peculiar heritage?

Dr. Ted R. Spivey, professor of English at Georgia State College, thinks they can have. "Now, if ever, is the time for the South to step out on its own in the renewal of its educational system," he has written in a paper entitled "The Humanities in the Contemporary South," published by Georgia State. He sees "a creative upswing in the South," especially in its literature, and believes there is "not only new creativity in the arts in the South but a growing demand for humanistic education. . . ." It is time, he says, for the South to rid itself of its inferiority complex concerning education and to cease merely imitating other parts of the country.

"One important demand in the South, as elsewhere, is for a renewed emphasis on the humanities," he writes. ". . . In fact, many people in all walks of life are coming to see that in a society in which more time than ever is devoted to dealing with mechanical and other non-human aspects of life, the humanities are necessary to remind us constantly of our human condition. . . . The South traditionally has borrowed educational ideas from the North and from Europe and has not yet developed its own genius in the field of education." But, he believes, it is now prepared to develop that genius—in the humanities.

What does it have to bring to the humanities? "There is still something in many Southerners of the old childlike innocence of Huck Finn," Spivey writes, "and this innocence gives them the courage to talk of the soul and the spirit, of compassion and sacrifice. . . ." A disproportionate part of the country's greatest literature during this century has come out of the South, perhaps because of that ability "to talk of the soul and the spirit, of compassion and sacrifice." Many of the South's great names in literature, such as William Faulkner of Mississippi, Thomas Wolfe of North Carolina, and Flannery O'Connor of Georgia, have been mythic writers, pointing to the soul and spirit, to religion and metaphysics, and so they have been an influence against the prevalent materialism and cynicism of the day.

This kind of new hope for the South as a potential redeemer of the country may be, in itself, a product of the region's romanticism and idealism. But it is emerging from a surprising variety of sources: student radicals, humanities professors, business promoters of the region ("Atlanta: A New Kind of City"), theologians, observers of economic trends. They do not, of course, all have the same kind of renewal in mind; but there is a surprising confluence of opinion that the South will ultimately help change the country, this time for the better.

This new hope, characterized, for instance, much of what Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. (a true product of the Biblical, history-conscious South) had to say. With the end of the old tyrannies, he thought, the South might become a redemptive force ("black and white together") against the impersonal, mechanical, amoral forces of our time.

Can the South ultimately help the country work its way out of that trap? A growing number of diverse people think that maybe, maybe, it just may. Their belief in the region is a far cry from the guilt-ridden defensiveness that produced the white-supremacist tyranny, violent deeds, violent tongues, and political backwardness that have characterized the worst of the South's recent history. ST

By REESE CLEGHORN
In Atlanta Magazine

MEMPHIS

Advisers Say Growth Tied to Race Relations

By JAMES CHISUM
In the Memphis Commercial-Appeal

Mayor Henry Loeb took it home to study during the weekend. Business executives packed it along with the suntan oil for a weekend at the lakeshore or mountains. Government officials were checking it paragraph by paragraph to find between-the-lines implications for their agencies.

The immediate reaction to the 28-page booklet released by the Memphis Area Chamber of Commerce was quiet. But the booklet, written by a member of a prestigious city-studying firm, had enough controversial declarations and recommendations to fill many future weeks and weekends with explosive debate.

Beginning with a strong positive beat, the booklet describes Memphis as a "backbone" city, one of several with a balanced and diverse economy, poised for growth.

But, it warns, such growth isn't inevitable, and if it is to come, Memphis must get busy solving its racial problems, increasing taxes, bringing in liquor-by-the-drink and accepting its responsibility to the region it serves.

"I think we can profit from qualified advice . . . All of us should welcome constructive criticism," said Mayor Loeb.

The report was written by Philip Hammer of the firm of Hammer, Greene, Siler Associates of Washington and Atlanta. It is titled "Action Line—Memphis," and sub-titled "An economic overview prepared for the Memphis Area Chamber of Commerce."

Few, at least among the city's business and governmental leaders, are likely to disagree with Mr. Hammer's view of Memphis as a "backbone" city.

"These backbone cities," he wrote, "have the capabilities of offering what is needed for urban economic expansion—manpower, land, location, business and financial services, and a well developed 'infrastructure' of public facilities. They can accommodate urban sprawl and make it work; they are not so large that they cannot be efficiently governed; they are not so small that they cannot provide the full range of needed services."

Memphis, the report says, is one of 17 cities "large enough to offer the full range of modern living services, yet small enough to provide the amenities for good living and the efficiencies of a relatively simple and uncongested economic system."

"Backbone" cities, said Mr. Hammer, are "just coming to the point where massive development can take place."

"They will be particularly attractive to new investments because they now have big-city capabilities without big-city problems."

Memphis, said Mr. Hammer, has diversity "which provides solid support for new enterprises and a built-in stability of activity levels. . . .

"At a time when many urban centers are despairing of additional growth, therefore, Memphis can welcome and promote it."

But, Mr. Hammer wrote, to take advantage of its opportunities, Memphis will need more than a promotional campaign. It must solve some hard problems, turning its efforts "toward gearing up for a much more sophisticated handling of the affairs to the metropolitan area. . . .

"Memphis, like other large urban centers in the United States, is in a period of crisis. It is a divided city and a tense city, perhaps no more divided or tense than most others, but divided and tense nonetheless.

"It has a great deal of unfinished business to do, for the most part involving problems that have been around for a long time and left unsolved. . . .

"The major block in any city is what might be called the 'traditionalist' approach, the normal predisposition of community leaders to look at today's problems in the same way that they looked at yesterday's problems and to do things today the same as yesterday.

"The fact is that things have changed and today's problems demand new approaches."

Mr. Hammer said the "most difficult problem in Memphis involves the status and aspirations of the black community."

"This," he continued, "is no longer simply a matter of 'race relations' (although effective relations between the races are indeed essential to any solution of problems).

"What is needed—and this is set forth here strictly within the context of economic development—is a coming to grips with the deficiencies that characterize the physical environment, the training and educational facilities, the economic opportunities and the public participation of the black community.

"These deficiencies are no worse in Memphis than in other major United States cities, but the comparison is irrelevant. These deficiencies exist in Memphis—in depth."

Mr. Hammer said recent steps have been taken to solve this problem, but so far they have been only a start and "concerted and continuous efforts" will be needed.

In his recommendations, Mr. Hammer said Memphis should put particular emphasis on improving its black labor force.

"Memphis should mount a strong program to provide decent housing for the black community," he said, suggesting that 5,000 new units should be made available for each of the next five years.

"Existing technical and vocational programs need expansion, particularly (but not exclusively) as they involve the black community."

He also suggested continued effort in behalf of higher education.

"There still appears to be a condescending attitude on the part of many white leaders occupying places of high responsibility in Memphis.

"It is apparently felt by some that the 'race problem' will disappear, or at least solve itself, by bringing a few black leaders into positions of participation.

"The attitude implies that the problem is one of 'race relations' when actually it primarily involves a range of basic deficiencies in what the city has made available to its black citizens.

"It will take a substantially new approach to the problems of the black as a citizen in the community if this situation is to change and greater turmoil is to be avoided in the future."

Some progress has been made, he said, but "at the top level of white leadership. . . . there still seems to be less than full appreciation of the critical seriousness of the deficiences that have to be overcome."

Mr. Hammer said an "all-out program of improvement for the black community" might be "one of the most productive moves that Memphis could make" economically. In addition to adding the blacks to the labor force, the program would have an "electrifying effect" on the rest of the nation, he said.

Mr. Hammer said flatly that Memphis "will need higher taxes and other financial outlays to underwrite and sustain a superior level of big-city services."

Finally, he recommended a major promotional campaign to attract "national" industries.

"The creation of a new national image for Memphis must have its counterpart in the creation of a new big-city image locally, and images must be built on performance." (ST)

MEMPHIS REPORTS

The Southern Regional Council has published two reports on Memphis. The more recent one, "In Memphis: One Year Later," by Pat Watters and J. Edwin Stanfield, was issued in April, jointly with the Tennessee Council on Human Relations. It relates what happened in Memphis during the first year after Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination.

The report is available from SRC. Single copies 30 cents, orders of 10 or more 20 cents each.

Your Opinion, Please

We would like to know your reactions to SOUTH TODAY. We also would like to have your suggestions, and names of others to whom you think this publication should be sent. Would you complete this form, put it in an envelope, and mail it to us, along with your name and address as stamped alongside this coupon?

I think SOUTH TODAY ☐ will be useful to me. ☐ serves no purpose.

My opinion so far is that it ☐ presents information that should be presented. ☐ tells me little I did not know. ☐ is hogwash.

Some subjects I would like to see covered: . . . . . .

. . . . . .

Other remarks: . . . . . .

. . . . . .

If you want to suggest the names of others to whom SOUTH TODAY might be sent, please list them on an attached sheet.

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Address Correction Requested)

ATLANTA GA.

Bulk Rate
U. S. Postage
PAID
Permit No. 1085

SOUTH TODAY

A Digest of Southern Affairs

ATLANTA, GA. VOL. I, NO. 3 SEPTEMBER, 1969

20¢

Will Students Go To 'the Rurals'?

TALL, articulate Bill Peace has a plan: Bring the idealism of Southern college youth to useful service in the South's poorest rural counties. He is working with 10 colleges to do it. By Don McKee. Page 5.

The South and Welfare Reform

THE WELFARE reforms proposed by President Nixon probably would benefit the South more than any other region. Payments to the poor in some areas would be more than doubled. But would it all break down in Southern administration? Would the "suitable" work requirement be used to keep blacks in inferior positions? A staff analysis by Warren Pritchard. Page 4.

IVAN ALLEN OF ATLANTA

A Mayor Says: Race No. 1

MAYOR IVAN Allen Jr. of Atlanta, regarded by many as the nation's most successful big-city mayor, thinks cities must give first priority to solving problems of racial injustice and poverty. He retires soon after eight years in office. In an interview with two of the South's best reporters, he talks about his job. By Raleigh Bryans and Margaret Shannon. Page 8.

THE ATLANTA Journal and Constitution MAGAZINE

In Florida, Peonage Lives On

NEXT MONTH an annual trek to Florida begins—not tourists in cars with surf boards and beach balls, but thousands of migrant workers with their meager belongings on the tops of the cars. They will not get the same reception as the tourists. And they will enter a work system not much different from the peonage of the Middle Ages. By Robert Coles and Harry Huge. Page 6.

THE NEW REPUBLIC

Mountain Folk: Changing Now?

THIS KENTUCKIAN, and even the boy scrutinizing the corn below, have seen some change in the mountains. But Appalachia is one place in America where genuine folk life survives. It may become a basis for cooperative joint efforts against the economic, social and educational ills of the mountain country. By Colman McCarthy. Page 3.

The Washington Post

JOHNNY CASH

He Celebrates A Better South

An appreciation of the film "Johnny Cash! The Man, His World, His Music," produced by Arthur and Evelyn Barren, released by Public Broadcast Laboratory. Originally made for television, and expanded for distribution to theaters.

AT one of the high points in this unusual documentary film, the music of one of Cash's best songs, "Cisco Clifton's Filling Station," rings out, and the camera from afar focuses on and captures in slow-moving scenes a little wooden, two-pump gas station in a small Southern town. It is a rare artistic integration of music and photography. Each—the nostalgic accompaniment and Cash's voice and the photography's fond showing of the pumps and cars and the slow movements of men, dogs and children under the canopy or in the building—reinforces the other to evoke the full feel of such a filling station, the feel and flavor of the 1930's South, the small-town South.

The song itself concerns Cisco Clifton's continuing to run a filling station the way they used to be—offering genuine help to motorists, lending tools and securing parts, and providing the site for a daily checker game for old friends who come every morning and stay through the day, sitting in winter around a depot stove inside. Cisco

To Page 7

Also Inside:

SCHOOL desegregation is working much better than most Southerners had thought it would, an extensive government survey shows. Page 2.

AT GEE'S BEND, an all-black community in Southwest Alabama, two white New Yorkers came for a wedding: their own. They brought with them a very special gift for the community. By Kitty Griffith. Page 2.

A WASHINGTON columnist takes a hard look at the administration's new proposals on welfare and offers some stringent observations about America's priorities. By David Broder. Page 6.

REPORT ON REPORTS

By Claire Brown

Youth Forum

Another go-round on the problems and relevance of public education—at the high school level—took place in July under the prestigious wing of the Advanced Administrative Institute of the Harvard Graduate School of Education. Experts, public school administrators, superintendents, and of course high school students, came to Cambridge to discuss the "Youth Revolution," and the connection between the phenomenon and the schools, as Peter Schrag reported for Saturday Review ("Gloom at the Top," Aug. 16, 1969).

The first round went to the young folk, who tried to tell how, "at least part of the time, schools are irrelevant, stupid, and repressive. . . . teachers who can't teach, administrators who are inaccessible, and programs from another age and frame of mind. . . ." As Schrag related it:

"The students—from Black Harlem militant to Midwest racist—were expected to set out a bill of particulars for the Youth Revolution; instead they set forth a still-incoherent set of attitudes that reflect precisely the diversities for which they were chosen in the first place. If you bring together an alienated long-haired militant from the suburbs and future ROTC captains from North Carolina, you can't really expect them to agree on whether schools, courts, and policemen collude to harass students, on the imminence of revolution, or on the racial inequities in American life."

The main reaction from the administrators was a sigh of relief at the inability of the students to agree among themselves. Schrag's account continued:

"There was a lot of palaver about how the kids hadn't used Roberts Rules of Order . . . how their language offended nice people . . . . Before the palaver was over, the kids were on the defensive . . . . What the superintendents had done—not all, but many—was to prove that openmindedness was, like everything else, a good ploy.

"What became clear was that the schoolmen were as much as the kids—perhaps more—prisoners of the system . . . . Of all their little hypocrisies—their rhetoric about responsibility and due process, about independence and hard work—none was as great as the pretense that they could, if persuaded, do something to reform things, that they were ethically or intellectually equipped to act."

But Schrag concluded by giving the laurels to the students, and pointing out a very sore spot underlying the growing controversy about the role of the school itself:

"The kids certainly did not agree on any of the issues that might be discussed in the Youth Forum, yet they somehow shared a sixth sense—almost a scent—that only they, and no adult seemed to recognize. Instinctively they knew how grownups (and especially schoolmen) behave . . . . the grownups had no such instincts for the behavior of the kids.

"But it went—and goes—even beyond that . . . . The problems that remained inchoate in Cambridge are hardly unique to schools. At some point in the last generation the adults lost their sense of moral security—the whole nation lost it; if they are at all sensitive, the adults know they are whistling in the dark. All the things that once held the schools together—belief in equality, opportunity, independence—have been thrown into doubt as educational or social realities . . . .

"There are all sorts of notions of what the schools should be, but none of them is possible of realization under existing circumstances. Educational philosophy can have no life of its own, cannot exist without a more general idea of culture or an antecedent political theory, and without a society that practices rather than betrays its articulated convictions about peace, freedom, and independence."

Case Studies

While most of the attention, speeches, and suits have been focused on integration of primary and high school education, a quiet investigation has been under way in colleges: 100 state universities and land-grant colleges, which register about 30 per cent of the total college and university enrolment in the nation. "State Universities and Black Americans: An Inquiry into Desegregation and Equity for Negroes in 100 Public Universities" is luckily more than graphs. Published as a joint venture by the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, the Southern Education Reporting Service and the Southern Education Foundation, the report includes lengthy case studies of five rather different universities. John Egerton analyzed data, visited the universities, and tied fact and observation into a meaningful whole.

The main shocker: In the 80 schools not all-Negro, black enrollment is 1.93 per cent among full-time undergraduates and 1.91 per cent among graduate and professional students. Black faculty members constitute less than one per cent of total faculty. Meaningful integration of higher public education is yet to come.

Egerton does not stop with this obvious conclusion, but draws his own, from his visits to Alabama, Rutgers, UCLA, Wayne State, and Indiana:

"The adjustments demanded by increased desegregation affect black and white institutions and people . . . . There is a common confusion between black and white activists, between moderate and revolutionary tactics, and between serious and contrived grievances . . . . But two conclusions are strongly suggested by the case studies in this report . . . . Black militants and radical whites in the institutions appear to have little in common, and the idea of a black monolith is a myth.

"Black agitation for institutional reform is more than skin deep . . . . By a coincidence of history, the "New Black Man" has arrived on the higher education scene at a time when other more general reforms are in the wind, and these two causes have merged to reinforce each other. But in the complex and intertwined phenomena of youthful assertion, black militancy, white radicalism, institutional convulsion, the black presence in higher education is seen by most of the university officials interviewed for this report as necessary, long overdue, and beneficial to the future health and effectiveness of higher education."

The 96-page report is available for $1.00 from the Southern Education Foundation, 811 Cypress St. N.E., Atlanta, Ga. 30308.

H. E. W. Survey

What do people really think about how school desegregation is working in the South? The conclusion drawn from interviews with 1,230 persons in 13 integrated school districts in Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, South Carolina and Tennessee is that most citizens think it is "working much better than was generally anticipated."

So reports the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, whose Atlanta office made the survey of attitudes.

Among the conclusions:

—Faculty desegregation has been successful. Most white and black are quite affirmative about this.

—On an informal and social level, desegregation works more smoothly in the elementary grades.

—White parents (rather than students or teachers) continue to be the group most critical of desegregation.

—Most people believe that the black students are receiving better educational opportunities in integrated schools.

SOUTH

A Digest of Southern Affairs

SOUTH TODAY is published by the Leadership Project of the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta Ga., 30303. The Southern Regional Council, founded in 1944, is a research and information agency devoted to the attainment of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South. President: John H. Wheeler, Durham, N.C. Chairman, Executive Committee: Raymond M. Wheeler, Charlotte, N.C. Vice Presidents: Josephine Wilkins, Athens, Ga.; Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn.; Charles G. Gomillion, Tuskegee, Ala.; Lucius H. Pitts, Birmingham, Ala. Executive Director: Paul Anthony.

Reese Cleghorn, Editor Katherine S. Griffith, Assistant Editor

Some of the articles used in SOUTH TODAY have been edited for length. We welcome clippings which may be of use. They should indicate the date and the publication from which they came.

By Way of: Gee's Bend

—By Kitty Griffith—

July 19th was a most remarkable day. A hip New York couple was married in Gee's Bend, an all-black town in southwest Alabama. Thirty years earlier the town had no running water, gas or electricity. On this day in July the town had champagne and a beautiful new white horse.

This was not one of those weddings staged atop a flag pole for publicity purposes. The white bride and groom, Jody Bradford and Stanley Selengut, were married in Gee's Bend because they had friends there and because both had played key roles in the success of the Freedom Quilting Bee, a sewing cooperative established in the community three and a half years ago.

Selengut, an international promoter and broker of folk art who has served the State Department, Zuni Indians and others, became the market representative for the Bee in 1967. He took the quilts to the Smithsonian, where they were twice displayed at the Folklife Festival. He also took them to the New York market, where he met the quilt buyer from Bloomingdales, Miss Jody Bradford.

This appealing love story culminated in a day with many arresting qualities. There in Gee's Bend, rich and poor, black and white, rural and urban gathered together to celebrate the marriage of two good friends.

Even though you knew it was going to be hot, this was a wedding not to be missed. Driving down with friends from Tuscaloosa in an air-conditioned car, you forgot the heat until the car stopped, the door opened, and the dry, red dust from the road filled the air.

We had arrived in Gee's Bend around 3. Thinking the ceremony was about to begin, we went immediately to the new quilt "factory," a cinder-block building, designed by a New York architect, a friend of Selengut's.

The rehearsal was in progress. The groom, in blue jeans and sandals, was talking to the black minister. The bride, in a flowered shift, was lining up her small bridesmaids, six young girls from the community.

The bare block walls of the large room were decorated for the occasion with colorful quilts. An altar was set up and it was draped with a bright green and blue quilt. Its pattern was the traditional "Wedding Band" design.

Around 4 p.m. a band arrived from Tuscaloosa and some of the younger people began dancing. It got hotter.

Up the hill from the new quilt factory stood an old, unpainted frame house with a front porch that serves as headquarters for the Bee. In the back room there were quilts made from velvet and dashikis made from African cloth. In the front room was a long table filled with food cooked by the ladies in the cooperative. It was a feast worthy of a groaning board: fried chicken, barbecued ribs, potato salad, sweet potato pie.

The wedding was to begin at six, but it was delayed at least 45 minutes. Down at the quilt factory, a local school teacher was mixing the punch. It was her special recipe, one that she used for festive occasions at school. The wedding table was set. In the middle was a homemade wedding cake

To page 7

Change in the Mountains

By COLMAN McCARTHY In The Washington Post

Photos by AL CLAYTON

Clairfield, Tenn.

Misery voyeurs, Eastern weeklies and TV camera crews still come to Appalachia to express or excite outrage at the poverty of tired, tattered and gaunt, blank-eyed mountain people; but they no longer flock in or stream in.

Clairfield is about two hours and 20 crossed-over Cumberland mountains from Knoxville, on the bottom rim of Appalachia, and the bottom of nearly everything else. It once had a population of over 20,000—as late as 15 years ago when its mountains were treasures of coal and lumber, and manpower was the only way the companies could plunder them.

But the deep mines have closed, someone beyond the mountains has gotten rich; now the coal will be strip-mined, so someone else in Pittsburgh or Charleston or New York can get rich. The stripping around Clairfield, as in all of Appalachia, is a hideous and ruthless process which the mountain people bitterly but stoically resent.

The suffering caused by lack of jobs, food, housing, teachers, lawyers and doctors is, in most ways, measurable. But the damage done to the hollow people by the stripping of their mountains will never be fully known, because it goes too deep for charts and statistics; or, as one old-timer said, "my soul is in the mountains, that's what they're stripping."

Precisely because the outward effects of poverty in Appalachia are so measurable, the region has attracted, since John Kennedy's West Virginia, large numbers of outside theorists. Many of the more serious have been willing to leave their towers for a year or two, come live in the mountains with the people and try to bring on social change that way. But because change is an Eastern word, many have been temperamentally ill-suited for the mountains; the pace is slow and the mountain people refuse to jump up and down in glee whenever a helpful outsider comes in saying he knows just what needs to be done. That can discourage a theorist.

The only outsiders who have come into Clairfield in recent years and stayed are Marie Cirillo and Jean Luce. In their early 30s, wary of federal big-talkers and sensitive to mountain voices, both women spent over 10 years as Catholic sisters in the Glenmary order, which serves Appalachia. Three years ago, when the order clumsily refused a group of innovative sisters freedom for new styles in rules and work, 44 out of 61 left. They formed the Federation of Communities in Service — FOCIS — which continued in Appalachia, but without pressure from bossy bishops and reverend mothers.

In the three years she has been in Clairfield, Miss Cirillo has learned that often in Appalachia the war on poverty has meant war on poor people. "It's easy to sit in Washington," she said, "and look at the problems of a place like Clairfield. Solutions pop up like toast. But what about the feelings of the people in the hollows? You just can't say, 'Here, you're poor and we want to help. We'll bring in an industry. You'll have jobs. Salaries. Then you can buy things. And live better.'

"The trouble with this approach is that many mountain people don't want to be industrialized. Because it means giving up their culture."

One solution to this has been to introduce mountain crafts into Clairfield: woodwork, quilting, stitching, pottery and other art work. Last week, much of it was assembled and put on sale in a cabin shop on an interstate highway in nearby Lake City.

One of the ideas Marie Cirillo is committed to is that eliminating poverty in Appalachia cannot be only a political or economic process; it must be a personal process. It must move forward according to the possibilities of the mountain people themselves. If bringing industry was once the main smelling salts by which a near-dead Appalachia would be revived, community organizing has replaced it.

In the hollows around Clairfield, the difficulty of organizing is that the people have little feel for it.

Sensitive to sentiments like that, and having heard them often in their 15 years in Appalachia, Marie Cirillo and Jean Luce began organizing the Clairfield community on the basis of answering the What For question. "We needed something the people could see and feel good about," said Miss Luce.

The first something was a softball league in the valley. The person behind it was Orville Petrie, 24, a local man who helps run the Clairfield Neighborhood Youth Corps. "After the games," said Petrie, "when everybody is there together, talk turns to other things in the community. We needed a septic tank built at the community center. So I mentioned it. Someone else took it up and soon a few of us got together and dug the hole in the ground. All it took was organization. The muscle was there all along."

So was the soul. The most recent example of community organizing is the Clairfield Folk Festival. Otrell Hamblin, a hollow dweller who sings with a Dylan twang, induced four local guitar players, a banjo player and a harmonicist to perform for the community. Beneath the mountains and behind the community center two Saturdays ago, the seven self-taught musicians played half-through the night to 150 people.

An immediate organizational goal in Clairfield is to get a weekly newspaper going. The FOCIS women acquired an offset machine recently from army surplus; about the same time, a young man from Clairfield returned from Job Corps with training as a printer. "We're looking around for a thousand dollars to get the paper going." said Miss Cirillo.

A second goal is the establishment of a folk school. A few months ago, Erling Duus, 29, a Vanderbilt Divinity School graduate who had taught in a Denmark folk school, acquired an abandoned cabin in Rose's Creek hollow. His folk school idea has a good chance of working.

The mountains of lower Appalachia are one of the few places in America where the idea of folk is not lost—the customs, art, music, poetry that form the common life of a people. Mountain folk is a way that people go beyond just living alongside each other, as in the cities, but with each other.

Little of this—the softball league, the folk festival, the hoped-for newspaper—brings much money into Clairfield. Six thousand out of 19,000 people in the county are on welfare. In the hollows, the pitiful sights still exist: anemic, starving children; pensionless men, black-lunged and old-aged at 40; people made powerless by politicians who come around with smiles and dollar bills the day before election and are never seen again; families made helpless by coal companies who exploit poor people on rich lands; and always the poor spoken of by Richard Margolis, who "live under the delusion that the nation's leadership does not know they are suffering. If the leaders knew, they would do something about it, wouldn't they?"

Perhaps that is the best chance for Clairfield. A few local people, along with long-haul outsiders like Marie Cirillo, are no longer deluded. They do not count on the nation's leadership, but are counting on themselves. The feeling is spreading through the valley that if a few people can get together to dance and sing where once there was stillness and silence, perhaps they can come together for other things—and eventually make change a mountain word. ST

'The Lord Can Take Us To The Moon In The Next Life...'

Clairfield, Tenn.

Driving up looping hollow roads that billow with dust the color of orange talc, you come to a knoll where you can see, far away and through a glass clearly, the hazed purple folds of the Great Smokies.

Living in scenes similar to that are Steely Huddleston, his wife of 30 years Pauline, and brother Jim. Their cabin, which beyond the mountains would be called a shack or shanty, has no running water, heat or electricity, has a six and-a-half foot ceiling, a tin-tarpaper roof above and occasionally chickens and rattlesnakes in the underpinning below. It is five miles from a road and 20 miles from a town.

HUDDLESTON

Although the Huddlestons play their portable radio mostly for mountain music, and then only in the evenings before a 9 p.m. bedtime, they knew about the moon voyage. It bothered them. At first, they were hesitant to say why—their guest might have been pro-moon—but it was easily assumed that along with many city liberals they thought the space money should be given to Appalachia, for places like Clairfield where it would do some good.

"No, I don't mind that," Steely said, "although we need money here badly. The reason I don't like men going to the moon is because that's not where men belong. The Lord doesn't want them there. Do you remember in the Old Testament when they tried to build a tower so high that it would reach heaven? Remember what happened? It fell on them. They were killed by the Lord. He didn't want them messing."

Steely's application of the story to the moon voyage is one seldom heard. Doubtlessly, it would strike many liberals as incredible that one of the poorest persons in Appalachia, who would starve if he didn't rise at dawn to tend his crops and whose material goods are either non-existent or wearing out, does not see the moon landing the way they do, as a poor display of national priorities. To Steely, it was a spiritual question. He believed that when God wanted men to inhabit other planets, rockets would not be used. "The Lord can take us to the moon or the sun in the next life, if it suits Him. But it's not for us to decide now."

The conversation drifted to other things: the apple tree struck by lightning in the spring and how the fruit is growing puny as a result; the rattler that took Steely by surprise (laughter from Jim) but which he managed to kill with a stick; the flower seeds Pauline hung in a tobacco pouch over the door to dry out; the protective Chinese goose that hisses strangers away from the sleeping hound.

On leaving the Huddlestons and thanking them for both the afternoon and the invitation to come back again, one would have liked them as allies in the debate about "national priorities." After all, they are poor and many outsiders are on their side. Nevertheless, unlike most of those outsiders who are easily crowded into liberal, moderate or conservative camps, as if life is reducible to that, the Huddlestons are not for sale, no matter the cause.

They are quiet people, who work hard at manual labor and get weary. They endure the pains of a private hell so intense that not even sharing it will give them a little relief. So they keep it to themselves, which is a way of holding onto one's integrity. That is important if you are going to live on the land, among the mountains, through the seasons, beaten down by one kind of life, but rising out of naked necessity to a greater life.

—Colman McCarthy, The Washington Post ST

The South And Welfare

Plan Raises Questions

A Special Report
By WARREN PRITCHARD

THE South would benefit far more than any other region from President Nixon's proposed welfare reforms, and in the poorest areas welfare families would receive at least three times as much as at present.

But many questions remain unanswered about the Nixon proposals, to say nothing of Congress' response to them. Some of the big questions:

Who will administer the welfare program proposed by the President? Will it replace other forms of family aid, such as food stamps? Will it operate on the assumption of the present system: that poor people lie about their resources and situations in order to fit qualifications of eligibility?

Will the needs of employers determine what the word "suitable" means when applied to the question of whether a welfare applicant has been willing to accept suitable employment? Will race and political activity be permitted as factors in determining eligibility? And what of the requirement for job training and work in places where there simply are no jobs?

Questions Mr. Nixon raised but didn't answer in his August speech apply particularly to the South because of the widespread view here of the proper place of poor people generally and of black people in particular.

Some things are clear, however, about the possible effects of the Nixon proposals on the 11 states of the region. For instance:

—The number of needy families participating in a program of federal assistance would increase greatly, while state legislatures would be permitted to cut their welfare allocations in half.

—The amount of federal dollars coming into the region for needy families would increase greatly, the total amounting to as much as four times what is currently coming in for the only existing family welfare program, Aid to Families With Dependent Children.

—The South's portion of the congressional welfare allocation would be brought closer to the region's share of the nation's poverty.

—Families in states where AFDC benefits are relatively high would not benefit greatly from the Nixon plan, but in some areas the increase in family income would be dramatic.

—Though the details are yet to be spelled out, the new program for the aged, the blind, and the disabled does not appear to have changed significantly from the old. The benefits are higher, but the process of determining eligibility, at best aimed at exclusion rather than inclusion, will apparently remain.

If income is to be the primary determinant of participation in the proposed "Family Assistance System," called the heart of the welfare reform, the number of Southern families getting some form of federal public assistance would expand from 340,000 to potentially 3,150,000 eligible for aid under the new plan.

The area of welfare that has come in for the most public ridicule is that which has provided for dependent children (AFDC). In spite of a din of criticism, Southern state governments would save very little money if the care of their needy children were taken over by the federal government, as the Nixon plan proposes. The reason they would save very little is that they spend so very little under the present program.

Nixon's plan calls on 20 states—those that pay their welfare families less than the proposed $1,600 a year—to allocate at least half their current family welfare budgets for the new program. Ten of the 20 are Southern states. (See chart on this page showing monthly payments.)

Nixon's plan would bring each of these up to $133.34 monthly with federal money but would require the state to contribute only 50 per cent of its current allocation if it chose not to supplement the basic $133.34.

In Georgia, for example, the legislature would be required to vote only a little more than $3 million for its needy families—those now on the rolls and those added by the less restrictive Nixon plan—a savings of about $3 million. Florida would save $3.5 million; Louisiana, $4.4 million; North Carolina, $2.8 million; and so forth. Presumably, the need for local welfare contributions (as in Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee) would be eliminated under the new plan.

Although AFDC has gotten the most attention and although families are the major subject of the new proposals, there are three other categories of welfare: Old Age Assistance, Aid to the Blind, and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled. Nixon's plan does little more for them than raise the level of payments to a minimum of $65 a month, all but $7.50 of which is to be paid by the federal government.

Overall the Nixon plan would save the state of Georgia about $10 million, a significant amount in a state welfare budget that has run about $30 million.

According to the 1960 census, the 11 Southern states counted 1,079,473 families with incomes between nothing and $1,000 a year. That was 43 per cent of the nation's under-$1,000 families. Yet those same 11 states last year were getting just 15 per cent of the funds appropriated by Congress for all Aid to Families With Dependent Children. If the position of the South (in terms of its portion of these families relative to the rest of the nation) has not changed significantly since 1960, at least one billion of the dollars from the Nixon proposal should come to families in the 11 states—four times the amount of federal dollars coming into the region under AFDC.

A rural example of what the Nixon proposals might do:

Tunica County in the Mississippi Delta had a 1960 median family income (as many families earned more as earned less) of $1,260. That made it the poorest county in the nation. Some 1,500 of the county's 3,469 families earned less than $1,000. Almost 2,900 family incomes were under $3,999.

Based on census figures from 1960, some 2,500 families—more than three-fourths of the population of the county—would be eligible, by income, to participate to some degree in Mr. Nixon's family assistance plan, making welfare by far the biggest business in the county.

The impact would be especially dramatic on the famiiles earning less than $1,000 a year. There were 1,500 such families in 1960. The OEO contends that the number of Tunica Countians living within its definitions of poverty (now about $3,300 for a family of four) dropped by some 44 per cent between 1960 and 1966. It is likely that most of those moving out of poverty were those families closest to the poverty threshold, not those who were the poorest of the poor earning under $1,000 a year. For the sake of illustration it can be confidently assumed that there are still at least 700 families in the under-$1,000 income range. Assuming that each family averaged four members (surveys indicate poor Delta families average closer to seven members), the Nixon plan would (with $720 of income disregarded) increase by more than three fold the yearly income of most of them. Instead of the $470 the more fortunate ones who were judged eligible for welfare could expect in a year, they would have $1,600. Instead of $39 a month, they would have $133, with larger families getting more.

Still dealing in minimums, the Nixon plan applied at its most basic level—the $1,600 for a family of four with no income or income less than $720 a year—would inject more than $1,120,000 annually into the Tunica economy, counting only the poorest of the poor and estimating conservatively. That $1,120,000 would represent a significant portion of the county's taxable payroll —as much as 50 per cent of it.

A city example:

Fulton County, Ga., is urban, including most of Atlanta, largest city in the South and receiver of many migrants who have quit places like Tunica in the past two decades.

In Fulton, there are more than 40,000 families whose incomes would put them in range of some degree of participation in the Nixon plan, many more than the approximately 8,200 families now receiving public assistance. The increase in payments—from an average of just over $108 now to a minimum of $133—would not be as striking as the broad expansion of participation.

Welfare recipients in Fulton County say that though it is better than nothing, $1,600 is not enough money for a family of four. The federal government itself (the USDA) has set the cost of a minimally adequate diet for a family of four at $1,284 a year, or more than three-fourths of the proposed basic family income. (This is why critics argue for the retention of the food stamp program with the initiation of the new welfare plan.) They point out that in the ghetto rent alone for four persons averages around $70 a month. But this aspect of welfare receipients' criticisms ("It won't mean nothing for the poor.") is not all.

The recipients see a great potential for mistreatment in the Nixon plan's requirement that a person accept work or job training pre-condition to eligibility. "The truth is," one welfare mother observed, "if you are over 35, you just can't get a job."

Shifting the power to certify eligibility from the welfare agency to the employment agency will not, it is feared, isolate the process from the economic and racial demands of the surrounding community—demands that can mean simply that poor people should not be trained out of ready availability as maids, yard men and field hands. The same demands can mean that "suitable" jobs for black people are exactly those jobs they fill exclusively now—the dirtiest, the most demeaning work, for which white people usually are hired last when there are

The States' Welfare Payments

Spending for AFDC, 1968 (in Millions)

	Total	Federal		State		Local
Ala.	$16.9	$14	(83.3%)	$2.8	(16.7%)	$ .016	(.1%)
Ark.	$10	$ 8	(80.2%)	$2	(19.8%)	None
Fla.	$37	$29.8	(80.4%)	$7.3	(19.6%)	None
Ga.	$35	$27.7	(78.3%)	$6.3	(17.7%)	$1.4	(4%)
La.	$40.9	$32.2	(78.6%)	$8.8	(21.4%)	None
Miss.	$10.6	$ 8.8	(83.7%)	$1.7	(16.3%)	None
N.C.	$39.6	$30	(76 %)	$5.6	(14.1%)	$4	(10%)
S.C.	$ 7	$ 5.8	(82.4%)	$1.2	(17.6%)	None
Tenn.	$32.9	$25.6	(77.7%)	$5.9	(17.9%)	$1.5	$4.5%)
Tex.	$33.9	$27.6	(81.4%)	$6.3	(18.6%)	None
Va.	$23.9	$17.5	(73 %)	$3.9	(16.3%)	$2.6	(10.7%)

Average Payment to Families Under AFDC, April, 1969

Alabama	$63.95
Arkansas	78.40
Florida	80.10
Georgia	95.00
Louisiana	103.05
Mississippi	39.35
North Carolina	113.25
South Carolina	71.60
Tennessee	102.15
Texas	85.85
Virginia	149.65

Welfare: What Kind of Priorities for America?

Behind the surprisingly favorable first reaction to President Nixon's welfare message lies a political development of the utmost significance—the agreement by the leaders of the two major political parties to a policy of gradualism in social reform.

It is a policy that would delay significant increases in the amount of aid to the victims of poverty, discrimination, malnutrition, poor education and poor health services until after new efforts have been made to improve the machinery by which that aid is delivered.

More pertinently, it is a policy that would in effect purchase future assistance to the poor, the black, the hungry and the needy by prior steps to cool the tempers, protect the sensitivities and line the pockets of the white middle-class.

This policy of social gradualism matches the political mood of the country today but it carries serious risk of future unrest. It is this risk the politicians of both parties find convenient to overlook.

It is a high-risk policy because it asks those who have least today—the smallest share in the power and profits of this society and economy—to wait while those of us who have most once again revise our plans for their future. It provides them precious little help or hope—or reason for patience.

This comment may seem strange, in the wake of a presidential message that Mr. Nixon's aides have modestly hailed as the most far-reaching social reform since the early New Deal.

The President's welfare program is important, but we should not delude ourselves as to its content. A basic choice was made—as White House officials said at the briefing on the program—between proposals that would lift benefit levels and eliminate welfare poverty and those that would make structural reforms and eliminate the "bureaucratic monstrosity" the President said the welfare system has become.

The choice was for structural reform and Mr. Nixon made useful suggestions for overhauling the welfare bureaucracy, for linking income-assistance to job-training and for making other changes aimed at reducing the long-term cost to our society of caring for its rejects.

But if the Nixon plan is accepted, only two of every five needy children would be guaranteed any increase in benefits. In 47 of the 50 states, the new federal program would still leave a welfare family living far below the nationally defined poverty line.

The welfare program decision must be seen as part of a pattern of policy, made by the Nixon administration, to be sure, but unchallenged by the leaders of the opposition Democratic party.

Gradualism has also become the order of the day in the antipoverty program, in model

By DAVID BRODER
In The Washington Post

cities and housing and, notably, in school desegregation.

The slowdown in many of these social programs has often been laid to the Vietnam war budget squeeze. But that rationalization was shattered last week when the House decided that the revenues raised by tax reform should be used, not for any social purpose, but to justify further reductions in individual income taxes.

That is the bipartisan congressional policy; that is the Nixon policy; and it is also the policy of Hubert H. Humphrey, the titular leader of the Democratic party, who declared on Sunday that his new ambition is to "speak for that Mr. America"—the white worker making between $5,000 and $15,000 a year—who is indistinguishable from the "forgotten American" to whom Mr. Nixon dedicated his 1968 campaign.

It is marvelous that everyone has become so concerned about him. But the gap between "Mr. Forgotten America" and his white suburban neighbors—in education and income and health and every other measure of well-being—and those living in the black urban ghettos has not closed. And in the ghetto, the rage, the frustration and the sense of isolation grows.

We have been warned by the Kerner Commission that "our nation is moving toward two societies, one black, one white—separate and unequal."

The fact that both parties' leaders close their eyes to that warning does not alter its truth. How much time is left for gradualism? (ST) any black people available. The record of the Nixon administration to date in enforcing the spectrum of nondiscriminatory laws gives no comfort to those who know that someone is still going to have to do the dirty work and who know that tradition has reserved that kind of work for black hands.

Welfare . . . From Page 4

The jobs black people can get most easily in Atlanta or Tunica or across the South are precisely those jobs that are not covered by minimum wage legislation. Some see the Nixon plan as a puny substitute for extending wage coverage and charge that it is in effect a subsidy for those very employers who are hardest set against having to pay minimum wages. One welfare recipient, who worked many years as a maid, said Nixon would do a lot better by poor people if he proposed that everyone who works be paid the minimum wage. Maids in Atlanta average about $8.00 a day, much higher than many small towns where a woman cannot expect much more than 35 cents an hour.

It is possible that by increasing and broadening coverage of federal minimum wage legislation as many people could be brought out of poverty as by the plan the President has proposed. There is a tacit admission in the proposal that the wage standard is inadequate, since a family head employed full-time at the minimum wage could not earn enough to disqualify his family for some part of Mr. Nixon's welfare.

Another grave shortcoming seen by people working with the present system is that programs of assistance to individuals, as opposed to families—payments for the aged, the blind, and the disabled—are not affected except for a raise in basic payments to $65 a month. The tortuous process of getting oneself certified as eligible, especially in the area of establishing disability, remains unchanged.

These are some of the questions raised by Mr. Nixon's plan, particularly as it might apply to the South. There is also a sense of irony surrounding the aspects of the plan that are clear. A welfare mother in Atlanta pointed out some of the irony, observing that it was strange the President should be so insistent that poor people work, when, she said, it is precisely the poor people who do work.

Simply stated, in the South the things that get lifted and the things that get moved are lifted and moved by the hands of poor people, most of them black. And middle-class people, who do not do the lifting, are seldom collectively accused of being guilty of laziness, shiftlessness, and bad morals, and subjected to the advice that all this could be overcome if they would just go to work. (ST)

Students:

They Could Help In Rural Areas

A thousand college students will be thrown into a rural Georgia work-study project within the next few months in an ambitious step aimed at reversing the great migration to the cities—if a tall black history professor can get the money for the program.

William H. Peace III, 33, 6-foot-5 part-time history instructor at Georgia Tech and bearded devotee of the late Muslim leader Malcolm X, has come up with an imaginative plan for dealing with urban-rural problems.

"The crisis in the cities is a misnomer," says Peace. "The real problem is the rural areas: The out-migration of unskilled, uneducated and poor who are unable to compete in the cities. We have been going about solving the problem the wrong way."

Peace's proposal would engage students at 10 colleges and universities throughout the state in working on rural problems as part of their academic study. They would enroll in a college course supervised by a professor and receive academic credits for their work.

Peace has been delving into rural problems since 1967 as director of Southern Rural Project, a limited program for helping rural poor organize, sponsored by the National Sharecroppers Fund and financed by the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity.

-◐-

Already, the 10 pilot colleges, strategically located throughout Georgia, have either agreed to participate in his proposed "Georgia Student Rural Project" or have expressed keen interest.

At Georgia Tech in Atlanta, 26 students in an architecture course have begun research for developing low-income houses for the rural poor as part of GSRP, prospectively.

Dr. Alfred Jay Bollet, chairman of the Medical College of Georgia's School of Medicine in Augusta, said staff members and medical students were enthusiastic about Peace's proposal for involving them in the project.

Peace wants to involve medical students in giving health care for the poor while the students conduct diagnostic studies to identify health problems with particular emphasis on nutritional problems, young mothers and birth defects.

His project initially would include 100 students from each of the 10 colleges. In addition to medical and engineering classes, other courses would run the gamut of college agriculture, social work. Peace says the project will allow students to gain practical knowledge—and a feeling of involvement—while contributing to solving major problems.

The GSRP courses would be taken in addition to regular studies by juniors, seniors and graduate students who wished to participate.

Peace's proposal has been submitted to a large foundation in an effort to get financing. He estimates the cost, with the colleges providing some space and supervision, at $327,000 a year. He also intends to call on major Georgia businesses and industries for help, financially and in job training and placement.

The project will be a continuing one, Peace envisions, expanding into full units of "Rural Studies" and taking equal footing with established departments, such as agriculture and engineering, at the participating colleges and universities.

William Peace

"This is the first time a number of colleges have come together in a coordinated effort to attack rural poverty," he said. "We hope to use Georgia as a model to illustrate what can be accomplished, utilizing students and the private sector working together."

In Georgia, he said, 89 of the 159 counties have median family incomes below the poverty level and another 25 "on the borderline."

"Unless conditions in these counties are improved, we can not hope to begin to stem the outmigration from the rural areas by the hundreds of thousands of people who, despite the fact that they are ill-equipped, will pack up and head for the already overcrowded cities," he said.

In his work with the federal project, Peace said, it became apparent that no government agency has the resources to put the necessary manpower into the field.

In Georgia alone, the antipoverty program spends $17.6 million a year and employs 3,000 persons, he said. "Yet, in spite of this enormous sum, poverty in Georgia has not diminished; in the rural areas it has actually increased."

But if all the 58 colleges and universities of the state took part in his project, with only 100 students from each, virtually every rural community would have access to the benefits these centers can provide, he said.

Peace, a 1961 graduate of Shaw University in North Carolina, is convinced his idea will work. It is a workable answer to student unrest, he says.

-◐-

"If you look closely behind the campus happenings, the kids are saying they want to actually get involved in some of the problems they'll be facing after they leave the academic world," he said.

"Now many colleges do not have an outlet for this kind of feeling. Not only will this project be beneficial to rural people, but also to students—as well as the participating colleges."

The essence of GSRP, he said, "will be to provide economic development for rural areas," drawing on the tremendous resources of the colleges through its students and its contacts with business, industry and government. (ST)

By DON McKEE
The Associated Press
In The Chattanooga Times

'And He Told Us . . . That All Our Worries Was Over'

peonage in florida

By ROBERT COLES
and HARRY HUGE
In The New Republic

Around October, cold spells begin to reach up North and into the Midwest, and thousands of Americans remind themselves that in a nation as large as ours, spread out over so many latitudes, a willing traveller can find summer anytime. So the trek to Florida begins. The southern part of the state begins to bulge with the rich and not-so-rich, the owners of winter homes and the one-week guests who fill up thousands of hotels, motels and rooming houses.

Others also manage a return to Florida in October, though to get there they don't use jets or toll roads. Often they even shun our new and free interstate roads, and if asked why, they demur, or quickly assert their wish to move quietly, to attract nobody's attention. Yet, they do get attention. When they arrive at a state line, they may be met by the police and told to go right through, fast and with no stops at all; if they should try to pause here and there, to use a restroom or enter a restaurant, they are quickly singled out and shouted at and pushed away.

The owner of one gas station in Collier County, Florida told us who these other winter visitors are:

"They're dirty, the migrants. They'll come by, and I tell them to scram . . . . We're a first-class station, and if tourists or the regular people here drove up and saw those migrants around, they'd go somewhere else with their business, and I wouldn't blame them. You don't come from up North all the way to Collier County, only to find yourself standing next to—the likes of them."

What are they like? Where do they come from and how do they live, the some 100,000 migrant farmers who each year harvest Florida's vegetables and fruit, worth millions of dollars?

Actually we don't know all there is to know, because the migrants commonly slip by census-takers or local officials charged with recording births and deaths. Nomads, itinerants, wanderers, they live everywhere and nowhere. Each county of each state calls them someone else's responsibility, though in all places the terribly hard and demanding work they do is considered essential. Nor has the federal government ever seen fit to step in and say, yes they will in a sense belong to all of us, for whose benefit, after all, so much of that travelling and stopping and cutting and picking is done. On the contrary, migrant farmers are denied just about every benefit that 30 years of struggle achieved for other workers—such as the right to organize into labor unions without harassment and bargain collectively with employers, and the right to get unemployment insurance or a degree of compensation for injuries sustained at work. Most migrants can't vote, are ineligible for any kind of welfare or other advantages and services that towns or counties offer their residents.

Here is how one migrant worker talked to us about his life as a virtual peon:

"I was 13 or 14, I think it was, and my daddy was telling us that we were in real bad trouble, because the government up in Washington was giving the bossman a lot of money, and in return he wasn't doing as much planting as before; and what he was planting, he was going to do it all by machine and he didn't need us any more to pick the crops. So, he told us we could stay there in the cabins, but that was all, and the sooner we went up to Chicago the better, he said, and my daddy was all set to go with us, but we got the message that his sister up there had died all of a sudden, and he got scared to go.

"I remember him saying that if we went up there, we'd all die like his sister, and if we stayed down on that plantation, we'd not last long, and so there wasn't anything to choose—except that one day a man came along, and he was going from door to door, he said, and signing up for work, to pick the crops he said, over in Florida. And he told us, I remember, that all our worries was over, and all we had to do was go on over there with him and the others and do what we knew to do, pick some beans and some tomatoes and like that, and it wasn't any different from working on cotton, and maybe easier, he said . . . . And would you believe it that they had these buses, four of them I recall, and they put us on them . . . .

"Believe me, sir, we wants to stop and find us a place to live, all year round, like other folks do. But if you're trying to eat, and you owe them all that money, and you have to eat while you try to get even and not be owing them, well then, you just have to go up North and come back, or else they'll have you in jail, I'll tell you that, or worse than that, much worse, they'll just go and pull the trigger, I believe some of them might, if you tried to run free of them. And I'd like to know where you could go even if they let you, and they didn't try to stop you, and they didn't call the sheriff, and they even drove you where you wanted to go. We wouldn't know where to go, because the people, they just don't want us, to use their restrooms or even buy from them. They'll tell you to 'git,' and they sure mean it, you can tell on their face by the way they looks down on you."

His story is not unusual. Thousands of sharecroppers and tenant farmers have gone North to our cities, where they frequently found no work and went on welfare. Thousands of other field hands have given their lives to constant travel and the hardest, most menial jobs, for which they are called "lazy" and "shiftless' and paid the lowest possible wages. (Only recently did farm workers come under the protection of the minimum-wage law, and their minimum wage just moved up from $1.15 to $1.30 per hour, whereas other workers are guaranteed $1.60 per hour.)

Worse, migrants like the man just quoted fall victim to a kind of peonage that seals not only their fate but that of their children. They are brought to Florida, whole families or single men or single women or groups of teen-aged children. The men who bring them are called "contractors" or "crew leaders," and are paid, say $50 a head, (their words) by growers. The frightened, confused former sharecroppers and their children are housed in camps and put to work, but soon they discover that in return for long hours on their knees out in the fields they will get very little cash. For one thing, in the course of a year there are days, even weeks, when there is no work to be had. The migrants move from one camp to another, and become part of a world few outsiders know anything about. The camps have their own stores and vendors, and are often guarded by "camp boys" who walk around with guns. Migrants are told they cannot leave unless all their debts are paid; the ledgers are tallied by the men who own and run the camps.

We visited the camps and the fields all through Collier County and Palm Beach County. We saw the same sites that recently shocked Sen. McGovern's Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs: broken-down shacks, some without even windows, some nothing more than enlarged outhouses without running water or heat, a few even without electricity, all of which rent for $10, $15, even $20 a week. The drinking water is often contaminated, taken as it is from superficial wells located near garbage-filled swamps. Children are supposed to walk a quarter of a mile or more to unspeakably inadequate outdoor privies. There are no showers, no baths, no stoves and often no refrigerators. Entire families live in one room, sleep, if lucky, on mattresses, live on soda pop and bread and grits and fat-back and cheap candy.

Yet, Collier County has no food-stamp program, no commodity food program, and no welfare program for migrants, who have been called by local officials "federal people," or "not our people." In Collier County's Immokalee, an Indian word which ironically means "my home," we saw children not only hungry and malnourished, but obviously and seriously ill, yet never seen by physicians. Born "on the road," brought up on buses and trucks, or carried from farm to farm in cars, left to themselves in the fields and, when 12 or 13, quietly put to work in the fields, they nevertheless have to be considered fortunate if they are still alive, since the infant mortality rate for such children in places like Collier County is estimated to be about five times that of other American children. The children are badly frightened and confused. They live unstable, chaotic lives and feel at loose ends, worthless, virtually dead.

Back in Immokalee we were offended, disgusted; later in Naples there was the tropical green water and the soft sand and a long, long pier where we could stand and discuss things with Michael Foster and Michael Kantor, two resourceful young lawyers who work for the South Florida Migrant Legal Services in Collier County and every day try to get housing codes enforced, and money paid to people who have bent and stooped from dawn to dusk, only to be denied their rightful earnings, or who have gone for weeks without work, without unemployment compensation, without relief payments.

What is to be done? The two lawyers told us they could only keep trying, keep pressing matters through the courts—though even that method has caused an uproar among Florida's political leaders. We said we could report on what we had seen and learned, even though we know that in past decades reports have been written and written—and the evident futility of all those words must haunt those who wrote them. Perhaps, we speculated, the only answer to the problem is one suggested by a tough, angry "community organizer"—an "outside agitator," no doubt about it, we met near Immokalee:

"Look, you people can do your lawyering and your doctoring and your writing, but a lot of good it will do these people. They're in bondage, don't you see that? They're treated like animals—in a country that's the richest, fattest country in the world. They have no constituency, that's the problem. They don't even have the kind of constituency the blacks do in Mississippi—you know, the Northern liberals, with the voting laws they've put through, and like that. These people have nothing to fall back on but the conscience of the nation, and a lot of good that's done for them. I'll tell you, there's only one way to change things here in Florida, in Collier County. Over there in Naples there's Roger Blough of United States Steel, and there's the president of Grant's department store, and there's the president of Eli Lilly, and all the rest. They have it nice here in Florida. There's no personal income tax, and there's no tax on the corporations. I'll bet if the migrants started marching down that highway 846 to Naples, and fought their way to that Gulf Shore Boulevard there—well, I'll bet the people who live there would call in those sheriffs and county commissioners, and they'd call in the politicians who do what they're told to do and say to all of them: boys, give them a bigger slice, because we don't want any more trouble here. You hear that! And then the migrants would be a little better off and you guys, you'd praise yourselves and all your attitudes and say like you always do: democracy, it's wonderful!"

We are in no danger of the kind of middle-class self-congratulations he scornfully described—the kind that follows a successful uprising of the poor. For there's no danger the migrants will be causing anyone much trouble. They will roam the land, follow the sun and the crops, harvest our food, and go on getting just about nothing. (ST)

(Reprinted by permission of The New Republic, c. 1969, Harrison-Blaine of New Jersey, Inc.)

Migrants:

What Makes Them Tick?

Dr. Coles, a psychiatrist, made a study of migrant farmers for the Southern Regional Council in 1965. Entitled THE MIGRANT FARMER: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY, it is available for 30 cents a copy or 20 cents in orders of 10 or more.

Some excerpts from that study, pertinent to the accompanying article on Florida migrants, follow:

To view the more formally psychiatric disorders seen in migrants, we must see much of their behavior, as with all of us, as an attempt to adapt to (cope with) the particular kind of life which is theirs. There is little sense in taking middle-class social and cultural standards and transposing them to migrant families as measurements of their "normal" or "abnormal" behavior. While it is true that migrants share an American citizenship with us all, their living conditions and habits have a quality all their own.

They may drink heavily before or after work, using the cheap wine and beer they can afford to dull their senses in the face of, or in the wake of, their long hours of harvesting. They may become nasty and violent with one another, just as when children they were allowed to be toward neighbors. They often became careless and hurtful toward the homes furnished them by farmers, destroying screen doors, stopping up the central plumbing facilities of a camp. Some may call such behavior "accidental;" but many farmers are correct in sensing the barely submerged hostility and resentment at work in these people.

The migrants don't specifically "intend" to damage property, but are aware of feeling overworked and underpaid, and carry those feelings around with them fairly constantly.

Apathy, gloom, and severe depressions are seen in many migrants, and depressions severe and crippling enough to be considered psychotic.

Again and again one hears that migrants are unreliable, unkempt, lacking in thrift and tidiness. Worse, they tend to be willfully destructive of property, heavy drinkers, quarrelsome with one another, and generally a discouraging and depressing lot, unresponsive to aid, sullen before advice, ill-suited even for more money or better working and living conditions. And their employers make a sound case, not only for this, but for their own precarious position in our economy.

Such assertions and complaints lodged by many intelligent growers and hard working officials in the fields of migrant health and education are hard to dispute.

My observations, however, tend to indicate that migrants, including white migrants, have developed certain characteristic attitudes on the basis of their work and travel habits. The constant movement, the threat of social chaos, the cramped living and traveling, make for common problems and remarkably similar responses to them which separate to some extent migrant behavior from that of the rest of the poor.

What is the psychological effect of living the migrant life in a land where others seem well able to live a more settled and comfortable one? The drawings of migrant children show that they know such facts and generally tend to judge themselves in some way weaker, blemished, guilty, or at fault for their condition. There is a tendency . . . to feel not only weak and hard pressed but responsible for that fate. (ST) decorated with marshmallows. A case of champagne was iced down.

Gee's Bend . . .

From Page 2

At last the Rev. Lonny Brown, a Baptist preacher from Gee's Bend, stood before the altar. The choir of ladies sang several spirituals. Selengut and his best man walked in and faced the large congregation. The groom, his moustache combed and his Edwardian suit neatly pressed, was as delighted as we all were when the bridesmaids, dressed in white and carrying zinnias from the yard, marched forward. Next came the maid of honor, a very sophisticated lady from New York who was dressed elegantly in lime green. (She was later seen bouncing a black baby in her lap on the front porch of the old house.)

And finally, the bride, dressed in white lace (but not looking at all traditional in her pants suit), walked to the front of the room.

Once begun the ceremony was short and simple. As soon as Stanley Selengut and Jody Bradford were pronounced man and wife, the whole room swept toward the champagne and cake. Flash bulbs popped. The bride and the groom were congratulated.

The heat seemed to increase with the joy. The band began to play again and the crowd began to disperse. Some stayed close to the champagne they had never tasted, but most went outside where it was cooler, or up to the house where the feast was being served.

We were still eating when they unloaded the white horse with dayglow ribbons in its mane from a U-Haul trailer. It was Selengut's wedding present to the community. A farming cooperative had recently been organized in Gee's Bend and a horse was needed to plow.

Down by the pasture fence there were children and young couples admiring this wonderful creature. It was like a scene from William Saroyan's "The Summer of the Beautiful White Horse." For Gee's Bend, this too, was the summer of the beautiful white horse.

The faces of the children and young people couldn't hide the pride, happiness and hope that they were all feeling on this very special day. The Freedom Quilting Bee, in a way, had made it all possible. It was the catalyst that brought Stanley Selengut and Jody Bradford together. It had given the community economic relief, raising the earnings of its workers from 25 cents to a dollar an hour. It and the new farming cooperative were giving the people of Gee's Bend hope for a better future. And now, like a symbol of hope and good fortune, Gee's Bend has a beautiful white horse. (ST)

Johnny Cash . . .

From Page 1

Clifton is celebrated in the song for stubbornly holding to such a filling station, such a concept of a filling station, in the face of changed technology and changes in his town which have left it out of the way. Cars hardly ever come by any more; when they do, he patiently directs them to the state highway.

He holds to the station even after the interstate comes through and destroys what little base there is for such a filling station, selling only regular gas and sitting on a little-used road. Cisco Clifton has to work nights to support it, says the song at its end, but every morning he opens the station, and the checker game continues. And when rarely a car does chance in, there's a friendly word and genuine helpfulness waiting.

The song is a poignant and respectful rendition of the urge in the South to cling stubbornly to ways of life that are obsolete in the technology and efficiency of modern America. It acknowledges that devotion in the South to values that are irrelevent to and beyond high-powered, high-speed, mechanistic utility. And what is so good to see throughout the film about Cash is, for once, acknowledgment of the good there is in

'Country,' Like Jazz, Is the People's Music

By PAT WATTERS

some of those ways of life the South keeps wanting to preserve, that not all of the old values white Southerners cherish are tainted by racism.

The remarkable achievement of the film is that it portrays Southerners—mostly white ones because the music is mostly a phenomenon of the white culture—in their good light, treating them with respect and dignity and appreciation. One need only consider the tasteless and essentially cruel stereotyping of Southerners, both black and white, throughout the history of American entertainment's portrayal of them, or even the many failures of conscientious and competent artists in efforts to render the South and Southerners fairly, to realize how rare this film's accomplishment is. I can think of no other motion picture that has done what it has, and only a few books—Agee's Let Us Now Praise Famous Men, and even more genuinely, McCullars' A Death In the Family; or Wolfe at his best, and Eudora Welty. Faulkner had such a hold on the universal and epic qualities of Southerners that most often their smaller virtues and charms are lost. It is the general run of undistinguished, undepraved, and, often, sadly, underprivileged Southerners, the kind of people who most respond to Cash's music, country music, that the film captures with fidelity and quiet beauty.

Politeness and quiet pleasure in other people and in nature, the dignified beauty of women on whom a rough life has left its marks, sly humor—these are among the virtues that come through. Scene after scene comes to mind: the joy of people whom Cash visits back in the cotton-plantation town where he grew up to see him again—not welcoming him as a celebrity, but as the old home boy they remember from the past; the love Cash himself shows for this Arkansas home country of his, seeing it not as the sordid place of exploitation most Americans feel a plantation town to be, but saying of its little row of stores what a "pretty place" it is; the words of his wife, June Carter, similarly saying over and over what a fine house for those old days the little bungalow where he lived had been; the crowd's seeking his autograph after a performance, quiet and polite and genuinely responding to him as a person, not clamoring in the usual frenzy of celebrity-worship in such scenes outside the South ("Thank you," they said clutching their autographed programs, and "Thank you," he replied, meaning it.)

The love of the music—by performers and audience alike—is a touching theme throughout the film.

The South produced this music, just as it produced that greater, more innovative contribution to world culture, Negro jazz. And what seems almost as remarkable, almost as great an achievement, is that the South has been able with both musics—country and jazz—to hold onto honesty and authenticity in them, to resist their being degraded and cheapened. That mindless will of much American popular culture to debase music, movies, books and art has somehow not been able to destroy country music and jazz. This is the achievement, first, of the audiences. For jazz, these audiences include much of Negro America, with its strong roots in Southern culture; and for country music, the audiences are still mainly white Southerners. It is like Cisco Clifton and his filling station; they have stubbornly clung to a way of life, a preference in music that they know is better than the weak and tinny, soul-less stuff proffered them by the Hollywood, television, Madison Avenue kind of mentality.

The achievement is also partly that of the performers—generations of jazzmen, black and white, and country musicians like Cash. That rare respect shown in the Cash film for the humanity of the South was not superimposed, but was simply an artistic reflection of country music's respect for its audiences, of Cash's attitudes toward the people for whom he sings, and of the basic assumptions of country music itself. It celebrates the human condition. The music does not romanticize or glamorize it, but speaks plainly about its basics: birth and death and love and love thwarted, working and supporting a family, traveling, playing, enjoying; but sickness also, and heartbreak and tragedy. (Jazz stays with the same basic themes. It tells of them in terms of the emotions, whereas country music tends merely to describe; jazz is psychological, country music is sociological.)

The South has for so long held to hopeless, lost causes, to ruinous ways of life like racism, that it comes as a shock, a greatly moving, pleasurable one to a Southerner, to see in such a film as this the strong evidence of good, too, that the South, in its unwillingness to change with every wind, can proffer to the nation. The two musics, jazz and country, come together in the psychedelic rock music that so entrances, now, the young of the world—this Southern music (and they say we are culturally deprived down here), close to and faithful to the ordinary run of Southern humanity. Young people all over the world move now in the ancient drama of trying, out of their best instincts to build themselves into a constructive force. But they also show themselves to be heirs to destruction, capable of massacre and the building of prisons. Surely their good instincts will be nurtured by these two good Southern musics so full of respect for the human condition, these assertions of human values over totalitarian ones. Maybe they will make the world, those young people, a place fit for Cisco Clifton's filling station. (ST)

Mr. Watters, information director for the Southern Regional Council, is on leave of absence under a Rockefeller Foundation writing grant.

Photo by Floyd Jillson

Ivan Allen

Status of Blacks Is No. 1 Challenge

Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. of Atlanta will retire at the end of this year after eight years in office. He has attained an international reputation, largely because of his efforts in the fields of civil rights and poverty. Many municipal observers believe he has been the most successful big-city mayor in America.

Following are excerpts from an interview of Mayor Allen by Raleigh Bryans and Margaret Shannon which appeared in The Atlanta Journal-Constitution Magazine.

Q When you announced you weren't going to run again, you said that the No. 1 problem of Atlanta is the status of the Negro citizen.

A. The race problem.

Q. Do you rate this above expansion of the city limits?

A. Sure.

Q. Do you think, as some people seem to, that annexation would "take care" of the problem, so to speak?

A. That would relieve one of many problems, which is the takeover of the city by the poor that are moving in here. That's not wholly a race issue, although it's mostly Negro people. It's also poor white.

It's not healthy to have your established people moved out merely to accommodate new people who have no roots, no background or anything else. All this has got to be provided for them.

The problem of race is a problem of nearly every city in America, but obviously the magnitude of it is so much greater in Atlanta than nearly anywhere else except Washington, D.C., because you've got 45 or 46 per cent Negro population; 125,000 of them have moved in here in the last 10 or 12 years.

Q. Could a Negro mayor run Atlanta effectively now?

A. If he's qualified with experience and training—yes, he could run Atlanta.

Q. Even though the balance of population has not yet tipped?

A. Well, let's put it this way: He would have problems that I don't have. The stringency of his problems would be greater than what I'm confronted with because there's that much racial prejudice left in the picture.

Q. Is it your opinion that the Negro community at this time would prefer to maintain the old alliance of Negroes with white moderates and elect a white mayor this year?

A. I think there's every indication of that.

Q. Since you announced you are not going to run again, you've said you could speak with greater candor and complete freedom without people saying you're seeking the Negro vote.

A. Or the white vote.

Q. How much has this kind of charge inhibited you from saying what you wanted to say in the past?

A. I don't think that I've been inhibited by that. I was merely explaining that, in kind of a reverse position, whatever I said or did could not now be charged to politics. It couldn't be discounted for that reason. It was bound to have a greater ring of sincerity in it than it had hithertofore.

Q. Once you became mayor, did you do many things because you understood the racial problem better?

A. Yes, I think as I became more deeply involved in the plight of the Negro citizen, I tended to become more dogmatic in my approach to get things done to relieve that condition. I think this is characteristic of nearly every person that moved into the civil rights arena.

Once you got into it, you were pushed by two things to becoming more deeply involved. One, you saw the grievous need of the Negro citizen for equal rights. But you were also pushed into it by the almost ridiculous and bitter criticism of the racists that came into the thing. Their denouncement of almost every liberal I've seen, or nearly anyone that goes into public office, sooner or later has tended to increase the efforts of those who have liberal views.

Q. You once told me that the problems of the Negro, or civil rights problems, occupied almost 60 per cent of your time.

A. Way over half my time in my first term was involved in civil rights up until the passage of the civil rights bill in 1964.

Q. You appeared before the Senate Commerce Committee in Washington in 1963 in support of the public accommodations bill. President Kennedy called you and asked you to make that statement, didn't he?

A. He sent Morris Abram to see me first. (Abram, now president of Brandeis University, is a former Atlanta lawyer.)

Q. And then President Kennedy called you later? What did he tell you?

A. Asked me to support it. He said he couldn't pass it.

Q. He needed some Southern support?

A. Of course, he never did pass it. It passed as a result of his death.

Q. Had you made up your mind by the time he called you?

A. No, I was lingering in doubt.

Q. There were occasions when you proceeded to take a step when you were in advance of public opinion, as when you testified for the public accommodations section. You encountered some backlash from that, did you not?

A. Oh, yes. I came home to the most bitter denunciation on the part of the business community in Atlanta. This was the only time in my seven years that I had a substantial break with the business community.

Q. Are there divisions within the business community on the racial problem?

A. I would say the business community runs the gamut of public opinion.

Q. Do you detect some who are more inclined to push progressive things?

A. There's no question about that. But I couldn't separate them. The type of business they had had no influence. When you look at the segments of the civil rights issue —school integration, public accommodations, employment, voting rights and now open housing—by far the most successful one in the field of desegregation has been public accommodations. Far more successful than school desegregation.

Q. What is the root of the problem of race? Is it white racism, as President Johnson's Commission on Civil Disorders said?

A. There's far more than that. It's also dissatisfaction on the part of the Negro for what he has been subjected to and denied, and what he has been subjected to and denied is where it creates the conflict with the white community. The white community basically looks upon most Negro citizens as not yet fully acceptable, economically, socially, any other way. And you're not going to get all of this straightened out until you raise the level of the Negro citizen to where he's thoroughly acceptable.

Q. Would you be specific about ways to raise the level?

A. I know of no basic ways except what we're pursuing now. Education, improved educational facilities, better housing to accommodate him on a sound level and some real job opportunities.

Q. The Atlanta Board of Education has just been subjected to some criticism recently that it's not doing enough to try to raise the educational level of Negroes. Has this foot-dragging, if there has been any, been a handicap to your administration?

A. Let me answer that this way: I think the school board, particularly superintendent of schools (John W.) Letson, has made a very deep, sincere, honest, big effort to improve conditions in the schools and to integrate the school system satisfactorily. The magnitude of the job and the problems that are inherent in it are almost overwhelming.

Of the five civil rights steps I've mentioned, I think we've had less success in school integration than in any other one except fair housing, which we're just into since the first of the year. When I look at the actual picture in the schools today, I simply don't have any idea how the school board is going to solve the dilemma.

I don't know that Letson can move fast enough to cope with that problem. School average daily attendance figures have already jumped up way over 60 per cent Negro.

Q. If open housing should work, would that help resolve the problem of the school system?

A. Certainly it would help a great deal. But when you get to the open housing field, as a general statement there hasn't been a single neighborhood in America satisfactorily integrated up to the present time. So we're taking on one terrible task.

I think neighborhoods can be satisfactorily integrated if the normal factors of society related to economics are permitted to react in a reasonable way. There are many neighborhoods in Atlanta in which a Negro family of comparable standards could buy and move in tomorrow without the white man running again. If we try to move them in large quantities, by legislative means or by governmental power, I don't think it's going to succeed at all.

Q. How much harder has your job as mayor been because Lester Maddox is governor?

A. Although he has gotten in the way on a local sales tax—had someone else been governor, we might have been able to pass that—his general demeanor and attitude have been favorable toward the city. What I'm saying may sound strange coming from me, but our relationship as far as the operation of the city is concerned has been pleasant.

Q. Weren't there a few occasions when you were nervous lest he interfere?

A. Yes, because he didn't have an established record of handling racial problems, and there was always the hazard in the early days of his administration—well, we didn't know what action he would take. But in general his response to racial crisis that we've been through while he's been in office is that he has recognized the ability of the city to cope with them and has stood aside. He certainly did not intervene during the King funeral (Martin Luther King Jr.). He had his own actions. ST

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Address Correction Requested)

ATLANTA GA.

Bulk Rate
U. S. Postage
PAID
Permit No. 1085

'A Piece Of the Action'

It was a brisk, sunny day in Roanoke, Ala., and everybody, from Fats Domino to Richard Nixon, had "a piece of the action," as President Nixon himself has said everyone in this country should have. Dignitaries (most of them black) had flown down from Washington on an Air Force jet and then had been whisked to Roanoke by friendly Alabama state troopers, who obligingly inquired whether they would like to travel "fiftyish" or "sixtyish." Scores of other public and private bureaucrats had driven in from regional offices in Atlanta and state offices in Montgomery. The townspeople themselves had turned out to swell the audience honoring J. A. Terry to approximately 600.

"The Roanoke Area Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Market Developers Cordially Invite You to an Awards Luncheon Honoring Mr. J. A. Terry and Terry Manufacturing Company," the engraved invitation said. A press release suggested this probably would be the first time an all-white chamber of commerce in the South had honored a black businessman.

Until six years ago Mr. Terry, a man of slight build and gentle demeanor, had done upholstering for the people of Roanoke and Randolph County, in the Appalachian foothills of east central Alabama. He and his wife, Velma, worked in a small shop with a couple of helpers. In 1963 Mr. Terry decided to gamble his savings and to use his continuing income from upholstering to start a small manufacturing operation. He obtained five sewing machines and began to train operators. (Nobody from Washington was even within sight.) Soon Mr. Terry negotiated a loan from a banker in nearby Wadley, Leon Phillips, brother of the mayor of Roanoke, J. B. Phillips. That enabled him to start expansion. (Still no excitement in Washington or nearby corporate offices.) Later he had another loan, from a Roanoke bank, and one from the Small Business Administration. (Enter Washington.)

To Page 8

South's Taxes Hit Poor Hardest

The South—with more poverty than any other section of the country—is bound to a system of taxation that places a disproportionate burden on poor and middle-income citizens.

This is the major finding of a study released this month by the Southern Regional Council. The report is by Dr. Eva Galambos, an Atlanta research consultant specializing in fiscal problems.

In an introduction to the report, Paul Anthony, executive director of SRC, notes that the study "grew out of a conviction that state and local governments were not adequately equipped because of outmoded tax structures to deal with a host of unmet public needs." Among other programs which suffer from insufficient financing in the South, Anthony named public education, mental and penal institutions and public assistance.

Dr. Galambos notes that ability to pay is the most widely accepted standard for achieving tax equity. This is the criterion on which federal income taxes are based. In the language of tax experts, if tax rates increase with income the system is called progressive as opposed to regressive. Sales taxes are regressive in that their impact decreases as income rises.

All Southern states' major sources of revenue are examined in the report, including (1) general and specific sales taxes (2) personal and corporate income taxes (3) licenses and (4) property taxes.

Sales taxes, which hit the poor harder than any other major source of tax revenue, represent 58.1 per cent of state taxes nationally. In the Southern states this figure ranges from a low of 46.8 per cent in Virginia to 77.9 per cent in Mississippi. (The figures include both general

To Page 7

SOUTH TODAY

A Digest of Southern Affairs

ATLANTA, GA. VOL. 1, NO. 5 NOVEMBER, 1969

20¢

Rural Poverty And Farm Bias

THE U.S. DEPARTMENT of Agriculture remains the federal government's worst practitioner of racial discrimination. No Negro has yet become a county agent in the South. And after this fall's selections, only two Negroes serve among 4,100 regular county ASCS committeemen in the region. A SOUTH TODAY report by Kitty Griffith. Page 4.

"A LOT OF LAW is being broken in Alabama with the federal government accessory before and after the fact," Paul Good wrote in a report on farm discrimination. His conclusions still stand. Page 4.

SOME BLACK FARMERS and others are finding a way out through cooperatives. Oyster and shrimp fishermen in South Carolina and vegetable farmers in Alabama are engaged in—what, black capitalism or black socialism? By Hank Leifermann. Page 5.

ALSO: Who makes the money? An analysis of income in America. Page 6.

MACHINES HUM AT THE TERRY PLANT IN ROANOKE

The Congressman And the Dragon

"I FEEL LIKE a drunk who converted himself and joined the church and hasn't drunk in years—and yet people still say he's a drunk," says Calvin F. Craig, former Georgia Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan. Mr. Craig now works alongside Negroes in Atlanta's Model Cities program. Former Congressman Charles L. Weltner, once a public enemy of Mr. Craig's, writes about him and tells why he sees hope that others may change, too. Page. 3.

REPORT ON REPORTS

By Claire Brown

Morton Inger's monograph Politics and Reality in an American City is a thoughtful analysis of the causes of the 1960 New Orleans school desegregation crisis. The first part of the book is a thorough detailing of events: even if you already know the full story of the 1960 breakdown of civilization in New Orleans, it is still informative reading. The second part deals with normal political action as a cure for urban madness.

The New Orleans crisis centered not around the school desegregation order but around the school board, and its desire to remain apolitical. Once the court ordered the schools to desegregate, the school board set up an elaborate bureaucratic apparatus, "the machine," to handle transfer requests. As Inger says, "To the board members, it seemed that they were doing nothing more than deciding a question 'on its merits,' i.e., without political considerations, and that is what they were recruited and elected to do. In developing its desegregation plan, the board was truly 'out of politics.'"

Because the board was "out of politics," it did not attempt to build effective community support; nor did it secure the backing of the business establishment, the mayor or the police force. It relied on an "objective, scientific, non-political machine" which had no validity, moral weight, or favors due it outside the board offices. And the rest of the community, especially the more emotional part, turned its back on the board and the machine and proceeded to do in the school desegregation plan, the public peace, and the tourism-based economy of the city for that year and several to come.

At this point, Inger discusses the successful desegregation of Atlanta schools, and points out the political realities that made it so: the mayor's strong stand, the community leaders' support of the mayor, the public involvement before a court decision; and the existence of a business community determined not to lose image or receipts. All of these were the result of the normal political process in Atlanta.

"But the absence of politics in New Orleans had greatly weakened the city. The resulting timidity of the city's mayor led in turn to the passivity of the business leaders. In the absence of local political leadership, control . . . was given over to the state legislature, the governor, and to private and semi-private decision makers such as Leander Perez and the street mobs. Since reform had been one of the causes of the destruction of politics in New Orleans, it should not surprise us to learn that when an old-fashioned but modern politician like Victor Schiro became mayor, he was able to control desegregation and ensure that it would be accomplished peacefully. Like Schiro, Atlanta's Mayor (William B.) Hartsfield was no race liberal, but he was a politician. Both mayors saw the political necessity for peaceful school desegregation."

Inger points a warning finger at other good folk concerned with political reform:

"The problems which called the reform movement into existence were real and pressing—the corruption, the abuse of patronage, and the decline of the school system were intolerable. But the mere removal of corrupt politics is not enough. It must be replaced by something which can at least cope with the problems corruption was coping with . . . .

"We cannot come to grips with the problems of our social life without organizing to build constituencies, without mobilizing and utilizing community support, without, in short, making use of political power. Above all, these problems cannot be dealt with by technical expertise, by exclusive concern for efficient mechanisms, or by scientific administration. The policies of our institutions, not the honesty of the men who govern them, must be our primary concern. Thus, if we are to reform our school systems, we must be concerned with policy questions: Whom shall we educate? What shall we educate them for? . . . Technical matters (of how) are not only less important than policy issues, but, as we have seen with the case of New Orleans, an exclusive concern with them can be destructive of the very institution reform was intended to save."

This report is available for 25 cents from the publisher, the Center for Urban Education, 105 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10016.

A solution to another kind of city problem was introduced in Little Rock. Nation's Cities, the magazine of the National League of Cities, said in its July issue:

"This is the age of portability.

"In Little Rock, Ark., for instance, a portable park has been completed as a practical and eye-pleasing solution to the ugliness of a temporary parking lot in a downtown urban renewal project. Complete with trees, grass, and benches, the park can easily be picked up and moved to another location."

Housing Guide to Equal Opportunity was prepared by George Schermer and Arthur J. Levin for the Potomac Institute and is available from the institute, 1501 Eighteenth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. 20036, for $1.00. A good program development guide, it contains well-researched and workable methods for those "who wish to go beyond minimum requirements to accelerate the inclusion of Negroes and other minority groups into predominantly white residential areas."

After investigating cooperatives, condominiums, privately owned or rental neighborhoods and developments, high-rise and garden style, the writers found: "Stable patterns of racial integration in housing developments and neighborhoods do not just happen. They are the result of commitment, clearly established policy, imaginative and thorough planning, and competent management—all elements which go far beyond the requirements of the law . . . . Integration is only rarely induced by a fair housing law alone or achieved without special intent."

The racial mix in the projects studied ranged from a token number of nonwhites in basically white subdivisions to a diminishing number of whites in projects which, avowedly integrated, were becoming largely Negro. The difference between maintenance and erosion of integration seems to depend on physical conveniences, superior schooling and, most important, community involvement on the part of the tenants matched by commitment on the part of management.

"Persons who would prefer integration and those who would prefer segregation tend to place physical considerations and convenience ahead of their racial preferences. Convenience of location, quality, price, and safety, in that order, are the major factors in attracting white families to racially inclusive center city developments . . . . In the suburbs, physical factors are less relevant to integration than affirmative marketing and community relations . . . .

"Quality of public education is of critical importance . . . . Good schools are a pivotal factor in attracting and keeping white families . . . in racially inclusive developments ahead of all other physical considerations . . . .

"All the significant examples of stable, racially inclusive, quality developments are found where management or resident organization has a clearly defined, conscious policy of maintaining occupancy standards and racial balance, and a well developed system of resident involvement in community activities and problem solving . . . . Affirmative programs to promote racial inclusiveness over a large area contribute to the development of a broad base of community support which generates a favorable climate for integration and helps to prevent panic sales that result in resegregation . . . . Neighborhood organizations play a key role in community integration and stablilization. However . . . they must strive for full participation of both races in leadership as well as membership and share mutually acceptable goals."

The report is firmly grounded in realities. As it concludes in a section for real estate developers: "Commitment to racial inclusiveness is not inimical to profit-making enterprise."

SOUTH TODAY A Digest of Southern Affairs

SOUTH TODAY is published by the Leadership Project of the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta Ga., 30303. The Southern Regional Council, founded in 1944, is a research and information agency devoted to the attainment of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South. President: John H. Wheeler, Durham, N.C. Chairman, Executive Committee: Raymond M. Wheeler, Charlotte, N.C. Vice Presidents: Josephine Wilkins, Athens, Ga.; Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn.; Charles G. Gomillion, Tuskegee, Ala.; Lucius H. Pitts, Birmingham, Ala. Executive Director: Paul Anthony.

Reese Cleghorn, Editor Katherine S. Griffith, Assistant Editor

Some of the articles used in SOUTH TODAY have been edited for length. We welcome clippings which may be of use. They should indicate the date and the publication from which they came.

About South Today

When SOUTH TODAY began publication in July, we asked for it. In the first two issues, we printed a coupon requesting comments. Since most of the 10,000 people to whom we sent the initial issues had not previously received publications of the Southern Regional Council and assuredly were not expecting this one, some indication of their reaction was important for our planning.

The results were little short of overwhelming. Largely in response to the first two issues, we received 347 messages in the mail about SOUTH TODAY. About half were coupons and about half letters and cards. We had solicited negative comments by placing the words "is hogwash" and "serves no purpose" on the published coupons. Only 20 replies were negative.

Perhaps the most affirmative response was the suggestion from scores of readers that we send SOUTH TODAY to others. The names thus added to our mailing list number more than 500.

We think, then, that SOUTH TODAY is here to stay awhile. It will continue to be principally a digest of newspaper and magazine articles, although we hope to provide as many special reports of our own as possible. (Our report in the October issue on segregated private schools was quoted extensively by newspapers throughout the South and, nationally, by the Associated Press, United Press International, U. S. News and World Report, Time and the Wall Street Journal, and other publications now are moving to utilize its contents.)

When we assembled our original mailing list, we attempted to make it a list of leaders in the South. It obviously could not be comprehensive; it was a sampling, but a carefully chosen one.

We made no attempt to choose geographically, except to see that all Southern states were well represented. We therefore were curious when we began to take a look at some specific towns in the South to see who is receiving SOUTH TODAY. You may be interested, too. Here are some random examples:

Cleveland, Tenn: Nine copies, going to two ministers, a bank president, a chamber of commerce president, the head of the local anti-poverty agency, the director of an industry association, the president of a major corporation and two libraries.

Florence, Ala.: Nine copies, going to a bank president, a chamber of commerce president, two ministers, a public relations manager, a bar association leader, a library, the head of a local anti-poverty agency and a college professor.

Meridian, Miss: Eight copies, going to a bank president, two libraries, a voter registration leader, a Catholic leader, a bar association leader, a community development program leader and a minister.

Sumter, S. C.: Ten copies, going to an NAACP president, a voter registration director, a minister, four anti-poverty officials, a student newspaper and two libraries.

We continue to welcome your comments on what we are doing, as well as your suggestions about what we should do.

My Friend Calvin

By CHARLES LONGSTREET WELTNER
In Atlanta Magazine

Back when he was Grand Dragon and I was a congressman, there was a sustained period when Calvin Craig and I, like Saul of old, were muttering threats against each other. I was trying to have him, and the whole Klan, investigated; and he was trying to have me, and all Democrats like me, purged from public office. We both succeeded, in a fashion.

But Calvin has come to be a friend of mine. That may appear somewhat unusual, in view of our difference of opinion. Yet it's true.

The first time I actually saw Calvin was on October 28, 1965, in the Caucus Room of the Cannon House Office Building. That was the beginning of "Georgia Time" with the Un-American Activities Committee investigation of the Ku Klux Klan. . . .

When I walked into the hearing room that day, I saw Margaret Shannon, then Washington reporter for the Atlanta Journal, engaged in conversation with Calvin. . . . With purposeful tread she approached me and asked, "Have you ever met Calvin Craig?" I said I hadn't, and she pushed him over to me. I leaned forward over the bench and stuck out my hand.

"How're you?"

"Fine, how're you?"

Calvin is a big, handsome man, with frank eyes and a perpetual smile. He said something about going out to Watts and looking around. "Were you on Klan business?" Margaret asked. Came the quick answer, "You want me to start taking the Fifth before the hearing begins?"

Well, Calvin didn't tell us much—only his name, Calvin F. Craig . . .

The next time I saw Calvin was in 1968, when he had resigned as Grand Dragon, resigned from the Klan, and was running for sheriff of Fulton County. The Jaycees had sponsored a mammoth rally at a southwest shopping center—mammoth because of the number of candidates, not the number of voters. The speaking was inside, in the Community Room. A lectern was provided with one of those awful portable public address systems. Calvin's time came, and he moved up to the microphone. "Ladies and gentlemen, I am . . . ." His heavy voice came through with squeaks and squawks. He backed away, looked critically at the instrument and tried again. "You'll have to excuse me if I can't make this thing work," he offered. "I'm used to talking outdoors." That was about the only bright comment from all candidates, from justice of the peace to U.S. senator. . . .

Because neither Calvin nor I won last year, we are both back at our old jobs. I wondered about a man like Calvin. Seeing him and hearing him, I wondered how he got that way, and where he's going. And I wonder how many more, like him, can change a little along the way. . . .

He tells that story:

"I joined the Klan in 1960. I went to one public meeting, at Stone Mountain, before I actually went into the Klan. At that time, it was the U.S. Klans. Eldon Edwards, from College Park, was the Imperial Wizard. My mother was involved with the Ladies Auxiliary. In other words, she was already a member of the Ladies Auxiliary before I joined. And she had talked with us about it. My wife put in her application, I put in mine. My wife was 'called' approximately two months before I joined in March, and was assigned to N. B. Forrest Klavern in Atlanta, meeting on Lee Street at that time, over Brewer's Drug Store, at Oakland City.

"I didn't know a soul who was in there, not even the Cyclops. The ritual was real impressive . . . real impressive. I enjoyed it. Enjoyed it very much.

"Back then, I thought mainly I wanted to join he Klan because I've always been the type person to like adventure. Another thing was the Negro question, or you might say threat, which we all seen back then. . . .

Calvin Craig

Charles Weltner

"That was still U.S. Klans then. Then Bobby Shelton and Edwards wasn't getting along. He (Shelton) was setting up his own Klan, the Alabama Knights, because Edwards was putting him out of the U.S. Klans. For three or four months after (Bill) Davidson was elected, there was a lot of dissension being led by E. E. George, creating turmoil, to try to get Davidson to relinquish his post.

"So there was a meeting held by the Imperial Body at Marietta Street and Northside Drive. Davidson resigned that night and I resigned that night, all because Mrs. Edwards was making claims against the U.S. Klan for work Edwards had done: the Kloran, by-laws of the Klan, and all that he had written up. Then we started to get in touch with all the units throughout the Empire to come into a new Klan—and that's when we formed the United Klans of America. That would have been in 1963, about June. We pulled in all but one unit in the State of Georgia. There must have been about 65 or 70 units, all-told. I held the same office in the UKA (Grand Dragon for the Realm of Georgia). We reorganized under a different name, sort of getting rid of the Edwards dispute. . . ."

The new Grand Dragon began then to extend Klan activities into new areas, competing, oddly enough, with the League of Women Voters and the NAACP. Craig claims 10,857 new voters as the result of a registration drive formulated and carried out by the Klan. But that was not without internal repercussion.

"When I started the voter registration . . . I thought that this would be a good image for the Klan, that a lot of these people would realize that Klanspeople are not as bad as the public image. I thought maybe that this would bring the Klan closer to the people and in some phases that you could reindoctrinate the Klan on some issues and maybe the public would accept some issues of the Klan. I got a small amount of support from the Klan on this, but a lot of the Klansmen felt that this was a waste of time, that wasn't what we needed. They felt we needed to ride the roads, burn crosses, and all that kinda stuff.

"And then I got involved in the Model Cities program. Then I got more opposition from some Klanspeople. Since I was getting this opposition, I went ahead and submitted my resignation as of May. I felt it only fair that a new man should have the opportunity to be advised on the functions of the Klan and to be active in the Klan in a leading capacity."

Craig's resignation, as Dragon and Klansman, was widely noted. Many observers obviously felt that it was something other than a genuine desire to move toward a more moderate position on public issues. The Klan, now Dragonless, did not express itself publicly. Doubtless, those remaining within the order were even more suspicious of their leader's motives than outsiders, and his almost immediate announcement as a candidate for sheriff did nothing to reassure them.

"A lot of them felt that I had sold out —betrayed them—but I didn't feel that way. I felt that this really was the chance that we needed; that this was the chance I had been trying to get for years and years: an opportunity to sit at the table, and to learn what are the problems; what do the black people want.

"My wife was glad I was out of it. She feels the Klan was wrong in the way they felt about my quitting. I wish every Klansman had the opportunity to sit at a conference table and learn the ills of both poor black people and poor white people.

"Some of my friends in the Klan supported me for sheriff; some didn't. A very small percent, very small, took an active part in my campaign. A lot of them felt I had betrayed them because I made the statement I would have put on Negro deputies, and I would have. I would have made sure they had a voice in the sheriff's office. I don't think I received a dime from any person connected with Klan."

As is frequently the case, the public figure who changes his mind draws the ire of friend and foe alike, and Calvin experienced what many other have. Realizing that he is fully accepted by no one, he states it:

"I feel like a drunk who converted himself and joined the church and hasn't drunk in years—and yet people still say he's a drunk. People are still suspicious of my motives. It's just the nature of people themselves. Then, a lot of people misinterpreted my position on law and order. I feel that law and order is not bringing in state troopers and tanks, and National Guard. Law and order is basically keeping the streets safe so any citizen can walk the streets without being molested by black people or white people. A lot of people felt when I said stand up for law and order that I would do everything I could to hurt and harm the black people."

There is no doubt that the impetus for the Klan movement is what Calvin called the "Negro threat." Now that he has laid aside his robe, offered himself for public scrutiny by offering himself for public office, what does he really feel? What does he think about black people? About civil rights? What is the responsibility of government in the realm of poverty?

"You've got to have change with progress. I know a lot of people who have quit the Klan. They felt they were fighting a losing battle. The basis for the whole thing today is to give underprivileged people a better place to live, better jobs, better educational facilities—the whole thing. People I know of who've quit the Klan realize that also. You can see the change in what they would have said a few years ago. . . .

"In a lot of cases the blacks have got a crummy deal. A spotlight is being focused on a lot of the ills of the community, but it's not curing the ills of the community. There are a lot of changes that need to be made for the black people that they can't help themselves. The white people are going to have to help them. For instance, instead of these low-rent projects, they ought to reclaim some of this land and build individual houses in there, selling them on a rental-purchase plan. This would help the black community. It would give them the incentive that they are buying something, they will soon have home ownership. . . .

"People, including myself, who were so opposed to so many things, today realize that 90 per cent of the ideas 10 years ago were not as bad as we thought.

"A man operating a business should have some rights. But we have to accept the fact that all men have a right to go into a restaurant and eat; go into a hotel and spend the night. A lot of the rights guaranteed by the Civil Rights Act have helped a lot of people.

"I spent a lot of time resisting those changes. I think I was wrong."

Calvin Craig is in many ways the most representative man in the public eye of Atlanta: 41 years old, white, married, father of two children, educated to the tenth grade, income of about $8,000 a year. He is the statistical average of the million-plus who make up the metropolitan area. Doubtless he spoke the fears and apprehensions of the mass of white people earlier in the decade, and was moved by those fears to take the step of Klan membership.

I like to hope that his latter career, also, is representative. With a little time and a little experience, the terrors of the new equality were proved to be but painted devils. Reality intervened, and Craig began to see the similarity of the burdens of the poor—black and white. Laying aside the older forms of resistance, he now became convinced of the necessity for conciliation. The conference table is his talisman, capable of resolving tension and strife, in the streets, on campus, or in Southeast Asia.

Calvin has come at last to believe in the worth of men, and in their basic honesty and capacity for fairness. On that belief he has staked a great deal. Bearing up under the taunts of his former colleagues and the doubts of others, he was not afraid to move.

Unless he is followed by many, many more whose circumstances and outlook he reflected, there is little likelihood that we can find a better life down South. His example is the substance of things still hoped for, and the evidence of things yet unseen.

U.S.D.A.:

It Remains Government's Worst Rights Offender

A Staff Report by Kitty Griffith

Crop quotas are to many Southern farmers, as to farmers everywhere in the country, a matter of economic life and death. Each September farmers elect their local communities' Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) committees, which in turn elect county ASCS committees. The county ASCS committees determine individual crop allotments and administer farm programs totaling $3.5 billion nationally during the current fiscal year.

Since the committee system was initiated in 1933, only two Negroes have been elected to county-level ASCS committees in the South, which today have 4,100 members. The first, Otis Pinkard of Macon County, Ala. was elected last year for a three-year term.

Since then there has been much talk that major breakthroughs were at hand in this patently discriminatory pattern. It was hoped that progress could be made through the election process. Some observers thought 1969 would be a year of break-through.

The 1969 ASCS elections now have come and gone. On the county level only one new Negro committeeman was elected: William S. Payne of Marshall County, Miss. That means that black representation has risen to slightly more than one-twentieth of one per cent on the county committees in a region where Negroes are 13 per cent of the farm owners (and 20 per cent or higher in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina).

On the community level, Negroes lost ground. Of 30,000 alternate and regular community ASCS positions in the South, only 380 were filled by blacks in elections this year, down from 418 in 1968. All the slippage was accounted for in the election of alternate committeemen. For 2,648 such positions, only 285 Negroes were elected, 44 fewer than last year. Six more Negroes won regular community ASCS seats in the September election, raising the total to 89 in the region. Only regular community committeemen vote in the county convention to elect county committees and decide on county policy. The alternates have no decision-making role.

The slight increase in the number of regular community committeemen did not produce a black majority among community committeemen in any Southern county, though in 256 counties blacks are more than 50 per cent of the rural population. In Macon County, Ala., where the black farming population is 72.5 per cent, Negroes lost the majority among community committeemen which they had gained last year. Consequently, Mr. Pinkard, who had been elected chairman of the county committee last year because of the black majority among community committeemen, was demoted to vice chairman.

The selection of a Negro for the ASCS committee of Marshall County, Miss., came as something of a surprise. Mr. Payne was elected at a county meeting of community ASCS committee members, most of whom were white. Marshall County, in the Delta, has a farm-operator population 68.9 per cent black, but only two Negroes were elected this year to serve on the community ASCS committees there.

The lack of representation of blacks on ASCS committees is only one of the continuing examples of discrimination in federal agricultural programs. The Department of Agriculture repeatedly has been found guilty of discriminating against Negroes in employment practices and in the administration of its programs.

The Agriculture Department's most notorious offender in the area of civil rights is the Cooperative State Extension Service, a joint federal-state-local effort, which counsels farmers in new techniques, operates home demonstration projects and sponsors 4-H Club programs. Traditionally in the South, the chief male and female extension positions are held by whites. Also traditional are black agents (always called "associate agents" or "assistant agents") in extension work who have been limited to serving other blacks. Even now there are no blacks serving as chief county-level extension officials, though in Virginia there are two Negroes with district authority. Southwide, there are approximately 840 black extension workers, all of whom deal almost exclusively with blacks.

Blacks employed by the Extension Service tend to have lower-level jobs than whites, though often they have higher academic qualifications than whites who out-rank them and who make higher salaries than their black counter-parts. In addition, blacks often have heavier work loads in areas with large black populations.

In April the Justice Department criticized the Agriculture Department for not fully providing its services to blacks. In attempting to overcome these charges, Agriculture Secretary Clifford M. Hardin issued an order in September to all agency heads giving them until March 31, 1970, to comply fully with civil rights laws.

Hardin's memorandum, dated Sept. 23, stated three objectives:

"Correct programs in which practices bar integration and thus allow or lead to participation on a segregated basis. . . .

"Correct programs that have been conducted in ways that permit economic barriers or social inhibitions to limit participation of certain racial, color or nationality groups. . . .

"Correct programs in which service to specific racial, color or nationality groups is inferior because of the failure of department employes or cooperators to work across racial lines. . . ."

Secretary Hardin's orders to USDA agencies are encouraging, but next March will prove whether his orders are effective.

The Farmers Home Administration, which lends money at low interest to farmers for current operations, farm expansion, home building and improvement, and provides economic opportunity loans for the poorest farmers, has done more than any other branch of the Agriculture Department to correct racial inequities.

Although 320 blacks are serving on county FHA committees in the South this year, a memorandum issued by the FHA to all state directors in September said: "We are concerned about the fact that minority groups constitute only seven per cent of our county committeemen total. Our appointment record in this respect can and must improve."

In order to improve minority representation on county committees, the FHA suggested that counties with a minority group constituting 50 per cent or more of the rural farm-operator population to appoint at least two members from that minority group to serve on the three-man FHA committee. In the South this means that Negroes will soon be in control of many local FHA committees.

The Department of Agriculture has been a long-time offender in the field of civil rights. Attacks frequently have been leveled against the department for laxity in seeing that farm programs, emergency loans, rural housing and employment were provided equally to minority groups. Within the department, some hopeful signs of change are seen, but only time will tell whether written orders will be enforced and carried out in the South.

The fact that Negroes have not had any control over ASCS and other agricultural program decisions as well as the fact that there is continued discrimination in program services undoubtedly influences the continuing migration of blacks from rural areas. Increased political activity by blacks obviously is a way in which black farmers can achieve a stronger voice in the administration of farm programs. But equally obvious is the fact that until the U.S. Department of Agriculture moves forcefully to end patterns enforced by decades of dominance by Southern white supremacists, black Southern farmers will be denied equal protection under the law.

Farmers:

'The Genesis of a Chicago Riot May Be Traced to a Cotton Field'

By Paul Good

Paul Good wrote this report as part of a publication entitled CYCLE TO NOWHERE, published by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. The full report is available from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

MOST Alabama blacks learn to be poor on the land. The rural landscape in the Black Belt today is barren of hope for Negroes as it always has been.

Apologists for white supremacy and government officials derelict in their duty to assist impartially all farmers have a conscience-easing rationale for today's desperate conditions. They blame them on farm mechanization and other technological improvements that have combined with a shift away from cotton to cripple small cotton farmers in general and black ones in particular.

. . . Undeniably mechanization is a large factor in forcing blacks out of the farm economy and worsening their poverty. But blacks were poor before the first mechanical cotton picker lumbered onto an Alabama field in the early 40's and the only thing different about the old shacks they lived in then is that today they are 25 years older.

The Agriculture Department reports that 98 per cent of Negro farms in the area are inadequate. It does not report that segregated and inferior service from Alabama agencies of the department has played an historic role in this inadequacy, a role that is little improved in 1968. The 1965 Civil Rights Commission report on Equal Opportunity in Farm Programs concluded:

"The Commission's analysis of four major USDA programs has clearly indicated that the department has generally failed to assume responsibility for assuring equal opportunity and equal treatment to all those entitled to benefit from its programs. Instead, the prevailing practice has been to follow local patterns of racial segregation and discrimination in providing assistance paid for by federal funds . . . As the group most depressed economically, most deprived educationally and most oppressed socially, Negroes have been consistently denied access to many services, provided with inferior services when served, and segregated in federally financed agriculture programs whose very task was to raise their standard of living."

Some improvements were ordered from Washington, a few orders were implemented but staff investigators for the hearing (found):

"In 1968, three years after the commission's report and four years after this nation committed itself to nondiscrimination in federally assisted programs, there has been no significant change in agricultural programs in Alabama."

This means that a lot of law is being broken in Alabama with the federal government accessory before and after the fact. Many Negroes feel that behind the lawlessness is a systematic effort by white Alabamians to force politically renascent Negroes out of the state by making life on the land untenable. Whether or not this is the intent, the effect of their behavior is apparent.

Black population in the 16-county (Black Belt) area has dropped by 25 per cent in the last 25 years. Thousands have been evicted from tenant farms to drift like flotsam, washing up in Northern ghettos or in Alabama urban centers where the menial jobs are colored black. Rev. William Branch, a civil rights leader and the first black congressional aspirant from Greene County since Reconstruction, saw nearly 100 families turned out overnight, stunned and penniless in a state that would not help them to shelter infants in arms while the federal government looked the other way.

Others who had lived with the knowledge they could not prosper in Alabama chose to emigrate when it became increasingly doubtful that they could even survive. A hard core remains, men like 66-year-old Hosea Guice, who still plows with two mules in Macon County and has no desire to uproot and go North.

"I am happy on the land," he says, "On my country home. I love it, maybe because I don't know any better but I am happy on my country home."

His country is 80 per cent black. Negroes are grossly under-represented on all farm committees and federal farm agencies, whether the composition is elective or appointive. For example, only one of three FHA county committeemen is black. No Negro serves on the three-man county agriculture committee (based on elections by county farmers under Agriculture Department regulations) which is empowered to tell farmers how much cotton they may plant and which decides how much federal payment they should receive when they voluntarily cut their planting to reduce the nation's cotton surplus.

Guice spoke out for civil rights and his own personal rights decades ago when most black Alabamians only whispered of such things. He praises federal programs as "very helpful" and suggests that black farmers who fail are somehow remiss. At the same time, he has had to fight to get correct payments from the county committee administering Agriculture Department money.

"You see, there's only so much federal money allotted to Macon County," he explains. "If they cut down the Negroes, they can raise the whites."

The nation at large has been unaware of this private and governmental pressure that Negro farmers simply call "the squeeze." It is a complicated story and urban America's interest in farms understandably begins and ends with supermarket prices. But the poverty cycle dispossessing Southern black men fills Northern and Western slums with the smouldering cynicism of despair, with long memories of white oppression on one-mule farms and the genesis of a Chicago riot may be traced to a Black Belt cotton field.

Agriculture is big business in Alabama. Gross farm income in 1967 was $700 mil-

Co-ops:

'No Man Is Free Until He Makes His Living'

By Hank Leifermann in Atlanta Magazine

If you have never heard of Bill Harrison the revolutionist, listen to this conversation from a while back as Harrison, two of his associates, and a writer drove down Alabama 14 from Selma to Eutaw on a pitch-black Alabama evening, not another car in sight.

Harrison is talking about co-ops, farmer co-operatives, for black people. Like the Grange in the Midwest and the Rural Electrification Administration. "The sole thing in the mind of the white man down here is to drive black folks out," he says. The thirty-five-year-old native Alabama college graduate continues. "There must be some way that black folks can stay in the South and make a living if they want to. The black population exceeds the white in many places. The whites force the black man out, and what does he do? He goes North, looking for a job. He can't find one; he gets frustrated; he burns down the city; or his children and grandchildren do. Never will a man be free until he can make his own living."

Harrison does not wear Movement overalls, blue denim shirts or jeans. He's got on a brown tweed sport coat, grey slacks, chukka boots, glasses, and holds a pipe. John Kenneth Galbraith on the farm. His revolution is the co-op movement, and his subjects are America's most conservative citizens—the middle-aged, rural, Southern black farmer. These people rarely joined the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on the barricade. Selma's march came and went and they didn't move. Stokely Carmichael and the original Black Panther party left them cold. Now, because of Harrison and about six score men and women like him, and because of the co-op plan, they are all revolutionists.

In Alabama there are vegetable farmers. On the South Carolina coast they are oyster and shrimp fishermen. Their economic movement may be—if successful—the most significant happening in Dixie since Richard Russell and Mendel Rivers took over the defense establishment and brought home the bacon. It could produce a new group in the nation's middle class: the black, rural Southern farmer and fisherman.

Harrison is the president of the Southwest Alabama Farmers' Cooperative Association, Inc., called SWAFCA. It is one of forty such co-ops in the Deep South. SWAFCA works out of Selma and serves the southwest corner of Alabama. There are 2,000 Negro family members in SWAFCA's ten counties.

"What's a co-op? Our definitions are a little different from the Agriculture Department's. It's an instrument or organ that will bring about social, political and economic changes," Harrison says from the back seat. He makes no bones about it. White folks in southwest Alabama should never forget that SWAFCA is not just a farm co-op, but also a political base, openly and rapidly working at making their votes count.

The co-op movement is the other side of the coin from black capitalism. Richard M. Nixon wants black capitalism. Bill Harrison wants co-ops. Ralph Abernathy calls it black socialism. There are more than 12,000 Negro families in Southern co-ops today, according to the Office of Economic Opportunity. Their movement began in 1961 with the Southern Consumers in Lafayette, Louisiana. But only in the past two years, primarily with seed money in grants and loans from OEO, the Farmers' Home Administration, and private foundations, have the co-ops taken root and spread.

In Marks, Mississippi, there is the Freedomcraft Candy Co-operative. In Alberta, Alabama, there is the Freedom Quilting Bee. Negro shrimpers at Frogmore, on the South Carolina coast, formed a co-op to cut operating costs and pool their catch for larger, higher paying markets. . . .

Harrison's economic philosophy, although he's an integrationist and not a separatist, closely matches that of Eldridge Cleaver, the San Francisco Black Panther who fled to Cuba. Cleaver in an interview with Look Magazine's Bill Hedgepeth: "The Black Power reaction that set in with Stokely was a necessary development. But, we're beyond the articulation of Black Power as a goal. I think we are getting into creating mechanisms through which power for black people can be achieved. The basis of political power in this country is money. I think a Yankee Doodle Dandy form of socialism is what we need to take the wealth away from a few and make it the property of all."

Socialism and capitalism? They seem nothing more than words, words, words. Today there are subsidies to the shipping industry from the federal government, to the airlines, to railroads, to truck in the form of highways, to defense plants—and that "cost plus 10 per cent" deal on the defense contracts. Cost Plus Ten Per Cent! Banks advertise—they brag—about savings certificates that give 5 or 6 per cent. . . .

It's hard to disagree with Harrison's contention that if major corporations in the nation faced the kind of constant press and governmental scrutiny that SWAFCA and its fellow co-ops do, Detroit would be turning out smoke-free, accident-proof cars that seldom need repairing, never become obsolete and retail for a thousand dollars.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative audit arm, made an audit of SWAFCA's books at the insistence of the Alabama press and three Alabama congressmen. For eleven months, March to January, the fact that SWAFCA was under investigation—and that something might, just might be wrong (Communists, maybe, or hardened criminals), got great public attention. Most reporters in Alabama never could say "SWAFCA". They said, "the controversial SWAFCA." The parallel would be saying "the controversial Lockheed" every time a couple million more gets tacked on a contract. The GAO audit found SWAFCA's accounting procedures inadequate. The co-op books were a mess. GAO had some harsh things to say about the political leanings of some former and present SWAFCA staffers, and turned these tidbits over to the FBI. But, as it turned out, the political criticism came from the Alabama congressmen.

Why all the fuss about a bunch of black farmers getting together to farm? One, according to Harrison, some white food brokers were cut out and losing money. Two, the black man who makes a living on his farm isn't likely to sell his vote. A short primer on co-ops and farmers:

Big farmers make big money. One good year can produce enough cash to weather several bad ones. A co-op operates on the same principle. The members pool their money, acreage allotments, equipment and labor to buy in large quantity at lower, bulk-rate prices on fertilizer, seeds, machinery and the technical advice of soil, seed and plant experts. Bigger and better crops find bigger and better markets. Instead of selling to the local grocery or taking rock-bottom prices from local food brokers, the co-op members go out-of-state to supermarket chains and major food producers. This year, for example, SWAFCA turned out cucumbers, okra, peas, sweet potatoes, squash, snap beans, butterbeans, turnips, collards, mustard greens and onions. . . .

Racism and poverty are far from gone in places such as southwest Alabama, rural Mississippi and coastal South Carolina. In SWAFCA's area, the schools, hospitals and business districts in the Saturday-go-to-market towns like Selma, Eutaw, Greensboro, Fort Deposit and Demopolis are still segregated. In SWAFCA's ten counties, however, blacks outnumber whites. In four of the counties 75 per cent or more of the population is black. Voter registration can change the segregated life-style in these towns. But, Harrison says, black votes can and are bought by white politicians. Buying a vote from a hungry sharecropper, and trying to buy one from a man secure in his own farm are far different things. Nearly all of white Alabama's politicians, from governor to probate judge, white farmer to white social worker, are fully aware of that fact. It has cost SWAFCA a lot.

The late Lurleen Wallace, who tried to veto SWAFCA grants from OEO when she was governor of Alabama, once claimed that, "There is abundant evidence available which shows the link between this group (SWAFCA) and the violent black power organization, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNICK), whose leaders called for the assassination of me, my husband and my child here in Montgomery on June 13, 1967." She referred to a quote attributed to Stokely Carmichael earlier that same month saying, "any time they give a black man a gun and tell him to shoot his enemy, and he don't shoot Lurleen and George and little Junior, he's a fool." Carmichael has about as much in common—and to do with—SWAFCA, especially SWAFCA's members, who are turned off by Carmichael more than most white people are—as do the Wallaces. . . .

All of this culminated in the Alabama legislature passing a joint resolution about SWAFCA saying that any federal money given it would "finance the lawless Black Panther movement designed to overthrow the government of this country and particularly the government of Southern states."

There is little Harrison and most other Negroes in the South would like more than seeing most of Dixie's legislatures dismissed. No doubt a few Southern congressmen would not be missed by them. But there is a vast difference between armed insurrection and voting them out.

---

lion with Government agricultural agencies spending nearly $200 million in the state. Ninety million came from direct USDA payments in the form of price subsidies and soil diversion checks, that is, money paid to farmers not to plant surplus crops like cotton and corn or to plant only controlled acreage of such crops. Large farmers get an unproportionate lion's share of these payments, while small, poor farmers get the leavings.

Cotton no longer is king in the Black Belt but it remains a somewhat discredited prince. Poultry, livestock, and cotton are the big moneymakers, in that order, reversing the order of the 30's. The Department of Agriculture increasingly transfers cotton allotments from the Black Belt to southwestern states where assembly-line, corporation farms produce more dependable yields that simplify domestic and international marketing of a better-grade cotton. What all this means is that cotton farming in the Black Belt is slowly but inevitably succumbing to complex market pressures with federal planning speeding up the process.

As this development became apparent over the years, white Alabama farmers were receiving federal financing and technical training that enabled them to break free of the one-crop cotton economy and diversify into poultry, livestock, and specialty crops. But as the decades of change in the 30's, 40's, and 50's passed, Negroes were left behind. Today, 80 per cent of Alabama black farmers are still yoked to cotton on small, economically unfeasible farms while only 32 per cent of whites remain cotton farmers, under universally better conditions. Only 4 per cent of Negroes are in livestock, less than 1 per cent in poultry

---

SOME FACTS ABOUT RURAL POVERTY

Some key facts about rural poverty, as determined by the President's National Advisory Commission on Rural Poverty in 1967:

—About 30 per cent of the nation's population lives in rural areas, but 40 per cent of the nation's poor do.

—One in four people living in rural areas is classified as poor. The total is 14 million. Most are white. But a higher percentage of blacks in rural areas (three out of five) are poor, and most of these are in the South's Black Belt.

—The unemployment rate in rural areas is about 18 per cent.

—Between 1950 and 1965 new machines and new methods increased farm output by 45 per cent and reduced farm employment 45 per cent. Farm employment is expected to again decline 45 per cent by 1980.

who makes the money?

Poorest 20 Per Cent Get Only 5 Per Cent

By ARNOLD KANTOR
In The AFL-CIO Federationist

Possibly some 21st Century historian will look back at the economic and social scene of the 1960s and call it the time when man finally discovered that what was true of the whole was not necessarily true of the parts.

In a book published in 1958, Harvard Professor J. Kenneth Galbraith heralded America as the "affluent society." Yet exactly a decade after Galbraith's popular "The Affluent Society," another best seller —"The Rich and the Super-Rich"—reached the book stands. In that book the author claimed, "It would be difficult in the 1960s for a large majority of Americans to show fewer significant possessions if the country had long labored under a grasping dictatorship." And, at the same time, says author Ferdinand Lundberg, "a relative handful of Americans are extravagantly endowed like princes in the Arabian Nights tales."

Certainly the situation is not nearly as bleak as Lundberg seems to imply. But the notion of general affluence also obscures many disquieting elements. For America's overall blanket of increasing well-being has some dramatic differences in the degree of warmth and comfort it affords different people.

As Lundberg's title indicates, the United States does have its rich and its super-rich. And it does have its poor. But a closer study reveals that the old adage of the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer isn't quite the case.

What is really happening is that the rich are getting richer and the poor are moving up—slowly. And there are real problems in the middle, for those who are neither rich nor poor.

The most recent complete survey, made in 1967 when the median income was $8,000, shows that 35 per cent of America's families could boast an income of over $10,000, almost a fourth received incomes of over $12,000.

On closer look the view is not quite as rosy. For example:

——Though median family income in 1967 was $8,000, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics says it took $9,076 to provide a "moderate" standard of living for an urban family of four. A budget perhaps more in line with the popular conception of American affluence would, according to the BLS, require $13,050 per year for the same family.

——17.3 million families (one-third of the nation's total) enjoyed 1967 incomes of $10,000 or over. But, for three out of four of these families, it took two or more breadwinners to achieve this income.

——For families relying on only one earner, the chance of being among the over-$10,000 group was only one-in-four.

——Only one-in-six Negro families achieved the $10,000-and-over bracket, and nine out of every ten of these families had two or more wage earners.

——A white family's chances of being above the government's poverty-income line was ten-to-one whereas one in three Negro families was poor.

Thus averages provide a useful first look at what's going on, but they do not tell the whole story on such critically important goals as balanced economic growth and eliminating the paradox of poverty amidst plenty.

The most telling anomalies is the notion of overall well-being come from the U.S. Census Bureau family-income survey. For example, 40 per cent of the nation's families received only 17.6 of the total personal income in 1967. The poorest 20 per cent received only 5.4 per cent of the income pie.

At the upper end of the scale, 20 per cent of the nation's families received 41.2 per cent of the total income, leaving only 59 per cent for the remaining 80 per cent of the nation's households.

The problems of poverty can be considered generally as concern for those who are at the bottom of the income distribution ladder. As already noted, one-fifth of the nation's families received only one-twentieth of the nation's income. These families received 1967 incomes of less than $4,000 and most of them were existing on incomes below the government's poverty income threshold.

Improvements—and rather marked improvements—have occurred. From over 40 million persons below the government-defined poverty level in 1960, or about 22 per cent of the total population, the number declined in 1968 to an estimated 25.4 million, or about 13 per cent of the population. Despite this dramatic improvement, a sizable poor segment remains, as does an additional group of near-poor.

Income distribution is an emotion-charged phrase and a generally unfashionable topic. Confining the discussion to the extremes—those at the very top and those at the very bottom—does not, however, stir too much controversy. Not many will question the propriety of private and public efforts to alleviate the circumstance of those who can spend only 75¢ a day or less for food. And it is fairly safe to claim that the increasing concentration of vast amounts of wealth and economic power in the hands of an elite few is a dangerous trend.

Something else emerges from statistics of the census takers and other analysts—something workers and their families have known for quite some time.

We are winning some of the battles in the fight to eliminate poverty, though this war has hardly begun. We have also reached a point where greater emphasis must be placed on the needs, the problems, and the inequities that are chipping away at the living standards of those who find themselves in the middle. It is in this area that battle lines are becoming more tightly drawn.

In its simplest terms it is quite clear that the dollars needed to eliminate poverty —at least as a statistic—are available.

To help the man in the middle, the situation is far more complicated. The notion of fair shares digs deeply into questions of wages, salaries, profits, dividends, rents, interest payments and the like. Altering the distribution of income between these groups requires a mix of private and government policies including collective bargaining, skill and job upgrading, monetary policy, and public spending.

What is clear is that there is a squeeze.

The average non-supervisory worker in private employment in May 1969 earned $113.55. At the same time the Labor Department reports that it requires well over $175 per week to maintain a four person family in urban areas at merely a moderate standard of living, with few luxuries. And the buying power of the weekly take-home pay of the average non-supervisory employee in 1969 was somewhat less than in 1965.

In contrast, corporate profits, after taxes, were up over 6 per cent in the first half of 1969 compared to the same period of the previous year and almost 12 per cent greater than in 1965. In the first 6 months of 1969 dividend payments to stockholders were 6 per cent greater than in the January-June period of 1968 and 21 per cent above 1965.

The New York Times in May of this year reported that "the average remuneration of top executives is up 9 per cent." A 9 per cent gain in remuneration for most top business executives amounts to more than the average non-supervisory worker earns in an entire year. Business Week of June 7, 1969, said "most top bankers drew more than $200,000" in 1968. And tax gimmicks reduce the income tax rate on portions of such compensation of many top business officials.

The amount of income that a nation can produce determines the levels of living possible for its citizens.

This amount of income may be widely distributed throughout the population, providing the highest possible standard of living for the greatest number of people. Or, it may be concentrated in the hands of a few, creating societies of palaces or castles for a fortunate minority while the great majority of the population lives in huts or hovels. In the United States, wealth and income are widely distributed, but a substantial amount is concentrated in a tiny segment of the population.

In addition an appropriate balance must be struck between the amounts of income set aside for the future and that which can be distributed and consumed in the present.

The question of what is the perfect, or even appropriate, level of equality or inequality of distribution of income has never been answered and probably never will. . . .

The real question, however, is not whether income and wealth should be distributed equally, but how much inequality is appropriate and consistent with our economic and social goals. In a free society, this issue is one of continuing importance.

In the public sector, significantly, many of the more forward-looking programs of the 1960s grew out of the recognition that substantial differences exist in the ways in which the affluent society provides for many Americans. The Area Redevelopment Act of 1961 recognized that many areas and regions of the U.S. are not participating in the general prosperity. The Manpower Development and Training Act stemmed from the awareness that rapid technological change was a necessary ingredient to economic growth and improved living standards but the benefits and the burdens of new technology would not automatically be shared equitably. Job vacancies and considerable unemployment existed at the same time.

By and large this same question of fair shares lies at the core of the present demands of the nation's citizens for a fair, equitable and just tax structure. Government spending programs do much to alleviate the imbalances in income distribution since low and moderate income groups rely relatively heavily on the facilities and services provided by the public sector.

But, unfortunately, the unfairness in our present tax systems—federal, state and local —run counter to the goals of many public spending programs. According to the President's Economic Advisers the nation's tax structure redistributes income "away from the poor." At the same time those of modest and middle incomes are bearing a disproportionately high share of the tax burden, while those with wealth and ability to pay escape their fair share. Hopefully, many of these inequities will be reversed as the present federal tax reform bill works its way through the legislative process.

Thus, though few would attempt to an swer specifically what an appropriate target should be, the facts on income and wealth—particularly that the distribution has either been stable or moving toward greater inequality—are cause for alarm. These facts should play a larger role in affecting the decisions which are shaping the course of the nation.

From Page 1

and selective sales taxes.) Other state figures include: Georgia, 68.8 per cent; Tennessee, 71.4 per cent; Alabama, 70.1 per cent; Florida, 75.0 per cent; North Carolina, 57.2 per cent; South Carolina, 64.9 per cent; and Arkansas, 65.3 per cent.

"It is ironic," Dr. Galambos observes, "that the lowest income states make the greatest use of those taxes which weigh most heavily on the poor."

Dr. Galambos concludes that it frequently is desirable from the consumer's viewpoint for equipment and materials that are used in production of consumer goods to be exempt from the sales tax. Such would be the case where, for instance, a 3 per cent sales tax is paid on the price of a dozen eggs. "If the poultryman were required to pay 3 per cent on the feed for his hens, he would likely pass this extra cost on to the consumer, who would then pay 3 per cent plus a hidden tax on his dozen eggs." Exemptions on services such as those provided by beauty and barber shops, however, accentuate the regressivity of the sales tax. Generally, upper income groups spend more on such services than people in lower income brackets.

Sales taxes seem to be on the increase. Two state legislatures raised their general sales tax rates in 1969: South Carolina, from 3 to 4 per cent, and Texas, from 3 per cent to 3.25 per cent. Both states also increased the selective sales tax on cigarettes. South Carolina brought its rate up from 5 to 6 cents per package; Texas from 11 cents to 15.5 cents per package. Proposals to increase the sales tax rate have been suggested for North Carolina and Georgia legislatures in 1970.

Since there seems to be no way entirely to abandon sales taxes, Dr. Galambos suggests the use of tax credits to make such taxes somewhat more bearable to the extremely poor. "For instance," she says, "Colorado permits each person a $7.00 credit against family state income and a $7.00 rebate per person where no income tax is owed . . . In Iowa the credit and rebate are progressively higher as family income is lower."

Nationwide, states with income taxes derive 22.4 per cent of their revenue from income taxes. In the South only Virginia, with 30.3 per cent, exceeds this national average. Tennessee receives only 1.8 per cent of its financing from income taxes; Mississippi, 3.4 per cent; Louisiana, 5.2 per cent; Arkansas, 11.0 per cent; Georgia, 15.1 per cent; South Carolina, 15.8 per cent; Alabama, 12.0 per cent; and North Carolina, 22.4 per cent.

State income tax rates are not nearly as progressive as federal. Though some non-Southern states have income tax rates ranging as high as 14 per cent at the highest income bracket, no Southern state has a rate exceeding 7 per cent. "To determine progressiveness of an income tax, one must not only examine rates, but also the income bracket at which progression stops," Dr. Galambos adds. In Alabama and Mississippi progression ceases at the $5,000 income level. In Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina the cut-off point is $10,000. In Virginia it is $20,000; Arkansas, $25,000; and

Sales Taxes, Which Hit the Poor, Again Are Increasing in the South

A STAFF SUMMARY By BOB ANDERSON

Louisiana, $50,000. In Tennessee there is no state income tax except on interest and dividends.

Dr. Galambos is critical of local personal income taxes as they most often are applied. In effect, they are "payroll taxes." She says:

"Under a typical municipal payroll tax, the wages and salaries of employed individuals and the net profits of unincorporated businesses are taxed at a flat rate (often 1 per cent.) This covers all earnings of the typical wage earner, who usually has no income other than his salary. The payroll tax does not touch interest, rent or dividends. Thus a payroll tax, which often masquerades as an ability-to-pay tax, may end up to be as regressive as a sales tax."

To illustrate her point, she brings out the fact that typically a wage earner spends one fourth of his salary on rent. "There is no sales tax on rents. Thus while the one per cent sales tax may apply to three fourths of his income, the 1 per cent payroll tax would apply to his total salary." A genuine local income tax, she asserts, would use a comprehensive tax base, including interest, dividends, and capital gains.

Corporate income taxes in the Southern states yield approximately the same percentage of total state revenue as in non-Southern states. Nationally the figure in 1967 averaged 7 per cent of state tax collections. Among the Southern states the yield from corporate income taxes is lowest in Louisiana (5.6 percent) and Mississippi (5.5 percent). It is highest in North Carolina (11.1 percent) and South Carolina (11 per cent.) Texas and Florida have no corporate income tax.

In addition to levies on corporate income, the states derive revenue from businesses through taxes on insurance, public utilities gross receipts, alcohol and amusements, as well as through occupational license taxes and "severance" taxes on the extraction of natural resources. (Severance taxes are of major significance only in Louisiana and Texas, which raise 31.2 per cent and 16.8 per cent respectively of their state revenues from this source.) Due largely to its severance tax, Louisiana leads the Southern states in total revenue derived from all business sources—45.1 per cent—nearly triple the national average of 17.0 percent.

Of the Southern states, Florida receives the smallest portion of revenue from business sources (only 9.7 per cent.) After Florida, in terms of how small a portion of total revenue is derived from business sources, come Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, North Carolina, Texas and Louisiana.

The rationale for a lighter tax load on businesses, Dr. Galambos observes, has been to attract new industry to the South. "Although there is no unanimity on the importance of business taxes as an influence on plant locations, most economists conclude that tax differentials are outweighed by other considerations in plant location decisions."

Where states actually do grant property tax moratoriums to new industries, the report notes, "the burden of providing schools for the additional children brought into a community as a result of a new plant falls on traditional tax sources." Usually this means increased taxes on homeowners and previously established businesses. In 1965 Alabama's "new industry exemption" was estimated to have cost state and local governments from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

Although its role as a state tax source is slight, the property tax in 1967 made up 66 per cent of all revenue obtained by local governments. By any barometer, according to Dr. Galambos, property taxes in the Southern states are low when compared to those in other states.

Nationally the per capita property tax in the average state in 1967 was $132.81. All the Southern states are well below this figure. Arkansas is highest with $113.23; Alabama is lowest, at $34.12. Such a result is probably not surprising in view of the fact that income in the Southern states is generally lower than elsewhere in the nation. But the study also compares property taxes in relation to income. The national average is $45.27 in property tax per $1,000 of personal income. The average exceeds $40 in only two Southern states—Virginia and Florida. It is lowest in Alabama: $16.65.

Property taxes are generally regarded as regressive because the value of a home constitutes a lower percentage of higher incomes than of lower incomes. (See the accompanying table on the relationship between home values and family income.)

The Southern states' greatest failure in property taxation lies in their unequal assessment practice, according to Dr. Galambos. Tennessee, she observes, actually has amended its constitution in order to allow for the assessment of different kinds of property at varying ratios ranging from 20 per cent on farm property to 45 per cent on utility property. Other Southern states have not gone this far, but "all the states, in effect, grant a property tax subsidy to farm and vacant land owners through unrealistically low valuations by assessors."

Low farm income is the customary plea for lower farm assessments, but the fact is, Dr. Galambos declares, that such assessment practices actually provide tax shields for wealthy land owners, who are thus allowed to shift local tax burdens back upon the state. "States usually respond to the need for more revenue by raising sales taxes."

One solution to the assessment problem, the author thinks, might be state training and supervision of assessors and reorganization of small assessment district into areas large enough to afford qualified professional assessors.

Homestead exemptions, she thinks, "instead of allevating regressivity of the property tax, accentuate it." One fact of life is that "lower income groups are more likely to be tenants than homeowners. On rental property there is no homestead exemption. In the absence of a glut of housing on the market, the landlord shifts the property tax to the tenant in the form of higher rent. The tenant ends up paying the property tax, without the benefit of the homestead exemption, while the home owner, who is likely to earn a higher income, in effect enjoys an exemption which the law does not grant him. Moreover, the property owner is allowed to deduct his tax on the property from income to reduce his income tax liability."

Local governments in the South derive revenue from charges and fees for services far in excess of the national 23.5 per cent average. In Alabama 42.9 per cent of local government financing comes from this source. Local governments in Georgia are next with an average of 40.6, followed by Arkansas (39.7), Mississippi (39.4), South Carolina (37.7), Florida (36.0), North Carolina (35.6), Louisiana (31.1), Texas (29.4) and Virginia (21.9).

The dependence of local governments upon this source of taxation, Dr. Galambos thinks, is due to "the failure of most Southern states to permit local governments to levy taxes sufficient to obtain needed revenues. It is also an indication of the inadequate sharing of state taxes derived from other sources."

The Council's 24-page study does not offer specific legislative remedies. Rather, it is presented with the hope of stimulating discussion of issues vital to the economy of the region. Its concerns are two-fold: tax equity for the sake of simple justice and as a means to make the South a more livable region for all.

"The Tax Structure of the Southern States: An Analysis," by Dr. Eva Galambos, may be ordered from the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga., 30303. Single copies are 50¢ each; bulk rate, 40¢ each.

Sales Taxes, Southern States, 1967

	General Sales Tax			Selective Sales Taxes
	Per Cap.	Per $1000 Income	As % of State Taxes	Per Cap.	Per $1000 Income	As % of State Taxes
	1	2	3	4	5	6
U. S. (all states avg.)	$45.28	$15.46	27.9	$48.97	$16.62	$30.2
Alabama	48.25	23.55	35.4	47.42	23.14	34.7
Arkansas	45.02	22.55	31.2	49.17	24.63	34.1
Florida	50.18	19.52	34.3	59.56	23.17	40.7
Georgia	53.60	22.86	36.2	48.19	20.55	32.55
Louisiana	39.89	17.73	21.2	49.58	22.03	26.28
Mississippi	54.83	31.00	41.8	47.26	26.72	36.04
North Carolina	40.71	17.81	24.0	47.21	20.96	28.22
South Carolina	43.72	21.43	28.8	55.04	26.98	36.20
Tennessee	48.47	21.88	36.6	46.01	20.77	34.76
Texas	23.86	9.50	19.4	51.52	20.50	41.93
Virginia	19.21	7.48	13.7	46.34	18.05	33.08

Incomes and House Values

A 1967 study of Florida taxes by the U.S. Department of Commerce makes the following estimates of income-housing value relationships.

Family Income	Ratio of Value of Home to Family Income	Value of House
$ 1,475	6.10	$ 9,000
3,053	3.08	9,400
4,443	2.32	10,300
5,757	2.02	11,600
7,141	1.72	12,300
8,806	1.56	13,700
11,542	1.39	16,000
16,092	1.31	21,000
35,941	1.25	45,000

what happens if white businessmen honor a negro ? everybody from fats domino to richard nixon gets 'a piece of the action,' that's what

by REESE CLEGHORN

J. A. Terry watches as William Phillips cuts more than 250 plies of sleeves in one motion.

From Page 1

Mr. Terry's company now has more than 60 employees. They produce women's dresses (colorful prints, white uniforms and dashikis) which have an annual wholesale value of more than a million dollars. Although the operation is small by any manufacturing standard, it makes Mr. Terry one of the nation's black leaders in manufacturing, a field not many Negroes have moved into at the entrepreneurial level.

The social value is obvious. Most of the women on the machines were formerly unemployed, on welfare or earning perhaps $15 a week as domestic help. Now they earn an average of about $75 a week, and local merchants have been stirred by the fact that the weekly Terry payroll is almost $5,000 and growing. Mr. Terry slyly drove home that message when at one time he paid his employees on Tuesdays, when no other county payrolls were met. When the Terry workers started going to town on Tuesdays to buy, some of the stores responded happily by staying open later for them. Cash registers in Roanoke have always been thoroughly integrated.

Earlier this year the National Association of Market Developers, a predominantly Negro band of businessmen, chose Mr. Terry as "Black Businessman of the Year." The Roanoke Area Chamber of Commerce and the local officialdom decided to join the NAMD in sponsoring a local dinner on Oct. 29 for Mr. Terry. It had all the makings of a good thing for Mr. Terry, for the NAMD, for Roanoke, for Randolph County, for Alabama, and, as it turned out, for a good many others as well.

The broom sedge was swaying in a gentle breeze, pickup trucks were passing with loads of baled hay and a jet trail was slowly dissolving against a crystal-clear blue sky when the visitors began to arrive at the Terry plant, a neat brick and concrete-block building on the outskirts of town. The crowd of businessmen, politicians, friends of the Terrys from other places, government people and photographers was in a "dinner-on-the-grounds" mood.

"Nice to meet you, SUH," a local black man said to a white visitor, and a smiling local legislator told someone it was "a mighty nice turnout today." The crowd signed the guest book, managed by a bright-eyed school girl (black), and moved on to look at the dashikis on mannequins (white) and the sewing machines humming at the hands of women (black) who were wearing their Sunday best for the occasion.

In such great American dramas, everyone has an allotted role. Mr. Terry played his role as honoree very well, indeed, as flashbulbs popped and strangers muttered their names and reached for his hand. He apparently played it, in fact, the way he plays himself every day; he was deeply appreciative, he was genuinely interested, he was full of quiet dignity. Mayor Phillips played his role well, too, posing with Mr. Terry and welcoming visitors. H. D. Dodson was good in his role. He was the commercial photographer for the occasion. H. D. Dodson, who also is black, had just been elected an Atlanta alderman by an electorate of a quarter-million people. But at testimonial dinners everyone freely enters into the conspiracy, and Mr. Dodson's role in Roanoke was not that of the leading black elected official present but that of a commercial photographer, and so he scurried about asking Roanoke's city councilmen and other local pols to stand still for a moment with Mr. Terry while he stooped to find the right angle and recorded these historic moments.

The dinner itself was held shortly afterward in Roanoke's National Guard Armory. Terry Manufacturing Co.'s black employees filled one long table. Other tables were checker-boards of black and white. Some sections were mostly white, with local folk expectant and friendly, but looking slightly awkward in these strange circumstances. The long head table was a panoply of second-level and third-level Washington bureaucracy, come to bask in Mr. Terry's success and to extoll maximum feasible black capitalism, which one might think the Nixon administration invented.

Mrs. Velma Terry checks collars made by Mrs. W. M. Houston.

The Rev. William L. Dean, pastor of Roanoke's First Baptist Church, invoked the presence of God. ("We thank Thee for this man and his corporation . . . . as we venture into the marketplaces of life . . . . bless this program . . . .") Stell Benefield, judge of Probate Court, Randolph County, spoke of how Mr. Terry had had "a faith in himself" and how success had come from "the family working as a unit." Mayor Phillips said they were all there to show the state, the nation and the world how they felt about one of their leading citizens, and then he struck a note that seemed clarion in its simple honesty and humility: "We are not proud of many of the things done to our black people. But we are honestly trying to make a better life for all our citizens, black and white."

Judge Benefield, a tall, gray man in horn-rimmed glasses, returned to tell everyone about Roanoke (population 6,000) and Randolph County (population 20,000, 25 per cent black). They were, he said, making mighty strides against pollution, and soon they would have the purest water in the Southeast. There were strides, too, in improving the sewerage systems. There were plenty of schools of higher learning nearby, and rainfall was 54 inches a year.

The main speaker, black, was Robert J. Brown, special assistant to the President of the United States, in gray pin-stripe with stiff, white handkerchief. He was there to tell people that this administration does not believe in grandiose words and promises, but if they watch they will see the thing that counts: results. Negroes must build an economic base, he said, and that was what Mr. Terry was doing. He reminded everyone that the President himself had said that black people must be given "a piece of the action."

Finally it was Mr. Terry's turn. He came through soft and clear. "I'm sure you know that I don't know what to say at a time like this," he said. He knew how to work, but that was different. He had had no idea so many people would "turn away from their work" to honor him. He was ready to go on working. Mr. Terry is a man who likes to work, and he seems at home with people who like to talk about working.

He received the various awards, local, state and national, and he asked his employes to stand for applause. By this time the audience was well along with the fried chicken and Cokes. Fats Domino Fried Chicken, Inc., of New Orleans had provided the chicken boxes, it was noted, and the Coca-Colas were courtesy of the Anniston Coca-Coca Bottling Co. and Coca-Cola USA. The president of Fats Domino and representatives of Coca-Cola were introduced. All those connected with Roanoke and Randoph County's governments, the National Association of Market Developers, the state government, various nearby colleges and not a few black organizations were introduced. It was announced that Scripto had provided the pens that would be passed out at the press table, and that a representative of J. C. Penney's was on hand.

"Well, Roanoke is now on the map," a hefty black man from Birmingham said as the dinner broke up. A black Roanoke policeman and white state troopers helped with the traffic. A well-coiffeured white lady, resplendent in mink hat and mink stole, walked toward her car carrying a box of Fats Domino's fried chicken. On a car radio, an ebullient announcer was using a saying lifted from the old civil rights movement in his commercial for a used-car firm. "They tell it like it is!" he said. America works best when everybody gets a piece of the action.

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Address Correction Requested)

ATLANTA GA.

Bulk Rate
U. S. Postage
PAID
Permit No. 1085

SOUTH TODAY

A Digest of Southern Affairs

ATLANTA, GA. VOL. I, NO. 6 DECEMBER, 1969

Dabbs: 'The Past Is Now'

Tragedy, Loneliness Are South's Theme

The following is from James McBride Dabbs' introduction to his new book, CIVIL RIGHTS IN RECENT SOUTHERN FICTION, a commentary on the work of about three dozen Southern writers.

It is easy to discuss contemporary events, though difficult to keep the discussion objective. It is not easy to be so removed from them as to see them in their eternal outlines, pictures of things as they abidingly are; yet this is what the poet—and the fiction writer—tries to do. Not many such writers are therefore tempted to use the hot material of today; they tend to let time cool things down to the point where they can be handled dispassionately. We need not expect, therefore, to find a great number of writers using the materials of the recent civil rights movement.

20¢

It is hard to say just when civil rights for the Negro became a movement. All depends upon how you define movement. The Supreme Court decision of 1954 against segregation was a climax. In 1948 President Harry Truman's executive order had made segregation unlawful in the armed forces, and the earlier report of his Commission on Civil Rights, in 1947, was a landmark. I think it was this

To Page 5

PASS CHRISTIAN, Miss.—Earl B. Mathews escaped, but 23 died in an apartment building here. Many people remain homeless. (Wide World Photo)

Camille:

Neglect of People In Its Aftermath Creates a Scandal

VICTIMS OF the hurricane have been neglected and exploited. Homeless, jobless and often without basic means of keeping themselves intact, those hit hardest have found grossly insufficient response from the federal government and private agencies. A SOUTH TODAY report by James N. Wood Jr. Page 7.

"IT'S JUST the normal greed," a cafe proprietor told Calvin Trillin of the NEW YORKER. Page 6.

Black Veterans

IN BIRMINGHAM, reporters talk to returning Negro veterans. Will they be able to find places in the mainstream or become vocal and perhaps violent outsiders? By Barbara Thomas and Peggy Roberson in the Birmingham News. Page 3.

White Queens

SOME SOUTHERN high schools are having racial difficulties over—guess what—the selection of homecoming queens and cheerleaders. In North Carolina, students have proposed their own solutions to ease such tensions. By Claire Brown. Page 2.

A City Planner Returns to Waugh

(Where?)

A CITY PLANNER who works in Atlanta returns to his hometown of Waugh, Ala., for a family gathering. (You know where Waugh is. Near Mount Meigs.) He reminisces about Waugh, and ruminates about how the Waughs relate to the Atlantas, the Nashvilles and the Charlottes. By Arthur C. Campbell. Page 2.

Below: Mr. Dabbs lives in this house, built by his grandfather, on Rip Raps plantation in South Carolina.

The South and The Nation

By PAT WATTERS

WERE THE WHITE South through George Wallace and the black South through Martin Luther King Jr. telling the nation, strangely, something of the same thing?

In a sweeping, essay-like approach, Pat Watters has written of the South and its folkways, sins and virtues in a compelling book entitled THE SOUTH AND THE NATION, to be published on Jan. 30 by Pantheon. SOUTH TODAY presents a part of the book, dealing with white and black churches, on Page 8.

Mr. Watters, information director of the Southern Regional Council, is co-author, with Reese Cleghorn, of CLIMBING JACOB'S LADDER, which Harcourt, Brace & World will release in paperback in the spring.

REPORT ON REPORTS

By Claire Brown

Some 300 black students at Valdosta, Ga., High School were suspended (and later reinstated) after their walkout protesting the handling of the selection of a homecoming queen: a white girl who won over two black candidates. Disputes over the selection of cheerleaders and beauty queens sometimes have created racial divisions in other schools across the South that now are heavily integrated. Can it be that the biggest problems of school integration will have to do with such seeming trivia?

In North Carolina, a body of students and adults has come up with ground rules for handling such potentially divisive matters, as well as for handling matters of other kinds that often cause student unrest and conflict.

Student Involvement: A Bridge to Total Education is a compilation of recommendations and good ideas about those facets of a high school education that are currently sore spots. The first section of the report consists of the students' recommendations to school administrators.

"Allow teens to formulate and organize emergency committees with the powers to investigate and derive solutions to problems of unrest. By thus placing a larger burden of responsibility on the students, greater awareness of student capability and responsibility is engendered within the student populace. . . .

"Despite all justifications raised otherwise, tell the entire truth about any and all incidents, for rumors are found to be a major stumbling block to unity and communication within the high school. . . .

"Support students when they are right. . . .

"The principal should establish and disseminate to all students the grounds on which a student will be disciplined, suspended, or expelled. . . .

"The Student Council should become a student government, capable of making final decisions on many student policies. . . . Certainly matters such as hall monitors and school dress codes are areas which students could and should deal with, while disciplinary action should be ultimately decided by the administrator. . . ."

Special recommendations in hyper-sensitive areas deal with cheerleaders and cheers, beauty queens and graduation marshals. The thinking is straightforward: "Cheerleader selection has been and will continue to be a potential trouble spot in high school. Selection procedures must be fair to all students. . . . Cheerleaders should be selected, not elected. . . by ability, not popularity. . . . The judging panel should be made up of impartial people, preferably from outside the school staff. The panel should represent fairly all races and cultural groups. . . ."

The report is available from A. Craig Phillips, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Education Building, Raleigh, N. C. 27602.

The industrious U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Southeastern Regional Office, has some paradoxical news. Southeastern nonfarm employment continues to expand. The September, 1969, total was almost a quarter of a million jobs greater than that of a year earlier, according to the bureau's Nov. 12 report.

But—according to the bureau's Oct. 24 report—in a period of economic growth, some urban residents are experiencing serious employment problems. This is the major finding of the USDL Urban Employment Survey, a comprehensive interview study lasting 12 months, and covering Atlanta, Chicago, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles and New York. The primary focus of the survey was the Concentrated Employment Program (CEP) target areas, those central city areas in which U.S. manpower training programs have been combined for concentrated impact.

In Atlanta's CEP area, total unemployment averaged 8.6 per cent, compared to 5.2 per cent for the city as a whole. Total CEP-area unemployment was 9.4 per cent for all Negroes and 5.3 per cent for all whites. Young people of both sexes and races, between the ages of 16 and 19, had an unemployment rate of 28.6 per cent in the CEP area; the Negro rate in this group was 29.4 per cent. In the city as a whole, the same group had 25.3 per cent unemployment, with 32.0 per cent of citywide Negro youth out of work as compared to 18.0 per cent of citywide white youth.

For the city at large, unemployment for all men 20 and older was 1.6 per cent; for the CEP area, the same group had a total of 2.9 per cent, with Negro men unemployed at a rate of 3.0 per cent and whites at 2.6 per cent. Another unpleasant surprise: women 20 years and older had 5.1 per cent unemployment citywide. In the CEP area, the same group had 9.5 per cent unemployment, with a 10.0 per cent rate among Negroes and a 6.9 per cent rate among whites.

What does it all add up to? In the CEP area, more than three times as great a percentage of Negro women were unemployed as were Negro men. Almost 10 times as great a percentage of CEP-area Negro youth were unemployed as were Negro men. In this same neighborhood, almost three times as great a percentage of white women were unemployed as were white men. And there, in the CEP area, almost twice as many people were unemployed, proportionately, as all other people in the rest of the city.

It may safely be assumed that not much has changed in the CEP area from October to December. The greatest unemployment and underemployment exists in what is delicately called "urban poverty areas." These are the areas in which the Department of Labor has concentrated its employment and training programs. Are the programs unworkable? Or, is it that once people are trained for jobs, they find that jobs do not exist or that employers are not willing to hire them, anyway? While "Southeastern nonfarm employment continues to expand," urban unemployment continues to expand also, especially among young people and women. What can be done?

An added note: In her column of Oct. 27, 1969, nationally syndicated Sylvia Porter quotes a Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta study which predicts what unemployment rates among various groups will be if the national unemployment rate should rise to over 4.5 per cent. The current jobless rate nationally is between 4.0 and 4.5 per cent, and the bank's predictions are based on the unemployment rate of 7 per cent reached during the 1960-61 recession.

According to the study and Miss Porter, if the national unemployment rate were 4.5 per cent or even slightly higher, "the unemployment rate for Negroes would soar to about 8.5 per cent while the white unemployment rate would remain under 4 per cent. . . . The rate for Negro women would be over 9 per cent—versus about 5 per cent for white women. The unemployment rate for Negro men alone would be about 8 per cent—versus about 3.5 per cent for white men."

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics report cited above, those predicted rates of Negro unemployment have already been reached (and sometimes surpassed) in some urban areas. This happened at a time when the national jobless rate was offically 3.5, not 4.5, per cent.

SOUTH TODAY A Digest of Southern Affairs

SOUTH TODAY is published by the Leadership Project of the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta Ga., 30303. The Southern Regional Council, founded in 1944, is a research and information agency devoted to the attainment of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South. President: John H. Wheeler, Durham, N.C. Chairman, Executive Committee: Raymond M. Wheeler, Charlotte, N.C. Vice Presidents: Josephine Wilkins, Athens, Ga.; Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn.; Charles G. Gomillion, Tuskegee, Ala.; Lucius H. Pitts, Birmingham, Ala. Executive Director: Paul Anthony.

Reese Cleghorn, Editor Katherine S. Griffith, Assistant Editor

Some of the articles used in SOUTH TODAY have been edited for length. We welcome clippings which may be of use. They should indicate the date and the publication from which they came.

By Way of: Waugh

By ARTHUR CAMPBELL

As Interstate 85 makes its way east of Montgomery, through expensive cotton fields of several large white-owned farms, it almost has the same right-of-way as the old Jefferson Davis highway. Twelve miles east of Montgomery, I-85 gently curves around the village of Mount Meigs. Two miles further east it curves slightly around the village of Waugh.

When I was growing up in those parts, no one was ever quite sure where Mount Meigs ended and Waugh began. Older people of both communities said Minnows Creek was the dividing line. Minnows Creek starts somewhere in the hills of the Cecil prairies, meanders through a thickly wooded area about midway between Mount Meigs and Waugh, flows under I-85, makes its way through the settlement of Hickory Bend and finally empties into the Alabama River.

Thanksgiving was an occasion for a visit to Waugh to see the folks back home: family and friends alike. My eight brothers and I had gathered from afar to visit with our parents on the farm.

But Thanksgiving for the residents of Waugh is not just a turkey dinner at home with family folks. It is also, for a black family, a time to attend the annual "turkey day classic"—a football game between Alabama State College and Tuskegee Institute. On Thanksgiving, many of the local folk can be found at the events in Montgomery.

The day after Thanksgiving afforded more time to wander around the community. In Waugh, I am a member of the family. In Atlanta, where I work, I am a city planner. Wandering around the community, I found that Waugh now brings out the planner in me.

A leisurely walk along County Road 5 revealed many changes in the surrounding country. Even old County 5, once a graveled road that got quite muddy and messy during heavy rains, now has an asphalt topping.

In the very heart of Waugh, a subdivision—a suburb, really, of Montgomery—has been built on land that once belonged to Judge Scott. The judge was at one time the community's most prominent citizen. I was pleased to see the subdivision on the judge's old property, for I vividly recall envisioning—quite a few years ago—a subdivision's being built there. Unbelieveable as it seems, Waugh even has a second subdivision. Both are black. (Is Waugh furthering the cause of "dual housing systems"?)

All the development (Just imagine! a laundromat, a beauty salon, two new subdivisions and two new gas stations), makes me realize Waugh is being urbanized — even over-urbanized. Can Waugh cope with over-urbanization? Over-urbanization in Waugh?

Waugh, of course, is not part of the urban problem. It could be, in fact, part of the urban solution, if the Waughs of the South, still sentimentally home for hundreds of thousands of people white and black, can be made economically healthy.

Black Vets

A Place Now In America's Mainstream?

By Barbara Thomas And Peggy Roberson

In the Birmingham News

Is the nation, Alabama, and Birmingham prepared for a growing number of returning Vietnam veterans?

More specifically, will the black veteran be able to find a place in the mainstream of society, or is he destined to be a vocal, perhaps violent outsider?

About 600 ex-servicemen have been returning to Alabama every month. About half of these—white men—will face the usual problems of readjustment, seldom easy.

The other half—black men—will be leaving the democracy of the foxhole for a world where it is still statistically more difficult for a Negro to get a job, an education, a house.

Not that race relations in service life has been completely smooth. Stateside fracases have been widely reported, and returning soldiers say once out of the battle zone, social separatism is the rule.

But there are growing indications that a newly-reinforced black pride may collide head-on with white resentment over Negro demands.

Since World War II, the armed forces probably have been more integrated than anywhere else in American society. And military life does nothing to preserve a subservient attitude.

Hostility, whether from bitterness over an unpopular war or from racial divisiveness, does not abate when the veterans come home.

Bill Echols, 22, a quiet former chaplain's assistant, noticed this bitterness in many of "the brothers" he met in Vietnam.

"I've heard many of them say, 'If anybody doesn't look at me right when I get home, I'm going to kill 'em.' "

Echols, a Carver High School graduate with two years at Clark College in Atlanta, said, "I have a certain amount of hostility myself."

Echols said he is motivated to channel his hostility through Christianity, "to help."

"But take another guy," he added. "He's not motivated."

John Rogers knows the problems black veterans have in finding their niche in civilian life.

A former Air Force captain, Rogers works with the Birmingham Opportunities Industrialization Center (BOIC) and spends much of his time trying to find jobs for black veterans. About 75 per cent of the unemployed men he sees are vets, he said. . . .

Rogers has bought a home in a formerly white neighborhood for his wife and three young children. "There are 'for sale' signs sprouting all around," he said.

His white neighbors don't talk to him, he said, but they brought his puppy home when he strayed across the property line and got into a fight.

Rogers recently gathered a group of black veterans in his office for a bull session on problems and attitudes they met in civilian life.

Many of their comments were mirrored in two recent studies by James M. Fendrich and Michael A. Pearson, Florida State University professors, seeking to learn if black veterans are making it and to find causes of alienation.

The FSU professors concluded that veterans could play an important role in racial conflicts in the future unless there are significant changes to open up opportunities in employment and education. They said more intense efforts are needed from local agencies helping vets coming back from military duty.

"The assistance has to be more than a partial effort, if the expected outcome is to do more than heighten frustration," the professors said. . . .

The FSU team interviewed 199 black vets, carefully selected to present a cross-section of the ex-soldier population.

The Birmingham vets echoed sentiments in the Florida survey, without knowing it existed.

For example:

Fendrich-Pearson: ". . . these men come home after fighting for America and democracy abroad and expect equal treatment at home." . . .

James Don Rico Anderson, a staff member of Neighborhood Youth Corps whose whose father retired as an Army colonel after 31 years of service and who is himself a veteran of Korea and Vietnam: "He's used to better treatment in the service. Then he comes home and someone calls him 'boy' and that makes him mad. He can't accept this social situation in Birmingham—or anywhere—and he doesn't want to wait around until the situation changes."

Fendrich-Pearson: "These men could reasonably hope for greater improvements; however, they have become frustrated by the slow rate of their own improvement and with the rate of advancement of others whom they use as a basis for comparison." . . .

Lehman Harris, 30, Army vet, out of service two years, a probation aid in Family Court in Birmingham: "When I got out of the Army first in 1960 I looked for a job for 80 days then signed up again.

"When I got out in 1967, I had 10 years experience as a telephone lineman, six years of that as a supervisor with 22 men under me.

"When I asked for a job with the telephone company they said my experience wasn't what was needed in civilian life. I would have to start at the bottom.

"One of my friends with the same background couldn't get a job here, either, but he got one in a week in California."

Harris said he worked in a grocery store for $1.80 an hour before he got his job with Family Court, "the only place that would recognize my military experience as useful."

(South Central Bell Telephone Co., in common with most big employers in the nation, state that "hiring qualifications are the same regardless of background." The company states it is and will continue to be an "equal opportunity employer." Veterans are given credit, in many cases, for qualifications in communication areas by starting salary additions.)

The vet isn't thrown back into the civilian world with no help at all. Through GI benefits, the U. S. government is set up to help veterans go back to school, find a job, and get medical care. Many veterans take advantage of these benefits.

Larry Felton is Lehman Harris' wife cousin. He's a Vietnam veteran who would like to go to school under the updated GI Bill, giving 36 months of education plus high school.

But with a wife and baby to support, the $1.90 an hour Felton earns in a warehouse is necessary to keep groceries in the house. He works overtime in order to get as much money as possible, and that doesn't leave any extra time to go to school, even if Uncle Sam is willing to pay the fees.

(While the cost of attending school has skyrocketed, an unmarried veteran right after World War II would have received $5 more per month than he will in 1969 under the present aid-to-education bill.)

Fendrich and Pearson said "apparently the State Employment Office functions primarily to meet the needs of employers rather than to help men seeking work."

A spokesman for the Alabama State Employment Service in Birmingham, however, said veterans who come to that office without a "vocational choice," are sent to counselors and tested for talent or aptitude in various fields. Some are referred to companies that offer on-the-job training.

If the veteran can't match his skills and talent with the available jobs or training slots, "he must be realistic and be willing to accept something he can do," the spokesman said. . . .

Veterans who had jobs before they went into the service are entitled to find that same job waiting for them when they return.

However, many Vietnam veterans—white and black—went into service right after high school, or before graduation, and have no job or skill to fall back on. . . .

Fendrich and Pearson said the public, however, is "left with the impression that guidelines and proposals on paper are significant . . . put into effect to ward off a serious crisis; and given enough time, the federal bureaus and private agencies will be helping black veterans adjust to civilian life."

For those who don't connect with something right away, the separation pay which looked so big in a pile of crisp, green bills soon dwindles to nothing.

Then he hears that it's easy to get a $90-a-week job in New York or Detroit or Cleveland, and he takes the first bus out.

Lewis White, an official with Birmingham Urban League, said many veterans leave Birmingham and "don't come back, except for visits home to mamma."

Why do they stay in Birmingham?

Harris explains: "They have friends and family. This is where they want to be. They went to the service to get away from poverty. But basically the black man is in the same shape everywhere, whether in Alabama or in Michigan."

But it is more likely in Michigan, or Illinois, or New York, or California, that the alienated veteran will find militant black leaders to channel his frustration into organized protest or black power activity.

White said flatly, "There is no militant reform group in Birmingham. There is no threat to the establishment here, not now. But we are certainly a breeding ground for the militants in many other cities," he said.

Rogers concurred: "There is no organization of militants here, but the feelings are here—waiting for a leader."

Fendrich and Pearson, however, found that about 70 per cent of the veterans they interviewed "are optimistic when leaving the service about opportunities of civilian life."

Other interesting facets of the veterans' attitudes were brought out in the Florida survey.

Over 60 per cent of the black vets believe "the concept of equal opportunity in the U. S. is a myth," but over 80 per cent agreed that "most Americans believe that economic security for every man, woman and child is a goal worth striving for."

Over 77 per cent agreed that "people today are more concerned with law and order than with justice."

Interestingly enough, the survey discovered almost 80 per cent of the black veterans agree "in the next five years there will be more economic and social contact between blacks and whites rather than separation."

On the other hand, slightly over 30 per cent agreed that "blacks should work together as a separate group outside the two major political parties in order to gain more political power."

An alarming 36 per cent agreed "It is becoming clear that violence is the only way for blacks to obtain their rights."

Some of these statistics support optimism about the future of black and white people living together.

Others clearly offer warnings.

However viewed, the black veteran in 1969—with his training in leadership, his commitment to the black community, his youth and energy—can be a double-edged sword. He has tremendous potential for helping create positive gains for both the black and white communities, or for creating a violent, militant climate in the ghetto.

The Squire of Rip Raps

In Quiet Solitude, He Considers History's Sweep

By JACK BASS
In The Charlotte Observer

The sandy road to Rip Raps plantation winds a half mile off U.S. 378 in the Sumter County lowcountry, nestled under pines and scrub oak.

At the end is a loop in front of a plantation house built in 1858—one of the last before the Civil War.

It is not a grand home, but a substantial house with a veranda across the front, a friendly hound half-asleep beside the front door.

On a recent sunny afternoon, a small mud puddle in front of the steps provided evidence of recent rain. A lone black waterbug scooted back and forth.

Rip Raps is the home and birth place of James McBride Dabbs—writer, philosopher, teacher, scholar, lecturer, farmer—a man who loves his South, knows its good and bad qualities.

At 73, he wears a twinkle in his eye, behind glasses that frame a lively face topped by wavy, white hair. He puffs gently on a pipe that is a constant companion.

From another room, a typewriter clatters. It stops, and a few minutes later Mrs. Dabbs—herself a writer and historian of the South Carolina low-country—enters with a tray of tall glasses of sweetened iced tea and a plate of chocolate chip cookies.

In his study, Mr. Dabbs is writing another book—this one on Southern culture and religion. His Southern Heritage, published in 1958, was a brave autobiographical look at the contemporary South by a man committed to social justice. In 1964, he wrote Who Speaks for the South.

Only the brave spoke out in 1958. James McBride Dabbs angered friends and relatives, but he knew and stood by his convictions.

On a nationally-televised interview show with Mike Wallace, he was asked after that book was published if he was afraid of being physically harmed.

"Oh no, I'm a member of the aristocracy of damn fools," he replied gently to his baffled host. Elaborating, Dabbs continued, "I say what I believe and folks around shake their heads and say, 'Don't pay any attention to Dabbs; he's a damn fool.' "

It was the traditional South Carolina emphasis on manners that first involved Dabbs with civil rights.

In 1944, the late Olin Johnston, then governor, convened a special session of the legislature after Federal Judge J. Waites Waring ruled unconstitutional South Carolina's "white only" primary.

The legislature was called into session to attempt to circumvent the decision. (Johnston later received strong Negro support as a U.S. Senator with a liberal record on economic issues.)

"I knew they couldn't succeed," Mr. Dabbs recalls. "You couldn't set up a gentlemen's club. It was impossible; you knew they would get you sooner or later." He wrote a letter of protest to South Carolina's largest daily newspaper.

"What really motivated me," he recalls, "what really got me was such bad manners, talking publicly about taking the vote from Negroes. I knew we had mistreated the Negro, but my mother taught me to be polite. This was very impolite, I thought, and I said so. South Carolina still has a good deal of this."

On another theme, Dabbs observed, "It's really ironic that we Southerners of all Americans should know better than anybody else what it is to be in a war and come out on the wrong end of it. We know from experience. I think whites learned something that the everyday experience of Negroes taught them.

"History is in his heart. He suffered history. History is not just a playground; it could run smack over you. And it didn't have much regard as to how you felt about it. You might like it or not like it. You might feel innocent, but you still got run over. The South knows this. The Southerner raises all kind of questions.

"Something might happen to you between now and tomorrow. God willing, I might be living, and God willing, I might not be living, and God may not will.

"It might ruin all these beautiful blueprints you've got. An an individual, he's learned. I think it's wisdom to realize you've not got tomorrow tied up in a sack. The white Southerner is like the Negro. This is why we understand one another, because we approach life in its basic attitude.

"Life's a mystery nobody understands. Nobody's got it by the tail, and we've got to move carefully. And Southern whites and Negroes will agree on this and don't even know they agree. I don't care if whites like Negroes or if Negroes like whites, but the question is how much are they alike. And by golly, you come to break it down, point after point, they're almost like two peas in a pod.

"Whites don't want to recognize this and now Negroes in their rebellion don't recognize this. These young radicals are Southerners in their radicalism. And they're certainly Southerners in their rhetoric, all the things they're going to do. Certainly like an old Southern politician, they think they're telling the truth. It sounds good, you know, reads well. So they say it. I suppose all revolutionaries use rhetoric."

From the quiet solitude at Rip Raps, James McBride Dabbs reflects across the sweep of history the changing South he loves so much.

the past is now?

In the South, the past is now, as Mr. Dabbs writes. The past is, in short, always with us. Yet. . . .

In the mail to SOUTH TODAY comes, each month, a newsletter published by the Rev. Francis Walter, who runs the Selma Inter-religious Project, which works closely with grassroots people in Alabama.

Mr. Walter recently had made some mental notes while in Green County, Ala., a Black Belt area where Negroes recently have come to political power.

He wrote in one recent newsletter:

"BLACKS NOW CONTROL GREEN COUNTY'S GOVERNMENT. The National Democratic Party of Alabama held a statewide meeting in the county courthouse there a few weeks ago. The white-washed building, designed in 1839, sits in a central square in Eutaw. . . .

"I drove up, late. . . . No whites in town as far as could be seen, sun shining, but nobody. The second story of the courthouse consists of one large court room. It has 12-foot windows and small iron balconies. From these open windows and balconies was rising and falling the sound of several hundred people singing a slow, wavering spiritual.

"The first time union of that song with that building stunned me. I stood outside a moment to come to terms with a very full heart, then climbed the stairs. I found the black people, the white students, University liberals and north-Alabama democrats who compose the NDPA shared this intensity of feeling. A new thing . . . The universe spins like a rigged slot machine, for eons we lose, are ground down in the process, then one day BANG! The right ones come up: a song, we brothers and sisters and the inside (Praise God) of the courthouse.

"Perhaps before the song began we suspected we didn't belong or that the beams would crack and we go crashing down for our presumption. But as the singing ended we all of us know that the old courthouse and the song belonged with one another, had been hoping for one another's company all along."

And in another newsletter, Mr. Walter gave this little account of change, of another kind, in Alabama:

"Would you believe I was one of five beauty queen judges for the University of Alabama Homecoming Queen? One of the other judges was former Gov. "Big Jim" Folsom. We waded through 70 girls to pick the top three; the students voted for one of them for queen, the other two became her court. As "Kissin' Jim" said, "Hell, we didn't do too bad, we got the white the yellow and the black race represented." The students elected Miss Sue Shimoda Queen. A blonde from Birmingham and Dinae Kirksey of the Afro-American Society became her court."

The past is still with us. But.

James McBride Dabbs

Civil Rights in Southern Fiction

One of the South's great voices of common sense and poetic insight is that of James McBride Dabbs, writer, teacher and planter, who lives on the South Carolina plantation built by Dabbses and McBrides. His home itself conjures memories of the Old South. But on the wall, near an old musket, is an NAACP plaque honoring Mr. Dabbs. He is a man of all seasons, and of old and new South.

Mr. Dabbs has written a new book, published by the Southern Regional Council, of which he is a past president and current member of the executive committee. The book is a series of highly personal commentaries on Southern writers, and it is called Civil Rights in Recent Southern Fiction. (It may be ordered from the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta, Ga. 30303. 153 pages. $1.50.)

He is the author of numerous magazine articles and the following earlier books: Pee Dee Panorama (with Carl Julien), Southern Heritage, The Road Home, and Who Speaks for the South? The last of these (398 pages, $5.95) also may be ordered from the Southern Regional Council. Frank Smith, in reviewing Who Speaks for the South? for the Washington Post, said: "Dabbs' book will help to put (the Southern "image") in proper perspective. Perhaps more important, it will prod Southern whites who value the image to help polish off the racial tarnish." That is, in part, the value of all Mr. Dabbs' writing. He is a man who loves the South and has a vision of what it may yet be if it preserves the best of the past and moves on to fulfill its best in the future.

Dabbs . . .

From Page 1

report that brought to the attention of the nation the problem of segregation and the need to resolve that problem. But even before this there had been the Fair Employment Practices Commission (FEPC), and even during the thirties there had been several Supreme Court decisions enlarging the rights of the Negro to equality of education.

From time to time during this period, there appeared works of fiction which showed the Negro in a new and more sympathetic light: no longer now simply the laughing buffoon, or, paternalistically, the loyal retainer, but a human being caught in the tragic web of life. One thinks immediately of William Faulkner, the greatest name here. . . . These writers heralded a new day in race relations in the South, a day still only dawning, when race relations will have disappeared and been replaced by human relations.

To what degree they brought on, or even hastened, this dawn, it is hard to say. Faulkner was primarily a creative writer. Lillian Smith, who, in 1944, wrote Strange Fruit, was also an educator and a crusader. There can be no doubt that through her writings and her life she led many Americans to rethink the racial problem and to adopt new attitudes toward it. She thus hastened the dawn.

But people like Faulkner and Lillian Smith were also products of the same large movement they helped to carry on. They appeared at a particular time in the history of the South and of the world: after World War One, a time of endings and beginnings. The halcyon pre-1914 days were gone and the world was adrift in stormy waters. In the South, the old static society was gone too and no one could foresee the future.

Writers like Faulkner, Lillian Smith and several others, were close enough to the older South to remember how it felt to live then, yet far enough away, sufficiently detached, to be able to consider the Southern scene dispassionately. It tended to become poetry to them; it was emotion recollected in tranquility. At the same time, because it was so rapidly fading, they had a compunction to capture it now while they could still remember it.

Since the Negro is a part of the South, perhaps the critical part, any attempt to see the South with new eyes would include the Negro. It was this tendency to see the Negro with new eyes, which included the Negro's tendency to see himself with new eyes, that helped to bring on that movement later to be called the civil rights movement. . . .

There are two basic attitudes or themes (of Southern life); around these may be centered most of the others: the tragic theme and the theme of loneliness. These are, as one would guess, related: the tragic man stands alone, and he who, inviting loneliness, attempts to stand alone is inviting tragedy. But the tragic theme shades into the Christian theme, which is one of universal interdependency, the temporal mark of which is suffering—the Cross. Furthermore, each of these basic themes has its counter-theme. The counter-theme of the tragic is the humorous, and that of loneliness is sociability. The tragic theme is more inclusive and objective. It includes almost equally whites and Negroes, and appears in certain definite historical events. The theme of loneliness is more subjective and is more apparent among whites than among Negroes. Let us take the more general and objective theme first.

The historian C. Vann Woodward says that the South is the one American region that has suffered a great defeat, has undergone a long period of poverty, and has experienced a general sense of guilt. The first two characteristics are objective; the third, partly the result of the first two and partly the result of the racial situation which underlay the first two, is subjective.

I do not know to what degree Woodward included Negroes in his judgment. In the largest sense they can be included. Though Negroes seemed to have been on the winning side in the Civil War, the end of Reconstruction proved them largely losers. Furthermore, they had suffered a great and abiding defeat through being enslaved, and this defeat, though modified, was extended through segregation. As for poverty, they have been the most poverty-stricken class in the South during the last century. And as for guilt, though it is stronger and more general in the white, who built and maintained the guilt-ridden situation, it also exists in the black, the primary sufferer; and this for the reason that the situation closed to him the world of freedom, wherein humanity is developed, and so produced in him the sense of guilt because he could not be what he was meant to be. (This may not be fair, but it's life.)

The Southerner, in addition to secreting the kernel of guilt, made other, and often contradictory, responses to his harsh history. He concluded, naturally, that we live in an imperfect world, an evil world, a world of sin. At times he accepted this world in the challenging spirit of the Christian, who sees life as a discipline and God's hand within it all. At times he merely took it, often in the passive mood of self-pity—"Our fathers lost the War so what can we do?" the white would say—more rarely in the sterner mood of stoicism, proud to bear whatever burdens life might lay upon him, recognizing across the gulfs of class and even race those other brave men who endured.

Walker Percy points out how prevalent this stoic mood has been in the South, and says that the Southern soldier as late as Belleau Wood might carry in his pocket a copy of The Meditations Of Marcus Aurelius. This attitude, Percy continues, also existed among some Negroes. There was, for instance, Lucas Beauchamp in Faulkner's Intruder In The Dust. The extreme of the acceptive attitude was despair. Men drank, gambled, fought their lives away. Whites and blacks have done this. Many of the grotesques of the South belong to this group.

As a counterweight to this Christian-tragic-stoic-nihilistic complex, there is the general sense of humor, equally apparent among whites and blacks. A part of this humor is the expression of an easy-going, non-bookish, outdoor people, who observe life and like to comment upon it—tellers of tall tales; a more important part is the indirect expression of the almost unbearable difficulty of life, an attempt to divert attention from the insoluble problem, to release without violence the ever-present tension of the racial conflict. The laughter of the Negro often hides a broken heart, the laughter of the white a disturbed conscience.

There is another aspect of the tragic sense of life in the South: the burden of time, especially of past time. In the South the past continues; it is now. This is partly because of the relatively static life we have experienced during much of our history; it is, more importantly, because of the unresolved problems of our past. "Our fathers have eaten sour grapes and our teeth are set on edge." The past is a powerful source of strength to those who have accepted and conquered it; to those who have not it is a heavy burden. . . .

This tension—in my opinion too great—between our private and our public lives appears in many ways. It appears generally in the contrast between our highly social culture and our highly private religion. Allen Tate remarked years ago that the South needed an inclusive catholic religion to match its culture. It appears in the contrast between our vaunted individualism and our actual social interdependence. It appears in our words and our silences. We are a rhetorical people—our whole political history proves it; but we are also a people prone to ineffable silence. A Northern sociologist once remarked, "you have to live in the South a good while before you understand the silences." For one thing, they are often a sign not of assent but of dissent. When the Southerner falls silent, it may be that he is becoming puzzled, distrustful, fearful, and on the verge of anger. We make a great show of our personal relationships, but these are largely the froth of sociability . . . .

These basic themes of tragedy and loneliness, and any other themes, are tied up with the relation of blacks and whites. This is the core problem of Southern life. And the basic question in regard to it is how whites and blacks have existed side by side, with how much cooperation, how much conflict. To put it in other words, to what degree has the race situation in the South been integrative, to what degree disintegrative? The forces of racial conflict are relatively clear, the forces of cooperation vague and hidden; yet both are here, and any complete picture of the South will show something of both.

Lillian Smith

"One of the first Southern writers of our period . . . to use race relations in a work of fiction was Lillian Smith, whose Strange Fruit was published in 1944. . . . Strange Fruit is notable because it put the racial cards on the table by admitting deep involvement of whites and blacks in love and hatred and the rank injustice the whites were perpetrating, most clearly upon the blacks but also upon themselves. The division in the South stands out most clearly; but here also, for those who searched was the unity. . . ."

Ralph Ellison

"Ellison put his experiences into one book, Invisible Man, fictional in form, but to some degree autobiographical in material. Most of the action occurs in the North, but Southern influences continually appear. I would call Invisible Man one of the wisest expressions of Negro life in America. . . . Though on the whole it shows whites and Negroes opposed to each other, it suggests a possible harmony when and if we can learn to accept our common tragic destiny. 'Our fate is to become one, and yet many.' "

Hodding Carter, Jr.

"In the South, Alan (of Hodding Carter, Jr.'s novel, The Winds of Fear) realizes everybody walks a chalk line, most careful of what he says. Indeed, we're all in bondage to words, for words demand action. The paradox of this—though the idea is not stated—is that the South is also rhetorical, playing with words, using them for their own sake. Perhaps what saves the Southerner from continual disaster is that he learns to smile, however slightly, when he is being rhetorical."

Richard Wright

"Richard Wright gives us a Negro's view of the Negro's situation in Mississippi and Chicago in the 1930's and '40's. The Mississippi scene is presented autobiographically in Black Boy; the Chicago scene fictionally in Native Son. . . . Neither Wright's autobiography nor his novel has anything to do with civil rights. . . . Perhaps the most interesting thing about the story is that Bigger Thomas preceded by 25 years the recent revolt in the ghetto and expressed some of the attitudes that have only recently become general. . . ."

Reprinted by permission; © 1969 The New Yorker Magazine, Inc.

U. S. Journal: Pass Christian, Miss.

'Just Normal Greed'

By CALVIN TRILLIN
In The New Yorker

Damage in Gulfport (Wide World Photo)

When Hurricane Camille struck the Gulf Coast of Mississippi in August, Pass Christian was the town hit worst of all, and its citizens still assert their role as primary victims with something like civic pride. When asked about Gulfport or Biloxi —the larger, more commercial cities down the coast—people in Pass Christian are likely to say, with some condescension, "Mostly beach damage there." But the discussion of how badly Pass Christian was treated by Hurricane Camille is gradually giving way to discussion of how badly Pass Christian has been treated by those involved in the recovery efforts. Citizens having lunch at the Plantation Café, one of the few business establishments left standing, still tell some stories about their experiences that night, but their stories are more likely to be about their experiences since then with the Red Cross or the Small Business Administration or the Department of Housing and Urban Development or, most often, with insurance adjusters. (In Pass Christian, the American insurance industry would finish second in a popularity contest with a hurricane.) Among the Negro families living in trailers provided by H.U.D. for a temporary trailer park—a park consisting of rows of shiny new trailers lined up on a bleak, isolated field of dirt—a popular subject of conversation is why the money for Gulf Coast disaster relief rasied by Bob Hope on a celebrated telethon has not been used to help hurricane victims in Pass Christian. "I've got a real story to tell you," a man said to me one day in the Plantation Café. I thought he might want to tell me about being rescued just as his house blew away, but it turned out that he had been out of town during the hurricane. His story was that in the same mail he had received two letters from the Small Business Administration in response to his application for a low-interest disaster loan—one telling him he made too much money to qualify and the other saying he didn't make enough.

-◐-

Every issue of the Biloxi-Gulfport Daily Herald, the Gulf Coast's only daily, carries the statement of John Bell Williams, the Governor of Mississippi, that the Gulf Coast will be rebuilt into one of the finest recreation areas in the country. A lot of cars bear bumper stickers that say "Together We Build the Gulf Coast." American flags—which soon after the disaster became a symbol on the coast for determination to rebuild—still fly from the gutted remains of Pass Christian houses. But virtually nothing has been rebuilt in Pass Christian. In fact, of the trailers being provided by H.U.D. as temporary shelters for the homeless, more than 100 have yet to arrive. Ronny Caire, a former New Orleans newspaperman who puts out a feisty Pass Christian weekly called the Owl, regularly exhorts his readers to rebuild. But he has also called for an investigation of the Red Cross, and he has begun to run a post-hurricane feature called "Vulture of the Week." Lately, Caire has found almost as much to criticize about local merchants and politicians and land speculators as about outside insurance adjusters and Washington bureaucrats. Not long ago, the Owl reported that a number of the American flags had been stolen. "The normal greed has started," Milton Simpson, the proprietor of the Plantation Café, told me one day. "It's just the normal greed."

People on the Gulf Coast have always prided themselves on not becoming too excited about a bit of normal greed or about any of the other natural weaknesses in the human character. They often say that the prevailing attitude on the coast is "live and let live"—a phrase that nobody has ever used to describe the atmosphere in the rest of Mississippi. In a state that has always been able to muster powerful legislative sanctions again Demon Rum, the businessmen of Biloxi have always recognized that a weary traveller might want to stop now and then for a drink, and maybe even a game of black jack. Pass Christian residents often say they like the town because it is one place in Mississippi where a man can have a drink on his front porch without worrying about his neighbhors' reporting the transgression to the nearest Baptist minister. Without being liberal about racial matters, white people on the Gulf Coast are sufficiently uninterested in evangelical racism to be considered backsliders by a lot of other white Mississippians; without being satisfied with their lot, black people on the Gulf Coast have never organized an effective civil-rights movement. (Pass Christian was finally going to switch to a unitary school system this fall even if there had not been a hurricane that left it with only one school.) A lot of people in Pass Christian like to identify with the worldliness of New Orleans rather than the rigidity of Jackson. The Plantation Café serves not only fried chicken but red beans and rice, fried-oyster po' boys, and beer. The huge, rambling gulf-front houses that Pass Christian has been known for were built earlier in the century as summer houses for rich people from New Orleans. Those who live in Pass Christian now are more likely to be year-round residents, but many of them are also likely to be outsiders—people who are retired or semi-retired. Until missile contracts began to be cut back, there were a lot of people from the companies involved in a nearby NASA missile-test facility. The rest of Mississippi continues to regard the Gulf Coast in somewhat the same way that northern Louisiana regards New Orleans — a slightly degenerate place that should be denounced by anybody who returns from his annual inspection of its sinfulness, a place sprinkled with foreigners and Catholics and outsiders, a place that, for all its faults, has a lot of taxable assets.

Priding themselves on a worldly view of human nature, a lot of Gulf Coast people tend to take it for granted that the rest of the state sees the hurricane partly as an opportunity to exert its control at last over the Gulf Coast—the way a frugal, repressed bank clerk might finally get control of a charming playboy brother whose luck at gambling suddenly ran out. After the hurricane, Gov. Williams, with the approval of President Nixon, appointed a 10-man Governor's Emergency Council from the state's white business community to oversee the recovery effort. The council, seven of whose members are from other parts of the state, has control of all federal and state money coming into the area—giving it the political power of what one recent visitor described as "a disaster pork barrel." (One Pass Christian resident who has been critical of the council did point out to me one way that the formation of such a coastwide authority protected Pass Christian: since Pass Christian was almost obliterated and had to be totally evacuated, the towns with less damage could have probably soaked up all the federal recovery money in sight before Pass Christian had recovered to the point of being able to submit grant proposals.) Being worldly, Gulf Coast residents find it unsurprising that the government agencies involved in recovery are interested in accruing credit and power or that the businesses involved are interested in making money. A month after the hurricane, the federal Office of Emergency Preparedness found time to publish a 41-page report on how much of a contribution had been made toward recovery by every federal agency that could conceivably be considered involved—even the United States Marshals, who, it turned out, found quarters for families of United States judges whose houses had been wrecked, salvaged some records from the courthouse, and, in the midst of all this, "searched for and located relatives of Senator Eastland."

-◐-

At a city council meeting I attended in Pass Christian, the councilmen spent most of the evening discussing what kind of machine could best send out water bills. A couple of men from a new computer company made a presentation for producing bills through a computer print-out method. A man from Burroughs explained how his machine had the advantage of offering instant access to the billing history of each account. Except for occasional references to the Office of Emergency Preparedness, which is expected to pay for the new machine, and the fact that the meeting was held in a trailer, it was difficult to keep in mind that the discussion was going on in a town that has been estimated to be 85 per cent uninhabitable. Pass Christian hasn't changed much since the hurricane. A lot of buildings—two or three motels at the edge of town, a church, some blocks of houses, a block of the business district across from the Plantation Café—are gone without a trace. The Richelieu apartment building—where a couple of dozen people insisted they could party out the storm, and were killed—exists only in the form of a couple of piles of used bricks offered for sale. The poor people living in the trailer parks are physically isolated (many of them lost their cars as well as their houses in the storm) and, in many cases, are unaware of the relief they would be entitled to if they managed to fill out the proper forms. City councilmen are able to sit in the center of this wasteland discussing ways to dispatch water bills partly because the larger problems seem beyond their control. The government and city services of Pass Christian can continue to exist only through federal assistance, and the mayor says that the town, having submitted the proper applications, is just waiting to see what form the assistance will take. The Pass Christian share of the "We Care" fund raised on the Bob Hope telethon—$134,000—is safely invested in short-term bonds. The mayor and councilmen say they couldn't decide what else to do with it—most of the projects they had in mind being much more expensive than $134,000.

To those who have been concerned with poor people and black people in Pass Christian, the investment of the "We Care"

Disaster Relief: A Federal Failure

By JAMES N. WOOD, JR.

The handling of federal disaster relief in the Hurricane Camille area has resulted in plans for Senate hearings on the subject, probably to be held in January. Sen. Jennings Randolph, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Works, has confirmed that such plans are being made.

They follow investigations by the Southern Regional Council and the American Friends Service Committee, which have issued a report strongly criticizing the handling of federal funds and the disaster relief program in general.

Immediately after the hurricane, SRC and AFSC, with assistance from the staff of the Legal Defense and Educational Fund, began to investigate the federal and related responses to the disaster. The initial efforts were directed primarily toward encouraging federal agencies to remember the inadequate and inequitable aid provided in earlier disasters so they would avoid repetitions.

In the week following the Hurricane Camille, SRC and AFSC sent an observer who is familiar with the area on a trip across the Gulf Coast and into some of the inland towns. In mid-September, the two agencies sent a team of four to spend three weeks in the affected area—primarily in Mississippi, but also in neighboring states hit by the hurricane. They traveled 2,500 miles and interviewed 250 people, including community leaders and organization representatives. Their work was supplemented by a special effort in Washington, manned by two professionals, one provided by the Washington Research Project of Atlanta's Clark College. In October, one of the original Mississippi team members returned to the Gulf Coast so that information and observations could be kept fresh.

These investigations led the AFSC and SRC to issue a report entitled "In the Wake of Hurricane Camille—An Analysis of the Federal Response." Unfortunately, the report does not document any substantial improvement over past federal responses in the distribution of disaster aid. The report is available from the SRC at 40 cents a copy, or 30 cents in orders of 10 or more. It makes the following findings:

1. The federal government devoted its primary attention to public facilities damaged or destroyed by a natural disaster and relegated the care of individuals to others.
2. The federal government has not recognized by its actions the need for imaginative outreach to people both numbed by disaster and cut off from normal channels of communication.
3. Aid was not dispensed equitably to all people.
4. There has been no coordinated program to protect consumers from exploitation and fraud.
5. The special needs of the poor have not been affirmatively identified and met.
6. The federal government has taken little or no action to combat racial exclusion and discrimination in this disaster situation, and in some instances is contributing to the problem.

The Department of Justice has confined its non-discrimination actions to conversations with the Office of Emergency Preparedness about Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Other departments of the federal government have failed to take affirmative action to ensure non-discrimination. Only a tiny percentage of Small Business Administration loans have gone to black people. Most importantly, President Nixon has sanctioned the exclusion of the poor and the black from the long-range planning process by designating the all-white Governor's Emergency Council, chosen by Gov. John Bell Williams of Mississippi, as the official body through which all federal programs for reconstruction must be coordinated.

Based on those findings the report makes recommendations which would, if followed, help meet the immediate continuing needs in the wake of Hurricane Camille. The first of those recommendations is:

"We recommend that the federal government and its agencies work only through state or local bodies which affirmatively embody non-discriminatory policies and are fully representative of all segments of the affected area. If such a state or local body cannot be found or speedily created, the federal government should bypass non-complying agencies and itself directly administer federally funded or assisted programs for recovery and reconstruction, and that inasmuch as the Governor's Emergency Council of Mississippi is highly unrepresentative of the people of that state, the President immediately revoke his recognition of that council as the coordinating agency through which federal programs of recovery and reconstruction reach Mississippi."

For future disasters the report recommends the development of "Disaster Guidelines" which should include the following among its provisions:

——Uniform minimum levels for aid, equally applicable to all people regardless of their predisaster economic status, shall be established to provide such basic necessities as food, shelter and medical needs for as long as is needed;

——Special needs unmet by this minimum standard shall be considered on request of individuals and families;

——All federal disaster programs shall adhere to the intent and provisions of federal civil rights laws, including sending civil rights staff to the scene immediately;

——The total community affected, including the poor, shall be involved as soon as possible after a disaster in the planning and implementation of short and long range recovery and reconstruction activities;

——No agency shall terminate disaster aid without the concurrence of the overall coordinating agency.

money in the bond market is symbolic. "I've been thinking of writing Bob Hope and asking him if he realizes what's happened to that money he raised," a leader of the Negro community told me. "I finally got up at the last council meeting, when they were discussing water bills or something, and asked, 'What are you doing for these people?'" Those who run Pass Christian tend to believe that people have been taken care of when a trailer has been provided—particularly when the trailer is superior to the house they were living in before the storm. (It is true that some Pass Christian Negroes and poor whites have finally found in the H.U.D. trailers the shiny wood panelling and modern dining alcoves that their television set always displayed as the American Home—although some of them are still making payments on the television set despite the fact that it blew away in the storm, and many of them are baffled about where they're going to live when they have to leave the trailers.) The city did form a housing authority after the hurricane, and the housing authority decided, over the objection of the only Negro member, to charge rent for the trailers after the first three months to cover maintenance—$35 to $50 a month, unless the rent and utilities combined would exceed a quarter of the family income. But days after the decision the people in the trailer park were still worried about rumors that the rent would be 85 or a 100 dollars a month. The people in the parks are mostly Negroes—people who couldn't afford the installation charge made when a government trailer was put on private property, or people whose lot was too small for a trailer, or people who had no lot of their own—and being hurricane victims has not suddenly entitled them to be involved in or informed about the decisions made by a duly constituted city housing authority.

The hurricane has given middle-class whites some exposure to this kind of helplessness. When the Governor's Emergency Council established an appeals-and-review committee, Pass Christian, the worst-hit town, was given on representation. After an initial period of mass assistance, the Red Cross set up a caseworker system, and a lot of middle-class whites in Pass Christian now sound like ghetto welfare recipients when talking about how the caseworker they happened to get is insensitive and rigidly bureauratic and arrogant. White wage earners as well as Negroes and poor whites complain that the forms and red tape of the Small Business Administration are beyond them. But the reaction of middle-class whites to this experience has not been any new sympathy for the poor and the powerless or any outrage about their own lack of control over the machinery that is supposedly helping them. In fact, one of the most common complaints on the Gulf Coast, from black and white alike, is that the way the Red Cross and the Small Business Administration operate penalizes those who are trying to help themselves in favor of those who always needed public assistance before the hurricane. In the days just after the storm, there were a number of press accounts about how differences of caste and class were erased by the common need—accounts that Pass Christian Negroes always considered somewhat exaggerated, since Pass Christian residents who were evacuated to Jackson were separated upon arrival, with the whites going to a hotel and the blacks to Jackson State College dormitories— but there is no indication that the hurricane changed anybody's notions about who ought to have a right to participate in decision-making. A team of investigators sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee and the Southern Regional Council has concluded that poor people and black people have been denied any influence in the recovery effort by just about every private and governmental agency involved.

The people on the Gulf Coast may have become irritable about their treatment at the hands of government bureaucrats and private operators, but their capacity for outrage seems limited — even when it is outrage at the most despised insurance companies. At the Pass Christian City Council meeting I attended, some of the councilmen refused to approve the bond routinely required for the city clerk because it had been underwritten by the Travelers Insurance Company, but they eventually changed their minds. There is no doubt that just after the hurricane insurance adjusters pressured homeowners who were desperately in need of cash to settle for ridiculously low figures, and in the minds of most Pass Christian property owners a lot of the insurance adjusters now arguing over settlements are people who would claim that a house blown away by a desert sandstorm was damaged mainly by rising water—damage by rising water not being covered by household insurance policies. In this atmosphere, it was discovered not long ago that the state insurance commission had quietly approved a 50 per cent rate increase for the Gulf; Jack Anderson, the inheritor of Drew Pearson's column, printed a letter indicating that the state insurance commissioner, an official elected to police the insurance business, was having his statements edited by an industry representative in Jackson; and a Jackson grand jury supported Anderson's charge that the state insurance commission is "in the pocket of the insurance companies," going on to say that "the people of Mississippi can only be expected to be 'skinned' by these insurance companies." The insurance commissioner then demonstrated his concern for his constituents by holding public hearings on the Gulf Coast, but the hearings were a disappointment to those who expected to see an angry mob of citizens attacking the commissioner and the industry. Not many people came to make formal complaints, and practically nobody came to watch. On the first day of the hearings, I read a column in the Biloxi-Gulfport Daily Herald that started with the information that the insurance commission, a board of three citizens appointed to pass on rate changes, was composed of two insurance agents and a lawyer for insurance companies. That sounded to me like information likely to draw some angry comments from a columnist in a district where a lot of people had good reason to be angry about insurance. But, sounding barely irritated, the columnist went on to say, "It should not be considered a slur against any of the three to suggest that a fourth person, a consumers' representative, should be added to the Commission."

White Church

Black Church

by PAT WATTERS

This article is from THE SOUTH AND THE NATION, by Pat Watters, which will be published on Jan. 30 by Pantheon. (See Page 1 of SOUTH TODAY for more about the book.)

Several years after hot dog stands and bars had integrated, the governing body of one of the larger churches in one of the small cities enacted that sad Southern drama of trying to decide whether to admit Negroes, if they should so apply, to membership. One of the older pillars of the church got up and made an impassioned plea for allowing the Negroes in—not that he personally thought it was the wisest thing, but because of the new plant in town and the wishes of its management in these matters.

Surely there were motives better than this in the white Southern church, something out of the religious tradition of Western Civilization that mitigated racism in the Bible Belt? Some, at least. At that same meeting, another old man got up, an outspoken segregationist in his daily doings, and declared: "I know how I want to vote. But I look here at this church building, and I realize it's not mine. It's the Lord's House. And so we are going to have to do this thing . . . ."

The surface irony, the absurdity of such a meeting being held at all (considering the main tenets of the predominant religions), is too easy, too facile an explanation of the meaning, or lack of it, of religion in the South. More probably than in the rest of the nation, religion did have meaning for Southerners, white and black.... In the small cities and towns, the church was central not merely to the social but also—nearly the way it used to be in America—to the spiritual life of the people. Maybe this is in the main a commentary on emptiness of life, of the spiritual among the dominant majority.

The laggardness of the white churches to desegregate, to formalize in their membership policies the brotherhood of man (essentially, one more Southern exercise in form and ritual, since few Negroes would anywhere, even in the large cities, wish to leave their own congregations), got to the very heart of the tragedy of Southern racism. It involved the proprietary autocracy of the rich and powerful who liked to run their churches with the same disregard for democracy with which they ran their towns.

The splendor of the white Baptist churches in all the little places of the South was a notable phenomenon: no hamlet was so debased as not to have on a prominent corner some cement and brick temple of imposing grandeur, largely endowed by one or a few wealthy old townspeople—though the pressure of the building fund committees, often employing professional fund-raisers, upon the widows and the like for their mites were fierce and formidable.

The Baptist edifices were most prominent, most pretentious, for theirs was largest, most powerful, most reactionary among the denominations (indulging Southern propensities in the denomination's bylaws for each church being autonomous to the point of anarchy). But the "first churches" of the other Protestant denominations were also splendidly housed on prominent corners and similarly financed and controlled.

A description of one of the better situations in a small city suggests the tone of this leadership: "The downtown churches have made Negroes welcome on the rare occasions they have sought admittance. Even the First Baptist did this, deciding that if they should come, there would be no issue made of it. Some of the leading citizens are members. There are no Negro members of any white churches. The Presbyterian minister has been very good on race, although he has a very conservative board. The board is always mad at the National Council of Churches over some outrage. But the preacher works with them, despite his sympathies the other way. He is very patient. . . ." In some of the towns and cities, large as well as small, ushers have barred the church doors to demonstrating Negroes seeking to worship, this at the will of the powerful, autocratic old men. . . .

The sermons are bland, are banal, are filled with the showmanship and ancient thespian skills of which Billy Graham has become the grand champion and had held to ascendancy longer than any of a long line of notable predecessors. We may not say that the message of the religion the congregations professed escaped them, but it is worth nothing that the means of conveying its message was a relic from another age of communication, before television, movies, radio, before reading even, with one man talking, many listening. . . .

The talk was ever of change in the heart of man, and the preachers were in the forefront of those who were willing to see another generation or five or more of Negro degradation and needless suffering in the patient effort to will in the hearts of the dominant white majority a complete change in the fundamentals of the culture.

The Negroes, some of their own preachers leading the battle, churches their headquarters and staging grounds, ended the debate between the changers of hearts and those pragmatic souls of complete faith in liberalism who said change the institutions, and the hearts will follow along. The Negroes forced the change of the laws regarding the institutions; there was no chance to see fully what the effect on the heart (though the evidence was heaviest on the side that it would indeed follow along).

And the preachers, the good ones, went right on with the patient and slow effort to change attitudes in the midst of institutional flux and indecisive administration of law. Few had the firm knowledge (the intellectual ability to translate ancient dogma into modern relevancy) of Will Campbell and his followers that the basic symbolism of the Christian myth was the only and complete religious answer to racism. But they kept at it, the good ones among the white preachers, and there were many stories of their trials and tribulations, failures and occasional successes.

"You have to appreciate what it does to a preacher to have his board against him," one who had been through the experience said sadly. It gets to where there is nobody in the church he can turn to. This is the penalty for going too far on race, this the dread thing of losing influence with the powerful. Some preachers crack, the one who had been through it said, and some run out. But most are men of integrity, and see it through. The powerful men will withdraw their large financial support from the church—for good or for a period of pouting. Or they will just not attend services for a month or so, never saying anything, just not gracing the church with their presences.

. . . There were more sad stories than happy ones. A poverty program official in a small city told of the efforts to obtain Sunday school buildings to house desegregated Head Start schools, and of the newly arrived Baptist preacher who went with great assurance to his board of deacons to get their permission. His deacons voted 14 to 2 against it. "That preacher was just crushed," said the poverty program man. "I told him, hell, be thankful for those two."

Except in Louisiana, the Catholic Church was not the power for good and evil that it was in other areas of the nation. In the 1950s and to a lesser extent in the 1960s, it concentrated a great proselytizing effort among Negroes, with some success. But by and large, the Negroes were Protestant, too, with their own proud first churches on prominent corners, inordinate in splendor and investment to the resources of the congregations and, like the white edifices, sacrificial of human needs apparent all about.

But what went on in these churches and the more humble ones, in the Negro church and the religious heart of the Negro South since slavery times, was something sacred, something truly apart from the norm of psychic experience in America, and for the most part, in the white South. The religion and rites of the poor whites in their more frenzied and evangelical sects were closer than either they or Negroes would want to admit to the basic religious experience in the Negro churches. . . .

The Negro religion, in its old and modern forms, was not fanatical, and except in formal, ritualistic ways, as best a white observer might judge, was not piously puritanical. It was joyous and satisfying, and respectful of the humanity of the participants. Whites were privileged to participate in it during the direct-action days of the early 1960s, to discover the amazing beauty of music that welled up, often unaccompanied, in all kinds of complicated harmony and rhythms, out of the congregations, people's faces transfigured in the experience of the songs, and the sermons and prayers. . . .

Whites who were privileged to take part learned that religion, against all the cynical scorn for the namby-pamby and puritanical thing it had become in America, could have deep meaning, could touch the core of one's humanity, like great music or poetry or nature, and could impart dignity in the doing of what had always been considered undignified, a sudden, completely natural, uninhibited shouting out, and could hold forth hope and comfort and solace. . . .

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., had the genius to pull together all the best of the religious tradition and the deep religiosity of the Negro South to accomplish those secular miracles with which he has been credited. But it may well be that when time allows full judgment, his greatest accomplishment, his real meaning will be found to be spiritual. That a spiritual leader, in many ways a mystic, might rise in the materialistic and harsh America through which Dr. King moved, and might move that America in its own harsh and militaristic terms, remains the most tangible indication that something remains alive in the South that is missing elsewhere, the strongest threads of fact behind the myths of a superior new society evolving, some day to show America the way.

To say that this was a phenomenon of the Negro South, a subculture in many ways out away from the main American culture, blocked from its main activity—business—and therefore moved into a different kind of self-expression, spiritual, mystical, is not to say it all. For there was that remnant of the old white South that had shed somehow the curse of racism, and had for years before Dr. King sought the same goals that he was to, and rejoiced to rally to him when he did come forth—and these, for the very most part, had religion as a large part of their motivation and responded to the religion that was the core of Dr. King's message. . . .

Maybe the most that the South, in all the bad and good and beauty of its people, black and white, can tell America is what the whites through the evil of Wallace and the Negroes through the good of Dr. King have said—that they want and deserve dignity and respect, and that, moreover, all people do.

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Address Correction Requested)

ATLANTA GA.

Bulk Rate
U. S. Postage
PAID
Permit No. 1085

File So Today E.V.

APR 27 1971

PRESS RELEASE

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia
522-8764

FOR RELEASE TO
MORNING PAPERS:
SUNDAY, MAY 2, 1971

(ALL REPORTS AND STORIES IN SOUTH TODAY MAY BE REPRINTED IN WHOLE OR IN PART WITH OR WITHOUT ATTRIBUTION, EXCEPT FOR REPRINTED ARTICLES THAT SHOW THE COPYRIGHTS OF OTHER PUBLICATIONS.)

ATLANTA -- The rural families which have the worst housing and are most in need of federal housing aid do not get it because of bad regulations and continuing racial discrimination, the Southern Regional Council said today.

A report in the council's monthly newspaper, South Today notes that the loan funds of the Farmers Home Administration have been greatly increased in recent years, to $1.4 billion in fiscal 1971. But, the report says, the money will not do the job because this housing program, "like the majority of (FmHA's) other rural loan packages, is not designed to reach the poor."

It calls attention to a paradox: that persons whose income is below the federally-defined poverty level are actually, for that reason, ineligible for the most important parts of the FmHA housing program, a program intended to help the poor.

Other points the report makes:

-- The amount set aside for FmHA rural housing loans is insufficient, even if it were distributed where it should be.

-- "Traditional racism" in the FmHA and its parent organization, the U. S. Department of Agriculture, deters many blacks from applying for loans.

-- Local three-member committees of the FmHA, which must approve housing loans, still have disproportionate numbers of white members.

Between 60 and 70 per cent of the nation's substandard housing is in rural America -- more than four million units -- and a large percentage of this is in the South, the report notes. It says this housing blight continues to exist in large part because the FmHA "is super-conscious of the desires of Congress, and super-sensitive to the charge that it is giving money away in a 'socialistic' fashion."

It adds: "As a whole, of course, the U. S. Department of Agriculture is an extremely conservative branch of the government which has been firmly in control of the less visionary members of Congress since shortly after World War II. The USDA has not empowered the FmHA to liberalize its regulations because Congress -- especially its powerful Southern and Midwestern members -- did not want it to."

The report says FmHA's administrators have made "significant progress in equalizing its racial composition" in the past several years but black representation remains too small.

As of December, 1970, in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, there were 76 non-whites among 776 FmHA professional personnel; 231 non-white committeemen among 993; and 112 non-white committee chairmen among 327. (See state-by-state breakdowns on last page.)

These figures, as well as figures on the number of loans made to blacks and whites, indicate are "encouraging signs" of change in FmHA, the Southern Regional Council says. But it concludes that regulations for obtaining the loans themselves guarantee that those most in need of them will be left out.

"Less than six per cent of the FmHA total loans made in 1970 went to families with an income of less than $3,000," it says. "Many simply don't possess the knowhow and experience necessary to cope with the forms and letters and affidavits required of an applicant....Many white FmHA officials realize the tremendous gap still left between the black and the white farmer, and make every effort to contact and help the blacks, but the effort often ends in frustration and confusion on both sides. Of course, blacks' experience with the FmHA in the past taught them that it would do them no good to even attempt to apply for a loan."

Under present regulations, FmHA's housing loans are not made in towns of more than 10,000 population. The SRC report recommends that this size limitation be raised to 25,000 population.

Other recommendations include proposals that steps be taken to reinstitute direct grants to individuals for housing repair and improvement under the 504 program and that the FmHA re-examine its internal structure and attempt to substitute professional judgment for the now largely amateur opinions of the three-man local committees.

The report was prepared by William Winn for the Housing and Urban Planning Project of the Southern Regional Council, a privately-funded agency dealing with problems of race and poverty.

-0-0-0-

State-by-state figures on racial representation in FmHA programs in five states as of December, 1970 are:

South Carolina: 18 non-whites among 114 professionals; 48 non-white committeemen among 138; 26 non-white committee chairmen among 46.

Georgia: 13 non-white professionals among 139; 54 non-white committeemen among 305; 23 non-white committee chairmen among 96.

Alabama: 8 non-white professionals among 156; 39 non-white committeemen among 182; 18 non-white committee chairmen among 61.

Mississippi: 26 non-white professionals among 261; 62 non-white committeemen among 236; 28 non-white committee chairmen among 80.

Louisiana: 11 non-white professionals among 106; 28 non-white committeemen among 132; 17 non-white committee chairmen among 44.

File — Miscellaneous

December 2 1971

EV

I guess I can't think of anything right now on this, except that there has already quite a bit been done on various aspects of USDA shenanigans.

ba

SRC
Publ

Copy to BA for comment

or suggestion

EW

BA,
Any Con

November 25, 1971

NOV 29 1971

To: Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Georgia
NAACP, New York, New York
Rep. Shirley Chisholm, c/o The Black Caucus, Washington, D.C.
Johnson Publishing Co., Chicago, Illinois

Dear Concerned:

I have an important suggestion to make to all of you. You might not be in favor of doing such a thing, because of the present governmental administration that shows no outward concern for the Black population.

My suggestion is this: Combine your resources to make a complete analysis of the employment and advancement of the Negro in the United States Department of Agriculture (all agencies). After your study is completed, reveal it to the public through Ebony magazine. The Southern Regional Council made a study of this once, but I don't think that it made enough publicity to draw any attention for corrective actions. The August, 1971, edition of Ebony magazine, entitled, The South Today, showed the problems encountered by Blacks through the decades of time, and the progress that has been accomplished. Therefore, I'm sure that Ebony could put into focus many of the discrepancies that exist in some states, for Blacks that are employed by the United States Department of Agriculture. For any reference data on this type of study, I would suggest that you contact the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta, Georgie 30303. They wrote an article concerning this issue in November of 1969. It has become unbearable for me to take the racist, conservative attitude of the U.S.D.A., that tries to hinder the progress of the Black man.

Respectfully yours,
Anonymous

cc:
Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Georgia
NAACP, New York, New York
Rep. Shirley Chisholm, c/o The Black Caucus, Washington, D.C.
Johnson Publishing co. Inc., Chicago, Illinois

Envelope had return address
Clyde McField
Rte 4, Box 475
Huntsville, Tex 77340

Current Projects — SRC Indexing

August 17, 1970

MEMORANDUM

TO: Paul A., Paul G., Emory, Reese, Bob

FROM: Kitty Griffith

Re: Indexing and attendant problems

Because I am supposed to know about these things, I was made chairman of a committee to develop an index for SOUTH TODAY and NEW SOUTH.

I do not feel that such an index should be attempted until we develop a uniform list of subject headings which would be applicable also to the labeling of newsclips, materials, pamphlets and books.

Currently the research department is going by three lists of subjects--one for newsclips, one for materials, one for pamphlets. These lists generally agree, but there are inconsistencies and overlap of terms which make it very hard to find the information you want when you want it. For example:

City government: subject term now being used to label newsclips..
Government--local: term being used to label pamphlets.
Urban affairs (with subdivisions): being used to label newsclips, pamphlets and materials.

Add to the confusion if Janet Smith develops a classified list of SRC publications:

Black Political Participation: term suggested by J. Smith for SRC publications.
Politics--Negro: term being used to classify newsclips, materials, pamphlets and SRC reports housed in research.

Add further confusion if Kitty develops seperate index for NS and ST:

Schools: term used by NS and ST
Education: term used by research department

And so on.

A uniform subject list would solve these problems, and others thus making it easier to retrieve information, more quickly, more efficiently and with less frustration. I will gladly attempt to develop this master list complete with see and see-also references, but I must have your full cooperation and some amount of authority to make it work.

Once such a master list is evolved, anyone using this list as a guide can index ST and NS rather quickly. The same holds true for SRC publications pamphlets which are now only classified by one broad subject heading and for books which currently enjoy no subject access.

As I see it there are two options: one, I will develop an index for SOUTH TODAY and the Leadership Project only, with no attempt to relate to the rest of SRC research and thereby contribute further to its confusion; or, secondly, I can undertake to develop a uniform list of subject headings applicable to all SRC purposes.

In order to exercise the second option, which I highly recommend, I feel that I must be given full administrative authority to proceed along lines, which in my own technical opinion, are best.

I see no need to assemble the index committee. It is simply a matter of deciding which of these two options we will take.

Kitty

REPORT OF THE NOMINATING COMMITTEE
1968

The 1968 Nominating Committee consists of Dr. John A. Griffin, chairman, Mrs. Vivian Carter Mason, Mr. J. Bill Becker, and Mr. Matthew Perry.

The Committee met on Saturday, September 7th at 10:00 a.m. in the SRC offices.

The following are recommendations made by the Nominating Committee:

OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

President - Mr. John H. Wheeler

Vice Presidents - Mr. Paul R. Christopher
Dr. C. G. Gomillion
Dr. Lucius H. Pitts
Miss Josephine Wilkins

Executive Committee - Dr. Samuel DuBois Cook
Mr. James McBride Dabbs
Mr. Julius Chambers
Dr. Vivian W. Henderson
Mr. Frank Smith
Mr. McNeill Smith
Dr. H. Franklin Williams
Dr. Raymond M. Wheeler
Mr. Marion A. Wright

Legal Counsel - Mr. Joseph F. Haas

The Committee received, at the request of the Executive Committee, a communication signed by several members of the Council requesting that Mr. David Scull of Virginia be made a member of the Executive Committee. The Nominating Committee was very impressed with Mr. Scull's qualifications and agrees that he is a most appropriate candidate for membership on the Executive Committee. However, it was decided that only one change should be made this year on the Executive Committee, and that the member being removed, by his request, was a Negro. We noted a serious racial imbalance on the Executive Committee. Considering the vacancy created by Dr. Dent's resignation, the Executive Committee now consists of nine (9) whites and five (5) Negroes. Because of this, we felt it essential that a Negro be placed in nomination. Therefore, Mr. Julius Chambers of North Carolina, was selected. We urge future Nominating Committees to also be sensitive to this imbalance and correct it as is possible.

We have submitted an unusually large number of names for your consideration for members on the Council. This is due, in part, to your action on Life Fellows. In selecting the following individuals, the Nominating Committee gave the most serious consideration to the following criteria:

(1) We noted that at present the Council membership consists of 62 whites and 36 Negroes. We felt this to be a serious imbalance which needed to be corrected. Accordingly, of the 16 names to be submitted to you, 12 are Negro and four are white.

(2) We noted the small number of women on the Council, and were particularly sensitive to the suggestions submitted to us of women candidates.

(3) We sought a significant number of younger people who have been and are still conspicuously active in the areas of interest to the Council.

If approved, eight of the following nominees will be placed in the Class of 1972. The remainder will be placed in those vacancies, by class, which have been created by the election of Life Fellows.

You have been provided with the names of the nominees and a brief biographical sketch of each, as was requested by the Members at the Annual Meeting last year.

The nominees are:

Alabama

Mr. Neil Davis
Auburn

Mrs. John Cashin
Huntsville

Arkansas

Father Walter B. Clancy
Eureka Springs

Florida

Dr. Charles Griggs
Tallahassee

Georgia

Mrs. Helen Howard
Atlanta

Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr.
Atlanta

Mr. Julian Bond
Atlanta

Louisiana

Mr. Nils Douglas
New Orleans

Dr. Jewel Prestage
Baton Rouge

Mississippi

Mr. Aaron Henry
Clarksdale

North Carolina

The Rev. Phillip Cousins
Durham

Tennessee

Mr. James Stokely
Newport

Mr. Avon Williams
Nashville

Virginia

Mr. Henry Marsh
Richmond

Mr. Harry Huge
Alexandria

Mrs. Ruth Harvey Wood
Danville

Alternates

Mr. Hodding Carter, III
Greenville, Mississippi

Mr. Herbert Marshall
Norfolk, Virginia

Mr. William Baggs
Miami, Florida

The Nominating Committee is also charged with the responsibility of nominating three members to next year's Nominating Committee. The Executive Committee will appoint two additional members to this committee. For the 1969 Nominating Committee we propose:

Mrs. Vivian Carter Mason, Norfolk
Mr. J. Bill Becker, Little Rock
Mr. Robert Palmer, Sumter

Respectfully submitted,

John A. Griffin, Chairman
Mrs. Vivian Carter Mason
Mr. J. Bill Becker
Mr. Matthew J. Perry

AGENDA

27th ANNUAL MEETING

Southern Regional Council

ATLANTA SHERATON-BILTMORE HOTEL

November 17 - 18, 1970

A G E N D A

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.

ANNUAL MEETING

November 17-18, 1970

* * * * * * * * *

November 17

9:00 A.M.	-	Executive Committee Meeting
10:00 A.M.	-	REGISTRATION (Lower Level - Seminar Theater)
11:00 A.M.	-	OPENING SESSION - BUSINESS Report of Executive Committee Dr. Vivian Henderson, Chairman
12:15 P.M.	-	LUNCH - GEORGIAN BALLROOM Report of the Executive Director Mr. Paul Anthony

2:00 P.M.	-	FIRST GENERAL SESSION Dr. Raymond Wheeler, Presiding Report on present status of the Voter Education Project, Inc. Mr. John Lewis, Director
3:15 - 5:00 P.M.	-	SMALL GROUP SESSIONS Seminar Theater & Seminar Rooms A & B, C & D
7:00 P.M.	-	COCKTAILS (Cash Bar) (Hotel Foyer of Georgian Ballroom)
7:30 P.M.	-	ANNUAL DINNER (Georgian Ballroom)

November 18

9:00 A. M.	-	Executive Session (Lower Level - Seminar Theater) (Members & Life Fellows Only)
9:30 - 10:45 A. M.	-	SMALL GROUP SESSIONS Seminar Theater, Group I Texas Suite 10th Floor, Group II Room 3 (mezzanine), Group III
11:00 - 12:30 P. M.	-	SMALL GROUP SESSIONS Seminar Theater, Group I Texas Suite 10th Floor, Group II Room 3 (mezzanine), Group III
12:45 - 2:00 P. M.	-	LUNCH - EMPIRE SUITE Address of the President Dr. Raymond M. Wheeler
2:15 - 5:00 P. M.	-	FINAL GENERAL SESSIONS

NOTE: At 5:30 P. M., at their request, there will be a meeting of staff and members of the State Councils on Human Relations. All present at the SRC meeting are invited to attend as observers.

January 20, 1971

The Leadership Project

The Leadership Project was established in February, 1969, with a director, assistant to the director and secretary. It now also has a half-time editorial assistant. Until recently it had a half-time clerical assistant, who now has been moved to the general office payroll.

The project's assigned objective was to help the Council to better reach a broad range of Southern leadership. With limited resources, we have chosen to do this primarily with publications. These have been directed not only toward Southern leadership as such but also toward what might be called "strategic points" in national and regional media, with the objective of influencing social change and public policy.

The project has defined its leadership target group as black and white leaders at various levels: traditional civic, corporate, labor and religious leadership, as well as emerging grassroots leadership. An underlying assumption was the SRC needed to do more to make contact with those who evidenced some social concern, or were open to social change, but who had not been sufficiently reached by the kind of materials published by SRC in the past.

The Leadership List

At the outset, the project carefully constructed a 23-category list of leaders in the Southern states, now totaling 6,400 names. No effort was made to make this a comprehensive list of "influentials"; but great care was taken to make it a list of representative leaders in various fields. It includes, for instance, bar association leaders (officers and directors of state bar associations, eleven states); religious leaders (e.g., all members of district boards of social concerns of the Methodist Church, eleven states); emerging as well as established black leadership (including 1,200 names drawn from the Voter Education Project's contacts, principally the leaders of voter registration drives); and random samplings of business leaders (e.g., every fourth banker in the Bankers' Directory, six states). We are now evaluating response from the various categories and probably will enlarge and contract segments of the list accordingly.

Booklets

A series of booklets designated as the Leadership Series was undertaken. The first two, John Willie Reed, by Charles Longstreet Weltner, and The Chickenbone Special, by Dwayne Walls, described the problems of black Southern migrants to cities. These booklets were distributed to the Leadership List and other SRC lists. They have received widespread attention and have been used in some school systems and by a police department training program. The second, in expanded form, shortly will be published as a book by Harcourt, Brace & Jovanovich, Inc. Because of budget limitations, publication of other booklets has been delayed.

South Today

The project publishes South Today, a monthly newspaper with 17,000 circulation. It goes to the Leadership List, other SRC lists, and several state councils on human relations which distribute them to members. It also is sold on some news stands. It has received strong reader response (for instance, 461 mailed comments during the first six months). Perhaps more importantly for program purposes, it regularly attracts the attention of the national and regional press; almost every issue is followed by press coverage of reports in South Today, so that our audience for a given issue often is expanded by several million people.

We believe many of the research reports in South Today have had substantial impact. Among those published in 1970 were reports on Florida's migrants and the failure of state programs to deal with their problems; slum ownership by four Southern state welfare departments; unrest among local-government employes such as garbage workers and the need for more equitable handling of their needs; racism in Hollywood films and in Southern college and high school athletics; the Catholic Church's performance on problems of race and poverty; effective and ineffective administration of school integration, North and South; and Treasury agents' efforts to obtain names of readers of "subversive" and "militant" library books. Most of these reports received widespread press attention.

Other Activities

Aside from involvement in SRC's work in general, the project has become the principal monitor of the "segregation academy" movement and its damaging effects upon public school systems. Figures regularly compiled by the project constitute the best available on the subject. The IRS's performance in requiring non-discrimination for tax-exempt status, a policy adopted during the past year and so far badly implemented, will be a continuing subject of reports and analysis.

REPORT OF THE 1970 NOMINATING COMMITTEE

Your Nominating Committee met on October 15th to carry out its responsibilities. Members serving on the 1970 Committee were: Mrs. Jane Schutt, Chairman, Mrs. Helen Mervis, Mrs. Helen Howard, Mr. Robert Palmer, and Dr. Herman Long. All were present other than Mrs. Howard who could not attend because of illness.

The following are the nominations of the Committee:

President:	Dr. Raymond M. Wheeler
Vice Presidents:	Miss Josephine Wilkins Mr. Frank Smith Dr. C. G. Gomillion Dr. Lucius H. Pitts
Members of the Executive Committee:	Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, Chairman Mr. Hodding Carter, III Mrs. Joan Cashin Mr. Julius L. Chambers Mrs. Patt Derian Mr. Donald L. Hollowell Mr. Henry Marsh Mr. Robert Palmer Mr. John H. Wheeler Mr. H. Franklin Williams Mr. James Youngdahl Mr. Joseph Haas, Legal Counsel
For Re-election to the class of 1974:	Mr. Julius L. Chambers Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Edward E. Elson Chamblee, Ga. Dr. Edward E. Haddock Richmond, Virginia

For Re-election to
the class of 1974:

Mrs. Martin L. Harvey
Jackson, Mississippi

Dr. Vivian W. Henderson
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. Harry Huge
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Earl Johnson
Jacksonville, Florida

Mr. Henry Marsh
Richmond, Virginia

Mr. William T. Mason, Jr.
Norfolk, Virginia

Dr. Samuel Nabrit
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. J. Allen Parker
Tuskegee, Alabama

Rabbi Jacob Rothschild
Atlanta, Georgia

The Rt. Rev. Msgr. Alexander Sigur
New Orleans, La.

Dr. Vasco A. Smith
Memphis, Tennessee

Mr. James Stokely
Newport, Tennessee

Dr. William H. Townsend
Little Rock, Arkansas

New Members:

Mrs. Anna Rubin
Sumter, South Carolina

Mr. Herbert Fielding
Charleston, South Carolina

New Members Continued:

Mrs. Edith Dabbs
Mayesville, South Carolina

Mrs. Millie Charles
New Orleans, Louisiana

Dr. Aaron Shirley
Jackson, Mississippi

Mr. Henry Lambert
New Orleans, Louisiana

Mrs. Eva Clayton
Warrenton, North Carolina

Dr. Gary Lloyd
New Orleans, Louisiana

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. Jane Schutt, Chairman
Mrs. Helen Mervis
Mr. Robert Palmer
Dr. Herman Long
Mrs. Helen Howard

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

Operating Budgets and Income Forecast - 1971 (Proposed)

SYNOPSIS

GENERAL OPERATIONS
Budgeted	$304,650.00
Committed or expected	181,000.00
Balance to be raised		$123,650.00
SPECIAL PROJECTS
Budgeted	554,000.00
Committed or expected	335,000.00
Balance to be raised		219,000.00
Total Budgeted:	858,650.00
Total Committed:	516,000.00
Total Balance to be raised:		342,650.00

GENERAL OPERATIONS - 1971

ITEMS	1971	1970
Salaries	$ 172,000	$ 190,000
Social Security	8,000	9,000
Travel	12,000	12,500
Telephone & Telegraph	11,000	11,000
Executive Committee, Special Council & Annual Meetings	14,000	13,000
Books, Subscriptions, Research Materials	3,000	4,000
Office Supplies, Equipment & Maintenance	12,000	11,000
New South, Postage and Fees	5,500	5,500
Postage, General	11,000	9,000
Printing	2,000	2,000
Rent	13,350	13,350
Accounting	6,000	3,000
Insurance
General	1,800	1,500
Staff Benefits	17,000	20,000
Miscellaneous	6,000	3,000
Reserve & Contingency	10,000	15,000
TOTALS	$ 304,650	$ 322,850

Total Budgeted, General Operations	$ 304,650
Committed or expected	181,000
Balance to be raised	$ 123,650

SPECIAL PROJECTS - 1971

	BUDGETED	COMMITTED OR EXPECTED	BALANCE TO BE RAISED
Grant-In-Aid
State Councils on Human Relations	$ 60,000	$ 60,000
Information & Research (other than general operations salaries)
Printing	80,000	50,000
Editorial	20,000	15,000
Research & Consultative Services	56,000	56,000
Totals	156,000	121,000	$ 35,000
Resources Development Center
Office of the Director	37,000	- 0 -
Leadership Division	51,000	40,000
Manpower & Labor Division	52,750	32,750
Community Organization Division	41,250	41,250
Housing & Planning Division	40,000	40,000
Southern Assembly	56,000	- 0 -
Public Education Division	30,000	- 0 -
Health & Medical Services Division	30,000	- 0 -
Totals	338,000	154,000	184,000
TOTAL SPECIAL PROJECTS - 1971	$ 554,000	$ 335,000	$ 219,000

A STATEMENT ON THE FINANCIAL CONDITION AND PROSPECTS OF FUNDING FOR THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

Attached is the approved budget for 1971. This indicates our desire to expend $858,650 and our need to raise an additional $342,650 in order to meet that budget. We will almost certainly raise a portion of the desired additional funds. We will almost certainly not raise the total desired.

Regardless of this, the Council can finance substantially all of its planned program for 1971. The more important question, obviously, for the Review Committee, is the fund raising potential after 1971.

For your purposes several basic facts should be considered:

(1) Generally, we have no reason to believe that most of the foundations that now support us are not satisfied with the results of that support, and we belive they are prepared to consider renewal of that support. Almost without exception, however, their income is down substantially and the competition for support of most worthy needs is up.

(2) For future support we had banked heavily on our cultivation of several of the more conservative foundations which had either not supported us, or had supported us timidly and modestly. All indications are now that after the tax reform law, these foundations have retired to a more conservative and "safer" policy.

(3) Over 50% of our support during 1971 will come from the Ford Foundation. As I have said on a number of occasions to persons in that foundation, this is a dangerous situation for the Council. At several times in the Council's history we have almost gone out of existence because we were overly dependent on one source, and that source either changed its policies or ceased to exist itself. Further, I have indicated to persons in the foundation that for this reason, in my opinion, if there is a grant renewal it should be at a level less than present funding. Also, almost inevitably, a foundation that contributes more than half of the support for an agency may become more important and more influencial in determining program and policy of that agency than the staff and policy leadership. This must not happen to the Council.

Within the past six weeks, persons on the Ford Foundation staff responsible for the Foundation's relationships with SRC have, at their initiative, met separately with the President, Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Executive Director, in that order. In each instance they have been critical of the present program of the Council, and they have indicated that very possibly the Council will not receive further funds from the foundation. Members of the Ford Foundation staff have also expressed these opinions to a number of other persons. In at least one instance they have been critical generally of much of the staff, and of the staff director in particular.

(There is very likely merit in the questions raised by the Ford Foundation personnel. No agency, its program or its staff should be above critical scrutiny and scrutiny should, in fact, be welcomed. Certainly, the staff and policy leadership have the capacity for analysis and criticism, and call on that capacity frequently.)

Under present circumstances the Council may well not receive further support from the Ford Foundation. Under present circumstances, we project that we will receive support from approximately ten other foundations, most of them small. If this projection is correct, at present, SRC would be able in 1972 to operate at no more than fifty percent of its present level. Under any circumstances, the financial and program future for the Council will depend substantially on the work of the review committee, and the subsequent support and implementation of that work by the Executive Committee and the staff.

Paul Anthony

January 21, 1971

Resources Development Center

The Center was created in part to provide a vehicle for better coordination of our efforts that relate to economic and human resource development. More importantly it is intended to ~~provide~~ increase our capacity to develop insight, personnel, and programs which will have a constructive impact on the region's resources development. The achievements to date, beyond what we might have expected from the regular functioning of existing programs, is modest. Our constant challenge is how to make the efforts of small program staffs(Leadership -- 2½, Community Organization -- 1 and ½temporary, Housing and Planning -- 1½, Manpower ~~1½ ½~~/-- ½, General Administration ½, plus very substantial assistance on special projects, planning, program development from SRC's Executive assistant) relevant to the sizeable problems we face. This, of course, is simply an extension of the Council's traditional task.

We have during the year had a fruitful exchange betweenthe members of the staff. It has been largely informal center

The Research Department clips and files some thirty newspapers as well as several periodicals. Its library houses numerous pamphlets, special reports, and books. The Department makes these materials available to other members of the staff, to visiting researchers, and draws upon them in responding to requests for information, especially from the news media.

In addition to these service functions, the Department assists in Council research projects and works with Bob Anderson, the editor of publications, in the preparation of special reports. It completed in the summer the basic research for a new report on violence in the region. It is presently gathering and analyzing material for a major report on school desegregation. (That report will be available in early February.)

The Department is staffed by a Senior Research Associate (Doris Reed), two Research Associates (Barnetta Jackson and Joyce Meekins), a Librarian (Bernice Morrison), and a Secretary (Lynn Bowker). The Director of the Department, Paul Gaston, joined the staff in July, taking a leave of absence from his post in the History Department of the University of Virginia.

Statement by Paul M. Gaston

My statement focuses less on the operations of the Research Department than on my view of the Council and my particular relationship to it.

I joined the Council staff in July, 1970. I am here on a temporary assignment. At the end of my tenure with the Council I will return to the University of Virginia where I have been a member of the History Department since 1957. My reasons for accepting a position with the Council were essentially two.

First, my professional interests have centered increasingly on the history of the southern interracial movement. I have conducted a seminar in this area since 1965; out of the seminar have come perhaps a dozen master's theses and almost that many doctoral dissertations. The SRC and its predecessor, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, figure prominently in my research plans for the future. Association with the Council, as a staff member, clearly holds out great advantages for that research.

Second, like many Southerners who opted for academia instead of activism, my participation in the civil rights movement has necessarily been limited to state and local projects, the occasional demonstration and a modest amount of writing. A long-harbored ambition to play a more substantial role in the movement was put in reach by the offer to join the Council.

For one whose interests lie both in the study and analysis of problems and in the promotion of programs and strategies to alleviate those problems, the SRC is uniquely attractive. Historically, it has been the most influential southern-oriented civil rights organization that has combined the twin objectives of reflection and reform. Professional scholars have published more basic research, and direct action groups (such as SNCC and SCLC in the early sixties) are more easily identified with bringing dramatic social change. No group, however, has so effectively united the two functions.

The Council's dual nature--and the somewhat anomalous position in which it has always found itself--dates back to 1919, when the Interracial Commission was founded. The basic assumption of the Commission, and of the Council which succeeded it, was that social change could be promoted by bringing together in one organization individuals who had not only a deep commitment to change, but also the special skills required to interpret that need to the region, and to the nation.

Fundamental to the Commission's and the Council's effectiveness has always been a reputation for comprehensiveness and accuracy of information. This quality has provided entry to the national news media, and has given the Council's information and interpretations credibility, even in the camp of the nonbelievers.

The Council's ability to sense the mood and direction of the South, and accurately to assess the nature and significance of shifting issues has also been central to its record of constructive influence. Looked at from the perspective of the historian, this quality may well stand out in the long run as more important than any other aspect of the organization. Without this quality, the SRC would have lost its survival value long ago; with it, it has been able to absorb and understand the crises of the moment and intelligently relate them to the larger, long-run goals it seeks for the region and the races.

If these judgments of the Council's history are correct, then it follows that the organization's future success will depend less on organizational restructuring and program development (which are essentially derivative and inevitable in any case) than on a correct estimate of the relationship of the special crises of today and tomorrow to the enduring quest for a just and humane society.

What we strive to achieve with the publications of the Southern Regional Council could be reduced, in essence, to this: to tell the reality of the South, to relate that reality to the currents in the overall society, to serve as a vehicle for thoughtful opinion on the subjects with which the Council is concerned, in the process pinpointing, commenting upon situations and conditions which those in opinion and policy-making positions can use to bring about social change.

In 1970 we published four special reports and four issues of New South. In addition the editor has worked closely in providing editorial assistance to the staff of the Resources Development Center. Currently he is working on several projects, concurrently with his duties as NEW SOUTH editor. These include a section of the research report on school desegregation in the South, specifically, the chapter on Mobile, Alabama; he is working with Horace Barker, a young writer and researcher who last year did the major work on an important SRC Special Report "The Federal Retreat in School Desegregation"; on a study of housing desegregation enforcement in the South; together with a temporary researcher, Mrs. Susan Morgan, and Dr. Raymond Wheeler, he is coordinating a study of Southern Health Services, a preliminary version of which will be delivered by Dr. Wheeler as a paper at the University of Texas in April; with Emory Via and others of the Resources Development Center is evaluating how the staff can best make use of the 1970 census data; a study of race-related violence compiled by research from five years of newspaper clips is also in process.

This, I think, gives some idea of the range of our work in progress. Some rationale for giving attention to such subjects is perhaps also in order. The housing report was predicated on the proposition that since increasingly school integration is centering around de facto segregation that attention should be paid to how existing housing patterns producing such segregation are being affected by federal enforcement of open occupancy laws. There is obviously here a direct tie-in with the activities of the Resources Development Center--the Housing and Urban Planning section in particular.

The health services report which will summarize the latest research on such matters as malnutrition and inadequate medical care as factors in human development and also survey the availability of and delivery of health care in the southern region, should serve as a valuable tool in the continuing effort to bring adequate health care to the poor of the region.

A study of the 1970 census data is an enormous undertaking. Our immediate plan will be to produce a regional map showing county-by-county racial percentage breakdowns in the eleven southern states. This, we feel, can be done within the staff. A more ambitious undertaking would be a study of the economic status of blacks and whites in the southern region such as that done with the 1960 census data by Dr. Vivian Henderson. This, we feel, will require the full-time efforts for a period of several months of a capable economist or economics graduate student with ready access to computerized information.

These are publications in what are obviously various stages of production. Published special reports of 1970 included a study of violence in Augusta, Ga. and at Jackson State College; a report on the mood of black high school students at the beginning of the 1970 school year; a report on efforts to cripple Head Start programs in Mississippi; and a study of race relations in Daytona Beach, Florida. At the beginning of the Augusta violence it seemed to us that this was the first real Watts-type riot to take place in the South. It seemed to us also to require a more in-depth look than it seemed to be getting from the wire services. Thus we sent two reporters--one white and one black--to the city. While their report was being written the Jackson State incident erupted; thus we decided to combine reports on the two incidents. After publication and following news accounts of the reports we were contacted by the President's Commission on Campus Disorders. We had already sent them copies of the report and later sent them re-prints of Harry Huge's NEW SOUTH article on subsequent developments at Jackson State. The insights of both, I think, are reflected in the commission's report--although as we all know the president's response to the report has been something less than enthusiastic.

Our report "Voices from the South," gave fuller articulation to a trend we had reported in our school desegregation report two years earlier--the disillusion of black high school students with integration on terms which they saw as shattering their sense of self identity. But the trend had obviously deepened this year, from all reports we had. In brief, we reported on the student attitudes because they represented not something new to us--but, new we felt, to a large segment of the region, including educators and many others involved in varying ways with public education in the South. It seemed to us to usher in a new era in school desegregation.

The background on our Daytona Beach report was not recorded in the report itself. But briefly, what happened was that we were approached by various people within the community there to come in and tell them what was happening. There had been several racial incidents. Certainly there were the elements building up for larger and possibly more tragic ones. The city seemed so typical of a growing number of cities in these times. But the city administration had not yet faced its problems in any positive way. SRC sent a reporter to do a profile of the city. It was published in its entirety in the Daytona Beach daily newspaper.

During the year we published many significant NEW SOUTH articles including, to name only a few, a study of college student attitudes before and after their experiences in Southern civil rights activity; a overview of what happened to Mississippi public schools during the mid-term desegregation crisis of last year; a study of the church and its influence on the lives of poor whites in an Atlanta slum; an uncompromising critique of organized labor in recent years in North Carolina with an examination of the viability of community unions as an alternative to affiliation with the traditional labor movement; an exclusive NEW SOUTH interview with novelist Erskine Caldwell, evaluating the South in the years since publication of Tobacco Road; an article setting forth a bold outline for bringing hope and change into the lives of dispossessed people in Appalachia through community action and organization; a sensitive look at the results of a textile mill closing in a North Georgia company town; excerpts from the book The Orangeburg Massacre dealing with some questionable aspects of the F.B.I.'s investigation of the tragedy in that city three years ago; an essay by a young black novelist on the creative and destructive influences on black writers of life in the South; an appraisal of the work of the late Gordon Hancock, the famous black educator and writer who was a major figure in the organization of the Southern Regional Council. NEW SOUTH, because of the opportunity it offers writers for freedom of expression, because of the quality of that expression, has intrinsic merit. However, it is more than a quality publication, a vehicle for writers. It provides a reservoir of opinion and thought and feeling, hard-headed judgment on realities within the South, indispensable to the development of sound program.

In this brief report I hope the Council's research and information philosophy has been illustrated--the striving for excellence, for reliability while at the same time unequivocally committed to the goals of the Council. It is not easy and we do not always bring it off. We are never satisfied or totally happy with anything we publish because we know that given a little more time here, one more reading there, another day to look through clippings, one more conversation with one more person, a thing could have been better. I don't think this philosophy was created by any one person, but, rather, goes back to the earliest origins of the Council--but it is a way of doing things, an approach --reaching somehow a middleground between journalism and academic publishing--that I would presume to recommend be jealously guarded and retained.

(1)

A Personal Report

Emory F. Via, Director, ~~of the~~ Resources Development Center

It is important that SRC review its programs and structure. Although there is a form of continuous review in which the staff and Executive Committee engages ~~(and to a lesser degree, the Executive Committee)~~, there is a need for periodic revaulation and looking ahead which involves others. ~~more than just the staff.~~

In a broad scale review such as is now being undertaken it is easy to attempt too much. For example shall we look at efficiency, the competence of the staff, adequacy of program concept, relevance of programs to needs, or to general purposes and basic philosphy? Shall we look at staff structure, executive committee structure, "board" sturcture, or to the structural relations to other groups, for example, the state councils on human relations? These matters are related, although ~~and yet~~ there is a pressing need to focus on what is most important. ~~Further,~~ We need greater clarity in what is being talked about. It is difficult at times to ~~bring~~ achieve agreement on what concepts mean; this is understandable ~~in~~ where ~~evolving~~ concepts are evolving and at times nebulous. ~~are necessarily nebulous.~~ I ~~have wondered at times~~ wonder if ~~the~~ a chief difficulty is not with a few key words to which we have all assigned ~~certain~~ meanings, sometimes loosely, ~~and~~ but which we use as if ~~they had agreeable meanings~~ they were generally understood. Normally, I would think it ~~futiles~~ wasteful for those related to SRC to spend much time defining terms. But I would like to raise some questions about a few, which I hope will move us ~~forward in what it is that we wish~~ toward that with which we wish to grapple, ~~with.~~

(2)

Let me take a stab at the following: "a action," "delivery of services", "constituency," "visibility," and "improving racial relations."

Action. We do ourselves a disservice if we take a narrow definition.

In the past, a few people have attmepted to restirct its meaning to what was known as "direct action"-- the immediate ~~physical~~ protest demonstration against actions, policies, or institutions. Others have felt that only field operations which dealt with the immediate physical problems of folks(usually meaning black and/or poor) could be considered action. Voting related activities are generally ~~cons~~ counted in this definition although general education might not be. Political action of a partisan type would also count. All of these definitions are all right as far as they go. They represent forms of action which SRC has felt were important in the development of the South. In some cases the Council has had limited involvement in a given form because of either policy or resources. Only in the case of partisan political action has the Council not been a participant at all, as important as that area admittedly is. I think that we have undersold, or failed to understand, other forms of action. If I am consulted on whether a major corporation opening a large new facility should integrate its workforce as it starts its operations or follow the advice of a hired industrial psychologist and do it later, and if management finds my argument(admittedly joined by others) to start on an integrated basis reasonable, should this be marked as talk, consultation, or action? Similarly, if asked for suggestions for a resource person in a union training program or an idea about how to handle an interpretation of the changing south, is it action? I no longer accept easily the distinction between the one where jobs are isolated and a clear cut managment decision was made as action as against the latter example ~~seems~~ as being simply educative. ~~But~~ The participants in the educational program are people who also make decisions and relate to large numbers of workers. What they learn that affects attitudes, understanding, ~~expressing a concept~~, or knowing how better to defend or present new concepts is important. To contribute to that process is not inaction. If we are able, partly because we are simply here, and partly because of talent and some financial resources to say to a black group which wants to organize, here are some resources for having a meeting, here is assistance in setting it up, here are ideas that you can consider along with ~~the~~ the others, and if the organization is formed and we then consult from time to time (as do others) is not this process action?

When a group wanting to ~~a~~ "do something" about its community problems finds its way(or we find them) to us and a member of our staff helps them refine their thinking and to begin to plan to work in specific areas, and then provides them(at SRC~~'~~ expense) with a follow~~-~~up consultant ~~consutlatnat~~ with special epertise, is this not so closely tied to any definition of action, as to be counted in. When we publish a story about libraries, about pollution's detrimental economic impact, about segregation accademies and that story is circulated more widely, professional agencies adopt policies, governmental agencies alter either stance or practice then I think such activity is more than ~~publication~~ the production of words and constitutes action.

~~The~~/Delivery of services. In one view all that SRC does can be described as the delivery of services. ~~I would apply a similar~~ I ~~think~~ For this term we could do approximately the same as was done above for "action". What can clearly be ~~debated~~ discussed is what services do we and should we deliver. ~~And~~ Also we may need to discuss ~~how~~ the method of delivery.

Constituency. I maintain that SRC has several constituencies. In most of our program and publication efforts we think seriously about whom we are attempting to reach. I say "most" because on ocassion we will simply try to reach the public at large. Our constituencies are of two sorts, general and select. The general constituency is made up of the SRC board, a ~~borad~~ broad group of generalized researachers, libraries and that portion of the public that now looks for or responds to our name being attached to either information or a project. The select constituencies include: a sizable ~~portion~~ group of thoughtful media people; researchers with special regional interests; regional and national union leadership with a special interest in southern problems or who because of their positions need to be informed and/or involved; governmental agencies in the housing, manpower, education, poverty, economic development fields; private social action agencies; religious leadership; foundation executives and staff; agencies working on hunger problems; local community organizations which we have serviced; select professsional associations such as labor educators, a select group of political scientists, a select group of architects and planners; and fair housing groups. We are currently developing more conacts with younger people through our community organization projects school desegregation effort; this combines reaching college ~~age~~ students concerned with public school desegregation and ~~in reaching~~ high school students. In this process faculty and administration people are also involved in a working relation with us.

SRC has essentially transferred s everal constituencies at least in part(meaning that some of them still also look to us). Examples of this are the members of the state Councils on Human Relations, some of the self help cooperative undertakings, and the water sch. project. In the current desegrgation project we are planning for "transfer" in two ways: 1) to put the main burden for contact and local follow through in the hands of college related committees and their local community supporters, and 2) if funds are not available for continuation to transfer the operation to another agency(ies). Conceivably, if tthe project is highly successful and major funding could be found it could be established as a separate, limited life single purpose organization . Of course, it could continue as an SRC activity.

Now if constituency means mass popular following, then we have not chosen a s policy or by staff action to go that route. Similalry, for various reasons we are not a mass membersip organization. Further, we do not have extensive field operations where persons working in them or affected by them might be called constituents.

Visibility. This can to a large degree be related to the above discussion of constituency. We seldom at empt to get publicity for SRC; we do attempt to get publicity on problems, proposed solutions, methods of action, and reports of progress. We do not shun being identified with such reports. Indeed, I feel we have a quite creditable record for having media people tie our name in with information we have developed. By not appealing to a mass following, by not soliciting funds by mass appeal, and by not seeking attention for oursleves we make several gains. We can be viewed by others as more of a cooperator or collaborator and less as a competitor. We are less beholden to respond to immediate social fevers. ~~This~~ They increase our capacity to think and act on what is more fundamental and ongoing and I believe it increases our credibility in many sectors, including, I believe, with a fair number of those organizations which have adopted a different method of operation.

Improving racial relations. Yes, the SRC staff essentially accepts this as one goal. It is even a fundamental aim. But we have long since been removed from ~~that~~ the kind of thinking that stresses this as ~~essentail and that the sole apporach to it is long-run education,~~ our exclusive interest or that the sole approach to improved relations is through long-run educational efforts, tea and discussion, changing attitu es, or being nice. We believe that realities must be faced. The Council has an honorable record in this regard. It continues. We know the importance of and work for changed situations that can lead to equal opportunity, equal choices, and equal economic and political justice. And, yes, we know the importance of special opportunities and treatment(remedial and preferential) in reaching our goals.

The above "~~definitional~~" comments are not definitions, but I hope that they may narrow our focus on what is being discussed. To some degree they provide a rationale for accepting most of what we do as a staff as being relevant to social problems and the need for action on those problems. ~~In any event~~, To my mind such interpretations of the terms are a part of accepting the importance of what we now do. Certainly our activities deserve rethinking, challenge and perhaps to be turned around. But the turning should come only after careful thought about the value of what is being done, its uniqueness, and the need for it. If what is ~~to be~~ being done is valuable and needed, then to ~~do other~~ engage in other activities raises important policy and practical questions. On the policy level is the question of whether whatever is proposed that is a serious departure fits comfortably with ~~the~~ organizational purposes and methods. Practically, the problems is one of resources, namely, money and personnel.

D R A F T

Report of the Executive Director

For the director's office and the administration staff, though fortunately not for the program staff, 1970 was a year of interruptions.

Having spent much of 1969 watching the legislative process as it dealt with the "tax reform" bill, early 1970 was spent in assessing and adjusting to the new law. Substantial time was spent in providing foundations the information which they required to be assured that our programs were in compliance. We found ourselves in the position of having to spend considerable time in "fund raising" for funds already committed.

A major policy decision had to be made concerning the Voter Education Project, which had been the subject of much Congressional debate and was considerably affected by the new law. After the most serious deliberations the decision was made to create a separate corporation - if that corporation could receive its own tax-exemption from IRS. Tax exemption was granted VEP, Inc., on May 14th, and that agency now has its own board and staff, and is no longer a part of SRC administratively. Apart from the legal reasons, we believe this was a wise move. VEP, Inc., is a mature and experienced agency in its own right, more than capable of operating and producing one of the most important programs in the region, as has been shown during the past months.

Vacations were cancelled for the Director and the Secretary-Treasurer when it was learned in mid-summer that the Internal Revenue Service planned to do a full audit of Council affairs. Three auditors moved into our conference room on July 20th, and remained there for more than three months, in what was the most exhaustive audit in Council history. We have not yet been informed of the results of that investigation.

In January, the members of the Executive Committee elected Dr. Vivian Henderson to serve as chairman of that body. During the year, Mrs. Paul S. Derian of Jackson, and Mr. Hodding Carter, III, were elected to the Executive Committee. Members elected to the Council who began service in 1970 are: Mr. Howard Lee, Chapel Hill; Dr. John Monro, Birmingham; Dr. Ray Marshall, Austin; Mr. William T. Mason, Jr., Norfolk; Mrs. C. Bette Wimbish, St. Petersburg; Mr. Earl Johnson, Jacksonville; Dr. Martin Brooks, Pembroke; Dr. James Lawson, Nashville; Mr. Fred Gray, Montgomery; The Rev. C. K. Yarber, Texarkana; and Mr. E. H. Gadsden of Savannah.

Sadly, four of the Council's long and great champions were lost to us by death during the year. They were: James McBride Dabbs, Mrs. M. E. Tilly, Dr. Gordon Hancock and Dr. W. D. Weatherford.

In a very real sense this department is the nerve center of the Council and in one sense every member of the staff is a member of the department, contributing to it and making demands on it. Field staff feeds information into this intelligence center, not only for their own needs but for the needs of other groups and agencies in the region. (For instance, a report to a day care center on federal funding or a study of the housing program of the Farmers Home Administration.)

The terms "research and information" can be misleading and they are often misunderstood by those who are not familiar with our interpretation of them. To us these functions are programs in an emphatic sense of that word. They are too, I believe, unique both in the degree of results which we get from using them and in the degree of skill and reliability which the Council has developed over a long period.

Our information and research work consists basically of two parts. One responds, the other initiates.

The response function is based largely on our internal collection of information. This consists of clipping and cross filing of about twenty newspapers daily, and of innumerable magazines, community newspapers or newsletters, journals and reports of state and federal governments. Work space is provided for the constant number of persons ranging from students to journalists who come here to use this material and that space is seldom vacant. In addition, more than seven hundred mail and phone inquiries were responded to during the year. This function is not, per se, particularly unique although the subject areas and more particularly the reliability probably are.

(Senator Walter Mondale, Chairman of the Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity commented on July 1: "It is what we can expect from the Southern Regional Council, which I regard as one of the best, if not the best, sources of facts on what is happening in the South, to which we turn almost daily. We are most grateful for the work of your organization.")

The initiating function of the research and information operation is somewhat more complex. In this function we are program oriented, in that whether it be an incident or a basic issue we attempt to get direct attention and action on that incident or issue. Perhaps several examples will best illustrate this approach.

In February 1968, state police fired rifles into a crowd of black students at South Carolina State College, killing three. The Council immediately issued a report, "Events at Orangeburg," which documented this tragedy and warned of the implications. The report received attention and indeed led to a book by reporters Jack Nelson and Jack Bass, but the indignation and thoughtfulness that should have been forthcoming were not. In May 1970, shortly after the Kent State tragedy, state police fired on black students at Jackson State College, killing two. I, and SRC president Raymond Wheeler, immediately issued a statement which included: "The grave warning implicit in the Orangeburg situation of two years ago was not heeded...until such solutions (of indiscriminate force in the face of conflict) are repudiated as public policy from the Presidency on down, no segment of society, no person is safe."

Thereafter an SRC special report documented the Jackson State tragedy and it received wide, and thoughtful, attention from the media. Because of this, and the efforts of many others, the term "Kent State and Jackson State" was added to our vocabulary. It finally became evident to many that what happened at Kent State has long since occured, and continued to occur at black schools.

As another example, on July 2, it was reported to us that a librarian in suburban Atlanta complained that an agent of the Treasury Department had just called on her demanding a list of persons who were checking out "subversive" books. We responded with an urgency which we felt paralleled the situation. On July 9, we published a special edition of South Today with limited circulation which reported that Treasury agents had visited libraries in Atlanta, Milwaukee and elsewhere, attempting to gather the names of people who had checked out books on explosives and, in some cases, simply books loosely described as "subversive" or "militant". Our disclosure of of this intrusion upon the rights of privacy, with all its possible police-state ramifications, was widely publicized throughout the country. The Washington Post, which published the full report on its release date of July 9, called it "a signal service to American freedom" and the Charleston News and Courier commented: "Perhaps it's closer to 1984 than we think."

The American Library Association took immediate steps to make it a matter of policy to refuse to reveal the names of readers of library books and the Association of American Publishers supported that position. The Treasury issued a directive to its agents telling them to stop such fishing expeditions.

A major contribution was made in the protection of the individual from unwarranted intrusion from government. Other examples of the rationale of the use of the printed word - and related associations with members of the media - and the results of these approaches will be referred to later in the report.

Office of the Director of Information:

One of the important requirements of the successful use of the technique of "Information and Research" as a program tool is that those persons immediately associated with that process must be peers of the best creative minds in the nation. There is no doubt in my mind that the SRC staff in this area fits that qualification.

(Research and Information)

Several persons could be used as examples of this but the activities of Pat Watters, director of information, is a good example.

Watters is the senior person in the department, and as such, has responsibility for its total operation. In addition, during 1970 he has published, by Pantheon, the book The South and the Nation, with its appeal for support of the South's real strengths and opposition to its real evils. Reviews in the New York Times, The New Yorker, Washington Post, Commentary, and elsewhere, and public appearances by Watters have given us further exposure for our ideas and point of view.

Watters' third book, a study of the Southern Movement during the 1960's, is scheduled for publication in the fall, and South and the Nation will appear in paperback at that time. He has had articles in Dissent and the New York Times Magazine, the latter reproduced for distribution to the annual conference of the Legal Defense and Education Fund; book reviews in the Yale Review, and Progressive, and has been invited to submit occasional columns to the opposite editorial page of the New York Times.

Watters appeared as interviewer and narrator in an hour-long NET documentary on the present day South. It was presented in November as part of the Realities series on over 200 stations throughout the country.

Activities of this nature and quality with all of our creative staff gives us an outreach and influence, I believe, with literally millions of persons who must - on that scale - be exposed to issues and ideas if there is to be basic social reform in this country.

Office of the Editor of Publications and New South:

This office, headed by Robert E. Anderson, Jr., has published four special reports, four issues of New South, and has offered substantial editorial assistance to the staff of the Resources Development Center and to other agencies. (Currently, with Susan Morgan, he is doing a major study on medical care in the region, and he plans to do an analysis of how the staff can best use the 1970 census data.) The published reports include a study of violence in Augusta, Georgia and at Jackson State University; a report on the mood of black high school students at the beginning of the school year; a report on efforts to cripple the Head Start Program in Mississippi and a profile of race relations in Daytona Beach, Florida, reprinted in full in the Daytona Beach News-Journal.

New South articles which received substantial attention include the Mississippi school crisis as reported by Wilson J. Minor, an analysis of the meaning of the Wallace election by Ray Jenkins, and the trial of Cleveland Sellers by Jack Bass. (Also excerpts of the book, The Orangeburg Massacre, by Mr. Bass and Jack Nelson appeared.)

Others included an exclusive interview by Willian Winn with Erskine Caldwell, an in-depth look at student activities by three University of Wisconsin professors; an evaluation of Southern churches by Donald W. Shriver, Jr.; an analysis of the "southern strategy" as it affects school desegregation by Hayes Mizell; a look at the religion of poor whites by Harry Lefever, an Atlanta University sociologist; an essay on the South and efforts to exploit its human development by Richard Goodwin, first given at the Memphis meeting of the L. Q. C. Lamar Society meeting; a report of hearings in Jackson on the violence at Jackson State by a Washington Attorney, Harry Huge; an analysis of the strategies available to poor whites in Appalachia by Si Kahn, a young community organizer; excerpts from the book, A Mind to Stay Here, dealing with the work of Lucius Pitts at Miles College; an article on the black writer in the southern experience by Alice Walker, Mississippi novelist; a study of the aftermath of a mill closing in a small Georgia town, by Kathy Kahn; a study of how blacks, whites and Mexican-Americans organized in Houston around a community issue by Professor Harold Nelson; and, an essay on the southern environment by Frank Smith, director of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

By special arrangement, New South is being received by all members of the newly formed L. Q. C. Lamar Society and has been chosen by the Department of Education of Georgia to be taped in their program for the blind.

(Research and Information)

This quarterly is the Council's effort to see that there is - from our particular perspective and concerns - one thoughtful and well written journal to reach the interested and the active. We are somewhat surprised, and very gratified at the volume and quality of manuscripts submitted to us and the affirmative response we usually get when some of the best writers and journalists are asked to prepare an article. Authors' fees are few and extremely modest.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF RESEARCH:

In July, Dr. Paul Gaston, Professor of History at the University of Virginia and author of the book The New South Creed, joined the staff as director of research. This is an extremely important position within the staff structure, and we were all the more pleased that Dr. Gaston agreed to take a leave of absence from the University since the research position had been vacant for some time.

Dr. Gaston has worked with Mrs. Doris Reed, senior research associate, and her staff in making some basic changes in the methods by which we collect and file our materials. He has also made arrangements for temporary help to review and place in better order all SRC records before they are turned over to Atlanta University Library. Negotiations are now underway to have our very substantial collection of clippings and some other materials placed on microfilm (as New South now is through the University of Michigan) and offered for sale to universities and others who have need of them.

In cooperation with the editor, the research staff has done a major review of violence in the region during the past three years for a report which will be issued shortly. Tragically, the analysis and editing of this material has been slowed because of the sheer volumn of instances of violence which we found; the first draft of this report, tightly summarizing each instance, came to over 150 pages of single spaced copy.

(Office of the Director of Research)

Dr. Gaston has developed a major interest in the school desegregation process, and is preparing a major portion of the SRC report on school desegregation in 1970 which will appear in February 1971.

THE RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT CENTER:

1/2 Created in 1969, the Resources Development Center was functional for the first time during 1970. The Center is the Council's effort to bring more coordination to our work in those areas dealing with economic development and the development of the region's human resources.

At present we have staffed work in Housing and Planning, Community Organization, Manpower, and the Leadership Project. Additional areas of interest are concentrated on through consultants and temporary employees on a short term project basis. Dr. Emory F. Via directs the Center as well as our work in manpower and labor.

Housing and Planning

1 1/2 The Housing and Planning Staff consists of Moreland G. Smith, an architect and Arthur Campbell, a planner. On a temporary basis, Horace Barker serves the division, largely in a research capacity.

The group has undertaken a survey of regional and sub-regional housing groups working in rural areas and/or small towns to determine the extent of activity and those places where this staff might be of some significant assistance. Growing partially out of this has been a study of the housing policies and results of those policies of the Farmer's Home Administration. This will be released shortly.

(The Resources Development Center)

Consultative assistance is being given a group in Fairfield, Alabama which is interested in sponsoring a low-income housing program. Through the cooperation of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing a consultant has been provided to create a corporation and seek funds for a low-income housing project.

A study is almost completed on the problems and patterns associated with racial transition of residential neighborhoods over a ten year period. This information should be of considerable value to neighborhood stabilization groups such as the one in Jackson, Mississippi with which we are working.

Because of the requests for such information, we have collected materials on the problems of equal housing opportunities, a study of state and local fair housing laws in the South, and an assessment of enforcement of the federal open housing act of 1968. In this regard we are also doing background and supportive work toward the aim of organizing an entity to promote fair housing in the metropolitan Atlanta area.

We are hopeful of providing considerable specific assistance to the Panola Land Buyers Association, in developing immediate and long range plans for its 1164 acres in Sumter County, Alabama. Preliminary work of this nature has been done with New Communities, Inc., of Albany, Georgia in planning layout for land utilization for housing, light industries and commercial purposes in the implementaalready provided some tion of utility plans, sewer, water, electricity, and gas. (We have also given emergency assistance to families now living on that site.)

We have worked with Tuskegee Institute in their interest in Tuskegee's Model Cities program and in the Institute's attempt to establish a regional agrarian medical service delivery program in a five-county area.

Communication continues with the state and national offices of the American Institute of Architects and the American Institute of Planners to urge them to implement their avowed social responsibility.

With the Low-Income Housing Development Corporation of North Carolina, we have advised on land-banking operational techniques and how it might be used for housing development. Toward the end of the year the Council and the Low-Income Housing Development Corporation had tentatively worked out plans whereby the Council during 1971 would establish a regional Low Income Housing Development Corporation with considerable assistance from the North Carolina group. If established, the new regional housing agency would be independent rather than a part of SRC, and would seek very substantial federal funding.

The Leadership Project

2 1/2 (1/2 new)

Beginning in 1969 the Council created this program as a means of reaching the existing and emerging leadership with information they needed for intelligent decisions which they did not then have, and were not getting through other sources. The project continues to have this purpose but has added as well, a very substantial thrust in achieving program ends through investigative reporting. South Today, the 8 page monthly newspaper, is the primary means by which both efforts are carried out.

(The Resources Development Center)

Reese Cleghorn has directed this project since its beginning, with Mrs. Kitty Griffith Terjen and Mrs. Betsy Fancher as Associate Editors of South Today.

In October Reese Cleghorn responded to a complimentary letter about a particular article with this observation: "South Today's best function so far, I think, has been in priming the press to do things it wasn't doing. We haven't yet had an issue that didn't produce some of this. Most surprising, maybe, is the extent to which these reports have been covered in some of the worst newspapers in the Deep South, which if the Associated Press picks up the report, frequently carry them just as nicely as a Washington or New York paper would."

This summarizes well, I think, one of the most significant contributions of South Today. Through this publication we have substantially increased coverage of our concerns and facts in the national media, but for the first time we have gotten this material significantly into the total southern media. And, frequently we see where the information is being used without direct reference to source, such as in a number of "moderate" to "conservative" editoral pages.

(The Resources Development Center)

Among the 1970 reports selected for program ends through publication in South Today were: those which critiqued Florida state programs dealing with migrant workers; disclosure of widespread ownership of slums by state and local welfare departments; exploration of the plight of local-government employees, such as garbage workers, and the need for better city hall methods of dealing with the lowest-income workers; revelation for the first time nationally of the Treasury Department's use of agents to obtain names of borrowers of certain library books; a report showing that "segregation academies" are busing more children and busing them further than public schools (one of only a number of reports on "segregation" academies), and more recently exposure of IRS tax-exempt policies toward them; an examination of racism in Hollywood films and in Southern college and high school athletics; a study of the Catholic Church's performance on Southern social problems; a report on the price of pollution and corporate collusion with government in the despoliation of Amelia Island, Florida.

To illustrate the program intent and the potential of this type reporting one of the above mentioned reports can be cited. The July-August issue's report on four state welfare departments' use of lien/claim laws to discourage people from being on the welfare rolls, resulting often in state ownership of slums, received widespread coverage. In North Carolina, the practices and the bad ramifications were acknowledged officially, and there may be steps toward change. In South Carolina, the state welfare director disputed the report; but at least one local welfare director in his state then publicly disputed his contentions, agreeing with our conclusions.

From Florida, came a sad letter of appreciation from a Fort Lauderdale woman entitled to welfare payments who has refused to sign a statement entitling the state to her small home upon her death. She said she "went out at 72 years to clean homes" to avoid signing the papers. "My loved little home, bought with sweat and tears will not be taken away" she said.

Virginia, the fourth state, nullified all such liens on welfare recipients' property effective May 5. Our report noted the change, but it may not have sufficiently underscored the fact that Virginia hereafter will not be among the South's biggest slum owners.

The booklet on out migration, "The Chickenbone Special," by Dwayne Walls has been expanded to book length and will be published by Harcourt, Brace and Jovanovich, Inc. During the year the director of the project testified by invitation before the Mondale education subcommittee on the subject of segregated private schools. We continue to monitor the IRS and its tax-exemption policies with these schools.

Community Organization

1+ (T)

This division is headed by Clarence Wright, who joined the staff in September after John Lewis resigned to become director of the Voter Education Project, Inc. The primary focus of the project is to maintain a file on all significant minority oriented economic development programs and to provide assistance to them where possible, to assist emerging groups in organization and funding, and to encourage the use of indigenous resources in fostering community development.

The first months of the division director's time were spent largely in orienting himself to groups in the region, which has in turn led to much of our program in the latter part of the year. These included establishing a relationship with the Federation of Southern Cooperatives and attending their annual meeting in Selma. Relationships have been established with the Hilton Head Shrimp Cooperative and with the Jasper County Catfish Cooperative.

The division director has assisted in running a training program for the twelve community health trainees of the Beaufort/Jasper Comprehensive Health Center. This has included reviewing the training curriculum and supplying additional materials and information for training, and assistance with the recruitment of doctors for the program.

(The Resources Development Center)

Consultation has taken place with the St. Helenas' Farm Cooperative and if the land is secured by that group, we are prepared to offer technical assistance in developing 275 acres for low income housing and a shopping center.

Substantial association has taken place with the Clay County Economic Development Corporation, headquartered in West Point, Mississippi. In addition to other assistance, $10,000 was provided to the Corporation to assist in the rebuilding of the Corporation's community center after that building was burned, and we have provided $2,500 through a special grant to assist in the building of a home for the widow and children of a murdered civil rights worker. Also, we assisted in having the Ball Corporation provide a free cannery for the community.

The division has been providing ongoing technical assistance to the Black Appalachian Commission in cooperation with the Legal Defense Fund and the Southern Education Foundation. So far we have assisted this group in planning and writing a proposal and in planning meetings with the Appalachian Regional Commission concerning the lack of services and resources available to Appalachian blacks. As a result of these efforts, the Commission recently received a $25,000 grant to carry on their program for the next six to eight months.

(The Resources Development Center)

Following the opening of schools and growing out of a meeting in Beaufort, S. C., the division director became convinced that there was a potential for black and white high school students in new environments of desegregation to work out their differences. He further concluded that black and white college students could be of substantial assistance to these teen-agers in their own home towns. From these observations a special program was developed to recruit college students for this purpose. Mr. Leon Hall, former SCLC community organizer, was brought on the staff to direct the program.

The two staffers, Wright and Hall, have worked to establish first programs in Mississippi, Georgia and South Carolina with encouraging results. For instance, in Mississippi, the three participating colleges are Jackson State, Tougaloo and Millsaps. Fourteen students from Tougaloo have undertaken this program as their Interim Project of study for the school year. They will be working in their home communities full-time through January 22. Meetings with students have also been held in Florida, Alabama, and Virginia, in an effort to initiate programs in those states.

(The Resources Development Center)

Manpower Division

1/2 The manpower project focuses on three main areas: 1) labor education, 2) manpower practices, and 3) employment discrimination as a special part of manpower practices. Emory Via is the director of this division, was well as director of the center.

Labor Education

We recognize in the labor education activities that almost no agencies other than some unions endeavor to reach working people on matters that concern SRC. This is especially true in reaching white workers or workers in integrated situations. Our primary focus continues to be on an intermediate range of leaders. We have provided direct teaching services, usually meaning that the project director serves as an instructor. Included this past year have been participations in two one-week schools for young workers, in an institute for public employee representatives and public employers, a regional education program of a national ~~program~~ union for national union staff people with civil rights union responsibilities. We have arranged for other members of the staff to take part in education programs such as Paul Gaston's appearance before the Advanced Southern Labor School. The Manpower Program is frequently called upon to suggest resource people for educational programs, to assist in securing such people, to advise on program content, and to recommend and supply materials. We also attempt to expand the idea of labor education with unions and others. We have paid special attention to trying to interest southern universities in establishing full time programs. We envision this as a long run solution, providing a needed resource which can go far beyond the Council's capacities. We have had extended talks during the past year with several Georgia schools and preliminary conversations with representatives of other institutions. These efforts have been coupled with approaches to selected union leaders. In this same effort, the director arranged and chaired the Labor Education Section of the national meetings of the Adult Education Association; the meeting was held in Atlanta on the topic: "Southern Labor Education." The division director has been appointed to an advisory committee to the new Labor Education Department at VPI.

(The Resources Development Center)

Employment Discrimination

In relating to problems of employment discrimination, the year has been an interesting one though perhaps too restricted to educational and consultative approaches as opposed to participating in the start of pragmatic efforts to attack the problems more directly. The director collaborated closely with the Louisiana Council on Human Relations in planning, supporting, suggesting resources, and by his own participation in their first equal employment opportunity conference. SRC was an important resource in this undertaking and it had educational value for those planning the program (and charged with on-going program activities) as well as for those attending it. Somewhat similarly, we jointly sponsored a program with the Arkansas governor's office aimed at showing the need for greater response by state and local governmental agencies in hiring and upgrading practices. Again we were full participants in planning, providing resources and in all aspects of the conference other than recruiting. The project director also participated as a staff resource in an Urban League sponsored program as part of their apprenticeship outreach effort.

(The Resources Development Center)

The division director has conferred with senior management of a major national corporation on desirable hiring practices for a large factory which will be built in Georgia. This is largely a matter of manpower consultation, but something of the "leadership project" also in that this was something of an introduction to the region for these corporate leaders.

We have played a small part in attempting to get the various sides together in the controversy in Atlanta about adopting a "hometown plan" for increasing minority participation in the building trades. And we have been consulted by both management and union representatives about other problems related to discrimination.

(The Resources Development Center)

The director of the manpower project participated in a seminar for Southern public works officials sponsored by the University of Georgia. Although his discussion was concerned with several aspects of employee relations, a primary focus was on matters related to discrimination. We have assisted scholars on a number of occasions in their efforts to report particular aspects of employment discrimination. Similar services have been supplied for reporters on in-depth stories. The project director has participated in developing data and reports as parts of other studies.

Manpower Practices

The other kinds of manpower activities have been diverse and generally of minimal program consequence to date. The director has participated in a small national level manpower seminar. We are in the process of developing first a core of ideas, then a seminar, and later some action guidelines and proposals that relate to the implementation of new manpower policies. This effort is directed primarily toward the moves to decentralize certain manpower activities thereby placing greater responsibility in the hands of state and local governments. Although decentralization can assist the efficiency of manpower efforts, it can be done even better if there are reasonably sophisticated "watchdogs" (regarding adequacy and discrimination) and persons prepared to play advisory roles in such manpower efforts.

(The Resources Development Center)

In expanding the Manpower Project director's responsibilities to include directing the Resources Development Center, we have necessarily reduced the project's activities considerably. Our efforts to hire a manpower specialist thus far have failed.

Other Programs of The Resources Development Center

Largely through the work of Jim Wood, we continued in 1970 to give special attention to the relief and recovery efforts following Hurricane Camille in Mississippi. The U. S. Senate Public Works Committee held hearings, the subject of which was: "Federal Response to Hurricane Camille." We were invited to testify before the committee twice. First at the January hearings in Biloxi where we entered the joint SRC-AFSC Report titled "In the Wake of Hurricane Camille: An Analysis of the Federal Response." Our second testimony was made in Washington in May, and was directly related to proposed new disaster legislation. A new disaster law became effective on December 31, 1970. While this law does not contain all of our recommendations, it is a large step forward. We began in December to work with groups in Mississippi in an attempt to develop a strategy for economic development for low-income families with the ten (10) Mississippi counties most affected by the storm. In August, we went to Corpus Christi following Hurricane Celia. Here we found that administrative changes in the Federal and Red Cross response had brought about vast improvement in the delivery of services to the victims of the storm.

(The Resources Development Center)

Recommendations made by us and others have been accepted. Unfortunately, many similar recommendations are yet unheeded.

Through the use of consultants we have done further work in identifying poverty among whites in the region, including an unpublished background study of the characteristics of poor whites in an urban area. Other interests, largely in Appalachia, are referred to in our publications program.

The staff of the Center spent a day in Knoxville with the Senior staff of the Tennessee Valley Authority as a means of both staffs becoming more familiar with the work and resources of the other.

Research Seminar

SRC through its Resources Development Center and the Ford Foundation, through George Esser, held a research seminar October 9-11. A small group of scholars gathered at the Biltmore Hotel to consider research needs related to the economic and social development of the South. Discussion was not limited to those topics which SRC might undertake by itself.

A conscious effort was made to have a variety of disciplines represented. Nineteen persons accepted our invitation to participate. They came from 12 institutions of higher learning, and four agencies with research interests. The invitees were joined by two members of the Ford Foundation staff, and eight members of the SRC staff. About half of the participants were new to the Council.

(The Resources Development Center)

The seminar was important in giving us a new opportunity to think through research needs with people of varying perspectives. It was not a seminar which laid out an agenda of research needs, even though this had been one original aim. It did underscore the utility of what SRC now does and pointed to the need to expand our interaction with existing research efforts. The researchers were, in general, pleased at the opportunity to get to know each other and the Council staff. Our staff has made valuable contacts through this effort with individuals and programs which have already led to idea and data sharing.

If financial resources could be found it would be most useful to carry through with one idea developed during the seminar. This would be to establish a research center as a part of SRC, which could help generate useful research ideas calling for more extensive research than is now generally possible for us, but which would still hold to standards of relatively quick production and high relevance to problems. By using an SRC based research center, we can better select those individuals in institutions and elsewhere who are most likely to be able to perform according to those standards, to insure application of findings, and to provide for more popular interpretation of results where that is indicated.

(The Resources Development Center)

Education

The Resources Development Center recognizes that there are crucial problems in education that must be faced. While we have been unable to find the funds for a permanent full-time staff member, we have been active. In the reports of the Community Organization Division and the Leadership Project, there are descriptions of a student desegregation program and efforts to expose and monitor the segregationist academies. We made a small grant to the Norfolk Committee on Improvement of Education. The purpose of this grant was to aid the committee's work in introducing Black History into the public school system.

We sponsored in January a meeting of several agencies, all of whom have at least a regional concern in the area of school desegregation. The discussion was around the immediate problems of Mississippi and the expected problems of the fall term which would come with greatly expanded school desegregation. In the spring, Professor Bickel of Yale announced his retreat. We assisted in seeing that he was challenged. The chief challengers were Charles Morgan, Pat Watters, Hayes Mizell, and Reese Cleghorn. In the fall we worked with HEW and private agencies in an effort to make the Emergency School Assistance Program effective. Closely related to this effort was the holding of several discussions about the creation of a Regional Education Institute that could express our kinds of concerns.

S T A F F

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.

ADMINISTRATIVE

PAUL ANTHONY, Executive Director

Mrs. Jerusha Brothers, Secretary to Director

JAMES N. WOOD, Executive Assistant

MRS. RUTH HOUSE VICK, Secretary-Treasurer

Miss Priscilla Eddy, Assistant to the Secretary-Treasurer

MRS. NOBBIE MORGAN, Administrative Assistant

Mrs. Bettye Childres, Receptionist

Miss Eugenia Kemp, Clerk-Typist

Jesse Hinton, Mailroom Clerk

Ronald Wray, Functional Machinist & Mailroom Clerk

MISS JANET SMITH, Publications - Distribution

MISS MARGE MANDERSON, Staff Artist, Special Research

RESEARCH & INFORMATION

Pat Watters, Director of Information

Robert Anderson, Editor (Editor of New South)

Paul Gaston, Director of Research

Mrs. Bernice Morrison, Librarian

Mrs. Doris Reed, Senior Research Associate

Miss Barnetta Jackson, Research Associate

Mrs. Joyce Meekins, Research Associate

Miss Lynn Bowker, Secretary to Department of Research

RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT CENTER

EMORY F. VIA, Director
(Director, Manpower & Labor Program Division)

Miss Gwendolyn M. Sapp, Administrative Secretary

HOUSING & PLANNING DIVISION

Morland G. Smith, Director

Arthur C. Campbell, Associate

COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION DIVISION

Clarence Wright, Director

Leon W. Hall, Associate (Temporary)

Miss Mozell Varner, Secretary to Divisions

LEADERSHIP DIVISION

Reese Cleghorn, Director
(Editor, South Today)

Mrs. Kitty Terjen, Assistant to the Director

Mrs. Betsy Fancher, Associate Editor, South Today

Mrs. Ruth C. Howard, Secretary to Division

THE STATE COUNCILS ON HUMAN RELATIONS AND THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

In the early 1950's the decision was made by SRC to create in each of eleven states a state council on human relations. These councils were to have professional staff and were, in November 1956, to be autonomous and independent of SRC. They were, too, to be financially independent by that time.

SRC transferred its general membership to these councils, recruited staff, paid salaries and expenses for approximately three years and the state councils did become independent in November 1956. More than one million dollars had been expended on the effort. All was on schedule except for one basic and crucial part: the state councils were far from financially independent. In late 1956 not one of the eleven councils was in a position to survive without additional financial assistance. Integrated and integrationists organizations were operating literally in a sea of hostility and it was out of the question that a broad base of support, financial or other, could be found within the southern states.

In response to this crisis, in 1957 SRC created the "grants-in-aid" program, whereby SRC raised funds for the state councils. Since that time an additional more than one million dollars has been raised and granted to the state councils by SRC.

In this process an extremely awkward situation has inevitably developed. The state councils are independent, as indeed they should be. Yet, SRC "the parent" continued to raise funds for the "of age children." Relationships between the parent and the children ranged from close to distant and opinions of each other inevitably spanned the same range. And, money was most often the heart of the issue.

In 1968, after much deliberation, SRC determined that the grants-in-aid program should end. It was time that these independent agencies became independent financially and indeed, whether this decision was wise or not, we had been informed by the involved foundations that their support would end. Accordingly SRC announced a final, descending support grants program to end in 1971.

This decision was met by the state councils--in many instances--with misunderstanding, distrust, and anger. The "rich parent" was cutting off support although many state council people felt their programs were not only the most important part of all SRC activity but indeed the reason the parent was rich in the first place.

(Much blame from some quarters for misunderstanding was placed on Ed Stanfield, then SRC field director. Inevitably comparisons were made with Paul Anthony, the previous field director. What was not understood was that Anthony was operating at a time when the grants-in-aid program was not in serious question while Stanfield was charged not with making, but delivering a decision made by the policy group.)

In 1971 the state councils are vastly different. For all practical purposes the North Carolina Council is non-existent and the Florida Council is in the process of disbanding. Several others probably will do so by the end of the year or during 1972. The Alabama Council has a new director after nearly going under and may now have a chance to survive. Several are vigorous with effective programs--Virginia, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Tennessee-but they will need considerable outside support if they are to continue. The South Carolina Council is likely to exist and expand as a major force in that state with continued and increasing foundation support. The Georgia Council will in 1971 receive more than one million dollars largely from the Ford Foundation and the federal government, for economic development work in Hancock County.

The state councils have now formed an association. The association has requested representation on the Review Committee and an opportunity to meet with the Executive Committee. The first request has been readily granted and the second will be. The association has also determined that if SRC does not continue its fund raising efforts in their behalf, they will do so independently.

We are faced with a considerable dilemma. Where the state councils are active, pertinent, important, they very much need to exist, and SRC for the very purpose for which it exists has an obligation and indeed a strong desire to see that these agencies do exist. In addition SRC--as well as the region--needs the resources of the strong state councils just as they in turn need the resources and support of the SRC.

Yet, the matter of financial support continues to cloud the issue. No foundation with whom we deal will provide additional support under the present structure of the grants-in-aid program. (Several will readily consider proposals from individual state councils.) And, by necessity and reality, financial support must be the obsession of state councils; this at a time when support is diminishing or disappearing from most agencies in this field.

In the Director's opinion, the SRC staff and the state council staffs and leadership must, on a state-by-state basis, work out a program relationship consistent both with the interests of the individual state council and their assessment of the mutual benefit of such an association. SRC on its part must be sensitive to using and encouraging these valuable resources.

This cannot be accomplished adequately until the matter of financial support can be resolved. SRC should readily accept as a serious responsibility assisting separately the several state councils in their fund raising efforts, particularly with foundations. The state councils--as a body--should make their own independent assessment of their fund raising potential. They are more than capable of making such an appraisal and should be encouraged to do so.

Thereafter--SRC and the viable state councils should proceed in good faith to keep the family together for mutual benefit, but more importantly for the benefit of the objectives we share.

Paul Anthony

January 21, 1971

COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION DIVISION

As a division of the Resources Development Center, the Community Organization Program can be considered as one of the more "action" oriented or field arms of the Council, which is responsible, in many cases, for the utilization of the Council's research data and publications by all sectors of the community. Thus, the Community Organization Division seeks to promote the practical application and dissemination of the Southern Regional Council's more academic resources in mobilizing community based projects.

During the latter part of August, the director of the Community Organization Division scheduled orientation meetings with Atlanta-based regional organizations engaged in community organization in an effort to initiate contacts with other agencies working from a regional perspective, to gather information on potential resources, and to delineate possible areas of coordination/cooperation. The Federation of Southern Cooperatives, the American Friends Service Committee, the National Urban League, and the Southern Rural Project were some of the organizations visited. The information gathered from these meetings, conversations with various staff members and personal considerations were used in formulating the goals of the Community Organization Division.

With the initial assistance of the Federation of Southern Cooperatives, field trips were scheduled in Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina to orient the director to some of the grassroot economic development projects in the region and to introduce the Community Organization Division of the Council to some local groups. The trips were as follows:

Selma, Alabama - The director attended the Annual Meeting of the Federation of Southern Cooperatives on August 28 and 29. There were at least 500 members of cooperatives from throughout the South in attendance. The director was able to initiate contacts with several cooperatives, to meet most of the Federation's staff, particularly the field staff in the various states, and to initiate contacts with several youth affiliated cooperative groups in the region.

Beaufort/Jasper, South Carolina - The Federation again provided initial assistance in developing the itinerary for the trip. The following cooperatives and/or community groups were visited during the three-day tour (September 15-17). In many cases, this was the first introduction of the Community Organization Division/Council to such grassroot groups.

(Community Organization Division)

On Tuesday afternoon, September 15, the director visited the Hilton Head Shrimp Cooperative and talked extensively with Tom Barnwell and other members of the managerial staff. That evening, the director attended a meeting of the fledgling Jasper County Catfish Cooperative and was given the opportunity to describe some of the Division's activities, resources, etc. to the twelve member group. As is customary, the members in attendance received the subsequent editions of the Council's publications as additional introductory material.

On Wednesday, September 16, the director assisted in running a training program for twelve community health outreach trainees of the Beaufort/Jasper Health Center. The director also reviewed the training curriculum and forwarded the information on updated training techniques and material at a later date; and, provided technical assistance to the project director in the area of recruitment of doctors by placing him in contact with two people who have extensive experience in this area: Dr. Regina McCormack, Martin Luther King Junior Health Center in New York and Dr. R. L. Crawford, Department of Health Development, University of Michigan.

Thursday, September 17 was confined to meetings with respective members of the St. Helenas' Farmer Cooperative, a group of six, headed by Mr. Lawrence Washington. Mr. Washington was also extremely interested in receiving technical assistance in developing a 275-acre tract of land for low-income housing and a shopping center complex. Further assistance hinges upon the purchase of the land by the group.

West Point, Mississippi - The last of the orientation/introductory visits was paid to the Clay Economic Development Corporation on October 1 and 2. The various economic development projects were toured extensively. The director met with approximately 22 residents to discuss SRC's programs and resources.

The Community Organization Division's director attended the following conferences during his orientation/introductory period:

(Community Organization Division)

Penn Center - As a follow-up to the field trip to the Beaufort/Jasper area of South Carolina, the director attended an Economic Development Conference at Penn Center on September 17 and 18. On the evening of September 16, a planning meeting was held with the Center director, John Gadsden, at which time, possible program areas were drawn from mailings sent to Economic Development/Program Specialists throughout the country and the agenda for the conference was finalized.

The Conference was quite beneficial in that there was a wide range of resources and/or specialists in community development/community organization. Some of those present were: Carl Holman, National Urban Coalition; James Gibson, Potomac Institute; the Rev. Harry Bowie, Delta Ministry; George Esser, Ford Foundation; George Loft, Field Foundation; John Buffington, Clay County Economic Development Corporation and the Rev. Charles Sherrod, New Communities, Inc. The ensuing comments, theory and dialogue between specialist and residents provided a great deal of potential information to be utilized by regional organizations interested in relating to community-based groups.

Chicago, Illinois - The director attended a Minority Enterprise Conference at the Center for Continuing Education held at the University of Chicago.

This conference provided an opportunity for the director to review many of the more successful economic development projects in the nation. Representatives of these projects have been quite helpful in forwarding additional information and material to the Community Organization Division. One of the present Community Organization Division's economic development projects resulted from contacts made with Dr. Moss of the Rutgers University Minority Investment Program. An Atlanta firm, interested in establishing a minority trucking firm, is presently receiving technical assistance as a result of Dr. Moss's referral.

Another Community Organization Division endeavor in the area of economic development resulted from contacts made with representatives of the School of Business Administration at Miles College. The Community Organization Division is presently working with Dr. S. Pares in developing a Minority Investment/Assistance Center at the college which will be available to Birmingham residents.

In a culminating orientation/introductory effort, the Community Organization Division sent out a questionnaire to all Human Relations Councils in an attempt to find areas of mutual interest, ways of furthering SRC's local contacts, and to delineate possible areas of cooperation/coordination (copies of this questionnaire and responses are available). for ED

(Community Organization Division)

The Community Organization Division extended technical assistance to two other economic development projects. Black, Inc., a youth group in Miami, Florida. The director in coordination with several groups in Florida is assisting this group in expanding and refining their funding request. Terminal technical assistance was extended to an Atlanta group interested in organizing a community-based day care school.

Technical assistance related to other areas of community development was provided to Mrs. Mary Poole, a Sioux Indian who recently moved to Georgia had been unable to obtain medical assistance and Gisle Notvedt, an exchange student interested in working in Atlant on a hunger project. Mr. Notvedt has temporarily delayed his trip to Atlanta to continue his studies at Lawrence University. Hopefully, he will be able to carry out his program during the summer.

For various reasons, the Community Organization Division has expended a great deal of time over the past two months in the area of program development. The four projects are:

(1) Communications Project - the dissemination of information is a major problem in rural areas. Initial contact and research has been carried out with the assistance of Unity House in Washington, D. C. concerning federal regulations, courses of action, etc. The Division's director is presently awaiting follow-up information which will determine the feasibility of rural community based endeavors to make the various forms of mass media (particularly, radio and television) more responsive to the needs of poor people.

(2) Marietta Project - Early in December, two young ladies approached the Community Organization Division with a request for assistance in developing a "Big Sister" project in their community. These two young ladies have been placed in contact with two local counselors (employed through the Emergency School Assistance Program) who have similar interests. The project will be initiated this spring.

(3) The Black Appalachian Commission - In coordination with the Legal Defense Fund, and the Southern Education Foundation, the Council convened a meeting of Black Appalachian leaders in Knoxville, Tennessee on November 6 and 7. There were 22 leaders representing six Appalachian states in attendance.

As a result of ongoing, coordinated, technical assistance, the group within a four week span of time pulled together a program which will enable them to:

a. Identify Black Appalachian leadership at the regional, state and local level.

b. Mobilize these leaders to utilize a uniform self-study kit in looking at the problems, resources, etc. in their community.

c. Pull this group together in early March to compile these studies and develop long-range proposals for the region.

d. Watchdog the major resources in the area of the Appalachian Regional Commission for civil rights compliance.

e. Develop a vehicle for determining problems affecting Black youth, particularly in the area of school desegregation.

This Commission recently received an eight month $25,000 grant to carry out their program.

(4) School Desegregation Project - Following the cooperative meeting in Jasper County on Tuesday, September 17, the director of the Community Organization Division sat in on a community meeting attended by at least 75 residents of the county. The meeting had been called to plan strategies for dealing with alleged insults and injustices arising from the desegregation of the schools. One of the main points of controversy was the charge that white bus drivers were not going into the Black neighborhoods to pick up students. The meeting was highly charged with emotion and several of the adults (one of whom was a teacher) immediately called for a boycott of the schools. At this point, two Black students attempted to shed a new light on the situation by pointing out that one of the main reasons that the drivers did not come into Black neighborhoods was because they were physically assaulted every time and no one would come to their aid. This statement was immediately shouted down by the parents who vehemently attacked the students as "Toms." With this experience, the director began to check out incidents arising from school desegregation in other areas of the South. He found that in most cases the adults, not the students, were participating or setting the stage for many of the incidents with the students bearing the brunt of the repercussions - both Black and White.

(Community Organization Division)

It was quite apparent that something was needed to get assistance and resources to those who have to endure the desegregation experience - the students. College students, Black and White, working in their respective home communities as facilitators of communication among youth, guides to other resources and advocates of reason held the key to providing youth with alternatives for dealing with their situation in the schools. (Additional information on the project is available.)

With the $3,000 advanced by the Council to initiate this project, Leon Hall, a former SCLC youth organizer, has been employed to coordinate the field operations. Utilizing the responses from a regional mailing to all Black and White colleges in the South, pilot projects have been established in three states and the seeds of an organization planted in seven others.

The status of the School Desegregation Project is as follows:

(Community Organization Division)

Mississippi - We have a three college pilot project in this state with each school (Jackson State, Millsaps, Tougaloo) providing a state coordinator. Eighteen students from Tougaloo College are participants in a five-week interim program, while the activities of 21 students at Millsaps are coordinated by work study students, Tony Algood and Robert Ferguson. Claude McInnis, a student at Jackson State is the coordinator of their eight-man team. This project has the support of the Mississippi Teachers Association (Mr. Duckworth), the Educational Resources Center (Lee Dillworth), and the Mississippi Council on Human Relations (Joanne Bowman). They are willing to serve as resource personnel.

Leon Hall, the project coordinator, is presently working in the field with the Tougaloo team members as they wrap up their interim program.

Georgia - The response from Mercer College in Macon, Georgia has been quite encouraging. The Dean of the school, Joe Hendricks has enthusiastically supported the project. We also have two campus coordinators, Jimmy Samuels of the Black Students Association and Mike Richey. Because of the leadership potential, the response of the college community and the need in the state of Georgia, we have designated Mercer College as the home for one of our pilot projects. This will be one of the areas of special concentration for the next months. Within the next two weeks, these students will have biracial teams in the field.

For the next few months, Mercer program operations will be carried on at two levels:

1. Program expansion and recruitment on Mercer's campus and other campuses throughout the state.

2. Field operations - At present, the Mercer project has teams working in Macon and Columbus, Georgia.

(Community Organization Division)

Other accomplishments registered thus far:

1. Formulation and publication of an introductory brochure.

2. Negotiation of $100 grant from a Macon civic group.

3. Establishment of a school supported office.

South Carolina - Our primary contact is Richard Gergel, a high school student who has organized bi-racial teams in the high schools in Columbia. Richard exhibits a great deal of drive and skill but needs information and technical assistance in the area of program development.

Recently, the team was confronted with a potentially volatile situation at Keenan High School in Columbia concerning the school election rules and an attempt to block Blacks from holding office.

The team immediately set forth a resolution decrying the move, generated outside pressure and squelched the potential confrontation by having the rule voided.

At the University of South Carolina, the Student Government Association has publicly endorsed the project through various articles in the school newspaper. An extensive report by one of the project members, Cynthia Murray, is being used by the Title IV center at the University of South Carolina.

Secondary Projects - Responses from groups in Virginia, Louisiana, Florida, Alabama, Texas, North Carolina and Arkansas warrant program development in these areas. Information concerning the status of the project in these areas is available upon request. Student groups and/or adult resources have expressed an interest in the project in these respective states. Unfortunately, time and staff limitations have forced the curtailmentof activities in these states.

(Community Organization Division)

In our forthcoming plans, program development in these states is our major priority.

Jim:
I hope these figures will help you. If this is not what you want let me know. Doris.

1965 MISSISSIPPI COUNTY POPULATION ESTIMATES BY AGE AND RACE AND FIGURES FOR 1960

Age	1965 Estimates			1960 Census
	total	white	nonwhite	Total	white	nonwhite
Forrest
Total	59,142	42,470	16,672	52,772	37,970	14,752
5 and under	7,737	4,873	2,864	7,227	4,670	2,557
6-14	10,951	6,809	4,142	9,587	6,358	3,229
				(10,405)	(6,721)	(3,684)
15-44	25,603	19,697	5,906	21,774	16,675	5,099
45 & over	14,851	11,091	3,760	14,134	10,267	3,867
Hancock
Total	16,687	14,262	2,425	14,039	11,784	2,255
5 & under	2,457	2,017	440	1,956	1,568	388
6-14	2,950	2,429	521	2,868	2,346	522
				(2,868)	(2,346)	(522)
45 & Over	5,002	4,385	617	4,388	3,771	617
15 ~~10~~-44	6,278	5,413	847	4,827	4,099	728
Harrison
Total	123,950	100,701	23,249	119,489	100233	19,256
5 & Under	18,748	14,192	4,556	19,597	15,704	3,893
6-14	24,104	18,712	5,392	20,018	16,123	3,895
				(20,397)	(16,444)	(3,953)
45 & Over	27,062	22,925	4,4137	24,789	20,875	3,914
15-44	54,036	44,827	9,164	55,085	47,531	7,554
Jackson
Total	68,178	54,971	13,207	55,522	44,658	10,864
5 & Over	11,545	8,885	2,660	9,598	7,229	2,229
6-14	14,591	11,340	3,251	11,111	8,732	2,379
				(11,524)	(9.054)	(2,247)
15-44	28,608	23,542	5,066	23,000	18,781	4,219
45 & Over	13,434	11,204	2,230	11,813	9,846	1,967

Age	1965 Estimates			1960 Census
	Total	White	Nonwhite	Total	White	Nonwhite
Lamar
Total	15,237	12,578	2,659	13,675	11,443	2,232
5 & under	2,176	1,734	442	1,965	1,539	426
6-14	3,447	2,745	702	2,768	2,237	531
				(3,182)	(2,577)	(605)
15-44	5,813	5,050	763	5,053	4,359	694
45 & Over	3,801	3,049	752	3,889	3,308	581
Marion
Total	23,091	14,829	8,262	23,293	15,408	7,885
5 & Under	3,076	1,676	1,400	3,457	2,014	1,443
6-14	5,328	3,106	2,222	4,814	2,896	1,918
				(5,556)	(3,230)	(2,326)
15-44	7,830	5,151	2,679	8,543	5,943	2,600
45 & Over	6,857	4,896	1,961	6,479	4,555	1,924
Pearl River	29,144	23,373	5,771	22,411	17,221	5,190
5 & Under	4,361	3,321	1,040	3,174	2,170	1,004
6-14	6,082	4,487	1,595	4,640	3,427	1,213
				(5,229)	(3,815)	(1,414)
15-44	12,445	10,542	1,913	8,484	6,704	1,780
45 & over	6,246	5,023	1,223	6,113	4,920	1,193
Perry
Total	8,819	5,763	3,056	8,745	6,333	2,412
5 & Under	1,049	611	438	1,221	798	423
6-14	2,119	1,388	731	1,912	1,317	595
				(2,182)	(1,471)	(711)
15-44	2,663	1,863	800	3,124	2,351	773
45 & Over	2,988	1,901	1,087	2,488	1,876	621

Age	1965 Estimates			1960 Census
	Total	White	Nonwhite	Total	White	Nonwhite
Stone
Total	7,960	5,904	2,056	7,013	5,320	1,711
5 & Under	978	649	329	910	614	296
6-14	1,727	1,179	548	1,372	956	416
				(1,538)	(1,065)	(473)
15-44	3,007	2,378	629	2,731)	2,185	546
45 & Over	2,248	1,698	550	2,000	1,547	453
Walthall
Total	13,759	7,665	6,104	13,512	7,412	6,100
5 & Under	1,838	775	1,063	1,907	828	1,079
6-14	2,992	1,234	1,758	3,016	1,291	1,725
				(3,151)	(1,303)	(1,848)
15-44	4,779	2,728	2,051	4,846	2,831	2,015
45 & over	4,150	2,918	1,232	3,743	2,462	1,281

With pending new manpower legislation the staff felt that a new effort to secure interest in implementation on the state and local level would be useful. This would especially be the case under proposed regulations that would greatly increase the role of states and localities in manpower programs. Accordingly, rough guidelines for possible action, information sharing, watchdogging, and certain forms of research(to reveal strenghts and weaknesses) have been drawn. Two reaearchers in the manpower field with action interests have been asked to use these guidelines and to think through more precisely what the proposed legislation would mean for action programs. Several nationally prominent figures in the manpower field have been ~~tentatively consulted~~ engaged in preliminary discussions as have several agency representatives. Tentative plans have been made for a regional manpower seminar wich would focus primarily on strategies related to the new legislation.

The legislation, of course, was vetoed. Plans will proceed on this undertaking, nevertheless. It is possible that legislation will still be forthcoming this year although many pundits point to 1972. For the moment we feel that we simply have a little more breathing space and can use planning for implementation of new legislation as a means for sharpening our approach under current programs.

~~We are proposing to better~~

During the past year we have been impressed with the number of young people seeking an opportunity for constructive service. We have long known that many self-help groups need technical assistance beyond the resources of SRC and other groups interested in them. We are proposing an Intern-Technical Assistance Program. It would utilize primarily the skills of graduate students in ~~are~~ subject areas whose skills are needed.

SPECIAL REVIEW COMMITTEE MEMBERS

		1	2
Ex (PA)	Mrs. Patt Derian (Member SRC Executive Committee) 2349 Twin Lake Circle Jackson, Mississippi 39211		✓
(PA)	Mr. Joel Fleishman Urban Studies 493 College Street New Haven, Connecticut
✓ (FV)	Mr. Vernon E. Jordan, Jr. Executive Director The United Negro College Fund, Inc. 55 East 52nd Street New York, N. Y. 10022	✓
	The Honorable Howard Lee (Member SRC Board) Mayor Chapel Hill, N. C. 27514
✓ Exe.	Mrs. Joan Cashin (Member SRC Executive Committee) 416 Owens Drive, S. E. Huntsville, Alabama 35801	✓	✓
✓ (EV)	Dr. John A. Griffin Executive Director Southern Education Foundation 811 Cypress Street, N. E. Atlanta, Georgia 30308	✓	✓
Exe ✓	Mr. Joseph Haas (SRC Legal Counsel) 2709 First National Bank Tower Atlanta, Georgia 30303	✓	✓
✓ (JW) (EV)	Mr. Aaron Henry (Member SRC Board) 213 Fourth Street Clarksdale, Miss. 38614	✓	✓

Special Review Committee - 2

1 2

Mr. Baxton Bryant ✓
(EV) Executive Director
Tennessee Council on Human Relations
818-B 17th Avenue, South
Nashville, Tennessee 37203

Mr. Charles Silberman
Fortune Magazine
Time & Life Building
Rockefeller Center
New York, N. Y. 10020

Exec ✓ Mr. Frank E. Smith ✓ ✓
(SRC Vice President & Member Executive Committee)
Director
Tennessee Valley Authority
405 New Sprankle Building
Knoxville, Tennessee 37902

✓ Mr. Harold Fleming ✓ ✓
(JW) President
Potomac Institute
(EV?) 1501 18th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Exec ✓ Dr. Raymond Wheeler ✓ ✓
(President, SRC)
3724 Warrington Drive
Charlotte, N. C. 28211

✓ Dr. Vivian Henderson ✓ ✓
Exec (Chairman, SRC Executive Committee)
President
(EV) Clark College
Atlanta, Georgia 30314

✓ Mr. John Walker ✓ ✓
(Member SRC Board)
1304-B Wright Avenue
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206

Miss Jean Fairfax ✓
(EV) Director
Division of Legal Information & Community Service
NAACP Legal Defense & Educational Fund, Inc.
10 Columbus Circle
New York, N. Y. 10019

what should (or might) SRC do —

Joan —

More Consultant Services [EV
Intern
New Staff

C.O. —

Based on Res & Demonstration

Use State Councils —

Special Review Committee-3 1 2

Mr. Will Campbell ✓
Committee of Southern Churchmen
P. O. Box 12044
Nashville, Tennessee 37212

Mr. John H. Wheeler
Exec. (Former President, SRC - Member Executive Committee)
President
Mechanics & Farmers Bank
Box 1932
Durham, N. C. 27702

✓ Dean David A. Shannon ✓
Faculty of Arts and Science
(PE) University of Virginia
Charlottesville, Virginia 22903

✓ Mr. Paul Anthony ✓ ✓
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

✓ Dr. Herman Long ✓ ✓
President
Tuskegee College

Glen Graham (staff) ✓

Identification
Constituency
Structure

Delivery of Services (?) meaning everything SRC does is a delivery

Action — [Field, fringe, local protest, "demonstrations"]
w/in context of equal opp & justice —
Develop: insight, personal, programs (& organizing), convert decisions & policies e.g.

~~op. 1)~~ Com. Org & desegr proj plans op. 2) M.P. & focus on legis implementation plans 3) Intern — Tech Asst. Program op. 4) Bl. Appl. Com — op. 5) H&P — Panola, Fairfield

Fm HA — Corp Housing Seminar

plans 6) MISS — Tenco — plans 7) Delivery of medical Services plans ~~8)~~ Regional Bd, Inst.

9) Popularized discrim. reports —

Hunger Committee

10) Poor whites

Relate programs to Constituency &/or audience —

Only outreach resources are SCHR —

(Re) affirmation of faith

Agenda for the Council Programs —

Staff plus J.B. & V.H.
Draft for 2nd meeting —

Role (& where declining) of other organization —

EV — will not rely on written materials alone for report to Com. —

Organization — influencing policies

Agency — delivering services

* How do programs fit policy or is each staff doing his own thing —

EV relate something to Training opportunities for younger people —

After lunch, the third group session was held, after which the group reconvened into the final general session.

It was moved, seconded and unanimously adopted: That the Executive Committee devise and initiate memorials honoring the late Gordon B. Hancock and James M. Dabbs, the first implementation if practicable, to be made in 1971.

A resolution was introduced to have a special committee of the Council appointed to do a thorough review of the program and structure of the Council. After considerable discussion, it was moved, seconded and adopted: That the President of the Council appoint a special committee to do a review of the programs and structure of the Council, such a committee to consist of a cross section of the membership, but to include also persons not formally associated with the Council, with the understanding that the report of the review committee shall be considered by the full membership in special meeting, hopefully, no later than the end of February, 1971.

****

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

Emory F. Via

EV – may talk with each staffer individually –

Reporting –

Sketches of Review – make ups of Committee –

Grand Rules
Individual Reports – 5 mins
"Hard Sell" sense of purpose "optimism"

In discussion don't be afraid of problems –

* Rationale ~~for efforts~~ – sense of focus

Hard lines Don't want to hear brand new program ideas (except in most speculative sense in response to Com. member careful about saying that's what SRC should do – maybe consider.)

Self-Critical maybe ok. – don't over do –

Critical of SRC – don't –

If you do make sure you can back up & live with it EV

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

Emory F. Via

Censes — 1970
Availability — Printed, Tapes, (Hold up due to cities)
Contacts —
UNC Pop. Center
Univ of Iza. (Everett Lee
Emory — Ed'l Demographer
Oak Ridge AEC
Needed — kinds of info wanted include cross correlations

They will: help refine run either free or @ cost

For PA

Time of Exec. Com. — What stuff & when Publications on hand —

MS — will not be @ meeting —

Smith
Griffin
Campbell
Bryant —

EV —
R.C.
K.T.
BW.
AC

L.A. — T
H.B — T
JW — 1/2
BF — 1/2
M.S. — 1/2

REPORT OF THE 1970 NOMINATING COMMITTEE

Your Nominating Committee met on October 15th to carry out its responsibilities. Members serving on the 1970 Committee were: Mrs. Jane Schutt, Chairman, Mrs. Helen Mervis, Mrs. Helen Howard, Mr. Robert Palmer, and Dr. Herman Long. All were present other than Mrs. Howard who could not attend because of illness.

The following are the nominations of the Committee:

President:	Dr. Raymond M. Wheeler
Vice Presidents:	Miss Josephine Wilkins Mr. Frank Smith Dr. C. G. Gomillion Dr. Lucius H. Pitts
Members of the Executive Committee:	Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, Chairman Mr. Hodding Carter, III Mrs. Joan Cashin Mr. Julius L. Chambers Mrs. Patt Derian Mr. Donald L. Hollowell Mr. Henry Marsh Mr. Robert Palmer Mr. John H. Wheeler Mr. H. Franklin Williams Mr. James Youngdahl Mr. Joseph Haas, Legal Counsel
For Re-election to the class of 1974:	Mr. Julius L. Chambers Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Edward E. Elson Chamblee, Ga. Dr. Edward E. Haddock Richmond, Virginia

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

For Re-election to
the class of 1974:

Mrs. Martin L. Harvey
Jackson, Mississippi

Dr. Vivian W. Henderson
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. Harry Huge
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Earl Johnson
Jacksonville, Florida

Mr. Henry Marsh
Richmond, Virginia

Mr. William T. Mason, Jr.
Norfolk, Virginia

Dr. Samuel Nabrit
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. J. Allen Parker
Tuskegee, Alabama

Rabbi Jacob Rothschild
Atlanta, Georgia

The Rt. Rev. Msgr. Alexander Sigur
New Orleans, La.

Dr. Vasco A. Smith
Memphis, Tennessee

Mr. James Stokely
Newport, Tennessee

Dr. William H. Townsend
Little Rock, Arkansas

New Members:

Mrs. Anna Rubin
Sumter, South Carolina

Mr. Herbert Fielding
Charleston, South Carolina

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

New Members Continued:

Mrs. Edith Dabbs
Mayesville, South Carolina

Mrs. Millie Charles
New Orleans, Louisiana

Dr. Aaron Shirley
Jackson, Mississippi

Mr. Henry Lambert
New Orleans, Louisiana

Mrs. Eva Clayton
Warrenton, North Carolina

Dr. Gary Lloyd
New Orleans, Louisiana

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. Jane Schutt, Chairman
Mrs. Helen Mervis
Mr. Robert Palmer
Dr. Herman Long
Mrs. Helen Howard

S.F.V. [late '70? early '71?]

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL REVIEW COMMITTEE

[... In response to the directive from the 1970 annual meeting..." (see p.2)]

The Southern Regional Council came into being because Southerners of goodwill, both black and white, needed an organization through which they could work jointly for the elimination of racial discrimination and racial division in the South. The goal of the Southern Regional Council has always been equal opportunity for all citizens.

Black leaders from over the South, in their historic meeting at Durham, North Carolina, in October 1942, called for a "way of life...that will free us all, white and Negro alike, from want, and from throttling fears." This initiative led to the founding of the Council in 1944. In its nearly thirty years of existence, Southern Regional Council has played a major role in helping to achieve the changes that have moved toward implementing those goals.

Too broad

Today Federal law specifically forbids discrimination, thanks to action by the judicial, legislative, and executive branches of our government. Many imperfections remain in carrying forward the intent of law, but there can be no reversal of the commitment to full and equal opportunity.

[more detail how achieved & that it takes many a enforcement]

Much has been achieved, but much more remains to be done. It is obvious to all of us that all our citizens cannot have equal opportunity under the law unless they enjoy full economic opportunity. The letter of law may end overt discrimination, but the process of justice itself must provide equal justice for all in actual practice. The elimination of segregation in education is a major step forward, but it must be matched by full education opportunity for all pupils within a school system that is structured to eliminate all possibilities of discrimination.

March shouldn't leave out - housing, voting, health

To meet the needs of a changing South, it is obvious that the Southern Regional Council must from time to time review and restructure its program.

Mark Prentiss Stewart must abogado

In response to the directive from the 1970 annual meeting, the special Review Committee spent many hours in a thorough program review and detailed discussion of the changes needed in the SRC program. The Committee arrived at a consensus recommendation for broad policy change, and decided to leave to the entire Council a decision as to specific structural pattern.

The consensus recommendation is as follows:

The SRC should not become exclusively a journalistic, investigative agency, nor solely a community action agency. Rather it should build upon its experience and its strengths, its reputation, and its channels of communication with social activists, to become a "mission oriented" organization. Its overriding purpose should be to develop and implement those strategies which can effect change in the social, political, and economic institutions which now dominate, to its detriment, the life of the Southern region.

Hallwell ?

In order to accomplish this purpose, there must be a more tightly integrated, better coordinated, more purposefully directed utilization of our major resources. This will require organization of the various talents

Social progress is seldom straight line

But some straightening is needed to force pace

SRC does both

[Banned from Partisan Politics & Voter Regist.]

Some gets attention — Some not (by design)

Action —

Ile-Seg proj

Bldg Trades

TEAM

Panola

Open Housing

Tenco —

Tornados

Corpus Christi

Hunger

School Study — integration

Min. Wage

Know your Rights

and functions of SRC staff around the planning and implementation of specific strategies directed toward specific results. This will also require involvement of individual Council members more deeply and creatively in policy decision making, program development and implementation. Such an organization would logically require the careful selection of objectives involving the most immediate and important problems of the region. Concerted, persistent, and effective effort could then be applied to the achievement of the objectives.

It was generally agreed that such a method of operation would require teams or task forces which would be composed of appropriate staff specialists and/or generalists, Council members selected on the basis of special interest and competence, and persons outside the Council and perhaps outside of the region who might bring special expertise to a given objective. These might include law students interested in investigative activity, State Council members with special knowledge of a local situation, or members of any grass roots organization who were able to aid in implementation of the project.

Such a team working together as a unit should employ all of the major staff functions, including:

(1) Field investigation - The analogy here is the approach popularized as "Nader's Raiders" which has provided an impressive demonstration of what can be accomplished by aggressive investigation, dramatic exposé, and follow-through in concert with activist groups. This should be a distinct function, separate from information and research, the purpose of which would be to uncover facts that can be used in a variety of ways - for example, to support or generate litigation, to provide documentation for investigative bodies, commissions, legislative committees, to furnish ammunition for local action groups, and to prod influential leadership that has failed to take action in the best interests of its constituency. The limited professional staff engaged in such a function could increase its effectiveness by utilizing the help of Council members, state and local human relations councils, and any group of people eager to be involved in meaningful social change.

(2) Information - We have staff talent and capability in this field which are unexcelled. It is proposed that these skills be more effectively utilized in the implementation of specific strategies designed to achieve specific objectives. Given the scarcity of resources and the urgencies of the day, information for its own sake - however great its literary or humanistic merit - is probably a luxury that cannot be afforded. Not only should this function be concerned with the organization, writing, and publication of information but it should be employed to develop new methods to bring about maximum use of all forms of media, particularly television.

Increasingly, television is the medium of mass education and persuasion. Yet, the use of this powerful public property has been denied to most of the unrepresented groups of this country such as blacks, Chicanos, the poor, students, and other groups with a variety of cultural and political interests. An opportunity may exist here to effect significant institutional change.

(3) Research - Referred to here as the mechanism for substantiation, storage, and retrieval of background information. Research, in the context of the program and structure described here,would be issue oriented, used not only in the formation of long-range strategies but in the systematic assembling of facts about a given issue to back up the investigative and information functions.

(4) Community organization - It is not realistic to assume that the Council can deliver services or programs to community groups throughout the South. Only major public programs and funds can do that job.

This Committee believes that SRC should strengthen its working ties to activist groups at all levels - the community, the region, or the nation-for the following purposes:

(a) To identify those groups which share with us a common interest in the strategies with which we are at any point concerned.

(b) To organize or involve existing groups in a local study of the specific problem on which we are working, in order to monitor a program or to provide concerted follow-through essential to the action phase of our program.

(c) To utilize appropriate individuals within those action groups to supplement the investigative, information, and research aspects of the program.

(d) It is quite likely that involvement in the above ways with community organizations will afford the Council increasing opportunities to provide technical assistance where it can be maximally effective and where the Council, in return, can obtain information concerning the strengths and weaknesses of a given strategy.

(e) Opportunities may also arise for the Council, through its relationship to community organizations, to play a major role in the creation of new and independent organizations in such fields as housing where the substantial public funds, which are essential, can be sought and where those most directly concerned can have a major voice in the policy of the new agency.

Several corollaries should be attached to the above recommendations:

(1) Although emphasis has been placed on the desirability of better coordination and more specific long-range planning in the use of our resources, it should be at all times our aim to retain the greatest possible degree of flexibility in both structure and function.

(2) Successful implementation of the concepts presented here depends directly on adequacy of funding. Of necessity, much of the planning of details must await more knowledge about forthcoming financial support.

(3) The final success of any given strategy will depend on a very finely balanced effort, in concert, of the staff, the Executive Committee, and Council members. This will require from all concerned a personal commitment perhaps more demanding than has ever been necessary in the history of the Council. The implications for change in these recommendations are wide ranging and serious. They must not be considered lightly in the final decisions of the full Council.

There is one further recommendation on which the Review Committee was in general agreement.

The first order of business for SRC is to redefine its own structure and function. The forthcoming special meeting of the Council should address itself exclusively to that task. Once that process is completed, top priority should be given to review and redefinition of SRC's relationship to the State Councils, through consultation between the SRC Executive Committee and representatives of the State Councils. Three previously prepared papers on this subject are attached and should form the basis for deliberation by these two groups.

Three alternative structural plans for implementation of the changed program of the SRC were presented to the Committee by individual members, and the Committee decided to refer all three to the full Council for final decision, together with a brief outline of their obvious strengths and possible weaknesses.

The plans are presented here as A, B, and C. They are, of course, subject to change by the full Council. The Review Committee directed the chairman to prepare a brief listing of the advantages and disadvantages of the plans submitted. This summation is presented with each plan.

PLAN "A" -- A Strategy Model for Effecting Institutional Change

Advantages:

1. Makes greater use of all interested Council members in on-going Council programs.
2. Would offer best continuing use of the Council's information services which have made the greatest contribution to past success.

Disadvantage:

1. Does not detail an obvious great advantage of the plan: the opportunity to use each annual meeting as a means of reviewing work of task forces and establishing priorities for task forces in the coming year.

PLAN "A"

A STRATEGY MODEL FOR EFFECTING INSTITUTIONAL CHANGE

At various times in its history, changing circumstances have confronted the Southern Regional Council with the need to re-examine its assumptions, structure, and functions in the light of new imperatives. This is such a time. Within the past ten years, the legal and political context within which SRC works has changed radically. The black community has developed new strengths and new dynamics; some former alliances have disintegrated and others are under severe strain; strategies and methods once generally accepted have come to be viewed as obsolete and ineffective; private resources for work in this field have been severely curtailed; the Federal Government has retreated from earlier policy commitments to affirmative action to a laissez-faire position or worse. These and other major changes require that all established organizations concerned with social change re-evaluate their roles and methods.

This is an attempt to suggest, in bare summary, a way of recombining and strengthening SRC's most valuable elements so as to achieve the following objectives:

1. Build on the demonstrable strengths that SRC has developed and for which it is publicly recognized.

2. Involve the members of the Council more deeply and creatively in policy decision-making, program development, and implementation.
3. Strengthen SRC's working ties to activist groups and grassroots work in community development.
4. Integrate the various talents and functions within SRC around specific strategies directed toward specific results, so that there will be concerted and persistent efforts to achieve clear-cut objectives.
5. Employ the many unused or under-used networks of manpower and potential commitment across the South.

Basic Operating Concept

The most suggestive analogy for what is proposed here is the approach popularized as "Nader's Raiders." Nader and his emulators have provided an impressive demonstration, especially in the field of corporate responsibility, of what can be accomplished by aggressive investigation, dramatic expose, and follow-through in concert with activist groups. SRC has well established competence in each of these areas. What is needed is a more conscious, planned, coordinated use of these competences. This will require changes in both policy and program procedures and in staff organization.

Policy Procedures and Program Development

The Council membership is an under-utilized body, a fact that has always been a problem to some degree, but it has now reached acute proportions. This proposal envisions a role for members that will not merely ease discontent but will contribute substantially to the effectiveness of the operation.

Members should serve, not just at annual meetings but year round, on task forces selected on the basis of special interest and competence, to work with staff on the development of program strategies. If, for example, the Council decided to devote major and continuing effort to the issue of the "segregation academies," a task force for this purpose would be appointed, consisting of appropriate members (e.g., educators, school board members, journalists). The staff (in this case, perhaps the director of the Leadership Project) would prepare a working paper outlining the known facts of the situation, the investigative task to be done, methods of publicizing the results, key individuals and groups to be activated, target groups on whom pressure should be brought, estimated time-table and costs, and hoped-for results. The policy task force would then review, modify, or supplement the proposal in consultation with the responsible staff members. It would periodically review progress and make further inputs as the project unfolded.

The day-to-day work of the project would be carried on by a staff team including the requisite skills -- investigation, information, community organization, liaison with other groups, etc. The team would work together across "departmental" or jurisdictional lines under the director of the designated project manager to carry out a closely coordinated effort. Whenever possible, professional staff would be supplemented by outside resources--e.g., law students for the investigative activity, state council members for local intelligence. The central service functions of SRC, such as the research and publications and information staff, would be available to this and other like projects.

Obviously, SRC could not simultaneously undertake programs of this kind addressed to every urgent problem of the region. Depending on budget and manpower, a rigorous and even painful degree of selectivity would be essential. It should be the function of the Council as a whole to consider and decide on the broad areas of program priority, leaving to the task forces and staff the development of detailed project strategy, and to the Executive Committee oversight of the total administrative and program operation between annual meetings.

Staff Organization

As previously indicated, the major staff functions (aside from administration) would be four: (1) field investigation; (2) information work through publications, the mass media, and other channels; (3) "research" in the sense of analysis, storage, and retrieval of background information; and (4) community organization in the sense of stimulation of, liaison with, and technical assistance to specific action efforts. The staff structure would logically be organized around these four basic functions, although as pointed out above, major project teams would cut across these organizational lines. A word about each of these functions:

Field Investigation. This is by no means a new concept to SRC. But in the past, investigation has tended to be a mainly journalistic enterprise and has been intermixed with the research and information function. In this model, it would be seen as a distinct function (whether carried out by lawyers, journalists, or whoever), the purpose of which is to uncover facts that can be used in a variety of ways in addition to publications and mass media--for example, to generate and support litigation or administrative proceedings, to provde documentation for Congressional committees, to furnish ammunition for action groups, to undergird local community development efforts, or simply to prod influential leadership that has managed to keep itself comfortably uninformed and inert. In developing and staffing this function, SRC should add to its own experience that of the Nader operation and its progeny, such as the public interest law firms and the various new consumer-advocate groups. It should also increase the outreach of limited professional staff by tapping the supplementary manpower represented by Council members, State Councils, Law Students for Civil Rights and other young people eager to be enlisted in meaningful social efforts.

Information. SRC's staff talents and prowess in this field are unexcelled. This proposal requires only that this capability be meshed more integrally into result-oriented strategies. Given the scarcity of resources and the urgencies of the day, information for its own sake--however great its literary or humanistic merit -- is probably a luxury that cannot be afforded. Information must be regarded as a tool to be applied, along with other leverages, to the achievement of overdue institutional changes.

Community Organization. This is a promising but relatively new program area for SRC, currently expressed in the multiple concerns of the Resources Development Center. Again, what is needed is sharper focus and integration with other SRC functions in carefully planned strategic projects. It should also be raised to parity, in terms of staff and budget, with the other functions of SRC. It would be totally unrealistic, however, to regard this function as one of delivering services to communities or community groups throughout the South; no conceivable amount of private resources can make a dent on this huge task; nothing short of major public programs and funds can do that job. Therefore, it is proposed that the community organization function be addressed to generating and rendering technical assistance to a relatively few, carefully selected community development activities in such fields as housing, education, and economic development. One aim, of course, would be to contribute to the success of the individual efforts. But the broader strategy would be to learn and document the ways in which the "system" works or does not work fairly and effectively for the black and the poor. The knowledge and specific examples thus gained should be grist to the program mill as described in this proposal.

A related function is "field work" -- maintaining liaison and benevolent conspiracies with the many other groups, black, white, and integrated, that are working in SRC's sphere of interest. This is essential to follow-through and action phase of the strategy programs.

Research. As already indicated, the research function would -- much as it does now -- undergird all of SRC's program activities. The difference would derive from the proposed changes in program development and implementation. For example, the emphasis may shift somewhat away from responding to ad hoc requests from staff and outsiders toward initiating more survey-type data collecting or more systematic assembling of information about a given issue to back up a longer-term effort.

One function that hopefully will continue and be reinvigorated is SRC's version of "think tank" activity. Thoughtful papers embodying analysis, commentary, and recommendations in important areas of public policy have been a major contribution of SRC. Some of the "Special Reports" and special documents, like The Federal Executive and Civil Rights, exemplify SRC's contributions in this field. Once more, it should be pointed out that this is not conceived of as a discrete, isolated staff function; it should draw on and feed into the concerted program activities that have been outlined above.

Other Considerations

State Councils on Human Relations. The knotty problems of SRC-SCHRs relationship are beyond the scope of this specific proposal.

But it can be said here that, where strong, functioning state councils exist, they should play an integral part in SRC's program strategy. This would suggest that, however the formal relationship ends up, it will be to SRC's self-interest in whatever ways are possible to nurture and work closely with the effective state councils; provision for this continuing involvement should be built into the field staff function discussed above under "Community Organization." In states where there are no successful SCHR operations, and no apparent prospect of any, SRC should seek other organizational relationships that will give it access to the kind of people who constitute state council membership elsewhere.

Structure. Aside from the reorganization of staff function previously recommended, this proposal would impose no specific need for change in the SRC structure. A membership of one hundred is clearly an arbitrary figure, and might be altered somewhat, upward or downward. But the plan outlined does imply the need for a policy group of substantial enough size to provide a variety of representation--in skills, interest, and geographic location--so that appropriate membership task forces can be established to guide project activities. Moreover, the Council should be large enough and representative enough of SRC's natural constituencies to provide the right kind of deliberative body for the determination of policy and program priorities. These considerations suggest the desirability of retaining the present structure, but with emphasis on utilizing it more effectively. Finally, it might be noted that there is nothing in this proposal that points to the desirability of SRC reverting to its earlier pattern of a general membership organization.

Staff and Budget. Any attempt to translate this proposed method of operation into precise staff and budget figures should await the Council's decision on this and other possible alternatives. It should be understood, however, that there is no set level of staffing or funding implied by this plan; many or few programs can be concurrently pursued, depending on the resources available. To use an extreme case, if SRC had sufficient funds to employ only one professional for each of the program functions indicated, it could conceivably undertake two or three major program ventures per year. In the interest of success of the operation, as well as for other reasons, it is essential that SRC implement the Review Committee's recommendation that senior black staff be employed, perhaps particularly in the Community Organization function.

Flexibility. This proposal is not meant to suggest that SRC's program activities should be limited to long-term immutable projects. One of SRC's strengths has been its capacity for "guerrilla" activity--flexibility to respond quickly to unexpected developments and new opportunities. In setting program priorities, the full Council will be well advised to allow for resources, staff time and discretion to respond swiftly to critical needs. Flexibility will also be enhanced by adopting the policy task force approach described above in preference to standing committees or other bodies. Times change and standing committees become obsolete, but they are seldom abolished. A form that can tailor structure to current needs and is adaptable to change as the needs change is far preferable.

PLAN "B" -- Proposed Model for the Southern Regional Council as a Community Action Agency

Advantages:

1. Commission staff members would have an opportunity to gain a thorough knowledge of the entire field of responsibility of the commission--not only the direct subject matter, but various related factors, such as government officials working in the field, journalist specialists, private organizations with special relationships.
2. Commission members (from the Council)would have similar opportunities.
3. Commitment of the various commissions to specific overall issues would insure that none are overlooked by the Council.

Disadvantages:

1. The entire plan involves a rigidity that could offer many problems to the Council as problems and emphasis shift. There is a far greater opportunity for staff domination than exists even today in the Council operations. The temptation for "empire building" on the commission would be great--i.e., the advantages of having an information staff for each commission might lead to a separate public relations staff for each.
2. The plan does not offer sufficient potential for influencing action at the annual meeting of the Council.

PLAN "B"

Proposed Model for the Southern Regional Council as a Community Action Agency

Rationale:

1. Legal victories and the civil rights laws of the past decade have not substantially changed the status of Americans at the bottom of the heap relative to other Americans. A permanent black underclass in America is a frightening possibility.
2. The increasing despair about the viability of the American system can be counteracted only by visible and measurable improvements in the status of minority group citizens and the poor which they experience as the closing of the gap between themselves and affluent white Americans.
3. This will require the identification of key issues, the careful selection of targets, the development of sophisticated strategies, the mobilization of resources for change agents and maximum use of the mass media as vehicles for the restructuring of the economic and social order.
4. It is futile to expect that the "revolution," interpreted as the restructuring of the South's social and economic system, will come about from efforts to persuade current power structures to reform themselves.

Such modest hopes as we have lie more in:

(1) Empowering the powerless

Knowledge is power; i.e. insight into what is wrong with the system and information about citizens' constitutional rights can be a powerful tool for change. The sharpening of skills, the strategic use of information and the mobilization of human and technical resources can be translated into power.

(2) Strengthening the hands and securing the power of new leadership

It is essential to secure the tenure and the power of newly elected Black office-holders and of whites who are committed to economic development, shared power and equal opportunity. Unless they have the confidence and support of a broadening constituency and can produce results, their ability to effect change will be limited.

5. SRC brings the following strengths to this task:

a. Commitment to change and to the "New South" - whatever that means!

b. Channels into many "communities" of change agents;

c. Credibility with national foundations, the mass media, universities and other resource producers;

d. An enviable reputation for fact-finding, documentation, analysis, interpretation;

e. Although SRC may not have the confidence of the activists or the poor (many of whom do not even know of SRC's existence), it does not seem to be the target of their hostility either!

Structure and Program

Grant

1. The Council would be reorganized into a series of panels or commissions around such issues as: education, urban affairs, rural development, housing, land use, and economic development, manpower, health, the administration of justice, etc. These units would be composed of Council members plus specialists or laymen who would be officially appointed on the basis of their anticipated contribution.

Table

2. ~~These advisory bodies~~ The Task forces would work with staff in developing an active on-going program in the ~~above~~ selected areas. ~~which would involve: advising citizens of their rights, monitoring key Federal programs, identifying major policy issues, developing strategies to achieve specific objectives, etc.~~

Table

3. Each year the Council would choose two or three areas for major focus. "Major focus" in contrast to an "on-going program" would mean significant investment of SRC resources for: an in-depth study of a problem and a publication; a monitoring project which could involve local citizens in a self-study of a problem or of the implementation in their communities of a key Federal program, the results of which would be released as an expose; extensive use of mass media (television documentaries, feature stories, radio shorts); testimony before Congressional committees, strategies focused on state capitals, etc. ~~Within a 3-year period each Commission would be cycled in at least once for major focus although some projects would be more extensive than others.~~

4. From time to time SRC would convene a special task force on a public policy issue which has South-wide implications and which cuts across the above program units. These task forces would get the facts, develop a position and then educate and mobilize citizens for action on a South-wide basis. For example, in the winter and spring of 1971 two task forces could play an important role in raising the level of public discussion: a task force on revenue sharing which would produce an analysis for public debate by concerned Southerners and a task force which would conduct its own investigation on the Appalachian Regional Commission, hold hearings and then make recommendations about its future. In recent years task forces on hunger and on income maintenance could have contributed a Southern perspective to a national debate. The work of a task force would have an action goal: to develop or change public policy, in re a particular issue or institution. In contrast to a Commission, a task force would have a limited life which would be determined by its purpose to educate and mobilize public opinion about an issue of concern to Southerners. Some task forces would deal with issues under state or local control and might develop model state statutes or municipal ordinances.

5. SRC's research function would be a back-up for community action. Research and information staff would do the in-depth studies needed for community action projects, service the task forces, prepare community action kits for field work, get the stories out.

Omit

Omit Clarify

6. The annual meeting would be more like a convention; i.e., working sessions for the Commissions and a business meeting for the Council. Commissions would have the right to propose (or elect) members to the Council. Perhaps 1/3-1/2 of the Council could be directly nominated or elected by the Commissions.

Staff

Omit

1. Each Commission would have a staff person who would have the responsibility to implement the action programs. In addition, it would be highly advisable to have a few community organizers who are generalists and skilled in community development in the broad sense. Their job would be to help communities establish their own priorities - perhaps developing programs which overlap the specialities of the Commissions - pulling in the SRC specialists at the points where they can be more relevant with their technical assistance.

2. Research, information and publications would be one unit with staff chosen for their skills in action-oriented research and information.

3. SRC should build into its operation a first-rate internship program which would provide opportunities for young Southerners to develop skills in effecting change.

PLAN "C" -- Recommendations for Structure and Participation of Southern Regional Council Membership

Advantages:

This paper is not so much a plan for a new structure but suggestions for meeting the obvious problem of broader participation in the Council's program by all Council members. The advisory committees suggested are not too far removed from the task force and commission concepts of the other papers.

Disadvantages:

Much of the structural proposals, as indicated in the paper, involve such detail that they could best be handled through the Executive Committee.

PLAN "C"

Recommendations for Structure and Participation Of Southern Regional Council Membership

I. Introduction - Present Structure

A new structure for SRC can only be dealt with in detail after deciding what kind of organization or agency SRC will be. However, there are some basics which would be beneficial to any new concept.

I think it is important to clarify the initial and present role of Council members. As I understand it, the Southern Regional Council evolved when black and white Southern leaders came together to sponsor information and action projects, to be carried out by a professional staff. This occurred at a time when the mere existence of an interracial group which sought to educate the South on justice, civil rights and equal opportunity constituted a courageous act. The role of Council members has been similar to that of a prestigious honorary committee which endorses a worthy cause, with no real policy-making power and no participation as board members usually have. The Executive Committee, elected by the Council, makes policy and functions as a board of directors ordinarily does in other organizations, in accordance with the present Constitution and By-laws.

Therefore, any criticism about the lack of participation by Council members should be based on dissatisfaction with the present structure of SRC, not on the performance of the staff or executive committee.

It is clear that in this "age of action" there is a need for re-structuring the role of Council members in order to utilize the talents of the activists in the Southern Regional Council.

II. Proposal for New Structure

I suggest that Council members become involved by volunteering and/or being recruited by the executive committee to serve on advisory committees for all of the SRC programs and projects. Choosing their special interests, members should assist in program planning, budget development and project implementation. The committees would serve as liaison between staff and the Council. Their advocacy of certain programs would also be a tremendous boost to staff morale.

These committees should also encourage communication between the Atlanta office and Southern communities by holding sub-regional or state conferences, involving members of State Councils or other organizations.

The committees should receive detailed reports from staff before the annual meeting, meet with their program staff members near the opening of the annual meeting and give concise reports to the whole Council during the business session of the annual meeting.

This mode of operation will eliminate time-consuming reports and questions at the annual meeting, while giving assurance to the Council that each program is being closely monitored by interested people. In this proposal any lack of involvement on the part of Council members will be by individual choice.

P. Hs Plan A makes Bd more responsible

T.H. — We have new "actors" that can be stimulated

Mark

Could combine
Best rationale of Plan "B"
Which part of each do we want recognize time lack for "Commission"
"A" needs parts of plan B
B — greater use of medicine —

Can do the same thing with Task Force & Commission

In addition all advisory committee chairmen should be ex-officio members of the executive committee and meet with them quarterly.

Other exploratory ideas expressed were:

1. Should we expand the Council membership, applying responsibilities for affiliation?
2. Should the Council require paid membership to encourage active participation?
3. Should the Constitution and By-Laws be revised, changing the Executive Committee to a Board of Directors?
4. Should there be more diversity in Council membership, involving low-income and more militant people?
5. Should we determine new criteria for the nominating committee?
6. Does the Council want a broader membership, a self-perpetuating board, contributing (non-active) members, solicitation of funds to supplement foundation grants?

III. Council Role in Relation to Staff

The Review Committee received written and oral reports from the Director and staff on the progress and problems of the SRC. It appears to me that the staff:

1. Expressed a need for solid, reliable contacts in each state, possibly with more field workers doing out-reach from the Atlanta office or more Council members acting as volunteer resources.

A. Williams
Plan A says "most of the same"

Cashin

Don't shift back to top heavy rec & info

Charity —
Basically plan A
Some ideas of B & C
see p 25 & 29
more communication
TV — 1/2 of audience

Cousins
Same old stew warmed over

Becker —
moved Plan A open to amend

Hallowell —
Said what "both plans say"
Difficulty of getting time from Bd. members — busy most of work will come from Staff —

2. Indicated a need to tighten staff communication/co-ordination, selection of priorities and planning of yearly program goals, with focus on crises as they arise. This could be facilitated by Council members working on program or project advisory committees.

IV. Conclusion

Implementation of some of these ideas will certainly aid any new thrust for SRC. We should use all available human resources - SRC and CHR members, other activists and constituents - to support two major needs:

1. Co-operation - With SRC staff on research, projects, monitoring, whatever we decide to do.
2. Communication - Wider dissemination of information and research findings to community people; encouraging local follow-up of needed services and pilot projects conducted by SRC.

Scull — Something left out of general statement better mobilizing (catalyzing) of institutions of the South — academic — financial — nature of bi-racial, integration

Cashin — not "mission oriented" but "action oriented"

Remove racism from U.S. & religion

Lloyd
Jurisdiction —

Col — action towards elimination of racism

Plan A
Hagge — Pub Int Law
Segur — keeps abreast grant allows new efforts / N Chys

Illinois
F. Williams
Task force — flexibility

Mr. Howard — go where you can get help & are welcome

Dreyer — yes, task force, but SRC is urgent & big picture / don't lose it.

Lloyd —
Brooks

New File Commission on Human Rts — Newsletter

HUMAN RELATIONS IN BRIEF

A Monthly News Digest

FLORIDA COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

VOLUME I, NO. 5
MARCH, 1973

p3,1

NIXON PROMISES HOUSING PROGRAM--Miami Herald, 3/9. "WASHINGTON--President Nixon Thursday promised to submit a new housing program to Congress within six months and declared, 'Americans today are better housed than ever before. . .' By committing the administration to the six-month deadline, Nixon apparently sought to reassure the nation's urban officials, who had feared he might wait a year or more to propose substitutes for the subsidized housing programs now frozen until July 1974. . ."

GROUP TO CONSIDER 'HUMAN RIGHTS' PLAN--Florida Times-Union, 3/26. "TALLAHASSEE (UPI)--A state commission is expected today to urge the legislature to enact a law that would allow the state to take back from the federal government the job of enforcing bans against discrimination based on sex, race or religion. . . . 'It's really a human rights bill and a state's rights matter,' said (Commission director Robert) Rackleff. 'It's really a very conservative bill. It fits in well with the new federalism.' Rackleff said federal laws prohibiting discrimination against women, racial minorities, Jews and other religious groups supersede state antidiscrimination laws--except in states having laws equal to or more strict than the federal measures. 'What we would be doing is taking back from the federal government the enforcement of all these rights,' Rackleff said. The state plan 'says what the constitution already enunciates --equal rights for all,' . . . "

Copy to SDP

STUDENTS TO PREPARE RIGHTS LIST--Palm Beach Post, 3/9. "BOCA RATON --Boca Raton High School's Human Relations Committee, a racially mixed student group, will prepare a student bill of rights for the troubled school. Principal Harry Benson. . . has been handed a list of grievances from another student group. . . . The grievance list was prepared by black students who have been boycotting classes this week. . . . They charged that students were suspended on the basis of hearsay evidence following last month's racial violence, a situation they said was created by 'day to day frustrations of the students.' Among other problems cited were a shortage of teachers who can relate to black students and a lack of information in the black community about school activities. . . . 'The music played by the school band is always white-oriented and no soul music is played by the band,' they added, in recommending the naming of a music committee to help solve the problem. . ."

This document was promulgated at an annual cost of $1,470, or 17.5 cents per copy to provide a monthly overview of human relations news.

FEDERAL WOMEN RIGHTS UNIT OPENS--Miami Herald, 3/29. "WASHINGTON, D.C.--Women have a new friend in the federal government--the women's rights program unit of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. It's getting under way with Carol Bonosaro Kummerfeld, a young career civil-service employee, as its first director. A major focus of the commission has been race discrimination, she pointed out in an interview here. The Commission has investigative but not enforcement powers. . . . Tops on the list is a federal women's rights enforcement-effort report, similar to the commission's federal civil-rights enforcement-effort reports. . . .Other program ideas include: A legal status-of-women study. It would be a compilation of all federal statutes discriminating on the basis of sex, with suggestions on how to conform these laws to nonsexist provisions. A series of regional conferences on women's rights, perhaps starting in the spring. A study on possible race and sex discrimination in both television--starting with cable television--and access to business credit and venture capital. . ."

ASKEW GIVES ADVICE ON EQUAL RIGHTS BILL--Pensacola Journal, 3/8. "TALLAHASSEE (AP)--Gov. Reubin Askew told the state Commission on the Status of Women Wednesday that it could help pass the Equal Rights Amendment by working behind the scenes to allay fears about the amendment's effect. 'This country has wasted a lot of talent, stifled many careers and perpetrated a lot of economic injustice because of discrimination against women'. Askew said at a commission conference. . . . 'It is difficult for me to understand why any woman would object to putting into the constitution that no one can be discriminated against on the basis of sex, race, creed or color,' he said. . . . 'This and its support by effective action are long overdue,' he said. . ."

ATTORNEY CLAIMS STATES CAN'T REVERSE ERA VOTE--Pensacola Journal, 3/18. "WASHINGTON (AP)--Once a state decides to ratify a constitutional amendment, it can't change its mind--Nebraska notwithstanding --a Common Cause attorney says. The Nebraska legislature, which had approved the proposed amendment. . ., voted last week to take back its ratification. And several other states are reported willing to follow suit. . . . But David Kendall, an attorney for the citizens' lobby, said . . . states may first reject and later approve a proposed amendment, but they can't reverse the process. . . . Kendall said, 'the Constitution only gives the states the power to ratify a constitutional amendment; they have no corollary power to reject their ratification once it has been given . . .'"

U.S. ORDERS NEW INTEGRATION PLANS--St. Petersburg Times, 3/30. "WASHINGTON (AP)--Prodded by a federal court order, the Nixon Administration is ordering 25 school districts in a dozen Southern and border states to draft new desegregation plans immediately or lose federal funds. They are among more than 200 districts that a federal judge ruled last month have one or more racially segregated schools. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) . . . has sent letters to 25 districts requesting new plans by April 10 'to eliminate vestiges of your former dual school system,' to 17 other districts informing them that they are not affected by the court order, and to 10 states asking status reports on their desegregation progress in higher education systems. . . . Among the counties ordered to take further integration steps was the Marion County School District in Florida. . ."

WOMEN FIGHTING CREDIT BIAS--Daytona Beach News Journal, 3/25. "NEW YORK--A revolt against what many women and civil rights lawyers perceive to be sex discrimination in the extension of credit is gathering momentum. Under the slogan 'give credit to a woman where credit is due,' the assault takes two forms: a search for legal redress and well publicized pressure tactics against the business community. . . . There have been these developments: Sex discrimination in the granting of credit is under attack pending in both houses of Congress and at least half a dozen state legislatures including New York. . . . The National Commission on Consumer Finance, which held hearings on the subject last May in Washington, D.C., recommends a recently released report that states review and amend laws that inhibit the granting of credit to women. . ."

BLACK OFFICIALS FORM FLORIDA ORGANIZATION--Florida Times-Union, 3/13. "TALLAHASSEE (AP)--The organization of Black Elected Officials was formed Saturday to encourage more blacks to seek public office and to oppose discrimination in state government employment. A white newsman from the Associated Press was asked to leave the meeting after welcoming speeches and was told information would be released later on decisions made. . . . A source in the meeting said the members voiced strong backing for Gov. Reubin Askew's order to department heads to end discrimination against blacks and women in hiring. . . . He said the organization . . .'do not want to insulate themselves but are only seeking an exchange of ideas. . ."

PANEL SUGGESTS PROGRAM SAVER--St. Petersburg Times, 3/27. "TALLAHASSEE (AP)--The Florida Human Relations Commission Monday urged city and county governments to use federal revenue-sharing funds to save programs being cut back by the Nixon Administration. Commission members expressed concern about the future of employees in the federal programs as well as of the 'human services' of such programs as Head Start and Day-Care centers. The Commission also voted 10-1 to urge passage by the Legislature of the Equal Rights Amendment. . . . The commission also discussed a proposed bill for the state to assume antidiscrimination enforcement from the federal government with the Human Relations Commission as the enforcing agency. Actions on recommending the bill were delayed until a commission meeting April 26. In order to make more detailed requests to local governments, the commission ordered staff members to gather data on revenue-sharing in Dade County, Jacksonville, Pensacola, The Tampa Bay area, the Broward and Palm Beach County area and the East Central Florida area around Orlando. The staff was told to determine how much each area is receiving in federal revenue-sharing, what it is being spent for and other programs in the area needing funds. . ."

Copy to Consultation on Textbook

2'BIASED' TEXTS TO BE SCRATCHED FROM STATE LIST--St. Petersburg Times, 3/3. TALLAHASSEE--"Two textbooks of Florida history that the State Human Relations Commission says are biased apparently will be scratched off the State Department of Education's list of approved texts. Both books--'The Story of Florida' and 'La Florida: Its Land and People'-- are used in . . . virtually every county in the state. The State Courses of Study Council already has decided to recommend to the State Board of Education (the Cabinet) that contracts with both publishers be allowed to expire June 30. . . . They predicted that both books will be dropped. . . . In both books, there is scant mention of either the accomplishments of blacks or how the events of history affected blacks' lives. . ."

UNIT TO DEAL WITH RACIAL STRIFE URGED--Sarasota Herald-Tribune, 3/7. SARASOTA--"A field representative for the State Commission on Human Relations urged Sarasota Mayor Fred Soto Tuesday to create a local community relations commission to mediate racial problems. James E. Noble of Tallahassee, who together with John Rivers, executive director of Sarasota United Need (SUN), met with the mayor for 45 minutes to discuss creation of the new commission. Noble told the mayor that an 11-man commission operating with two staff workers could operate on a budget of less than $12,000 a year. . . . Noble presented the mayor with a proposed budget for operation of such a commission together with a sample ordinance which would create the agency under city law. Mayor Soto assured Noble that the topic will be placed on the city commission agenda within the next few weeks, and that City Manager Kenneth Thompson will study the proposal and will make recommendations on it. . ."

RIGHT-TO-WORK BILL IS REJECTED--St. Petersburg Times, 3/21. "TALLAHASSEE (AP)--A House Committee Tuesday rejected a right-to-work bill that attracted massive opposition from the United Farmworkers Union. Commerce Committee members voted 10-5 to kill the measure by Rep. Lewis Earle, R-Maitland. Earle immediately declared, 'the bill may be dead, but the issue is not'. . . . The measure called for $1,000-a-day fines against labor leaders or employes who forced employes to join unions. The thrust of the measure was to prevent making union membership a condition for employment. Rep. Frank Carlucci, D-Jacksonville, accused the bill's authors of trying to discriminate against farmworkers--a charge that was leveled in thousands of letters from UFW members. 'This bill is not a right-to-work bill,' said Carlucci. 'It was designed to perpetuate something that has been in existence for hundreds of years. . . it was sponsored by the silk-stocking interests in our state--by people trying to help themselves, not the workers.' . . ."

ERA SUPPORTERS BLAST 'FLIP-FLOP'--Tallahassee Democrat, 3/28. TALLAHASSEE (UPI)--"A woman's group supporting the Equal Rights Amendment accused two senators today of 'flip-flopping' on the measure and indicated they will campaign against them next time they run. Spokesmen for 'Citizens and Organizations for ERA' singled out Sens. David McClain, R-Tampa, and Don Gruber, R-Miami, who joined with GOP Sen. Charles Weber, Fort Lauderdale, to reject the measure on a 3-3 tie in the Senate Judiciary Committee. Gruber campaigned on a platform of support for the amendment banning sex discrimination, the women said, and McClain was a co-introducer of the bill that he ultimately voted against. . . . Said Jo Ann Lordahl of Tallahassee, state coordinator for Citizens and Organizations for ERA, 'we were badly disappointed at the flip-flopping of Senators Gruber and McClain. . ."

ERA HITS SNAG--IS BEATEN TWICE--Tallahassee Democrat, 3/4. "The Equal Rights Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, approved by four more states in February, hit a snag last week when two other states rejected it. Actions by the Nevada and North Carolina legislatures pushed to eight the number of states to say no so far to the amendment that President Nixon has called essential 'so that no American woman need ever again be denied an equal opportunity.' . . . Reasons for rejecting the amendment have varied. Opponents most often claim the result would be 'chaos' in the nation's legal system, including the necessity of drafting women alongside men in time of national emergency. . . . The amendment--which took Congress 49 years to approve--still has six years to win ratification. . ."

RYAN ON RACIAL INCIDENT: 'A CLASSIC CASE . . . , NOT TO BE REPEATED' --Air Force Times, 3/7. "WASHINGTON--'A Classic Case, Not to be Repeated' is the head on a recent article in the (U.S. Air Force) Policy Letter for Commanders. It contains a commentary by AF Chief of Staff Gen. John D. Ryan. . . .'On 19 September, 40 minority USAF airmen locked themselves in an Airman's dining hall. . . They sought to publicize their grievences to news media and to Congress. . . .The grievances . . . included: (1) bad community relations between Mexican-Americans and Blacks. (2) Undue harassment on and off base. (3) Lack of minority music, food and supplies in the BX and on base. (4) Higher and unreasonable minortiy haircut prices. (5) Unfair minority disciplinary practices. . . . Investigation by the . . . commander revealed that: (1) The demonstration was spontaneous. . . . (2) Virtually all grievances were warranted in some significant degree. (3) There was an obvious lack of communication and evident management apathy. (4) Irritants were not of recent origin. . . . 'Our people should not--and will not--have to put up with inequalities like these in order to serve their country by working with us in the U.S. Air Force. . ."

EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT GETS HORNE SUPPORT VOW--Orlando Sentinel Star, 3/24. "TALLAHASSEE--Senate President Mallory Horne pledged all-out support Friday for passage of the Equal Rights Amendment ratification bill in the opening week of the April session. He said he hoped the persuade members of the senate commerce committee which killed the bill earlier this week to change their votes. 'But if they don't, I'm prepared to do something that I prefer not to do--use my presidential powers to ramrod the thing through the floor,' he declared. He would do this by appointing Sen. Lori Wilson, I-Merritt Island, to the commerce committee to break the apparent tie vote. 'And everyone knows how she feels on this issue,' he said, The committee voted 4-2 against the bill earlier this week. But its chairman, Sen. Dan Scarborough, explained he had himself recorded in the negative only to be on the prevailing side so he can call for reconsideration when the committee meets again April 4. A tie vote would have killed the bill. . ."

SCHOOLS' RACIAL TENSIONS EASING--Miami Herald, 3/5. "TALLAHASSEE (AP) --Racial tensions in Florida schools have eased during the past two weeks because 'people have been sitting down and talking to reach reasonable compromises,' says Woodrow J. Darden, state elementary and secondary education director. But Claud Anderson, Gov. Reubin Askew's education advisor, says the end of Black History Week 15 days ago also played a large part (in) calming racial strife. 'As soon as they take black history out of the special category and make it an integral part of the curriculum, it will have the low profile that keeps down these kinds of confrontations,' Anderson says. . ."

SOME A & M GRADUATES FINDING JOB PLACEMENT EASY--Tallahassee Democrat, 3/29. "TALLAHASSEE--Opportunities for Florida A & M University graduates are on the upswing of the employment curve at the mid point of the college recruiting season, according to Clinton C. Cunningham, FAMU director of placement. 'Students in certain areas can just about write their own ticket,' said Cunningham. 'For example, we can place just about all of our students in the technical, accounting, agricultural, home economics and nursing areas.' Cunningham said there is a lesser demand for students in the liberal arts. . ., but that on an overall basis FAMU graduates can afford to be optimistic about their employment future regardless of their major discipline. . ."

HIGH-WAGE BIAS MUST END: ASKEW--St. Petersburg Times, 3/2.

"TALLAHASSEE (AP)--Saying employment discrimination is widespread in state government., Gov. Reubin Askew Thursday ordered all state agencies to start actively recruiting blacks and women for top-paying jobs. Askew also told all department heads to submit plans for ending inequalities based on sex and race in their agencies. He said his action was aimed at establishing 'goals, not quotas' and that they should be met within four years. A recent survey by the Florida Human Relations Commission and the Department of Administration showed few non-whites and women held high-paying white-collar jobs in state government. . . . The plan requires the following actions: Each department must 'actively recruit minority group members and women,' especially for higher-paying job categories. Education and skill requirements that tend to 'perpetuate discriminatory practices' must be abolished. Each department must compute the percentage of minority group and women employees on a yearly basis and work toward correcting any inequalities. Each department must appoint an equal employment opportunity officer to make sure that discrimination is not being practiced. Progress of each agency in ending discrimination will be reviewed every year by the . . . Division of Personnel and the Human Relations Commission. . . . He said the new employment practices will not alter the rights of any current state employee. . ."

Ms. Dewey Potter, Editor
Human Relations in Brief
Florida Commission on Human Relations
Department of Community Affairs
Howard Building
2571 Executive Center Circle, East
Tallahassee, Florida 32301

BULK RATE
U. S. POSTAGE
PAID
Tallahassee, Florida
PERMIT NO. 139

Mr. Emory F. Via
Southern Regional Counci
52 Fairlie Street, NW
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

APR 16 1973

HUMAN RELATIONS IN BRIEF

A Monthly News Digest

FLORIDA COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

VOLUME I, NO. 7
MAY, 1973

NOW IN ALL-OUT DRIVE FOR ERA RATIFICATION--Tampa Tribune, 5/22.
"CHICAGO (UPI)--The National Organization for Women yesterday announced a two-year national plan to obtain ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. . . . Ann Scott, NOW vice president for legislation, said that by law the ERA has 6 more years to gain ratification from the eight more states needed to enact the amendment. But, she added, 'we're not going to need them.' Ms. Scott said that the two-year campaign calls for a policy of pressure politics rather than electoral politics, and would be aimed at the 1974 elections. She said NOW would start an intensive grass-roots campaign to learn everything possible about every state legislator in the nation. 'We're going to make the Equal Rights Amendment the key issue in 1974,' Ms. Scott said."

ANTI-BUSING MEASURE FAILS TEST IN HOUSE--Tampa Tribune, 5/17.
"TALLAHASSEE (AP)--The House Education Committee yesterday defeated a senate-passed measure urging Congress to convene a constitutional convention on school busing. The committee voted 12-11 to reject the bill, which proposes a convention to draft an amendment to the U.S. Constitution 'to prevent the assignment of students based on race, religion, color or national origin.' Rep. Murray Dubbin, D-Miami, charged that the proposal by Rep. Lewis Earle, R-Maitland, showed 'a lack of confidence in the way Florida is handling the reform of its education system.' . . . Arnetta M. Brown of St. Petersburg, representing the League of Women Voters of Florida, said her organization opposed any legislation which would prevent desegregation of Florida schools . . ."

BLACK MAN TO HEAD CITY'S RACE GROUP--Fort Myers News-Press, 5/9.
FORT MYERS--"Percy Jones, a black former Lee County juvenile counselor, was named director of the Fort Myers Community Relations Commission Monday. Jones, most recently a member of the Community Action Migrant Program at Immokalee, will assume his new duties today, Mayor Oscar Corbin said. . . . Jones said his job will be to direct activities of the commission members and 'work toward better race relations in Fort Myers.' . . . Jones, 39, is a Fort Myers native and a graduate of the Old Dunbar High School. He holds a degree in sociology from Wiley College at Marshall, Texas and was a juvenile counselor for nine years. . ." EDITOR'S NOTE: Mayor Corbin is a member of the Florida Commission on Human Relations.

This public document was promulgated at an annual cost of $1,152, or 13.7 cents per copy to provide a monthly overview of human relations news.

RADIO SYSTEM FOR BLACKS IS ANNOUNCED--St. Petersburg Times, 5/15. "NEW YORK (AP)--The National Black Network (NBN), which describes itself as the first black owned and operated radio news network, announced Monday that it will go on the air by July 1. Eugene D. Jackson, President of Unity Broadcasting Network, Inc., which will operate NBN, said at a news conference that 38 stations have already signed contracts to affiliate with the network. He said the total is expected to be 50 or 60 by July 1. . . . Bank loans and private and venture capital investors have provided more than the $1-million to underwrite the network, which expects to make a profit in its first year of operation, Jackson said. . . . Although news broadcasts will be the staple of the network's programming, public affairs shows, sportcasts and live coverage of events of special interest to blacks, such as the Urban League national convention in Washington later this year, are also scheduled. . ."

CIVIL RIGHTS EDICT: BRING MORE WHITES INTO FAMU--St. Petersburg Times, 5/25. "TALLAHASSEE (UPI)--Florida has been told that it must make the curriculum at predominantly black Florida A & M University more attractive to white students or face the possible loss of millions of dollars in federal funds to higher education. The eight predominantly white universities in the state system also must be made more attractive to students of a disadvantaged background. . . . The orders came from Civil Rights Director Peter E. Holmes. . . . 'We will give serious attention to the statement by (Holmes) that in order for A & M to attract students and faculty of both races on a racially non-discriminatory basis its programs should be broadened, enhanced in quality and differentiated from that of the other institutions,' (Chancellor Robert Mautz) said. . . . The state's long-range plan for FAMU is to train students to achieve leadership in minority communities. But it has not allocated resources to the university for this purpose, Holmes said. . . "

PRESBYTERIANS TAP BLACK MAN--St. Petersburg Times, 5/11. ST. PETERSBURG --"For the first time in the 82-year history of the Presbytery of the Florida Synod a black man has been chosen moderator-in-nomination. Rev. Irvin Elligan, pastor of New Covenant Presbyterian Church in Miami and a former associate pastor in St. Petersburg, was elected Tuesday at the synod's annual session. If tradition holds, he will become the synod's presiding officer for 1974. . . . 'I am highly honored by my new position,' Elligan said, 'but also a bit frightened by the awesome responsibility and the fact that I am the first black man to become moderator-in-nomination. The church today must continue to act in social areas, basing their moves on religious conviction.' . . . He has tried to bring together blacks, whites and Cubans through programs of social action. Among them are a Village Youth Club program aimed at ghetto youth, a day-care program and a music-enrichment rpogram for gifted but poor children. . . "

BLUE KEY TO KEEP MALE MEMBER RULE--Florida Times-Union, 5/9. "GAINESVILLE--While a small band of women marched to the tune of 'I Am Woman' outside their meeting place, active members of the University of Florida Blue Key Chapter voted against allowing women to join that group. The vote was 29 in favor and 32 against a constitutional revision of the club's constitution that would allow women to become members. A vote held not more than two weeks ago by the group was closer, but negative also . . . ."

PANELS TO REVIEW DISCRIMINATION AT FSU "SLOWLY" BEING IMPLEMENTED--Tallahassee Democrat, 5/9. TALLAHASSEE--"Two separate review panels to investigate discrimination against minorities and women are in the works at Florida State University but their implementation has been slow in coming. The two panels--one of which would review departmental policies and procedures and another which would investigate individual complaints of discrimination were first recommended by FSU's special assistant on Minority Affairs (Dr. Freddie Groomes). The antidiscrimination review panels are part of an affirmative action plan to insure equal employment opportunities for university personnel. . . . Both panels would have nine members and include a cross-section of faculty, staff, administrative and student personnel. . . . 'Once we have activated the overall plan, I'm certain we will satisfy many of the concerns which have been voiced,' she said. And, once activated, FSU's affirmative action plan will be on trial for possible use on a systemwide basis."

DIXIE BLACKS EXCEL AFTER GOING NORTH--Florida Times-Union, 5/4. "WASHINGTON (AP)--A new Census Bureau study shows that black migrants from the South are more likely to be economically successful in the North than blacks born in the North. A survey of six Northern cities showed that blacks 'who are most likely to be poor and on welfare are those born and raised in the city and living there at the time of the 1970 census,' the report said. . . . The study was prepared by Larry H. Long of the population division of the Bureau of Census. It was based on 1970 census information from six cities with at least 500,000 black population--New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles and Washington, D.C. . . . 'The important consideration of this study is that black migrants have accounted for a less than proportionate increase in the welfare rolls, for the migrants are less likely to be on welfare than the urban natives.'"

WHEELCHAIR USERS ASK ACCESSIBLE COMMUNITY--Tampa Tribune, 5/16. "OTTAWA (AP)--If architects, city planners and politicians had to spend a little time in wheelchairs, they would build buildings and plan cities that would be easier for everyone, says Tony Mann of Winnipeg, executive director of the Canadian Paraplegic Association. A 'totally accessible community' need not cost more if the planning for wheelchairs is considered from the first stages of any new development, he said. . . . Advances in medicine mean that more and more handicapped individuals will be around, he said. . . . If cities were better planned, wheelchair people could hold jobs instead of being unemployed. If there were subsidies available, such as tax exemptions on cars with hand controls or on hearing aids, handicapped persons might be more independent. Some progress is being made, he said. At least one school for architects now requires its students to spend a day or two confined to a wheelchair just to see how difficult most buildings are for the handicapped."

HUMAN RELATIONS GROUP ELECTS COOK--Fort Pierce News-Tribune, 5/24. "FORT PIERCE--The Human Relations Commission has elected Peter Cook chairman. The HRC also chose Bob Bennett, another new member, as treasurer. The reorganization of the group with more new members also led to a few new methods. The members decided to conduct interviews with city employes to learn their complaints and their working conditions. The members will compile a list of questions to ask the employees. Cook was designated to hear the city administration's views on personnel practices. The group was formed to investigate charges of discrimination made by the State Human Relations Commission staff. . . "

DADE'S BILINGUAL CODE ELATES LATIN COLONY--Florida Times-Union, 5/7. "MIAMI (AP)--Dade County has been officially declared bilingual and bicultural, but no one is really quite sure what it means. 'But we'll almost certainly have all street and office signs printed in both English and Spanish and have bilingual people in all the government offices,' (Mayor Jack) Orr said. . . . Despite the uncertainty, the Miami area's huge Latin colony of 300,000 was delighted by the decision. . . . The prime mover behind the resolution, Cuban-born banker Bernardo Benes, told the Commission, 'Today is a beautiful day for Dade County and its Spanish-speaking people. You are making official what is already a fact of life, that Dade County is already a bicultural county.' . . . Dade County is home for almost half of those who fled Cuba following the Fidel Castro takeover in January, 1959. The . . . exiles constitute about one-fourth of the county's population. . . . Latin leaders feel the Dade County resolution is a big step forward in community involvement--if only a symbolic one at present." EDITOR'S NOTE: Dr. Benes is a former member of the Florida Commission on Human Relations.

REVENUE SHARING BILL CLEARS FLORIDA HOUSE--Tampa Tribune, 5/29. "TALLAHASSEE (UPI)--Getting up a head of steam as it began the final week of the legislature, the House passed a revenue-sharing bill yesterday giving cities and counties $225 million in state funds. Sponsors called it 'tax relief' for property taxpayers. . . . The bill provides $155 million for cities--an increase of $23 million over the current year's $132 million. Counties would get $70 million, a $31 million hike over the current $39 million. . . . The city increase comes from larger allocations of cigarette tax receipts and $8 million left in the current revenue sharing fund for cities." EDITOR'S NOTE: This bill was subsequently passed by the Senate and becomes law effective July 1, 1973.

WOMEN'S GROUP PLANS TO ORGANIZE BANK--Tampa Tribune, 5/18. "NEW YORK (AP)--A group of women, some 'liberated' and some not, said yesterday they plan to form the First Women's Bank and Trust Company. It would be run mainly by women and cater to their financial needs. . . . Eileen Preiss, coordinator of the bank group and vice chairwoman of the state Democratic Committee, said the fledgling bank hopes to open its door as a full-service bank in mid-Manhattan early next year. The group plans to apply soon for a charter from the state. . . . Banks frequently discriminate against women seeking credit, loans and mortgages, (Betty) Friedan said, adding that the proposed bank 'will take women seriously and force other banks to do the same.' The bank will actively recruit women for officers and top management and provide a consultant for women who start businesses. . . "

MOTHER IS WORTH $8,320 A YEAR?--Florida Times-Union, 5/14. "STORRS, Conn. (AP)--Mothers are worth more than the $8,320 they could get if they were paid minimum wage, according to a family relations expert. . . . The Hartford Insurance Group estimates that the average American mother with two children devotes a minimum of 100 hours weekly to her family, or 5,200 hours a year. No overtime. No pay. If she were paid the $1.60 minimum wage her salary would be $8,320. If Congress approves a $2 minimum wage, the mother would be worth $10,400. The insurance company said that if the mother dies the family has to finance the jobs of housekeeper, cook, laundress, governess, practical nurse, social secretary, confidant, seamstress, teacher, protector and chauffeur. It's very difficult to find a housekeeper, especially one who is willing to rear children too. . . "

RELATIONS PROPOSAL SCHEDULED--Sarasota Herald-Tribune, 5/13. SARASOTA --"A request for both the City of Sarasota and the county to fund a local community relations commission to mediate racial problems will be presented to both commissions later this month. James E. Noble of Tallahassee, field representative for the State Department of Community Affairs, said . . . that he will appear before the Sarasota City Commission on May 21, and before the county commission the next day. . . . In outlining plans for such a proposed local commission, . . . Noble presented a proposed annual budget of $18,413 to staff such a commission with a director and a secretary. 'It will take a lot of pressure off city officials,' said Noble, who added 'I don't think it will do the city any harm--it may help it.' . . . Noble stated that the average white person does not realize the desperation and poor living conditions which many blacks face, and stated 'there are too many restrictions.'" EDITOR'S NOTE: The Sarasota Community Relations Commission was formed at a meeting of the City Commission on June 4.

FIRED BLACK CHARGES RACIAL BIAS--Tallahassee Democrat, 5/18. TALLAHASSEE --"The 22-year-old son of the president of the Key West NAACP today charged the Division of Driving License Examination with discrimination against blacks. Emory S. Major said he was being fired today in Tallahassee because of a sparse line of hair on his upper lip 'but the real reason is because my father is president of the Key West NAACP.' Major began his job March 12 and he said he had a moustache then. It was only after he came to Tallahassee for a seminar that he was told that it was against division policy. . . . (Division director C. W.) Keith said Major was asked on three occasions . . . to shave. 'He asked for a copy of the policy, written out, and when we gave it to him he refused to accept it, so we had no other choice but to terminate him,' Keith said. Major, however, said he refused the policy because he wasn't told what it was. 'They just handed me an envelope without telling me what was in it. I wouldn't accept it and then they handed me the letter telling me I was fired,' Major said. . . "

FLEEING FELON LAW CHANGE PROPOSED--Tampa Tribune, 5/6. TAMPA--"A proposal to change Florida's fleeing felon law to allow policemen to shoot to capture only persons suspected of committing a crime involving physical threats will be submitted to a legislative committee this week. (Ms.) Janet Reno, a senate judiciary-criminal committee staff attorney, said last week the proposed law parallels an Illinois statute which provides that an officer is justified in shooting a fleeing suspect only when the officer believes such force is necessary to prevent death to himself or others. . . . Current Florida law allows the killing of a suspect fleeing the scene of any suspected felony. . . . The governing section of the proposal is lifted exactly from the Illinois law. EDITOR'S NOTE: The change, which was proposed by the Florida Commission on Human Relations and which was part of an overall criminal code revision, was defeated by the House of Representatives and will not reappear until the Legislature reconvenes.

UF PLANS TO END SEX DISCRIMINATION--St. Petersburg Times, 5/20. "GAINESVILLE-- . . . The University of Florida (UF) turned in its three-month-old revised equal opportunities plan to the regional civil rights office last week hoping for an 'A.' The plan . . . outlines UF's plans to end discrimination on campus. The non-discrimination goals cover students and employes of the university in the areas of race, color, religion, sex and national origin. The report also sets a blueprint for actively seeking qualified women and blacks as students and employes--whom HEW had found the university discriminated against. The plan is the university's second try. . . . HEW (had) found '. . . women and minorities still are either under-represented or not represented at all in the majority of the key administrative and professional positions throughout the university structure.'"

BLACK CAUCUS REVIEWS STANCE--St. Petersburg Times, 5/4. "WASHINGTON --After setting itself up as national spokesman for blacks, an investigative body and a clearinghouse for black concerns, the Congressional Black Caucus has decided to do that which its members were elected to do--legislate. . . . Rep. Louis Stokes, chairman of the caucus, said in a recent interview, 'we now feel we can best serve black America through our legislative efforts. . . most controversial legislation is passed or defeated by a margin of 10 votes or less, . . . so a bloc like ours (14 members) can provide the pivotal vote on an issue.' . . . Perhaps the foremost task facing the caucus as it shifts its emphasis from the convener of meetings to that of lawmaker is organizing a good supportive staff."

TWO COUNTIES SUED FOR BIAS IN JAILS--St. Petersburg Times, 5/25. "JACKSONVILLE--The U.S. Department of Justice has filed suit to force Polk and Sumter Counties to halt allegedly discriminatory practices in their county jails. The suit filed in U.S. District Court in Jacksonville alleged that the two counties have assigned inmates to jail cells by race and thus discriminate against black inmates. The suit was filed under the U.S. Civil Rights Act and named the counties, county commissioners, and county sheriffs as defendants. The Polk County case was assigned to U.S. District Judge Ben Krentzman in Tampa and the Sumter County case to the federal court in Ocala. . ."

BULK RATE
U. S. POSTAGE
PAID
Tallahassee, Florida
PERMIT NO. 139

Ms. Dewey Potter, Editor
Human Relations in Brief
Florida Commission on Human Relations
Howard Building
2571 Executive Center Circle, East
Tallahassee, Florida 32301

Mr. Emory F. Via
Southern Regional Counc
52 Fairlie St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

FA

HUMAN RELATIONS IN BRIEF

Note p2 for eval. Comment on Christian — Return to me

A Monthly News Digest

FLORIDA COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

VOLUME I, NO. 8
JUNE, 1973

JOB DISCRIMINATION 'BAD FOR BUSINESS'--St. Petersburg Times, 6/29. "FORT MYERS (UPI)--The director of the state Human Relations Commission said Thursday discrimination in employment is not only unfair to women and blacks, but is bad for business. 'To me, equal job opportunities mean good business,' said Robert B. Rackleff. 'Any time an employer discriminates against a person because of irrational attitudes about the person's skin color, sex, or background, he is mis-allocating his human resources. Often, white men are given jobs which could be done better by someone who's been discriminated against.' Speaking at an equal employment workshop for Southwest Florida businessmen, Rackleff said white men are a minority in American society, but hold a vastly disproportionate number of well-paying jobs. He said black men with four years of college earn about as much as white men with high school diplomas in Florida. He said women who finish college earn about the same as a man who drops out in the eighth grade. . . . Rackleff said the Human Relations Commission is emphasizing job discrimination because 'once you give a person a decent job other discrimination problems such as housing . . . tend to work themselves out.'"

JUDGES RULE OUT REVERSE JOB BIAS--St. Petersburg Times, 6/29. "WASHINGTON--A three-judge federal panel has ruled that the Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1972 bars 'discrimination in reverse' in federal promotions, training and other personnel actions just as strongly as it does other types of discrimination. In the first federal court ruling on the application of the 1972 law, the U.S. District Court for New Mexico referred to the 'broad sweep' of the act and said it was 'a clear, emphatic directive by Congress that all positions in the competitive service of the federal government should be filled without regard to race, religion, sex, color or national origin.' . . . The court's decision has great application regarding charges by white employes that agencies are engaging in 'discrimination in reverse' when they deny them promotions and training opportunities in favor of less qualified blacks and other minority group members."

HYPERTENSION CALLED MAIN KILLER OF BLACKS--St. Petersburg Times, 6/25. "LOS ANGELES--Hypertension is the No. 1 killer in the black community and not sickle-cell anemia, which is a 'political football,' a black doctor said Saturday. A large number of young blacks suffer from the disease but are not treated until they are much older, said Dr. Richard O. Butcher, vice president of the Golden State Medical Association, a California organization of black doctors. Black physicians have been working on the problem, Butcher said, but their efforts have been overshadowed by sickle-cell anemia research."

This public document was promulgated at an annual cost of $1,152, or 13.7 cents per copy to provide a monthly overview of human relations news.

HE'S GOT POVERTY AID IN HIS HANDS--Fort Lauderdale News, 5/27. "TALLAHASSEE--One hundred days into his new job as secretary of the Department of Community Affairs, Ed Trombetta feels only the frustrations of trying to sell new state programs to a tradition-bound Florida Legislature. 'The most frustrating thing you have is trying to pass a bill you feel is the most important thing in the world, . . .' Trombetta said, 'and learning it is not.' . . . Still alive in the two houses . . . are half a dozen major bills in the Askew program which directly affect Trombetta's department, including one which would create a state division of housing. . . . Trombetta has also been lobbying for a 'human rights' bill in the Senate. . . . Whatever bills in his package do not become law this year won't just fade away. 'We'll just come back next year and correct whatever needs to be corrected,' Trombetta said. . . . As secretary of the department, one of Trombetta's functions is to sit as chairman of the Human Relations Commission, a 19-member body responsible for promoting equal opportunity and eliminating discrimination. . ."

STATE AGENCY REPORT ON TAMPA CHARGES JOB BIAS ON RACE, SEX--St. Petersburg Times, 6/21. "TALLAHASSEE--A preliminary report to the State Human Relations Commission said Wednesday the city of Tampa is guilty of 'widespread race and sex discrimination' in hiring and promoting city employes. . . . 'Excluding the MDA (Metropolitan Development Agency), city agencies employ blacks in greater proportion to their numbers in the Tampa labor force; 23 percent of the employees are black, while 15 percent of the labor force is black,' (Commission director Robert) Rackleff's report said. 'However, they are concentrated in the lower-level positions.' Rackleff said 57 percent of the city employes in the lowest pay grades are black and there are no blacks in the city's top 10 pay grades. Rackleff said the city agencies, not counting MDA, show a similarly discriminatory pattern against women--who make up 40 percent of the available labor force, but hold only 15 percent of the city jobs. . . . Tampa Mayor Dick Greco, Jr., attacked the report as 'just a bunch of statistics. . .'"

INTEGRATION SAID HARDER BECAUSE OF SCHOOL FRATS--Tampa Tribune, 6/11. "TALLAHASSEE (AP)--School integration is being hampered by high school fraternities and sororities that practice racial prejudice, says state Education Commissioner Floyd Christian. Christian said these organizations, formally banned in Florida's high schools in the mid-1950's because they glorified social snobbishness, are reappearing and either directly or indirectly fostering teenage racism. . . . 'At least part of the problem at Boca Ciega High School and other high schools may have stemmed from the organized resistance of such socially oriented groups to integration of our high schools,' Christian said. . . . Racial violence has also torn high schools in Pensacola, Boca Raton and other Florida cities in recent months. . . . He said parents who join antibusing groups and politicians who take various sides during school disruptions are making matters worse. . . . Senate Education Committee chairman Robert Graham, D-Miami, said he was not convinced that social fraternities and sororities were a direct cause of racial disruption. . . . He said racial prejudice in schools probably couldn't be entirely eliminated while the same prejudice existed among adults. . ."

CROSS BURNED AT FLORIDA GUARD CAMP--Tallahassee Democrat, 6/6. TALLAHASSEE (AP)--"Gov. Reubin Askew has asked the Florida National Guard to investigate a cross-burning incident that four black Guardsmen say was part of harassment by white soldiers during training exercises last week at Camp Blanding. . . . The four black guardsmen, the only blacks in the 149-man company, told authorities some white soldiers said they were members of the Ku Klux Klan. Spec. 4 Sherman Weaver of Lake Wales, a white soldier, said the cross was burned after a 'drunken party' in the company area. . . . Weaver said none of the black soldiers were present when several whites 'made a cross out of an oak branch, put pillow cases over their heads and lit the cross with lighter fluid. Then they danced around with it, all of them drunk, and planted it next to the blacks' tent. . .'"

CROSS-BURNING IS MILITARY BUST FOR GUARDSMAN--St. Petersburg Times, 6/27. "ST. AUGUSTINE (AP)--The Florida National Guard reported Tuesday that it took away the stripes of a Polk County sheriff's deputy who reportedly burned a cross at Camp Blanding May 28. His company commander, 1st Lt. Donald W. Gay of Cocoa, was admonished for failing to provide proper control and supervision of his unit, the Florida Department of Military Affairs reported. The report said an investigation determined that 'Spec. 4 Kenneth A. Davis, after duty hours and in the company area, burned a unit sign and displayed a burning, small crude cross while wearing a hood.' He was reduced to the rank of private first class. . . . The state military department said it has submitted a report of its investigation to State Atty. Don Nichols and U.S. Atty. John Briggs, both at Jacksonville . . ."

BIAS CUTS FUNDS AT BOYS RANCH--St. Petersburg Times, 6/16. "Although there still are no blacks at the Boys Ranch and Girls Villa, the decision of Florida sheriffs to integrate their children's homes continues to hurt the ranch and villa financially. Executive Director Harry Weaver said the number of people who donate money, clothing, food, plants and animals to the two homes has declined at least 25 percent since the sheriffs' vote in February. . . . Until February an unofficial policy kept black youngsters out of the Boys Ranch, which opened in 1959 near Live Oak, and the Girls Villa, which opened last fall near Bartow. There still are no black residents or applicants, Weaver said. . . . 'We knew it (the sheriffs' decision) would have an impact,' he said. 'When people support the ranch or the villa, it's sort of like a vote--private and personal. They're basically conservative people. . .' . . . The ranch and the villa take children between 8 and 18 who have been orphaned or pushed out of their homes and put them in cottages under the care of a husband-wife team. . ."

BIG COMPANIES DO BATTLE FOR WOMEN EXECUTIVES--Tallahassee Democrat, 6/17. "The president of a heavy equipment manufacturing firm in Cleveland summoned an aide to his office early in 1972 and instructed him to 'do whatever is necessary' to add three women executives to the company's marketing staff. Three month later, the crestfallen aide returned to report total failure. 'If you really want to hire women, we'll have to steal them,' he said. 'What's more, you'll have to pay them more than you're paying me.' The president's response: 'Do it.' A week later, a $22,000-a-year offer (amounting to a $3,500 raise) lured a 39-year-old woman marketing expert away from one of the company's largest competitors. The company expresses no particular pride in the coup, since such piracy of personnel is generally frowned upon. But a company official contends that 'pirating is the only way you can hire a woman executive these days. . .'"

FLORIDA UNIVERSITIES ANTICIPATE INCREASE IN NUMBER OF BLACKS--St. Petersburg Times, 6/19. "Desegregation forecasts for Florida's nine universities over the next five years show that some institutions, like the University of South Florida, will more than double the number of black students while the larger and older University of Florida will inch from 3.4 percent to 4.2 percent black in the same period. . . . HEW ordered Florida and 10 other states to prepare statewide desegregation plans by June 11 or face losing as much as $70 million in federal funds. Florida's main problem, HEW said, is that mostly-white Florida State University and mostly-black Florida A & M University are less than a mile apart in Tallahassee. . . . HEW probably also will take a hard look at projections at other universities around the state. . . . As part of the state desegregation plan, university officials have agreed to study the senior test to determine if it discriminates against blacks, promote more counseling for blacks and produce more scholarships for disadvantaged students. . . "

ORLANDO FACES DISCRIMINATION PROBE--Orlando Sentinel Star, 6/21. "TALLAHASSEE--The state human relations commission plans to investigate the hiring practices of the city of Orlando. 'We haven't zeroed in on Orlando yet, but we will soon,' said (former) Rep. Robert Milburn, D-Winter Park, appointed one of the 18 members of the commission by House Speaker Terrell Sessums. Robert Rackleff, executive director of the commission, confirmed Milburn's statement. 'A local level study was done by the city of Orlando last year, but only of blacks,' Rackleff said. 'It doesn't meet either our needs or those of the federal equal employment opportunity commission.' 'As far as I know,' (said Orlando Mayor Carl Langford) 'we are the only city in Florida that has such rigid antidiscrimination ordinances, and we are, to my knowledge, the only city in Florida with a civic board with subpoena powers to investigate discrimination in any form. . .'"

CITY PASSES ORDINANCES ON CIVIL RIGHTS ISSUES--Sarasota Herald Tribune, 6/5. SARASOTA--"The Sarasota City Commission Monday night took far-reaching liberal action on two civil rights matters. The commission, in a unanimous vote, passed two new ordinances, one creating a five-member, non-salaried community relations board, and the other setting up an open housing ordinance. . . . James E. Noble, field representative for the State (Commission on Human Relations), . . . stated he would go along with it as long as there were members representing youth and senior citizens on the board. . . . Sam Lewis, on leave of absence from the city police department, (said) that the city does have some serious racial problems, 'problems that are just below the boiling point and are ready to explode.' . . . A similar string of proponents of the open housing measure came before the commission and many were the same people who spoke in favor of the previous ordinance. . . . 'This (housing) ordinance has teeth in it,' said (Mayor) Saprito. Commissioner (Ted) Sperling said one of the strongest points of the open housing measure is that it gives the community relations board the opportunity to arbitrate problems. . . "

EMPLOYE POLICIES TO CHANGE--Tallahassee Democrat, 6/2. TALLAHASSEE--"State employes leaving work for up to four months to have a baby will be guaranteed their old job back when they return under revised rules and regulations to be presented to the Cabinet Tuesday. State personnel director Conley Kennison said the revision was partly housekeeping, partly compliance with federal law. 'This is the first revision of the rules since 1969 when the division was changed from the old Personnel and Retirement Division,' he said. Many of the old laws continued to refer to the personnel and retirement division, and are in conflict with federal laws. . . . A major revision of the rules and regulations was the allowing of sick leave to be maternity leave. The guaranteed return to work provision is probably the greatest change in the regulations, however, Kennison said, although it eliminates the excuses used by some employers to get rid of employes. . ."

UNIVERSITY DESEGREGATION PLAN GETS THOROUGH REVIEW--Tallahassee Democrat, 6/24. "Federal officials will respond to Florida's plan for desegregating its state universities 'as soon as possible,' a spokesman for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) said. A special task force has been assigned to 'review thoroughly' each of the plans submitted. . . . Florida's public higher education system was one of 10 affected by a U.S. district court order requiring HEW to speed up desegregation enforcement beginning June 16. However, an appeal of the order by HEW resulted in what appears to be a 10-month extension on implementation of the order. . . .The SUS (state university system) plan includes a wide ranging series of recommendations--most of them aimed at bringing more black high school graduates into Florida's predominantly white universities. Equal focus is given in the plan to attracting more white students to predominantly black Florida A & M University through strengthening its undergraduate curriculum and adding more graduate level programs. . ."

MOST REVENUE SHARING DOLLARS GO TO LAW AND ORDER--Tallahassee Democrat, 6/3. "WASHINGTON--Big cities, beset by fear of crime, are using more than half of their federal revenue sharing funds for public safety, mostly police. Smaller towns, where crime is less of a problem, are using less . . . for law and order and more for transportation, recreation and projects to protect the environment. These are the key findings of a preliminary survey of 127 cities who have received nearly half a billion dollars in revenue sharing checks since the historic new program took effect six months ago. . . . A questionnaire mailed to a sampling of cities. . . showed that by far the largest part of revenue-sharing money has gone for better police and fire protection. . . . The next most common expense among big cities is for environmental protection--20 percent. Then come transportation, 8 percent; financial administration, 4 percent; health, 4 percent; recreation, 3 percent; libraries, 2 percent; community development, 1 percent, and social services, one half of one percent. Some criticism is expected from spokesmen for underprivileged groups who wanted more of federal revenue sharing to be spent on additional services for the poor. . ."

ELKS TURN ON LODGE WITH BLACKS--Tallahassee Democrat, 6/21. "KENOSHA, Wis. (UPI)--The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks has troubles in Wisconsin. Lodge No. 750 of Kenosha could lose its charter because it has two members who are not white. Since Jan. 27, 1971, the lodge here has been on record in opposition to the national Elks' rule admitting only whites as members. . . . This spring, the national group revoked the Kenosha club's membership and sent a representative to bring back the charter and the other Elks' property. The club went to court to keep its charter. It won a temporary injunction and is after a permanent injunction. . . . When the lodge took the decision to oppose the exclusionary rule in 1971, (spokesman John) Malloy said the membership was 'virtually unanimous' in agreeing to it. . . . Recent court decisions have given the states the right to take away licenses and tax exemptions from private clubs if they practice discrimination in their membership."

WOMEN'S RIGHTS NOT NEEDED!!??!!--Tallahassee Democrat, 6/15. "The most effective argument against passage of the Equal Rights Amendment goes like this: women don't need it. They already have all the civil rights they need under the 1964 Civil Rights Act. . . . What are the economic results of the 1964 Civil Rights Act? . . . Let's start with some Labor Department statistics. In 1958 working women made 39.2 percent as much as men. In 1970, only 38.2 percent. Thank goodness for the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Whoops. In 1966, women were still making only 38.5 percent as much as men. In 1970, only 38.2 percent. . . . Something must be wrong. Let's try 'managers and executives.' The women who work in corporations. In 1958, these women made 51.5 percent as much as their male counterparts. Then came 1964 and the Civil Rights Act. . . . By 1966, women were making only 45.6 percent as much as their male counterparts. . . . In 1962 the typical woman teacher made 67.8 percent as much as her male associate. In 1972 her percentage had fallen to 66 percent. . . "

WIMBISH: STOP STATE JOB DISCRIMINATION--Tampa Tribune, 6/18. "TALLAHASSEE (UPI)--On the job two months, labor administrator C. Bette Wimbish is trying to eliminate discrimination in state hiring right in her own offices. A black and the highest ranking appointed woman official in state government, . . . Mrs. Wimbish (was) appointed associate director of the State Commerce Department's labor division on April 16. . . . Mrs. Wimbish said she had stopped all new hiring 'until we can assess where we are and decide what to do.' . . . She said she 'rather suspects' the same pattern of absence of racial, ethnic and sex minorities exists in all state government. But the former St. Petersburg city councilwoman . . . said she feels Gov. Reubin Askew is trying to assure 'adequate representation' of minorities on all levels of state government (through the newly implemented affirmative action plan). 'There should be more women, black and white, at decision-making levels of government,' she said. 'There should be more involvement of ethnic minorities--Indians, Spanish surnamed and others. . .'"

Ms. Dewey Potter, Editor
Human Relations in Brief
Florida Commission on Human Relations
Howard Building
2571 Executive Center Circle, East
Tallahassee, Florida 32301

BULK RATE
U. S. POSTAGE
PAID
Tallahassee, Florida
PERMIT NO. 139

Mr. Emory F. Via
Southern Regional Counci
52 Fairlie St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

HUMAN RELATIONS IN BRIEF

A Monthly News Digest

FLORIDA COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

VOLUME I, NO. 9
JULY, 1973

14 WOMEN'S GROUPS DECRY MONTGOMERY STERILIZATIONS--Florida Times-Union, 7/10. "WASHINGTON (UPI)--Fourteen women's groups, decrying the sterilization of two girls in Alabama, Monday urged passage of legislation outlawing the use of public funds for such purposes. . . . The Alabama incident came to light when the father of two young black girls brought a $1-million damage suit against the federal government for what he alleged was involuntary sterilization of the daughters. 'Asking Congress to amend the Family Planning Services and Population Research Act, the groups said: 'We strongly support the right of any mature, informed adult to choose any available method of family planning, including sterilization, . . . but we urge . . . strict, comprehensive statutory prohibitions on the use of federal funds to refer minors for sterilization or to perform sterilization on minors.' . . . Joining in the statement were . . . Church Women United, . . . National Council of Jewish Women, National Council of Negro Women, National Organization for Women, National Women's Political Caucus, . . . Women's Equity Action League, and Zero Population Growth."

PRISON SYSTEM HIRES BLACK--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/26. TALLAHASSEE (UPI)--"The state prison system announced today it is hiring a black man, Macon Williams, whose job will be to promote good relations between inmates and the community and among the prisoners themselves. Williams, 52, a former assistant football coach at Florida A & M University and now an employe of the state Economic Opportunity Division, will become the prison system's inmate relations and volunteer services coordinator Aug. 1. 'He will work with local community organizations, stimulating interest in helping with the inmate situation,' said Jim Ball, prison personnel director. Ball said the prison already has blacks on its staff, but that Williams will be the highest ranking black."

MOST NEWSPAPERS DROP ADS BY SEX--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/25. (AP)--"Most American newspapers surveyed from Honolulu to New York and Detroit to Dallas have stopped classifying help wanted ads by sex. Most did it before the Supreme Court upheld a Pittsburgh ordinance forbidding the practice. 'We did it because we saw the handwriting on the wall,' said an executive of the Miami Herald which dropped such labels in April, 1972. The court ruled last Tuesday. Some newspapers with undifferentiated headings still permit individual advertisers to designate whether they want a man or a woman, but many, like the Chicago Tribune, advise them not to. . . . So far there has been no concerted protest by publishers over the constitutional question. . ."

This public document was promulgated at an annual cost of $1,152, or 13.7 cents per copy to provide a monthly overview of human relations news.

REVIEW OF FLEEING FELON LAW CONSIDERED--Palm Beach Post, 7/31. "TALLAHASSEE (AP)--The state's 'fleeing felon' rule needs to be reexamined in the wake of recent fatal shootings by police, the chairmen of the House and Senate Criminal Justice Committees said yesterday. . . . Gainesville City Commissioner Russel Ramsey called for repeal of the rule Sunday at a memorial service for Gerald Thornton, a black social worker shot to death by a Florida Highway Patrol trooper near Lake City May 9. . . . Thornton, 23, was shot in the head while attempting to flee three pursuing Highway Patrol troopers following a wild 17-mile chase along north Florida's Interstate 75. A Columbia County grand jury Friday ruled the shooting was justifiable homicide because troopers had reason to believe a felony or felonies had been committed and used all other methods to apprehend Thornton. . . . The fleeing felon rule, part of common law, allows a police officer to use the degree of force necessary to stop someone the officer believes has committed a felony against person or property. . . . Deputy Atty. Gen. Barry Richard said he favored limiting the law so an officer could fire only when his life or health was threatened or when he had reason to believe a serious felonly against a person had been committed."

STATES' MINORITY HIRING CHECK WANTED BY FEDS--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/16. TALLAHASSEE (UPI)--"The federal government is double checking on minority hiring in state jobs and Gov. Reubin Askew has asked department heads to come up with their 'affirmative action plans for female and minority hiring.' A year after he first took office Askew had the personnel division take a survey of the job situation. These were some of the results: 79.9 percent of the black employees in the state government were concentrated in pay grades 'slightly below the poverty line. . .' 60 percent of the women employees earned subpoverty level wages. . . Black women are the victims of 'double discrimination, filling only five percent of the state jobs. . . The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) requires the state to file by late October a report on how many members of minority groups and how many women it has on its payroll as of Aug. 31. The reports now arriving in the office of Harry Douglas, coordinator of the State Personnel Division's hiring effort, will give Gov. Askew a preview of what the EEOC will receive. . ." EDITOR'S NOTE: The Florida Commission and the Division of Personnel will be the agencies monitoring the Affirmative Action Plans.

QUINCY MEN FREED IN KILLING--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/20. TALLAHASSEE --"Stating that the strain of a retrial would endanger the health of two of its principle witnesses, State Attorney Harry Morrison yesterday said he had dismissed the first degree murder charges against two Quincy men in the 1970 shooting of Thomas Revels. Affected are defendants Dave Roby Keaton and Johnny Frederick. . . . Both men were tried and convicted of the murder in May 1971 but new evidence leading to the conviction of three Jacksonville men for the same murder prompted the Florida Supreme Court to grant them a new trial. That trial had been scheduled to begin July 24. In a 12-page statement Morrison said that 'two very material eye witnesses' in the case were now seriously ill and that doctors had advised them not to testify. In light of this and the continuing expense to the state--there had been five other trials involving the case, plus numerous appeals--Morrison said that the retrial would no longer serve any public interest. . ."

WOMAN COLONEL: MILITARY STILL DISCRIMINATES--St. Petersburg Times, 7/29. "WASHINGTON (AP)--The military uses stiffer rules in choosing women that it does for men, and then limits the job options and benefits of those it accepts, a retired Army officer has told Congress. . . . (Lt.) Col. (Jacqueline G.) Gutwillig (said) the most damaging hindrances to women are higher entry standards, limits on job assignments and infrequent promotions. . . . Col. Gutwillig said women rank above the military average in education and test scores, but lag in promotions. There is one woman for every 66 men in the Army, she said. But she added: 'There is one woman brigadier general for 255 men brigadier generals; one woman colonel for every 500 army men colonels. . .' Colonel Gutwillig recommended these changes: Prenatal, delivery and post-natal care should be provided by the Veterans' Administration. . . . Congress should prohibit special privileges and services to organizations such as the Veterans of Foreign Wars, that deny membership to women veterans."

BLACK HISTORY GROUP FORMS--Tallahasse Democrat, 7/26. TALLAHASSEE --"A group which will study the history and life of black Americans has been established in Tallahassee. The Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History (ASALH), dedicated to improving the understanding and appreciation of black Americans, held its first meeting Tuesday night. The group, headed by Audrey Randolph, state director of branches, discussed the value of having such an organization in Tallahassee. . . . (Ms.) Randolph said that many historical and interesting facts surrounding black history can be found right here in Tallahassee. Information would be gathered by the group and placed in a library type facility. The ASALH is a national organization with headquarters in Washington and includes members of all racial groups interested in the study of black Americans. . ."

JUDGE BANS SYMBOLS OF CONFEDERACY--Florida Times-Union, 7/25. "PENSACOLA (AP)--U.S. District Judge Winston Arnow Tuesday permanently banned the use of Confederate symbols at Pensacola's racially troubled Escambia High School. Arnow said the name Rebels for the school football team and the use of the Confederate flag were and still are 'racially irritating' to a substantial number of black students. . . . He said the racial disputes gained momentum with the continued use of the symbols, which became a focal point. . . . He said the use of the symbols would be likely to continue to be a source of racial tension and a cause of violence."

"DIME EATERS MUST GO" IS RESTROOM BATTLE CRY--Milwaukee Journal, 7/24. "DAYTON, OHIO--They call themselves the men and women of CEPTIA--the Committee to End Pay Toilets in America. . . . The organization claims 1400 members, mostly college students, and has active chapters in Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Chicago, Boston and Dayton, where it all began. A young Daytonian named Ira Gessel was annoyed by the lack of free toilet facilities on the Penn. Turnpike, and formed the group. . . . Legislation banning pay toilets has been introduced in the states of Florida, California, Oregon, Nevada, Illinois, and Massachusetts. . . . Carla Pavone (of White Plains, N.Y.) sees pay toilets as a discrimination against women--and against parents. 'I've never heard of a pay urinal,' she says simply. 'We are considering a law suit claiming that pay toilets discriminate against women.' . . . 'Most legislators are men,' she says. 'If they had to pay too, we might get quicker action.' . . ."

ELKS CLUBS WILL ADMIT BLACKS?--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/26. TALLAHASSEE --"A 105-year old discrimination clause may be dropped by the Elks Clubs, but it could be some time before blacks are admitted to the fraternal organization. The national body of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks voted by a 3 to 1 margin at their convention to disban a membership rule excluding non-white persons. Membership policy still requires prospective Elks to be referred by other members, which may delay the acceptance of blacks. T. C. Fortson Jr., president of the Tallahassee Elks Lodge No. 937, admits that some problems may occur when the new policy goes into effect. However, Fortson said the Tallahassee group is 'progressive' and the new change should not disturb many of the members. . . . The Elks organization is non-political. It is a civic group which donates time and money to charity. One of the group's stated basic principles is to exhibit brotherly love. . ."

ASKEW REJECTS PRISON SEGREGATION--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/12. "BUSHNELL (AP)--Segregation of black and white prisoners is not the answer to rising racial tensions at Florida prisons, Gov. Reubin Askew says. 'While it might appear to solve the immediate problem, it might create more in the future,' Askew said Wednesday after touring Sumter Correctional Institution where 400 black and white inmates battled last May. Seven prisoners were hospitalized and several injured in the fighting which erupted following the stabbing of a black inmate by a white convict. . . . Prisoners who talked with a newsman said the tensions were still high at the modern, secluded prison. . . 'We still have problems in close living areas even without racial difficulties,' Askew said. He said construction of adequate housing and hiring of more black guards would help ease racial tensions."

STATE TO START DISRUPTIVE STUDENT STUDY--Tampa Tribune, 7/6. "TALLAHASSEE (AP)--A statewide survey of disruptive students and their problems in public schools will be conducted over the next six months to a year, Gov. Reubin Askew's education adviser, Dr. Claud Anderson, says. Anderson said the survey would concentrate on students 14 through 18 years old and would gather data from student records rather than personal interviews. The information is being collected for use by Askew in recommending positive steps to reduce disruptive behavior and improve the treatment of disruptive students, Anderson said. Dr. Stephen Rollin of Florida State University will direct the Governor's Task Force on Disruptive Students to be financed by a $44,857 grant from the Governor's Council on Criminal Justice, Anderson said."

BLACK TV STATION APPROVED--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/23. "DETROIT-- . . . . Locally produced television programs, the hallmark of TV's early years--will return to Detroit when the nation's first black-owned station begins broadcasting in 1974, according to the station's executives. George E. White, vice-president for programming for the new station, WGPR-TV, said Tuesday that the station will produce 90 percent of its programs live from a Detroit studio. . . . White said that the station planned a wide range of programs, including two 30-minute newscasts per day, which will emphasize events of interest to black people. Dr. William V. Banks, president and general manager of WGPR, Inc., said Tuesday in a prepared statement that the new station will be 'especially dedicated to serving the black community and other minority groups.'"

PRIVATE SCHOOLS RULING MAY GIVE SOUTH A TEST--St. Petersburg Times, 7/31. "ALEXANDRIA, Va. (UPI)--A federal court decision forbidding private schools to deny admission to blacks appeared likely Monday to inspire challenges to admission policies in seven southern states. The ruling was issued over the weekend by U.S. District Court Judge Albert V. Bryan Jr. It requires two northern Virginia schools to cease discriminating against blacks in their admission policies. . . . The seven states are affected because the Southern Independent School Association (SISA), representing 395 schools in the states, intervened as a party to the Northern Virginia suit and is bound by Bryan's decision. (Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, and South Carolina, Virginia). . . Attorney Allison Brown, representing the parents, said Bryan's ruling was 'a break through for eliminating discrimination and some of the practices of these southern white academies that flourish in the South.'. . ."

SESSUMS STUDYING PROGRAM FOR RECRUITING BLACKS--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/26. "House Speaker Terrell Sessums is reported considering adopting a proposal to seek out and hire blacks as legislative analysts and research assistants. Dr. Roger Nichols, Sessums' assistant, said the speaker was to have met with Nat Tindall, one of the drafters of the proposal, Tuesday afternoon. . . . According to Nichols, the proposal calls for the hiring of at least four blacks as research assistants and analysts with three major committees. Those committees were identified as Appropriations, Governmental Operations, and Education. The four would be placed in the speaker's office. . . . The proposal was drafted by Tindall and Sam Taylor, former student body president at the University of Florida, . . . 'It was their feeling that not enough blacks are aware of the opportunities for employment available with the legislature,' Nichols said. 'The speaker is sympathetic to their requests, but I don't think he's going to force the issue with any committee chairman. We would just like to make them aware that if a black is qualified we would like to see him recruited,' Nichols said . . ."

EQUAL RIGHTS SUPPORTERS START NEW PUSH--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/17. TALLAHASSEE (UPI)--"Supporters of the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) plan to begin a second effort for Florida ratification of the embattled amendment with an Aug. 4 reception for Congresswoman Patsy Mink, D-Hawaii, a prime mover of the ERA at the federal level. State Rep. Elaine Gordon, D-Miami, filed a ratification resolution in the House Monday and said she will sponsor the reception in Miami next month for Rep. Mink to speak on 'The ERA in 1974.' The Florida House rejected the ERA 64-54 last spring, in the initial round of the ratification fight. Supporters of the ERA have six more years to get it through the legislature. Thirty states have ratified the amendment. It takes 38 to insert the amendment into the U.S. Constitution. . . . The legislature does not meet for another eight months, but Ms. Gordon said the timing of her ratifying resolution is an indication that 'the ERA in Florida is not only alive and well, but very much forward in the minds of the people as well.' . . ."

BETTE WIMBISH IS TOP WOMAN IN STATE GOVERNMENT--Tallahassee Democrat, 7/22. TALLAHASSEE--"A woman who knows who she is and where she is going--that's C. Bette Wimbish. She has broken all racial and sex barriers to become the highest ranking woman in Florida State government as assistant director of Labor with the Department of Commerce. . . . Before entering politics she was an instructor at Florida Memorial College in St. Augustine, then taught school in Tampa for five years. 'I entered politics because I felt there was a need to have black input in municipal, state and national levels of government,' she said . . . . Under her jurisdiction is the supervision of personnel, finance and planning matters for the bureaus of workmen's compensation and apprenticeship. Her staff is basically concerned with providing decent wages, proper enumeration for accidents on the job and training of personnel to participate in the laborfield. . ."

BULK RATE
U. S. POSTAGE
PAID
Tallahassee, Florida
PERMIT NO. 139

Ms. Dewey Potter, Editor
Human Relations in Brief
Florida Commission on Human Relations
Howard Building
2571 Executive Center Circle, East
Tallahassee, Florida 32301

Mr. Emory F. Via
Southern Regional Counci
52 Fairlie St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

November 24, 1965

Mr. Baxton Bryant
Executive Director
Tennessee Council on
Human Relations
1106 Nineteenth Avenue South
Nashville, Tennessee

Dear Baxton:

My recollection from your annual meeting was that a committee was set up to prepare something on the jury system and that I promised to send over some materials. Two items are coming to you under separate cover which you can pass on to the committee. One is the SRC report, "Southern Justice: An Indictment," and the other is a brief filed in the Fifth Circuit of the U. S. Court of Appeals in the Billingsley case.

If the committee goes very far with this matter they might wish to consult with Charles Morgan of the Regional Office of the American Civil Liberties Union here in Atlanta.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:js

MRS. MARTHA RAGLAND
PRESIDENT
NASHVILLE

LEWIS S. SINCLAIR
VICE-PRESIDENT
KNOXVILLE

MRS. ERNEST SILVER
SECRETARY
OAK RIDGE

DR. VASCO SMITH
VICE-PRESIDENT
MEMPHIS

DR. G. J. TARLETON, JR.
TREASURER
NASHVILLE

File

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

1106 19th Avenue, South • Nashville, Tennessee 37212 • 297-6568

BAXTON BRYANT
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

MISS KATHERINE JONES
ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR

November 29, 1965

Mr. Emory F. Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, NW
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks for the contribution you made at our annual meeting in Memphis. We were disappointed that Paul was unable to attend, but he could not have sent a better replacement.

I think you kept us out of a lot of trouble by giving some timely and expert advice on the resolution offered at our business session Friday morning. I hope you will be coming our way again soon.

I appreciate very much the material you have sent us. It seems that police brutality and justice in the courts will have high priority with us this year.

I thought the annual meeting of SRC was great. Paul has gotten off to a great start, and we look forward to these new relationships.

Sincerely,

Baxton

Baxton Bryant

BB:jw

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

MRS. RAY ALLEN, MEMPHIS
GEORGE BARRETT, NASHVILLE
REV. WILL D. CAMPBELL, NASHVILLE
CARL CARSON, MEMPHIS
*DAVID CAYWOOD, MEMPHIS
MRS. LAWRENCE COE, MEMPHIS
WILKES COFFEY, MURFREESBORO
JOHN J. COMPTON, NASHVILLE
REV. W. T. CRUTCHER, KNOXVILLE
MACLIN P. DAVIS, NASHVILLE
MRS. GARLAND P. FISHER, BRISTOL
JAMES S. GILLILAND, MEMPHIS
REV. JAMES GLASSE, NASHVILLE
LEROY GRAF, KNOXVILLE
W. D. HAWKINS, JR., NASHVILLE
MRS. W. B. HEMBREE, KNOXVILLE
VIVIAN W. HENDERSON, NASHVILLE
MRS. JOHN C. HULL, NASHVILLE
MRS. G. W. STANLEY ISH, JR., MEMPHIS
CLAYTON JAMES, MURFREESBORO
REV. MAJOR J. JONES, CHATTANOOGA
*MRS. EUGENE S. KILGORE, JOHNSON CITY
JAMES KIRBY, NASHVILLE
HUNTER LANE, JR., MEMPHIS
MRS. PHIL LIVINGSTON, CHATTANOOGA
MATT LYNCH, NASHVILLE
M. D. MERRIWETHER, JACKSON
REV. JOHN CHARLES MICKLE, MEMPHIS
MRS. RILLA MORAN, NASHVILLE
MRS. HUGH J. MORGAN, NASHVILLE
MRS. FRED MUHLEMAN, CHATTANOOGA
DR. WILLIAM G. POLLARD, OAK RIDGE
ALBERT PORTER, JACKSON
MRS. R. D. PRESENT, KNOXVILLE
MERRILL PROUDFOOT, KNOXVILLE
HORACE RAPER, COOKEVILLE
EWELL REAGIN, KNOXVILLE
MRS. EARL L. SASSER, NASHVILLE
MRS. BERNARD SCHWEID, NASHVILLE
CLIFFORD SEEBER, KNOXVILLE
WALTER SHARP, NASHVILLE
REV. KELLY M. SMITH, NASHVILLE
*MRS. PHILLIP C. SOTTONG, CHATTANOOGA
MRS. LEE SPAULDING, TULLAHOMA
ROSCOE STRICKLAND, MURFREESBORO
MISS MARTELLE TRIGG, MEMPHIS
REV. DOGAN W. WILLIAMS, BRISTOL
WILLIAM R. WILLIS, JR., NASHVILLE
MISS LOUISE YOUNG, NASHVILLE

*SERVING ON EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

File

Phone: 539-4277 or 539-5496

ALABAMA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS, INC.

2809 GOVERNORS DRIVE, SW HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA - 35805

J. EDWIN STANFIELD, Executive Director
ROBERT S. VALDER, Associate Director

February 14, 1966

BOARD OF DIRECTORS
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
President
Nat Welch, Auburn
Vice Presidents
Dr. Lucius H. Pitts, Birmingham
Rev. J. C. Wilson, Tuskegee Institute
Father Brice Joyce, Sheffield
Secretary
Mrs. Lois Reeves, Tuskegee Institute
Treasurer
Mrs. Moreland Smith, Montgomery
Dr. Ray Fowler, Tuscaloosa
Dr. C. G. Gomillion, Tuskegee Institute
Dr. Herman Long, Talladega
Rev. Powers McLeod, Mobile

BOARD MEMBERS
Mrs. Earl Andrews, Montgomery
Allen Black, Florence
Mrs. John Cashin, Huntsville
Mrs. Laura Daly, Talladega
Mrs. John Drew, Birmingham
Mrs. Virginia Durr, Montgomery
Dr. Luther H. Foster, Tuskegee Institute
Rev. V. A. Edwards, Tuskegee Institute
Dr. E. B. Goode, Mobile
Rev. M. C. Griffin, Florence
Rev. Phillip Huckaby, Florence
Rev. Duncan Hunter, Huntsville
Oliver T. Ivy, Smiths
Rev. Vernon Jones, Tuskegee Institute
James F. Kidd, Birmingham
Rev. Otis E. Kirby, Decatur
Dr. Frederick W. Kraus, Birmingham
Dr. Beryl McClaskey, Birmingham
Mrs. Paul McCoy, Birmingham
Allan Parker, Tuskegee
J. E. Pierce, Montgomery
Alfred Radney, Talladega
Jerry Roden, Auburn
Stanley Rosenbaum, Florence
Franklyn W. Taylor, Montgomery
Rev. J. L. Ware, Birmingham
S. C. Watkins, Tuscumbia
Mrs. A. W. West, Montgomery
W. L. Williams, Birmingham

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory,

How goes all with you? I'm wondering if you might ~~have~~ some time to talk on Friday of this week?

Lewis Black, our new Rural Advancement Project Director and I will be in Atlanta ~~on Thursday and Friday of this week. We~~ will spend Thursday with Jac Wassermanand Friday knocking aroung SRC. I'm wondering if you would be available sometime on Friday to talk to Lewis and I about job training programs and related items? We'd like information on MDTA, OJT and things of that nature as well as what kinds of services employment (state, that is) service centers have available, how to start vocational guidance centers, what Labor Department money is available and for what, etc.

Rather than write to me could you check with Ed Stanfield? I've asked him to coordinate our Friday schedule with the SRC staff.

Sure do hope you can fit us in.

Sincerely,

Bob

Bob Valder

RAC

Discussion
Lab. Dept materials —
Eliza Paschal
Invite to 3/23/ Regional Labor Dept. Conference

February 23, 1966

Ohio Civil Rights Commission
603 Schmidt Building
431 Main Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202

Dear Sirs:

I was pleased to see your recent press release regarding the building trades journeyman testing program. I would be most interested in hearing what results you have had in terms of the number of applicants, whether they successfully entered the trade, which trades they applied for, and through which chanels (i.e., union, Urban League, Employment Service, or your Commission) they made application.

Any other information which you have on this or similar programs would be most welcome.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

March 7, 1966

Mr. Robert J. Coates
Deputy Executive Director
Ohio Civil Rights Commission
603 Smhmidt Building
431 Main Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202

Dear Mr. Coates:

Thanks so much for sending the Commission's report, "Racial Discrimination in the Cincinnati Building Trades". It will be quite useful.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

COMMISSIONERS
HUGO A. SABATO, CHAIRMAN
ROOSEVELT S. DICKEY
CLINGAN JACKSON
WILLIAM GREEN, JR.
J. FRANK TROY

ELLIS L. ROSS
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

JAMES A. RHODES, GOVERNOR

OHIO
CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION

SOUTHWEST REGIONAL OFFICE
603 SCHMIDT BUILDING
431 MAIN STREET
CINCINNATI, OHIO 45202
TELEPHONE 241-6605

March 3, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director - Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

Thank you for your letter concerning the journeyman testing program. As a result of our efforts approximately 120 persons have expressed interest in one of the many crafts in the Building Trade Unions in Cincinnati. As yet the testing has not begun so I cannot speak to the successfulness of the effort in its entirety. The first test, Structural Iron Workers is scheduled for March 17. The electricians will hold their test on March 30. I plan to observe both tests personally.

With regard to assistance in this effort, our greatest help came from the Neighborhood Houses working in the Anti-Poverty Program. Also the Ohio State Employment Service, Cincinnati Human Relations Commission, and to a lesser degree the Urban League, Unions, and other organizations sent a few persons to us. The great majority of persons found out about the program through the newspaper stories and came into our office for applications.

Enclosed with this letter is a copy of the Commission's Comprehensive Report of its investigation in this matter. I believe you will find it most interesting reading.

Please let me know if there are any other questions you might have concerning this effort.

Sincerely yours,

Robert J. Coates

Robert J. Coates
Deputy Executive Director

RJC/aw
enc.

State Conn

March 9, 1966

Miss Alice N. Spearman
Executive Director
South Carolina Council on
Human Relations
1330 Laurel Street
Columbia, South Carolina

Dear Alice:

Your letter about O.E.O. and labor education arrived today. It reminded me of our too brief conversation on February 28th. I am sorry we could not have scheduled a longer time on this while you were here.

I do have some thoughts about this whole matter. They are complicated a bit by a regional proposal now before O.E.O. This proposal has many things in it useful as a guide, but if it is granted (to the National Institute of Labor Education) it might foreclose state proposals. Maybe not.

It would perhaps be mutually helpful to explore further the South Carolina Council's relation to such a project. I hope we can do so soon.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

The South Carolina Council on Human Relations
1330 LAUREL STREET
Columbia, South Carolina

mailed 3/2/66

Feb. 24, 1966

Mr. Emory Via,
Southern Regional Council,
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Dear Emory Via:

I hope to see you in Atlanta on Monday, Feb. 28th. Whether or not I do, I still want you to have what I shall say in writing and shall appreciate as prompt and full a response as you are able to give me.

Last November I heard Hyman Bookbinder address a banquest at the Adult Education Association of America. His address was nostalgically reminiscent of my own worker's education days spent here in South Carolina.

After Mr. Bookbinder's address I raised the question with him as to whether he thought some type of worker's education might be funded under the Economic Opportunity Act. He stated that he felt sure that a good proposal would be given serious and, hopefully, favorable response by OEO. With this in mind, I am writing to ask if it might be possible for you to come to South Carolina and work with us in making necessary investigation as to the need for such a program and help us make recommendations as to the form in which it would be most effective. I shall look forward to hearing from you and to having you suggest several alternate dates on which you might be available to come and work with us. The sooner, the better!

Gratefully yours,

Alice Spearman

Alice N. Spearman
Executive Director

ANS.em

May 27, 1966

Miss Cathy Tyler
Coordinator of Orientation
SPEED-UP
South Carolina Council on
Human Relations
1330 Laurel Street
Columbia, South Carolina

Dear Miss Tyler:

Enclosed are vita sheets for Vernon Jordan and myself. Vernon Jordan says that he will be happy to participate in your conference but that it will need to be on June 8th. I would suggest that you confirm a time on that day for him.

I look forward to being with you for this program. You will note that in each case the vita sheets include more information than you will want to use in an introduction. Select from them what you think useful.

Sincerely

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosures

The South Carolina Council on Human Relations
1330 LAUREL STREET
Columbia, South Carolina

May 18, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsythe Street
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Via:

In an effort to find out about consultants and fees for the Council's summer project, SPEED-UP, Mrs. Alice Spearman talked with Ed Stanfield. He suggested that you might be available to help us with the orientation program to be held at the Columbia Hotel June 5-11.

This orientation is a vital part of the project, and we would be deeply indebted if you could possibly talk to the participants Tuesday morning, June 7, about 9:30 am. Since the remainder of the week will largely be devoted to workshops and the mechanics of tutoring, citizenship education, etc., I think some sort of economic overview might be of great help to them. From the various recommendations I have received about your knowledge, experience, and ability, I think you could offer the participants some really good and concrete ideas and thoughts to carry into the communities.

If you can not come at this time and there is another time that would better fit your schedule, please let us know as soon as possible because we do want you to be a part of the program. Your help will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Cathy Tyler

Cathy Tyler
Coordinator of Orientation
SPEED-UP

Who is attending

Change South

9:30-11:00 speech & discussion

Speech & discussion? Total Time for EFV?

128 students (175 people) will go to Knoxville, Columbia, Small town not so much in general

Orientation Students

Warren Haggstrom — Syracuse, Univ.

Emphasis on S.C.

Sandy Paul — poverty in S.C.

June 7, 1966

Mrs. Frances Pauley, Director
Georgia Council on Human Relations, Inc.
52 Fairlie Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Frances:

The name that I was to give you in Cordele, Georgia was that of Mrs. Ozie Lockett. She appears to be a grass-roots type and I could not determine any organizational identification for her. She had become interested in the plight of several elderly blind persons and had made an approach to the welfare department. She saw to it that the forms were filled out and turned in to the department but has heard nothing since. I think she probably needs to check back with the welfare department to see if they will give her any definite answer as to what they propose to do. She, of course, is concerned that it's just an outright matter of discrimination.

I urged her to be in touch with the welfare department again to get a clear-cut answer and if it were negative to be in touch with some other organization. I don't think either of these are things that she's used to doing. Unfortunately, I have no further address for her. But what are the chances that a letter sent to her at Cordele would in fact reach her?

Sorry to give you one more. Better you than me.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

June 9, 1966

Mrs. Frances Pauley, Director
Georgia Council on Human Relations, Inc.
52 Fairlie Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Frances:

I have your invitation to participate inyyour next statewide meeting at Jekyll Island on June 9 and 10. There are a number of reasons why I would greatly like to be with you on that occasion. Your offer of neither honorarium or travel expenses seems most appropriate and I would be delighted to spend some of my budgeted money for such a purpose. But, alas, the schedule will not allow for it.

I will be out of town the complete week preceding your program and for the whole week following your program. I do not think it would be possible to conjure up a schedule that would get me into Jekyll Island on the 9th, even if there were no problems of worrying about how to keep mind, soul, body, and my end of the office intact.

Frances, I am very sorry not to be able to join with you. Perhaps if the subject matter is simply unions and employment and not specifically concerned with my SRC program that Al Kehrer would be a valuable substitute. And of course to some degree he is quite familiar with my program as well.

Good luck for a successful meeting.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:JB

Georgia Council ON HUMAN RELATIONS
52 Fairlie Street, N. W. • 404/525-6468 • Atlanta, Georgia 30303

June 1, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
5 Forsyth Street
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Via:

The Georgia Council wishes to ask another favor of you. Our next state wide meeting will be held at Jekyll Island, July 9 and 10. Since our membership is becoming more and more interested in the area of your work, we request your presence and participation. There are many details of your program that our members need and want to know.

We hope you can remain with us for the entire Conference, but we particularly need you for all day Saturday when we will have our workshops.

Because of our limited budget the Council will be unable to pay either Honorarium or Travel Expenses. However, we do believe this meeting will give you the opportunity of giving valuable information to many Georgia Leaders. It could easily save you several field trips.

We look forward to seeing you at Jekyll.

Sincerely,

Frances

Mrs. Frances Pauley
Executive Director

FFP:web

MR. JOSEPH HENDRICKS, PRESIDENT
THE REVEREND AUSTIN FORD, FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT
REV. C. S. HAMILTON, SECOND VICE-PRESIDENT
MRS. HARRY V. RICHARDSON, SECRETARY
MR. JOHNNY GLUSTROM, TREASURER
MRS. FRANCES PAULEY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
THE REVEREND OLIVER W. HOLMES, ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR

June 10, 1966

Rev. Glen A. Crofton
Box 242
Cordele, Georgia 31015

Dear Rev. Crofton:

Could you track down this lady and see if you can help her?

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Frances Pauley
Executive Director

FP/es
cc: Emory Via
enc: (1)

[redacted] I sent your letter about Mrs Lockett —

SPEED-UP

File
S.C.H.R.

1330 Laurel Street
Columbia, South Carolina

254-7608 "Program for Progress" 256-8808

ADVISORY BOARD

Mr. Austin V. Edwards
Assistant Director of State FHA

Mr. Donald L. Fowler
Faculty, USC

Dr. Wil Lou Gray
Educator and Civic Leader

Mrs. Eddie Lou Holloway
Housewife

The Reverend Matthew D. McCollom
Methodist District Superintendent

Mr. Matthew J. Perry
Attorney

Dr. John F. Potts
President, Voorhees College

Dr. J. Sherrard Rice
Minister, First Presbyterian Church, Columbia

Mrs. Vashti W. Smith
Nursing Home Administrator

Dr. R. Wright Spears
President, Columbia College

Mr. I. P. Stanback
Insurance, District Manager

Most Reverend Ernest L. Unterkoefler
Bishop of the Diocese of Charleston

June 13, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Emory:

Thank you so very much for your role in making the SPEED-UP Orientation a meaningful experience for the students and other people involved. Now that we are really beginning the summer's work, your ideas as well as the thoughts of the other speakers seem even more helpful in trying to combat some of the basic causes of poverty in South Carolina.

Sincerely yours,

Cathy Tyler

Cathy Tyler
Coordinator of Orientation

CT/vlj

Georgia Council ON HUMAN RELATIONS
52 Fairlie Street, N. W. • 404/525-6468 • Atlanta, Georgia 30303

June 21, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

We will miss you at Jekyll. I was in hopes the Johnsons would be back and you and Margaret would be there also.

Al Kehrer is coming. I am enclosing the program for your info.

Sincerely yours,

Frances

Mrs. Frances Pauley
Executive Director

FP/es
enclosure

MR. JOSEPH HENDRICKS, PRESIDENT
MRS. FRANCES PAULEY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
THE REVEREND AUSTIN FORD, FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT
REV. C. S. HAMILTON, SECOND VICE-PRESIDENT
MRS. HARRY V. RICHARDSON, SECRETARY
MR. JOHNNY GLUSTROM, TREASURER
THE REVEREND OLIVER W. HOLMES, ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR

COOPERATION

SPEED-UP

NEWS LETTER

Vol. 1 No. 3 June 24, 1966 Page 1

SUMMER '66 SCHEDULES TAKE SHAPE

Schedules begin taking shape as teams hold classes, organize softball teams and prepare houses and centers for the summer '66 session of SPEED-UP (Student Project for Economic and Educational Development), sponsored by the South Carolina Council on Human Relations.

Approximately 140 students, from pre-school to high school age, have been registered by members of the Abbeville team. This group is concentrating in the areas of math, reading, citizenship education, history, composition, recreation, and arts and crafts.

Each member of the team will have his particular class, alternating as needed in math and composition.

Classes for pre-schoolers through ninth graders will be held from 9 to 12. Tenth through twelth graders will meet 2-4 p.m. These meetings will also include classes for persons who need special tutoring in chemistry, algebra, English and creative writing.

Bamberg

Fifty-three students in a SPEED-UP class in Denmark are meeting in the sanctuary of the Rome Baptist Church. The remaining 120 students are meeting in the Sunday School Building.

"You could say that we are crowded, but you can also say that we are enthusiastic," said Hanna Englehardt, Model Teacher. "The children come real early in the morning, and the only way to keep them out of the center is to bar the door!"

The other SPEED-UP center in Bamberg is the Thankful Baptist Church where about 100 students are registered for the classes.

Both groups hold tutoring from 9 to 12 in English, math and history. Recreation, held in the afternoon, includes softball and badminton.

Charleston

The Charleston Advisory Committee had planned for SPEED-UP to become assimilated into several local programs underway in the area.

These included SAIL (Summer Advancement In Learning) and the Saturday Youth Forum of the Neighborhood Youth Corps and sponsored by the local chapter of the Council on Human Relations.

However, in keeping with the purpose of SPEED-UP in using local resources and in having the volunteers work as a team, David Orr, team reporter, wrote that the team and the Advisory Committee have made plans for a SPEED-UP project on John's Island at the Progressive Club Gymnasium and at Shaw Center in Charleston.

In addition, SPEED-UPPERS will work with the Saturday

(Continued on page 3)

DR. TOPPIN TO SPEAK HERE

Dr. Edgar Toppin, professor of history at Virginia State College in Petersburg, Va., will speak to the Richland County Citizenship Education groups in a joint meeting July 13. His topic will be "Myths of the Reconstruction in South Carolina."

Dr. Toppin received his B.A. and M.A. Degrees from Howard University and his Ph.D from Northwestern University.

A specialist in American history, he has published numerous articles and a book, Patriots and Pioneers.

This meeting, tentatively set for the Zion area, will bring together the citizenship education groups in Richland County. Other interested groups will be invited.

Cathy Tyler, director of citizenship education for the state, expressed hope that this would be the first of several joint meetings utilizing resourceful speakers and bringing together groups in other counties as well as those in the Columbia area.

SPEED-UP VOLUNTEERS LEARN BY DOING

"Roughing it" is the best way to describe the first few weeks of a project that calls for the transition of college students from quiet libraries and cool classrooms to rural community centers, torid baseball fields and strange doorsteps.

Orientations and text-book-classes can only do so much. The rest is being learned as SPEED-UP volunteers meet the problems of building a place for themselves--whether it be in do-it-yourself housing or make-it-yourself acceptance in a community.

"We found, on the whole, favorable response from the community," wrote Carol Tumlinson from Laurens. "We found a neglected community center and an uncleaned athletic field. We have made announcements in the different church groups, and we have cleaned up the community center, clearing out grass, glass and debris."

WOULD YOU BELIEVE?

"We know that all of you heard a few rumors about Reeder Point during Orientation Week. Well, when we got here, we found that every one of them was absolutely right," writes Pat Smith.

"That first night we just threw the furniture into the house and went to bed. After we had gotten over the initial shock, we set to work to get the house in livable condition. It's impossible to tell everything we did those first few days. Let's just say we improvised a great deal.

"ANYWAY, by Thursday all the rooms had been painted, screens had been nailed to the windows, shelves had been built for the kitchen and dining room, and nine people had been crammed into a six-room house--not to mention three humendous dogs belonging to our team leader.

"We are proud to say that, after living with an outside hand pump and an outhouse for a week, we are still healthy. Have you ever noticed how many buckets of water one has to heat to wash dishes or how much water one has to pump to cook supper?

"We knew we had made it one night when, coming back from Columbia, one of our members began singing 'Home again, home again, rig-a-jig-jig!' We are now one big happy family in our little Abode of Everlasting Felicity (we have a bathroom, even), and Project 'Shang-Hai' is just our cup of tea."

CARS AND CONCEPTS

"In Sumter County, our biggest problem was transportation," Cleveland Lee wrote from his team working in two communities thirty miles apart.

Since the team had no car, they tried renting one from a member of the community, but the car's owners often needed the car at the same time that SPEED-UP did.

Team leader Ben Tate finally contacted 1330 Laurel St. , and a car was secured for the summer.

Before the team arrived, they envisioned work with culturally isolated children in an atmosphere that was not altogether receptive to the program. However, the community is in much better condition than expected, and the group was "greeted very well and is getting along fine in the community."

INTANGIBLE PROBLEMS

"Our problems are intangible. It is election time, feelings are running high, and so we may be in a powder keg. On the other

(Continued on page 4)

KID'S KONTRIBUTION KORNER

My Dog
By a third-grader, Oconee County

My dog is red
he Look like a cow
he run from home
but that is a bad dog
I dont Like my dog
he is going to get kill
We going to give him away
We dont Like him
he dont stay home
he dont stay home anyway
We going to get a Good dog
We going to get a girls dog
he going to be a good dog
1. he eat cook
2. he eat apple
3. he eat candy
4. he eat cake
5. he eat babby Food

Any and all "kontributions"will be appreciated from you.

SCHEDULES TAKE SHAPE...
(Continued from page 1)

Youth Forum as planned by the Advisory Committee.

Darlington

"The response to our program in numbers of people has been incredible. While at first we worried about not having enough, now we worry about having too many," wrote Susan Lunney, reporter for the Darlington team.

Over 150 children and adults registered for the program. In the mornings, children will be receiving tutoring in math, reading and writing. The six SPEED-UP teachers will each be working with two groups, one containing first through seventh graders and one made up of the high school students.

Recreation will be held 2-3 p.m. During this same time, there will be a story hour for pre-schoolers. Arts and crafts will be held 2-3 p.m. on Monday and Wednesday.

A class in biology will be held for some students 3-5 p.m. "Students have shown interest in this, and they have agreed to take the course every day since there is so much they want to learn. Their eagerness is really exciting and infectious," Susan said.

Florence

Renovating an old nine-room house which will serve as a community center has been the work of the Florence team. Furniture has been donated by the community, and students are cleaning and painting the building.

Students had been registered in advance and were ready and waiting when the team arrived. The volunteers have been doing some follow-up recruiting, and classes are beginning in the new center.

About Eighty-five students are registered at the center in The Greenville Tabernacle Baptist Church. Registration for the other center, Fieldcrest Housing Project was scheduled for Friday.

Greenville

The team has also visited agencies to gain first-hand information about available services.

"Among those with which we were most impressed were the Greenville Technical Education Center and STEP (Special Training for Economic Progress) where basic skills are taught," wrote team leader, Bob Simpson.

(Continued on next column)

MATERIALS SECRETARY IS ADDED TO STAFF

Added to the staff since Orientation is Curtina Moreland who will be serving as Materials Secretary.

She is now in the process of ordering films covering topics ranging from political science to home economics. She is investigating the availibility of pamphlets and other materials which can be used in SPEED-UP work and checking on possible areas that may be of interest for field trips.

(Continued from col. 1)

The team is collecting a library of pamphlets to distribute to the people they serve.

Laurens

"Cleaning the community center proved to be the first order of business for the team," wrote Carol Tumlinson. The group set to work scrubbing and cutting the grass.

After the center was "made livable", the team concentrated on recruiting. An open house was held Tuesday, June 21 at 8 p.m. Registration for the tutoring program began the next day.

In addition to the SPEED-UP tutoring work, Doodle Dingle (PC) and Evangeline Riley (Benedict) are working with Mrs. Dollie Hill in the First Day of Tomorrow program which reaches pre-school aged children in the community.

Oconee

The two centers in Oconee are now serving about 90 students, aged 5 to 19.

At each center, there are three groups of tutees: (1) those who have completed no school work or work to grade 4, (2) those entering grades 4-7, and (3) those entering grades 8-12.

Each of these groups has at least one reading and writing tutor who works with the children for two hours. For the third hour, each group meets with the center's math tutor. With this system, the eight Oconee workers (two in math and six in English) can staff tutoring programs in two separate areas.

After lunch each day, a period is spent in "making things", followed by two hours of supervised recreation.

Orangeburg

"There has been unusually enthusiastic response from the hand, it may stay just as peaceful as it is now on this Monday afternoon as we look foward to our classes.

(Continued on page 4)

L E A R N B Y D O I N G . . .

(Continued from page 2)

"If it is left up to us workers, our program could be the most successful in the state, but, even as we are trying to be considerate of the feelings of the community, we are having trouble finding out what these feelings are.

"I'm sure that the SPEED-UP personnel expected an integrated program to have problems, especially in small towns. We will sit tight and do our job and will begin enjoying every minute of it now that we are finally settled and have started teaching," writes Susan Lunney from Darlington.

The impetus for these remarks came from some misunderstanding about living accomodations in which Negroes and whites were to live together. Plans have been changed now in accordance with wishes of the community, as they have also been altered in Abbeville.

AND WE HAD TO MAKE DO...

The SPEEDY Rock Hillers, as they have named themselves, have found that where there is no steak, there may be peanut butter and where there are no cars, one has to make do with feet.

After a recreation session in which college students try to keep pace with the grammar school set, "we tread home to prepare the most festive of all feasts. Would you believe a dinner consisting of baked potatoes, cornpie and eggs? This was quite a treat considering our usual peanut butter and jelly sandwiches," writes Mickey Dakers from York.

"Supper is our most exciting meal. It is held any time between 5 and 10:30 p.m. If you're not there when it's served, you might as well forget it.

When the team doesn't have something it needs, the members use their ingenuity to procure it. "A rather pathetic sight was Susan Fagan (USC) running up and down the street trying to find a bathroom plunger!" writes Mickey.

SERVICE AND SURPRISES

"In Clemson, our first problem has been need for community volunteer assistance. We have three centers eager to participate in the program, but our limited number of team members will only allow us to staff two of the centers."

In spite of this, the group was pleasently surprised at their reception into the community. "The entire program here is organized more than we expected. The children are eager to learn, and we were accepted right away," said John Nelson (Johnson C. Smith University.)

"We all expected to have to beg parents to let their children join our program," said Ann Reese (Columbia College), "but when we arrived, the entire community had been surveyed, and they knew about the program.

SCHEDULES TAKE SHAPE...

(Continued from page 3)

students," said Program Director Cathy Tyler after a visit to the project.

Enrolled in classes are about 100 in math, 15 in algebra, 100 in remedial reading, 18 in typing, 11 in history, 9 in arts and crafts, 50 in English and 115 in recreation. Some students are enrolled in more than one class.

Future plans include a swimming class and a history club for high school students.

Pickens

The Pickens team was greeted by an old school building which had not been used for five years except by a small library in the front rooms. A room was selected, and the neighborhood children were enlisted to help with the cleaning-up project. Work was broken now and then by softball games in the field behind the school.

On Thursday, June 16, a get-together was held for those who helped with the cleaning, and registration was set for the next day.

Fifty-six have been enrolled in the Pickens program.

Richland - Reeder Point

The Reeder Point team holds tutoring in math and reading from 9 to 12. Pre-school art classes begin at 1 p.m., and junior art sessions are held at 2 on Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Recreation includes practice for volleyball and softball teams plus less competitive activities.

For the evenings, junior

(Continued on page 5)

SUMMER '66 SCHEDULES TAKE SHAPE...

(Continued from page 4)

and adult sewing classes. Citizenship education has evolved into a lecture series in order to meet the needs of the community.

A social hour for teenagers is planned for every Friday night.

This schedule is the product of a week's work, beginning with the remodling of a house, recruitment, visits to elementary and secondary school principals, and the changing of the project's name to Shang-Hai, a "local name suited to local needs," according to team members.

"We were overwhelmed with the warm reception we received from the community. Attending church has been especially rewarding since we met so many new people," wrote Pat Smith.

Richland - Zion, Camp Fornance

The Zion and Camp Fornance team lives together in a house in the middle of Columbia. After fixing up their summer home, recruiting and registering and planning, SPEED-UPPERS spent the weekend becoming familiar with materials such as the SRA Reading Lab.

At Camp Fornance, the enthusiastic youngsters are tutored at the New Hope Baptist Church. There is a class in the pews, one in the choir stalls and one on the floor with others in small adjoining rooms. In addition to the scheduled classes, field trips will have high priority at this center.

At the Zion Baptist Church, the response has been somewhat less, possibly because of the large area being covered and the other things to do in this in-town area. Another factor, according to team members, is that the center is not usually used by people in the neighborhood.

Sumter

Seventy-five students, aged 8 to 18, have enrolled in the Sumter County tutorial programs in reading and math. These classes and recreation will be held each morning from 9 to 12. In addition, a citizenship education class will be held on Monday nights from 8 to 9:30.

"The team did not have to do any painting or repairing. A little cleaning had to be done to one of the centers, but, otherwise, they are in good condition. One of the centers did not have rest rooms, but the community has provided for one to be installed at once," writes Cleveland Lee from Sumter.

York

"At the end of the two-day registration period, we had about 200 tutees requesting everything from learning to 'write my name' to philosophy and data processing!" writes Mickey Dakers from the SPEEDY Rock Hillers.

"After much consideration on our part, we limited the scheduled classes to reading, math, arts and crafts, and recreation. Extra classes that are being worked-in include foreign languages, piano, special education, history and higher math," he continued.

The average class is set up on a 5 to 1 ratio, although the groups vary from as few as one to as many as twelve students.

FROM THE STAFF

THE DIRECTOR COMMENTS

Generally, reports of the teams have been favorable. Of course there have been other scattered remarks. From one team, "the hamburgers and french fries are good--but for nine days straight!" And, "We've enjoyed our housing, all four places we've lived."

It has been almost impossible to have just 10 children in each class, but, through volunteers and a few afternoon classes, most do not exceed 12. While many of the teams are sticking to the basics, classes have been started in philosophy, typing and French.

The Advisory Committees vary so much from county to county that it is hard to make any generalizations. Certainly, most of them gave untold hours in preparation. Out of concern for team members and the project, a few Advisory Committees have made changes with which the team members did not agree and vice-versa. These should be worked out through a closer relationship and consultation between teams and Advisory Committees.

One thing to avoid is tutoring so many students that no time is left for other aspects like field trips and, most importantly, individual help and attention.

Brad Poston
Project Director

SPEED-UP
1330 Laurel St.
Columbia, S. C.

Non-Profit Org.
Postage Paid
Columbia, S. C.
Permit No. 758

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

STATE Councils

SCCHR

SPEED UP

Vol.1 No.5 July 8, 1966 Page 1

TUTORS COMPARE METHODS

"In tutoring, we seek to close educational gaps."

"Our aim is to get children to think critically."

"We think that the most important things needed now are basic lessons in such things as how to apply for a job."

"Well, we feel that, if children can't read and children can't think critically, there must be something wrong with the educational system. We would like to look at this system as well as tutor.

These were the opinions of various individuals presently directing tutoring projects and who met in Washington, D. C., in mid June. SPEED-UP Director Brad Poston attended the meeting and gave a report to the staff and team leaders at a meeting June 30 at the Columbia Hotel.

Team leaders agreed that each approach had its merits, but SPEED-UP favors a total approach to tutoring. This approach would encompass many of the new techniques suggested at the Washington meeting plus other responses to needs in the community.

For example, parents could be invited to hear poetry read or to see their children in a play. These parents could then be the spear-head for a Parents' Committee on Tutoring which may do any number of things--from sponsoring a lecture series to supporting tutorials.

(Continued on page 2)

CAREER CONFERENCE TO BE HELD AS PART OF SPEED-UP PROGRAM

Herbert M. Grooce, Jr., Special Assistant to the Vice President of the U.S., will be one of the featured speakers at the SPEED-UP Career Conference July 30.

The conference, initiated to salvage and direct talents of South Carolina students, will be held in two to four

(Continued on page 4)

VOLUNTEER VISITS MAY HELP IN TEAM EXCHANGE OF IDEAS

A Team Exchange Program has been suggested as a way for teams to share ideas.

Through this program, a student chosen by his team could make arrangements for his Friday classes so that he could spend Friday through Sunday with another group.

Food and housing could be provided by the host team. Transportation would be provided by the visiting team.

"This program would be invaluable in building closer ties and a firmer program. We hope it can soon go into effect," said Brad Poston, Project Director.

FAMILY LIFE MEETING TO PROVIDE INFORMATION ABOUT FOOD, HEALTH

A Family Life Conference will be held July 23 in Rock Hill in cooperation with the York County SPEED-UP team to give families information about health, nutrition and other areas.

Serena Staggers, director of the program, announced that the meeting will be held either at the SPEED-UP center or possibly at Clinton Junior College.

"We want to make families aware of where they can go to get help if they need it and how they can better plan a household," Miss Staggers explained.

George Bennett of the S.C. State Health Department and Francis Walsh, a nurse with the Department, are two of the Consultants scheduled to attend the meeting.

TUTORS COMPARE METHODS . . .

(Continued from page 1)

The parent group could have the immediate job of helping recruit and direct student volunteers from near-by colleges to carry on tutoring in the fall.

Tutors must also be aware of the needs of the community if the tutoring is to be a total thing, team leaders said. Reports should be written concerning housing, people who need welfare and are not getting, and areas which could use SPEED-UP in the future.

SPEED-UP in the present is trying to be creative, perceptive and one step ahead of the kids.

One machine which lends itself to creative uses is the tape recorder, according to team leaders in Richland and Bamberg Counties.

"You are going to try and sell an old car with lavendar running boards to an old lady," is one assignment to a student who stands with microphone in hand.

"I am going to interview you for world-wide press coverage. Can you tell me how it feels to be the first woman to swim the Atlantic Ocean," said a tutor to a student whose comments were about to be put on tape.

The machines have been used to tape a class which can then be reviewed with the tutor by the team leader and model teacher.

Students can read stories and interview each other. In this way, they learn to express themselves, ask questions and get the facts straight. Then they can hear their own performance.

Using the machines of pencil, paper and brains, students have been asked to write compositions on "If I had $100" or "If I were a tree."

The Rock Hill team has found that, if they tutor only three days a week, they can move into other areas where work is needed.

Students have been traveling to out-lying areas that are not served by existing programs. Here volunteers hold classes on porches or in living rooms for special students who are handicapped or who have never been to school.

Volunteers from the community are being incorporated into the program. In Florence, college volunteers have been willing to give 8 to 12 hours in one day to help with reading or home economics.

Darlington neighborhood volunteers are being trained to take over tutoring "so we won't even be missed in September when we go back to school," said team leader Mary Carlton O'Neal.

POVERTY . . .

Our minds are sensitive to poverty like raw finger tips are sensitive to the slightest pressure.

As we sat in classrooms, poverty was always something across town. Even when it was something right outside our windows, it was still outside.

This is what SPEED-UP volunteers are now saying. For some students, life has already meant poverty, and they watch as others come to know the smell, the feel, the mind of it.

"Poverty is not just lack of money, but all the things that go with it--no magazines, no books, no decent work, no hope, no future. I'm overwhelmed," said one student.

"I've finally realized the effect of poverty on the personalities of its victims. Poverty is not usually due to laziness--the cards are stacked against these people from birth."

Students are beginning to feel the frustration of their own helplessness.

"I am now a part of poverty with one exception. I can leave in two months."

Yet, there is inspiration.

"I want to help more than ever before, though it does look hopeless sometimes. But not with the children. The look in their eyes makes me realize that I represent hope. And there is hope."

And, finally, a new view: "Many of these people prove that we are the poverty-stricken ones."

WHO IS THIS GIRL ?

An ambiguous picture, paper, pencil and a creative tutor produced the compositions that tells a story about this girl.

The junior high students first answered a series of questions: How old is the girl? Where does she live? What time of year is it? What kind of house does she live in? How large is her family? What is she thinking about and what is she going to do about it?

After answering these questions, the students wrote paragraphs....

A STORY OF DEATH

about 8 or 9
Alabama
Winter
apartment
3 children
yes I think she so to school
no she don't have a job
she to young
I think something has happen
she'll probably call the police

She was probably 8 or 9 years old. Her home town was in Alabama. It was a very cold winter that part of the year, the apartment which she lived was very cold inside. The family was poor and had little food to eat. She had to go to school with nothing to eat. When she came home that day she found her brother dead from hunger.

WHAT IS SHE THINKING ?

EVICTED FAMILY

12 years old
Mississippi
Winter
apartment
6 children in her family
yes, I think she goes to school no job
she's thinking what's going to happen to her she might try to run away

Juanita, a young girl from Mississippi is thinking of what is going to happen to her and her family. Since they were living in a small apartment house, and the size of their family was too large for the house. The father maybe had gotten killed about three months ago. The mother a widow about forty was about to be put out of the small apartment. And the young girl Juanita was thinking of what's going to happen to the family.

ALL ALONE

She is eight years old
She is from Africa
time of year - winter five children
no she don't go to school
no she don't have a job running away from home pack her clothes
she live in a house

Mary Bell was travel with her family. They had stop in town for a while. Mary Bell went wonder off. And her family left her their. it was cold in the winter time. They was on there way home. she had live in Jacksonville. she was only eight years old. and she didn't have no where to stay.

...Such as the thoughts of young people.

THE BAD TIMES AND THE GOOD TIMES COME

A worn and dusty team leader drives a dusty car down a worn road. He reaches his destination and jumps out of the car like a general jumps out of his jeep and begins snapping out orders about the strict schedule to be followed in using the one car serving a team spread out over 30 miles.

A groggy team stumbles down to a breakfast of peanut butter on spoons and carries away a lunch of peanut butter sandwhiches to sustain them through the day until they return for their real treat of supper of peanut butter and jelly sandwhiches.

Another team holds daily funeral services for the unfortunate animals that have been brought to the center's "science museum."

And so goes the SPEED-UP project, at least this is the way things sound for a while.

But there are brighter sides, lighter sides, more encouraging sides.

For one thing, the general has gotten another car, so that means that one car serves about 15 miles instead of 30.

The peanut butter has been cashed in for spare ribs and pizza.

The children are learning that, if they don't feed the animals in the science museum, they really will die, and so now no one eats until the animals eat.

The numbers game is going strong in some areas. One team is waiting for tobacco season to open so that their gargantuan number of students will fall to a more reasonalbe number. Another team rejoices because the size of the arts and crafts class trippled in size during the first week.

After some measure of haranguing, a team finally convinced the powers that be that a softball team could not practice on a field full of trees. Now the trees are gone.

The bad times and the good times come.

CAREER CONFERENCE...

(Continued from page 1)

centers, probably in Columbia, Sumter, Greenville or Orangeburg.

Lacey Myers, Director of Counseling and coordinator of the conference, said, "We want to give information about college to those who have the potential and we want to introduce various trades that are open to those who cannot go to college."

The day will begin with a general session witha keynote speaker in each center. Students will then break up into smaller groups to confer with visiting officials from trade schools, colleges, and professions. A social hour will follow.

SPEED-UP volunteers are serving on planning committees.

SPEED-UP
1330 Laurel St.
Columbia, S. C.

Non-Profit Org.
Postage Paid
Columbia, S. C.
Permit No. 758

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Rorsyth St.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. ... 30303
JAckson 2-3764

PAUL ANTHONY,
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

September 15, 1966

MEMORANDUM

TO: State Council Directors and SRC Staff

FROM: Ed Stanfield

SUBJECT: CHANGES OF ADDRESS

Your attention is called to certain changes which have occurred since we issued a new state council directory in August:

Elijah Coleman has been made Acting Director of the Arkansas Council on Human Relations. Nat Griswold has resumed his leave of absence.

The Louisiana Council has opened their new office. Materials should now be sent to 7986 Scenic Highway, Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Telephone (504) 775-8048.

The North Carolina Council has moved its office to Greensboro. The address is 233-1/2 Greene Street, Greensboro, Telephone (919) 275-6589.

The Houston Council has named Mrs. Frances Dukler Acting Director, pending employment of a new executive director.

October 3, 1966

Mr. Baxton Bryant, Director
Tennessee Council on Human Relations
1106 - 19th Avenue, South
Nashville, Tennessee 37312

Dear Baxton:

It was good, as always, to see you in Atlanta. Let me know when you would like for me to make a move regarding Memphis.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via

hj

ARKANSAS
COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
1310 WRIGHT AVENUE
LITTLE ROCK, ARK. 72206
PHONE FR 6-3541

6 October 1966

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Project
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

I was talking to Jim Youngdahl, the labor attorney from Little Rock, the other day, and he mentioned that he had discussed with you the possibility of calling a meeting of several knowledgeable people from around the country to discuss the seniority problem in adjusting wage contracts under the Civil Rights Act.

He reminded me that he was still interested in working out this problem outside the courts. As you know the legal support for adjusting seniority problems is very weak, but I believe he discussed all this with you when he was in Atlanta.

I just wanted to drop you a note to tell you that ACHR would be glad to help arrange such a conference or assist you at arranging one at Atlanta.

We are also very much interested in the problem of apprenticeship programs for the training of skilled workers here in Arkansas and the possibility of using manpower redevelopment training funds in such a program. If you have any information that would be helpful in this regard, I would very much appreciate it. We are in conversation with some state labor leaders about the possibility of a meeting over the state on this problem.

Thanking you for any consideration you may give us, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Walter B Clancy

(Rev.) Walter B. Clancy
Chairman, Board of Directors

WBC:cit

OFFICERS – FATHER WALTER B. CLANCY, CHAIRMAN • DR. W. H. TOWNSEND, VICE-CHAIRMAN
REVEREND A. M. ROBERTS, JR., TREASURER • MRS. FRANK N. GORDON, SECRETARY
STAFF – NAT R. GRISWOLD, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR • OZELL SUTTON, ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR

A Council to attain equal opportunity for all peoples

October 14, 1966

The Reverend Walter B. Clancy
Chairman of the Board of Directors
Arkansas Council on Human Relations
1310 Wright Avenue
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206

Dear Father Clancy:

Your letter and offer of assistance are most appreciated.

I am still working on the Seniority Conference idea. It would be a small working group and probably would meet here in Atlanta unless some other spot proves to be even more central to the participants.

I am glad to hear of your interest in apprentice programs. Do you already have a committee or someone developing ideas in this regard? If so, how far have they proceeded and with whom have they had contact? For example, have they been in touch with labor department people and if so, who are they? If you have already had some positive response from state labor leaders, could you fill me in a little more on this, too?

You may note from the memorandum which Ed Stanfield and I sent to the state councils that SRC is prepared to offer certain kinds of assistance in programs directed at apprenticeship. We can certainly offer some outside consultative help. This could be possibly done in meeting your present request for information about using Manpower Training Funds for developing skilled workers. Your answer to the questions above will help guide me in making a suggestion of a consultant,

I look forward to hearing from you further in this regard.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Babor Program

hj

Tennessee Council On Human Relations

~~1106 19th AVENUE, SOUTH~~ • NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, 37212 • TELEPHONE 297-6568
1207 18th Avenue South

PRESIDENT
MRS. MARTHA RAGLAND
VICE-PRESIDENTS
WILLIAM G. POLLARD
LEWIS S. SINCLAIR
VASCO SMITH
SECRETARY
MISS KATHERINE JONES
TREASURER
G. J. TARLETON, JR.

October 18, 1966

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
BAXTON BRYANT
ASSISTANT DIRECTOR
HARRY WIERSEMA, JR.
RESEARCH AND COMPLIANCE
MRS. JERI WIERSEMA

Mr. Emery Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street NW
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emery:

I have spent the last few days in Memphis and had an opportunity to look into the Negro labor situation. Take what I say with a grain of salt, but it seems that there is a loss of faith on the part of labor in some of the Negro political leadership.

It would seem that we must develop a broader base of Negro leadership than now exists. Some of the relationships have been caused by political campaigns jointly conducted by labor and Negro leadership, how funds are handled, and a spirit of reciprocity on various causes. This is especially true in regard to the selection of members of the committee that drew up the new plan of city government that is being submitted to the voters on November 8.

Most of my conversation was with labor, but knowing what I do about the total situation I feel pretty strongly that they have adequate reason for their doubts. I think it would be good if you could visit Memphis and talk privately with the Negro and labor leadership. The council has developed a close relationship with a broader based Negro leadership in the community than the present political leadership and may be of help in this direction, if you concur that this might be helpful.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

MRS. RAY ALLEN, MEMPHIS
GEORGE BARRETT, NASHVILLE
WILL CAMPBELL, MT. JULIET
CARL CARSON, MEMPHIS
DAVID CAYWOOD, MEMPHIS
MRS. FRANCES COE, MEMPHIS
WILKES COFFEY, JR., MURFREESBORO
JOHN COMPTON, NASHVILLE
W. T. CRUTCHER, KNOXVILLE
MACLIN DAVIS, NASHVILLE
MRS. GARLAND P. FISHER, BRISTOL
JAMES S. GILLILAND, MEMPHIS
JAMES D. GLASSE, NASHVILLE
LEROY GRAF, KNOXVILLE
JAMES GREGORY, EADS
W. D. HAWKINS, JR., NASHVILLE
MRS. W. B. HEMBREE, KNOXVILLE
MRS. JOHN C. HULL, NASHVILLE
MRS. G. W. STANLEY ISH, MEMPHIS
CLAYTON JAMES, MURFREESBORO
MAJOR JONES, CHATTANOOGA
MRS. EUGENE S. KILGORE, JOHNSON CITY
HUNTER LANE, JR., MEMPHIS
MRS. PHILLIP H. LIVINGSTON, CHATTANOOGA
MATT LYNCH, NASHVILLE
M. D. MERRIWETHER, JACKSON
JOHN C. MICKLE, MEMPHIS
LEVI MOORE, RIPLEY
MRS. RILLA MORAN, NASHVILLE
MRS. HUGH MORGAN, NASHVILLE
MRS. FRED MUHLEMAN, CHATTANOOGA
E. E. PITTS, CHATTANOOGA
ALBERT PORTER, JACKSON
DAN POWELL, MEMPHIS
MRS. R. D. PRESENT, KNOXVILLE
HORACE W. RAPER, COOKEVILLE
J. R. RUTTER, KNOXVILLE
MRS. EARL SASSER, NASHVILLE
MRS. BERNARD SCHWEID, NASHVILLE
CLIFFORD SEEBER, KNOXVILLE
WALTER SHARP, BRENTWOOD
LOU SILBERMAN, NASHVILLE
MRS. ERNEST SILVER, OAK RIDGE
KELLY MILLER SMITH, NASHVILLE
MRS. PHILLIP SOTTONG, SIGNAL MOUNTAIN
MRS. LEE SPAULDING, TULLAHOMA
WHITWORTH STOKES, NASHVILLE
ROSCOE STRICKLAND, JR., MURFREESBORO
MRS. JAMES M. TODD, NASHVILLE
MISS MARTELLE TRIGG, MEMPHIS
DOGAN WILLIAMS, BRISTOL
CHARLES WINTERS, SEWANEE
MISS LOUISE YOUNG, NASHVILLE
C. E. YOUNG, LEBANON

Dan Powell would be a good person to start talking with. Let me know your thoughts and come to see us.

Sincerely,

Baxton

Baxton Bryant (jw)

BB:jw

VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
17 EAST CARY STREET
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA 23219
TELEPHONE: AREA CODE 703—648-4444

26 October 1966

ALEXANDRIA
ARLINGTON
BLACKSBURG
CHARLOTTESVILLE
COVINGTON
DANVILLE
FAIRFAX
FRANKLIN
FREDERICKSBURG
GILES
HANOVER
HOPEWELL
LANCASTER-NORTHUMBERLAND
LEXINGTON
LOUDOUN
LYNCHBURG
MERCER-TAZEWELL
NORFOLK
PENINSULA (HAMPTON-NEWPORT NEWS)
PETERSBURG
PORTSMOUTH
PRINCE EDWARD
PRINCE WILLIAM
RADFORD
RICHMOND
ROANOKE
ROCKINGHAM
VIRGINIA BEACH
WARRENTON
WILLIAMSBURG
COLLEGE COUNCIL

Mr. Emory Via
Labor Project
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

The VCHR plans to hold its Annual Meeting on Saturday, January 14, 1967. During the morning, we will have a brief VCHR Board Meeting and the afternoon will be devoted to SRC and VCHR Staffs' presenting a joint workshop for the 1967 Program.

We would desire as many as possible of the SRC Special Project Directors present for this workshop, briefly stating the purposes of their work and raising serious challenging questions and issues with us. If you cannot come, please send a representative from your department.

The place of the workshop will be announced later, but the date and time will be Saturday, January 14, 1967, at 10:00 a.m.

We thank you for your fine cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

Robert Lee Combs

Robert Lee Combs, Executive Director

RLC :rbm

November 1, 1966

Mr. J. Donald Jenkins
Presbyterian Distribution Service
225 Varick Street
New York, New Yorkm10014

Dear Mr. Jenkins:

Can you tell me, if the master print of "Face of the South" is still available and in good condition? This film was produced by the United Presbyterian Church in 1957 and featured the late George S. Mitchell, Executive Director, of the Southern Regional Council.

The prints which I know of are in poor condition. I believe there would be an interest in four or five prints and perhaps more, if word got out that new prints were available.

I believe that the original sponsorship of the film came from the Department of Social Education and Action of the Board of Christian Education at 830 Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Frank Willard, here in Atlanta, who made the film is under the impression that the master print may still be with the Broadcasting and Film Commission of the NCC.

Any information you can provide in this matter would be most appreciated.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

November 1, 1966

Ideal Pictures
133 Nassau Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Sirs:

Do you distribute the film "Face of the South" which was produced by the United Presbyterian Church? Do you have, or know of, a print which is in fairly first class condition? The film was produced in 1957.

It would be even more useful to know where the original master print is now located and if it is in good condition. Any assistance you can give in this matter will be most appreciated.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

Telephone (205) 887-3438

ALABAMA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS, INC.

POST OFFICE BOX 1310 AUBURN, ALABAMA 36830

DR. C. G. GOMILLION, President

BOB VALDER, Associate Director LEWIS BLACK, Director, Rural Advancement Project

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Vice Presidents

Dr. Raymond D. Fowler, Tuscaloosa
Dr. Lucius Pitts, Birmingham
Father Brice Joyce, Sheffield

Secretary

Mrs. Paul J. McCoy, Huntsville

Treasurer

J. E. Pierce, Montgomery
Rev. V. A. Edwards, Tuskegee Institute
James F. Kidd, Birmingham
Rev. Powers McLeod, Montgomery
Mrs. Bill Reed, Huntsville

BOARD MEMBERS

Dr. Joseph Bettis, Tuscaloosa
Allen Black, Jr., Florence
Mrs. John Cashin, Huntsville
Mrs. John Drew, Birmingham
Mrs. Virginia Durr, Montgomery
Dr. Luther Foster, Tuskegee Institute
Rev. Phillip Huckaby, Birmingham
Rev. Duncan Hunter, Huntsville
Rev. Otis E. Kirby, Decatur
Dr. Frederick Kraus, Birmingham
Dr. Beryl McClaskey, Birmingham
J. Allan Parker, Tuskegee
Stanley Rosenbaum, Florence
Mrs. Willease Simpson, Montgomery
Mrs. Nancy S. Spears, Auburn
S. C. Watkins, Tuscumbia
Mrs. A. W. West, Montgomery
Mrs. Kathleen K. Wood, Mobile
Rev. J. L. Ware, Birmingham
Abraham L. Siegel, Birmingham
Rev. Harold Long, Birmingham
Mrs. Fannye Harris, Tuskegee
Mrs. Grace Hooks, Tuskegee Institute
Thomas de Jefferson, Tuscaloosa
Ross Bonner, Tuscaloosa
Arthur Whitfield, Mobile
Mrs. James Kennedy, Mobile
Joe D. Wilson, Huntsville
Don Ring, Huntsville
Paul Wooley, Montgomery
Earl Pippin, Montgomery
Prof. George DeBoer, Florence
Mrs. Thelma Mullins, Sheffield
Mrs. Laura Daly, Talladega
Alfred Radney, Talladega

November 3, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I am writing to remind you of my interest in the mininum wage program which we discussed earlier.

I am really not sure of how to proceed from here, but I hope you have some ideas on that. I guess I am thinking right now of getting together some local chapter, probably in Auburn or Tuskegee, to see what we can come up with.

Of course, you will need to provide whatever literature you think best in terms of clarity, comprehensiveness, etc.

Let me hear your ideas and we can proceed.

Sincerely,

Bob

Bob Valder

BV:mee

cc: J. Edwin Stanfield

November 9, 1966

Robert Valder
Alabama Council on Human Relations
Post Office Box 1310
Auburn, Alabama 36830

Dear Bob:

Thanks for your letter regarding the Minimum Wage Program.

I hope to soon find someone to develop the appropriate materials. If you feel one of your groups is already set to move, I would consider coming over with someone from the Wage and Hour Division and simply get them started from scratch. Ideally, it would be better to wait until we have had the materials prepared.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

MEMO

from Alice N. Spearman

Alice

To Emory Via Date 11-29-66 Time

We'd "love" to have you but hope to "dig" into your area after this scatter-gun approach is over.

Come if you can!

Alice

☐ Reply ☐ Initial and return ☐ See me

SCCHR

CHALLENGE TO CITIZEN INVOLVEMENT

IN SOUTH CAROLINA

You are invited to participate in one of the simultaneous workshops being sponsored by the South Carolina Council on Human Relations with the cooperation of leaders from many organizations, institutions and agencies.

Wade Hampton Hotel, Columbia, S. C.

December 6, 1966 10:15 - 12:15

The workshops will give an overview of each of the areas of interest listed below--present programs, needs, problems, resources--and plan programs of study and action, involving citizens.

I. THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

What do we know about problems of youthful offenders? magistrate courts? prisoner rehabilitation? legal aid services? the jury system? the rights of the accused?

What can we do about law enforcement? penal reform? the dual system of justice? aiding released prisoners? youthful offenders?

II. ECONOMICS AND EMPLOYMENT

What do we know about family incomes in South Carolina? training and retraining programs? credit unions? job opportunities for Negro citizens?

What can we do about motivating more citizens for training? getting to the people who need help most? bringing South Carolina standards of employment and income in line with the national level?

III. EDUCATION

What do we know about bold new programs to raise the educational level for pre-school children? in-school children? adults? drop-outs? the non-enrolled child? about vocational and technical education and progress in school desegregation?

What can we do to develop broadly-based citizen commitment to quality education at all levels? effect maximum citizen involvement for setting goals, priorities, insuring adequate financial undergirding? a law for compulsory school attendance with supportive services? other?

IV. THE ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAM

What do we know directly of persons who live in poverty? about the present status of anti-poverty funds, programs, personnel problems? about specifics of community action?

What can we do to become active personally? interpret and involve others in meeting the number one challenge which poverty makes to affluence?

V. WELFARE

What do we know about the extent of malnutrition? recipients of welfare? problems of the aging, the physically handicapped? the unmet needs of children?

What can we do to insure a state-wide surplus food program? see that unemployed parents are trained for jobs? provide more adequate community resources for the persons who need special assistance? supplement the services of professionals by the involvement of trained volunteers?

VI. HOUSING

What do we know about urban renewal, public housing, housing codes for cities and counties? the availability of low-cost housing in rural areas? construction costs? the housing market? zoning? changing neighborhoods?

What can we do to improve standards and assure the availability of adequate housing at fair prices to low-income families? to assure a non-discriminatory housing market? other?

VII. THE CHURCH AND HUMAN RELATIONS

What do we know about the pronouncement of the churches on social issues? programs of involvement of the church in meeting human needs? pressures for maintaining the status quo in our churches?

What can we do to bring practice in line with profession? to minister with relevance to the whole man and to all the needs of the community? to restore again to the church moral leadership in race relations? to develop churches open to all?

SCCHR REVIEW

November
1966

1330 Laurel St.
Columbia, S.C..29201

* *

YOU ARE INVITED to the Twelfth Annual Meeting of the

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Tuesday, December 6, 1966 Wade Hampton Hotel, Columbia, S.C.

9:30 Registration
10:15 Workshops in the following areas:

I. The Administration of Justice
II. Economics and Employment
III. Education and the Schools
IV. The Anti-Poverty Program
V. Welfare
VI. Housing
VII. The Church and Human Relations

12:30 Lunch - everyone on his own

2:15 Registration
2:30 Afternoon session will feature Paul Anthony as speaker, special reports and the annual business meeting.

6:00 Registration
Dinner - Ballroom of the hotel
Address: LESSONS FROM ATLANTA, Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, President of Clark College, Atlanta, Georgia

* *

Please detach and return not later than December 2, 1966, to

S. C. Council on Human Relations, 1330 Laurel Street, Columbia, S.C. 29201

Name _____

Address _____

_____ I plan to attend Workshop No.

_____ Please reserve ____ tickets for the dinner at $3.25 each.

_____ Payment enclosed _____ Will pay at banquet

MORE ABOUT THE ANNUAL MEETING

Citizen Involvement in growth and development is basic to continuing and increasing the tempo of progress in South Carolina. This challenge will underlie all aspects of the 1966 annual meeting on December sixth.

Plan Car Pools of SCCHR members and other alert citizens from your community. Arrange to spend the entire day and to participate in the workshops, the afternoon session and the evening dinner meeting! Please send in your reservations for dinner promptly.

THE 1966 REPORT OF PROGRAM: PAST -- PRESENT -- PROPOSED

The report for this year is appearing in two parts prior to the annual meeting so that informed member participation may be increased. For the report on such administrative matters as finance, membership, organization, and staffing see the September-October issue of SCCHR REVIEW.

Workshops to be held on Tuesday morning, December 6 from 10:15 to 12:15 o'clock will highlight and detail the program emphases of SCCGR and a growing number of other agencies, organizations and individuals. Proposed new study and action programs will be projected around the following concerns: The Administration of Justice and Law Enforcement; Anti-Poverty Programs; Welfare; and Housing.

Workshop programs in any of the areas scheduled I through VII will be mailed to those requesting same.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Special Surveys to determine conditions and number of low-income families have been conducted during 1966 in Holly Hill, Elloree, St. George, and in Dillon and Calhoun counties.

Delegations to the South Carolina General Assembly have been approached by special committees of Council members and urged to institute county-wide food distribution programs in several counties.

To Determine Compliance with Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, a survey was made this year of leading industries in nine (9) counties.

Farmer Cooperatives and Credit Unions are being encouraged, and a few are being organized.

Participation in ASCS Elections (Agriculture Stabilization and Conservation Service) by farm operators was actively promoted prior to the September elections.

RURAL ADVANCEMENT PROJECTS VITAL

Program Activities of the Rural Advancement Project have included reorganization of county groups for better attendance. The number of counties served increased from twenty-four (24) to thirty (30). Ten meeting centers were established convenient to three-county groups. Emphasis has been placed on informational and referral services, and on leadership training.

Projected Programs include efforts at continuous economic development with added emphasis upon 1) low-income housing at minimal costs under FHA (Farmers Home Administration), 2) diversified farming and assistance available for its increase.

UPGRADING EDUCATION AT ALL LEVELS: AN EMPHASIS IN SCCHR

SCCHR and Local Councils have a long standing and continuing involvement in educational programs and projects. Basic has been the process of defining needs and problems and keeping abreast of the bold new programs designed to meet them.

Implementation of Programs such as work-study for college students; work-training for high school youth; summer job opportunities for youth, which emphasize training; the Neighborhood Youth Corps which engages school drop-outs in a combination of work and study etc., have been given priority.

Recruitment of Trainees continues for job training at all levels through adult education, technical and vocational education and the STEP program (Special Training for Economic Progress).

Special Preparation Through RAP (SCCHR's Rural Advancement Program) and its tri-county organizations is being made for recruitment of under-employed and unemployed rural people in the massive training program proposed for Project T-Square hopefully to be launched in South Carolina soon.

Dissemination of Information through group meetings, mass mailings, inter-organizational cooperation and support focus upon informed citizen participation in implementation, especially of the following acts:

The Elementary and Secondary Education Act (P.L. 89-253)

The Higher Education Act (P.L. 89-329)

1965 extensions of the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 to provide up to 2 years on-the-job or classroom training for persons unemployed because they lack education or skills; and

The educational provisions of the Economic Opportunity Act extended by P.L. 89-253 to June 30, 1968.

STUDENT INVOLVEMENT IN COMMUNITY

The Program of the South Carolina Student Council this year has found student members involved in significant ways in community action. Specifically these are ways in which the students have been involved --

A Work Week-end, held in February at Our Lady of Mercy Welfare Center in Charleston, proved to be a significant experience for the students and the community people with whom they worked.

Operation Search, a year-round project, seeks out and encourages qualified Negro high school students to continue their education. Through visits to high schools or to community meetings set up for high school students, through mailings to National Achievement Scholars and other recommended high school students, and a wide distribution of materials, students have been informed and encouraged to continue their education. Emphasis has been placed on these students enrolling in one of the recently desegregated colleges of the state.

A Committee on Compulsory School Attendance Law (Co-Co-Sal) has existed for two years. It informs and solicits citizens' support for such a measure, a definite need to undergird all that is done in education in the state.

Tutoring has continued with five student tutoring projects under the auspices of SCSCHR. In February five tutorial training workshops were held in five colleges of the state under the leadership of Lowell Dodge, director of Youth Education Services (YES) in North Carolina. These workshops opened up new techniques in tutoring and gave valuable guidelines for the Student Project for Educational and Economic Development for Underprivileged People (SPEED-UP), a tutoring and community development arm of the Student Council.

Two Conferences, one in the spring and another in the fall, have been held during the year. Southern Justice was the theme of the spring conference and the fall conference focus was on the Role of the Student in the Educational System. Students from 23 of the colleges of the state have participated in some phase of the SCSCHR program.

Plans for the Future include a continuation of all of the areas of work listed above with a more intensive effort. Students will try to bring about needed changes on their own campuses and in the community, as discussed at the conferences of the year, through work in poverty areas, citizenship education, exchange programs, academic freedom and related campus issues. As we look to the future a greater coordination of the student work with the total program of SCCHR is indicated, with a full time staff person who will spend a great deal of time in campus visitation. College students can have a major role in upgrading this state and helping to solve some of its pressing problems. This is the objective of the student council.

Study of needs for effective Compulsory School Attendance legislation and of complementary services is receiving priority.

Cooperation and Support have been given to numerous special projects in education, such as the Southern Rural Training Project; The Southern Teaching Project; the American Friends Service Committee's summer tutoring project for transferees to desegregated schools in three (3) rural counties, and The Southern Christian Leadership Conference's citizenship education program.

School Desegregation - Tutoring projects of SCSCHR and SPEED-UP, work with parents, assistance given in the planning and execution of two (2) statewide conferences on school desegregation, an in-depth study of the pattern of desegregation in one school district, and efforts to recruit white teachers for school transfers indicate the scope of the Council's work in this important area. Mr. Hayes Mizell, formerly with SCCHR,is now doing full-time work in this area with A.F.S.C.

Recommendations for Future Educational Programs include: 1) development of an intensified and coordinated citizen effort in support for an adequate compulsory school attendance law; 2) inclusion of qualified Negroes on educational committees, college trustee and school boards and at other policy-making levels; and 3) involvement of more volunteers in tutorials and other projects related to upgrading education at all levels.

THE CHURCH AND HUMAN RELATIONS

This continuing concern in the SCCHR program received new impetus as a result of the outstanding statewide conference on "The Racial Revolution in Christian Perspective," held in Columbia on October 18. This conference was planned and carried out through the efforts of an ecumenical committee of churchmen. SCCHR leaders and staff were instrumental in initiating this effort and worked in key committee assignments. Over three hundred churchmen assembled to confront crucial issues, to increase understanding and to consider the implications of the Christian faith for contemporary life. A follow-up committee is now at work to continue the process begun at this conference at state and local levels.

The Council distributed information and encouraged participation in denominational regional summer conferences focusing on social concerns. Thirteen council members attended the very outstanding Presbyterian conference on Poverty, the Church and Race in Montreat in mid-August.

Program assistance is now being given in conjunction with the current mission study for major denominations on "Poverty and Affluence." Speakers have been provided and packets of material on the economic situation in South Carolina and on anti-poverty programs are being distributed from the Council office. This packet may be had upon request to the South Carolina Council on Human Relations office as long as the supply of materials lasts, for use in conjunction with the Poverty and Affluence study.

SPEED-UP DECLARED ONE OF TOP STUDENT PROGRAMS IN NATION

SPEED-UP, the Student Project for Educational and Economic Development for Underprivileged People is a tutoring and community development service which utilizes South Carolina students, working in their own state in poverty areas, helping people to help themselves. It has been evaluated by staff members working with student demonstration projects under the Office of Economic Opportunity as one of the outstanding student projects in the nation.

This Past Summer the full-time SPEED-UP program involved one hundred and fifty South Carolina college students and neighborhood workers in twenty-eight communities in thirteen counties. They taught and tutored children and adults; they also provided programs of recreation, information and cultural enrichment. This was a learning experience for South Carolina's participating college students and for the staff which worked with them.

At Present, SPEED-UP is continuing a tutoring and community development program in a number of the communities, enlisting college students as volunteers who work under the guidance of a small staff of three. SPEED-UP is requesting VISTA volunteers and hopes to place them in ten of the poorer counties of the state. Paperback books, secured through the Southern Regional Council, are being placed in five counties. The SPEED-UP staff has spent much time in drawing up a proposal for a continuing program which is being presented to the Office of Economic Opportunity in Washington, D. C.

The Future of SPEED-UP looks - - - - to the involvement of many more indigenous persons in tutoring and community development programs; to the establishment of credit unions by assisting the Rural Advancement Project (RAP);
to work with drop-outs as well as the in-school child, developing programs which may apprentice to local businessmen the drop-out who has no desire to return to school;
in general to community action programs which will generate feelings of community pride and self-confidence.

S.C. Council on Human Relations
1330 Laurel St.
Columbia, S. C.

Non-Profit Org.
Postage Paid
Columbia, S. C.
Permit No. 758

URGENT

State H.R.C
Jead

January 6, 1967

The Reverend Benjamin Grinage
Arkansas Council on Human Relations
1310 Wright Avenue
Little Rock, Arkansas

Dear Reverend Grinage:

Enclosed is a memorandum from Emory Via, who is in charge of the Labor Education Project at the Southern Regional Council. I told Mr. Via that I felt that you could help him out. If you could supply him with the requested list as soon as possible, I would greatly appreciate it.

Best wishes for the new year and your organizational program.

Sincerely,

Marvin Wall
Director of Research
Voter Education Project

MW/pf
cc: Mr. Emory Via

Little Rock

MEMORANDUM

TO: MARVIN WALL

FROM: EMORY VIA

Could you supply the labor project with names of persons, organizational identification, and addresses who are Negro leaders in the First Congressional District of Arkansas.

This would include Blytheville, Jonesboro, Newport, Forest City, Helena.

Such persons might be active in Voter education, politics, NAACP, SNCC, SCLC(?) or other organizations if they are reall leaders . Up to a dozen names.

Thanks.

NEW DIRECTIONS FOR GEORGIA

SPEED-UP
ORIENTATION

June 5-June 11

SUNDAY, JUNE 5

3:00-6:00	REGISTRATION at the Columbia Hotel Team leaders will meet at 2:00 at the Columbia Hotel in the Hunt Room
6:00-7:30	Supper
7:30-9:00	Introduction of staff Staff Panel: "Preparation and Goals for SPEED-UP"
9:00-10:30	Dr. Warren Haggstrom and dialogue
10:30-11:30	Teams meet with team leaders
11:30	Staff and team leaders meeting

MONDAY, JUNE 6

9:00-10:30	Panel - "Progress in South Carolina"
11:00-12:30	Tutoring workshop with Don Moore Neighborhood Workers meet with staff
12:30-2:00	Lunch
2:00-3:30	Vernon Jordan and Dialogue (tematave)
3:30-5:30	Teams meet with Neighborhood Workers for "General Picture of Locale"
5:30-7:30	Supper
7:30-9:00	Dr. Leroy Anderson "Self Concept" Dialogue following address
9:15-10:15	Clark Roof
10:30	Staff meeting and team leaders meeting

TUESDAY, JUNE 7

9:30-11:00	Emory Via ~~and Dialogue~~ "Changing South"
11:15-12:30	Tutoring workshop with Lowell Dodge "Philopophy and Techniques of Tutoring"
12:30-2:30	Lunch (all students working in citizenship education have lunch with Al Ulmer)
2:30-4:30	Dodge continued
4:30-5:30	Team discussions - program planning
5:30-7:30	Supper (same students meet with Al Ulmer)
7:30-9:00	Dodge continued
9:15-10:15	Film. Team discussions following film
11:00	Staff and team leaders meet

WEDNESDAY JUNE 8

9:30-12:30	Tutoring workshop with Don Moore "Materials"
12:30-2:00	Lunch
2:00-5:30	Clark Roof "Gathering Information"
5:30-7:30	Supper
7:30-9:30	L. S. James Al Ulmer
9:30-11:00	Teams meet for program planning
11:00	Staff meeting and team leaders meeting

THURSDAY, JUNE 9

9:00-10:30	"Entering the Community" Mr. Ben Mack
11:00-1:00	Clinics Citizenship Education Home Planning Arts and crafts Athletics Public Relations Materials personnel and typists Volunteer personnel
1:00-2:30	Lunch

(OVER)

THURSDAY CONT.

2:30-5:30	Groups of three counties each to meet and discuss program planning
5:30-7:30	Supper
7:30-10:30	Workshops Secondary Math Primary Math History Remedial Reading
11:00 Staff and team meeting

FRIDAY, JUNE 10

9:30-12:30	Workshop with Mr. Robert Fakkema
12:30-2:00	Lunch
2:00-3:30	Clinics (same as Thursday)
3:30-6:00	Team meetings to finalize program planning
6:00-8:00	Supper meeting with Dr. James M. Dabbs
8:00--- FREE

SATURDAY, JUNE 11

All students will move out into their respective communities--not leaving the hotel any later than 2:00 pm (check-out time)

File Va. Conf on People, Rely

NOVEMBER 28 • 29, 1966
JOHN MARSHALL HOTEL
RICHMOND

CONFERENCE ON PEOPLE, RELIGION AND A CHANGING VIRGINIA

Under auspices of the Virginia Council on Human Relations in cooperation with leaders of the statewide religious community

Virginia Conference Office: 17 East Cary Street, Richmond 23219, Dial (703) 648-4444

October 19, 1966 (#3)

TO: National Executives

Little time for planning remains before our conference. Once more, let me say that we are counting as one of the features of the conference, the presence and help of a top leader from your office -- and advance confirmation is highly encouraging -- 25 or more already (see enclosed list).

It is hoped that you will be available for these services:

1 - A resource person for one of the discussion groups (meeting for 1 1/2 hours after each of the four major addresses); each discussion group will carry on with the topic of the address. Study guides are sent to each one who registers. Have you registered with the conference office (17 East Cary St., Richmond, Va. 23219, $7.50)?

2 - Be available for personal and group conferences at other times.

3 - Provide printed matter from your agency for your special table throughout the conference. To be sent addressed to you at the John Marshall Hotel shortly before the conference. (It is hoped that you can have local constituents "man" the table during the conference.)

4 - Be available if requested for radio-TV interviews and discussions.

5 - Be available "afterhours" Monday and Tuesday nights for conferences.

6 - Let us know what you think are the best movies available on conference topics, and sources.

Some national agencies have made financial contributions of up to $500. This is not required but it will be a great help on our budget of $5,000.

You should make your own hotel reservation. Card is enclosed to be sent to the hotel.

It is also important if you can check with your Virginia contacts to make sure that the conference is being well promoted.

(You recall that all national executives are on their own with their expenses, including registration, cared for by their own headquarters as a contribution to this conference.)

Thank you for all your help.

/ s / AUBREY N. BROWN, Jr., Planning Chairman

ANB/1

PLANNING COMMITTEE

AUBREY N. BROWN, JR., CHAIRMAN
A. PURNELL BAILEY
MYRON BERMAN
WADE H. BRYANT
GEORGE A. CHAUNCEY
JOHN H. COFFEY
ROBERT L. COMBS
MRS. E. L. GLOSSBRENNER
WILLIAM J. GOLD
MRS. ROBERT J. HABENICHT
ALLIX B. JAMES
H. MYRON KAUFFMAN
JEROME L. LEVINRAD
JAMES P. LINCOLN
JOHN J. McMAHON
MRS. JEROME MEYER
MYRON S. MILLER
H. DICKINSON RATHBUN
ROBERT R. SALA
L. BILL SIMMONS

SPONSORS

The call to the November 28-29, 1966, Conference on People, Religion, and a Changing Virginia and the invitation to participate in it are extended by the following responsible leaders of the statewide religious community who are the conference Sponsors:

Theodore F. Adams, former president, Baptist World Alliance
George W. Baber, bishop, Christian Methodist Episcopal Church
Henry C. Bunton, bishop, Christian Methodist Episcopal Church
Mrs. James J. Burns, president, Richmond Diocesan Council of Catholic Women
Constantine N. Dombalis, president, Virginia Council of Greek Orthodox Churches
J. M. Ellison, president emeritus, Virginia Union University
C. L. Evans, executive secretary, Baptist Allied Bodies of Virginia
Egbert J. Figaro, C. S. Sp., dean, St. Emma Military Academy
H. E. Finger, Jr., bishop, Holston Conference of the Methodist Church
Emmet A. Frank, rabbi, Beth El Hebrew Congregation, Alexandria
T. A. Freeman, executive secretary, Abingdon Presbytery, Presbyterian Church, U. S.
Floyd L. Fulk, superintendent, Evangelical United Brethren Church, Virginia Conference
Robert F. Gibson, bishop, Episcopal Diocese of Virginia
Ariel L. Goldburg, rabbi, Temple Beth Ahabah, Richmond
Walter C. Gum, bishop, Virginia Conference of the Methodist Church
Wilton E. Hartzler, executive secretary, Southeastern regional office, American Friends Service Committee
Walker B. Healy, moderator, Presbyterian, U. S., Synod of Virginia
Mrs. Lawrence Hilgeman, president, United Church Women
Guy Hepler, Salvation Army divisional commander (Lt.-Col.) for Virginia
Joseph H. Hodges, bishop, Roman Catholic Diocese of Wheeling
Ernest L. Honts, pastor, Talbot Park Baptist Church, Norfolk
Allix B. James, dean, School of Religion, Virginia Union University
James A. Jones, president, Union Theological Seminary in Virginia
Walter Royal Jones, Unitarian-Universalist representative, Charlottesville
H. Myron Kauffman, president, Virginia Council of Churches; executive secretary, Virginia Convention of Christian Churches
William H. Kohn, president, Southeastern District, the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod
Charles E. S. Kraemer, president, Presbyterian School of Christian Education
Byrum C. Lee, Pearisburg, chairman, Virginia Ministerial Association, Church of God, Anderson, Ind.
William H. Marmion, bishop, Episcopal Diocese of Southwestern Virginia
J. Luther Mauney, president, Virginia Synod, Lutheran Church in America
Graydon E. McClellan, general presbyter, Washington City, United Presbyterian, USA
Earl H. McClenny, president, St. Paul's College
Francis X. Pirazzini, conference minister, Central Atlantic Conference, United Church of Christ
Lucius M. Polhill, executive secretary, Baptist General Association of Virginia
Paul Reich, rabbi, Congregation Beth El, Norfolk
John J. Russell, bishop, Roman Catholic Diocese of Richmond
David H. Scull, president, Virginia Council on Human Relations
Frank A. Settle, superintendent, Wytheville District, Holston Conference, Methodist Church
L. Bill Simmons, Virginia area minister, United Church of Christ
Stanley R. Wampler, executive secretary, Va. Tri-District Office, Church of the Brethren
Peyton R. Williams, ecumenical relations chairman, Episcopal Diocese of Southern Virginia

Return form . . . To PLANNING COMMITTEE, 512 East Main Street,
Richmond, Virginia 23219

From _____ the representative to the Nov. 28-29 agency

conference in Richmond will be _____

1. For the delegates' packet, we will send you a folder dealing with a conference emphasis (1,500 copies) ____

2. I urge the showing of these movies during the conference: (give sources)

(Query: Is it reasonable to expect these to be offered without rental fees?)

3. Our agency or its Virginia unit is good for $_____ on the conference budget. (This may have been cared for otherwise.)

4. I am at your service for the possibilities listed in your #3 (Oct. 19) letter. _____

5. We have tape recordings ___; art ___; or, _____ other material related to conference emphases that we would like to exhibit.

6. Other suggestions:

Information by: _____

OVER . .

From national headquarters staffs, expected at the November 28-29 Conference on People, Religion, and a Changing Virginia - in Richmond

Protestant Episcopal Division of Christian Citizenship -- Cornelius C. Tarplee

Methodist Board of Christian Social Concerns -- J. Elliott Corbett

United Presbyterian Commission on Religion and Race -- J. Metz Rollins

Church of the Brethren Social Welfare and Race Relations -- Lee G. Whipple

Lutheran Church in America Board of Social Ministries -- Herluf M. Jensen

National Catholic Conf. for Interracial Justice -- James J. McGuire & Tom Gibbons

Southern Regional Council -- Ed Stanfield, Moreland Smith, Emory Via

United Church Women -- Maza Tilghman

American Baptist Division of Christian Social Concern --

NCC Commission on Religion and Race --

National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods --

EUB Commission on Christian Social Action --

Southern Baptist Christian Life Commission --

National Catholic Welfare Conference Social Action Department -- John F. Cronin

Church of God Commission on Social Concerns --

National Conference of Christians and Jews -- Peter Mellette

Others:

Presbyterian, U.S., Division on Church and Society -- Malcolm P. Calhoun, Irvin Elligan, George A. Chauncey

American Jewish Committee -- Brant Coopersmith

Unitarian Universalist Department of Social Responsibility --

United Church of Christ Committee for Racial Justice Now -- W. Sterling Cary

American Friends Service Committee -- Wilton E. Hartzler

Methodist Board of Missions, Women's Division -- Peggy Billings

National Council of Catholic Men --

Mennonite Committee on Peace and Social Concerns -- Paul Peachey

Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith -- Jerome Levinrad, Ted Freedman (and others?)

Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity -- David Nickerson

National Council of Catholic Women --

Unitarian Universalist Fellowship for Social Justice --

Committee of Southern Churchmen -- Andrew Lipscomb

Disciples' Dept. of Christian Action and Community Service --

Others . . . what others should/may be expected? Please help us double-check.

OVER . . .

V/A Materials

PURPOSE To provide the first statewide occasion for Virginians of various religious persuasions to work together in light of their common Judaeo-Christian heritage toward constructive solutions for critical human problems in a time of significant social change.

SCHEDULE

Monday, November 28, 1966

10:00 a.m.-2:30 p.m., Registration, movies, informal conferences.

2:30 p.m., Opening Session. Address: Dr. George D. Kelsey of Drew University, Madison, N. J., "The Theological Bases for the Social Concern of the Religious Community."

4:00-5:30 p.m., Discussion groups

7:30 p.m., Father John F. Cronin, assistant director, Department of Social Action, National Catholic Welfare Conference, Washington, D. C., "The Role of the Religious Community in the Concern for Fair Housing."

8:30-10:00 p.m., Discussion groups
Afterhours conference with national headquarters officials

Tuesday, November 29

9:00 a.m., Worship, followed by Rabbi Jacob S. Rothschild of the Hebrew Benevolent Congregation, Atlanta, Ga., "The Role of the Religious Community in Changing Educational Patterns."

11:00-12:30, Discussion groups

12:45 p.m., Luncheon for college students, 13 N. 5th St., Dr. Samuel D. Proctor, president, Institute for Services to Education, Washington, D. C., "The College Community and Social Renewal."

2:30 p.m., Mr. Warren H. Turner, Jr., vice-president, Protestant Episcopal Executive Council, New York, "The Responsibility of the Religious Community to Set its Own House in Order."

4:00-5:30 p.m., Discussion groups

6:30 p.m., Conference Dinner, summary of findings, post-conference objectives, with the concluding challenge by Dr. Proctor.

9:00 p.m., Afterhours conferences with national executives.

Important new motion pictures touching on the conference themes will be shown throughout the schedule except during plenary sessions and meetings of discussion groups.

KELSEY

CRONIN

ROTHSCHILD

TURNER

PROCTOR

In an unprecedented undertaking, the statewide religious community invites you to participate in the first

CONFERENCE ON PEOPLE, RELIGION AND A CHANGING VIRGINIA

In Richmond: November 28-29, 1966

John Marshall Hotel (Monday, 2:00 p.m., through Tuesday, 9:00 p.m.)
Registration, movies and personal conferences will begin Monday at 10:00 a.m.

- Headline speakers on major topics
- Many leaders from national headquarters staffs at your service
- Exhibit of filmed and printed available helps
- Major college and seminary student participation
- Pre-conference studies across the state and post-conference opportunities for every community in Virginia

Moving toward a new day in inter-religious understanding and cooperation throughout Virginia

(Over for schedule)

TO: Virginia Conference, 17 East Cary Street, Richmond, Va. 23219 (703) 648-4444

☐ I enclose $7.50 registration fee for the November 28-29 Conference on People, Religion and a Changing Virginia (this fee covers the conference dinner). Please send suggestions for study and other helps. Please send me_____additional study guides 25¢ each to cover handling and mailing).

☐ I am making direct arrangements for room reservations with the John Marshall Hotel.

Name (print)_____

Address_____

Religious Affiliation:
(exact denominational or other name)

City_____ State_____ Zip Code_____

(Preliminary announcement)

CONFERENCE ON PEOPLE, RELIGION, AND A CHANGING VIRGINIA

For people of all religious backgrounds in Virginia

Richmond - November 28-29, 1966 - John Marshall Hotel

PURPOSE: To provide the first statewide occasion for Virginians of various religious persuasions to work together in light of their common Judaeo-Christian heritage toward constructive solutions for critical human problems in a time of significant social change.

WAYS OF PARTICIPATING: (1) Join with an interested group in your community, congregation or on your campus for pre-conference Sept.-Nov. studies in line with topics indicated below (study materials should be requested by Sept. 1 if they are not returned with reservation confirmation; where convenient it will help to enclose 25¢ for study materials to cover costs of producing and mailing). (2) Join in the Nov. 28-29 conference in Richmond where delegates are limited to 1,500, returning the form (below) n o w. (3) Be ready for the post-conference follow-up in congregations, community groups across religious lines, on campuses, etc.

CONFERENCE PREVUE: Monday, Sept. 19, 12:00 noon luncheon, Second Presbyterian Church, 13 N. 5th St., Richmond, for denominational executives, Sponsors (see over), committee members, social concern chairmen for religious bodies and state and area women's groups, one representative from each campus, and representatives of the press, radio and television.

NOVEMBER 28-29 HIGHLIGHTS (Each followed by 1½ hour small-group discussions)

1 - The Theological Bases for the Social Concern of the Religious Community, George D. Kelsey, professor of Christian Ethics, Drew University, Madison, N. J.

2 - The Role of the Religious Community in the Concern for Fair Housing, John F. Cronin, S. S., assistant director, Department of Social Action, National Catholic Welfare Conference, Washington

3 - The Role of the Religious Community in Changing Educational Patterns, Jacob M. Rothschild, rabbi, Hebrew Benevolent Congregation, Atlanta

4 - The Responsibility of the Religious Community to Set its Own House in Order, Warren H. Turner, Jr., vice-pres., Protestant Episcopal executive council, N.Y.

5 - Where Do We Go from Here? Carlyle Marney, pastor, Myers Park Baptist Church, Charlotte, N. C. (Closing by 9:00 p.m., Tuesday)

IN ADDITION, resource leaders will be drawn from national headquarters staffs for consultation with individuals and groups. A wide variety of printed, filmed, and recorded helps touching the discussion areas will be exhibited, showing what is available for local use.

STUDENT SECTION: Approximately 200 college students will participate (two from each organized religious group on each campus), sharing in the total program, but with a special luncheon featuring as speaker, Samuel D. Proctor, special assistant to the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity. Theological Seminaries will have 60 students participating in the conference.

AUSPICES OF THE CONFERENCE: What is believed to have enlisted the widest representation of religious backgrounds in this or possibly any state (see Sponsors' list, over) is supporting this conference. It is being planned by leaders from the Virginia Council on Human Relations in cooperation with representatives of 18 or more religious organizations and official bodies.

COSTS: Religious bodies are underwriting the major expenses of the conference, so that the cost to each individual will be only the $7.50 registration fee which includes the conference dinner. Travel, room and meals must be arranged individually. Richmonders are being encouraged to extend hospitality. A bloc of rooms has been set aside at the John Marshall Hotel and individual and group reservations should be made there n o w.

WHAT TO DO NOW: (1) Publicize the significance of this conference; (2) Encourage others to join with you in pre-conference preparation; (3) Make certain that you have a place to stay for two nights in Richmond; and (4) Return this form n o w:

- -

TO: Virginia Conference, 17 East Cary Street, Richmond, Va. 23219 (703) 648-4444

___(x) I enclose $7.50 registration fee for the November 28-29 Conference on People, Religion and a Changing Virginia (this fee covers the conference dinner). Please send the study suggestions when they become available.

___(x) I am making direct arrangements for room reservations with the John Marshall Hotel.

NAME (print)_____ Religious Affiliation_____
(exact denominational or other name)

Address_____ City_____ Zip Code_____

SPONSORS

The call to the November 28-29, 1966, Conference on People, Religion, and a Changing Virginia and the invitation to participate in it are extended by the following responsible leaders of the statewide religious community who are the conference Sponsors:

Theodore F. Adams, former president, Baptist World Alliance
George W. Baber, bishop, Christian Methodist Episcopal Church
Henry C. Bunton, bishop, Christian Methodist Episcopal Church
Mrs. James J. Burns, president, Richmond Diocesan Council of Catholic Women
Constantine N. Dombalis, president, Virginia Council of Greek Orthodox Churches
J. M. Ellison, president emeritus, Virginia Union University
C. L. Evans, executive secretary, Baptist Allied Bodies of Virginia
Egbert J. Figaro, C. S. Sp., dean, St. Emma Military Academy
H. E. Finger, Jr., bishop, Holston Conference of the Methodist Church
Emmet A. Frank, rabbi, Beth El Hebrew Congregation, Alexandria
T. A. Freeman, exec. secy., Abingdon Presbytery, Presbyterian Church, U. S.
Floyd L. Fulk, supt., Evangelical United Brethren Church, Virginia Conference
Robert F. Gibson, bishop, Episcopal Diocese of Virginia
Ariel L. Goldburg, rabbi, Temple Beth Ahabah, Richmond
Walter C. Gum, bishop, Virginia Conference of the Methodist Church
Wilton E. Hartzler, exec. secy., S'eastern regional office, American Friends Service Committee
Walker B. Healy, moderator, Presbyterian, U. S., Synod of Virginia
Mrs. Lawrence Hilgeman, president, United Church Women
Guy Hepler, Salvation Army divisional commander (Lt.-Col.) for Virginia
Joseph H. Hodges, bishop, Roman Catholic Diocese of Wheeling
Ernest L. Honts, pastor, Talbot Park Baptist Church, Norfolk
Allix B. James, dean, School of Religion, Virginia Union University
James A. Jones, president, Union Theological Seminary in Virginia
Walter Royal Jones, Unitarian-Universalist representative, Charlottesville
H. Myron Kauffman, president, Virginia Council of Churches; executive secretary, Virginia Convention of Christian Churches
William H. Kohn, president, Southeastern Dist., the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod
Charles E. S. Kraemer, president, Presbyterian School of Christian Education
Byrum C. Lee, Pearisburg, chairman, Virginia Ministerial Assn., Church of God, Anderson, Ind.
William H. Marmion, bishop, Episcopal Diocese of Southwestern Virginia
J. Luther Mauney, president, Virginia Synod, Lutheran Church in America
Graydon E. McClellan, general presbyter, Washington City, United Presbyterian, USA
Earl H. McClenny, president, St. Paul's College
Francis X. Pirazzini, conf. minister, Central Atlantic Conf., United Church of Christ
Lucius M. Polhill, executive secretary, Baptist General Association of Virginia
Paul Reich, rabbi, Congregation Beth El, Norfolk
John J. Russell, bishop, Roman Catholic Diocese of Richmond
David H. Scull, president, Virginia Council on Human Relations
Frank A. Settle, supt., Wytheville Dist., Holston Conf., Methodist Church
L. Bill Simmons, Virginia Area Minister, United Church of Christ
Stanley R. Wampler, exec. secy., Va. Tri-Dist. Office, Church of the Brethren
Peyton R. Williams, ecumenical relations chairman, Episcopal Diocese of Southern Virginia

o-v-e-r

NOVEMBER 28 • 29, 1966
JOHN MARSHALL HOTEL
RICHMOND

CONFERENCE ON PEOPLE, RELIGION AND A CHANGING VIRGINIA

Under auspices of the Virginia Council on Human Relations in cooperation with leaders of the statewide religious community

Virginia Conference Office: 17 East Cary Street, Richmond 23219, Dial (703) 648-4444

In replying, please address
512 East Main St., Richmond 23219

November 4, 1966

VaCHR.

Mr. Emory F. Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street NW
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

I am surprised that this list has not come into your hands earlier, because it has gone out with practically everything being mailed in the last few months, and I know that at one time a quantity of the papers were sent to the office there. In fact, I intended enclosing one in the recent mailing to you. I am sorry if we have missed something.

Faithfully yours,

ANB/pg
encl.

PLANNING COMMITTEE

AUBREY N. BROWN, JR., CHAIRMAN
A. PURNELL BAILEY
MYRON BERMAN
WADE H. BRYANT
GEORGE A. CHAUNCEY
JOHN H. COFFEY
ROBERT L. COMBS
MRS. E. L. GLOSSBRENNER
WILLIAM J. GOLD
MRS. ROBERT J. HABENICHT
ALLIX B. JAMES
H. MYRON KAUFFMAN
JEROME L. LEVINRAD
JAMES P. LINCOLN
JOHN J. McMAHON
MRS. JEROME MEYER
MYRON S. MILLER
H. DICKINSON RATHBUN
ROBERT R. SALA
L. BILL SIMMONS

SPONSORS

The call to the November 28-29, 1966, Conference on People, Religion, and a Changing Virginia and the invitation to participate in it are extended by the following responsible leaders of the statewide religious community who are the conference Sponsors:

Theodore F. Adams, former president, Baptist World Alliance
George W. Baber, bishop, Christian Methodist Episcopal Church
Henry C. Bunton, bishop, Christian Methodist Episcopal Church
Mrs. James J. Burns, president, Richmond Diocesan Council of Catholic Women
Constantine N. Dombalis, president, Virginia Council of Greek Orthodox Churches
J. M. Ellison, president emeritus, Virginia Union University
C. L. Evans, executive secretary, Baptist Allied Bodies of Virginia
Egbert J. Figaro, C. S. Sp., dean, St. Emma Military Academy
H. E. Finger, Jr., bishop, Holston Conference of the Methodist Church
Emmet A. Frank, rabbi, Beth El Hebrew Congregation, Alexandria
T. A. Freeman, executive secretary, Abingdon Presbytery, Presbyterian Church, U. S.
Floyd L. Fulk, superintendent, Evangelical United Brethren Church, Virginia Conference
Robert F. Gibson, bishop, Episcopal Diocese of Virginia
Ariel L. Goldburg, rabbi, Temple Beth Ahabah, Richmond
Walter C. Gum, bishop, Virginia Conference of the Methodist Church
Wilton E. Hartzler, executive secretary, Southeastern regional office, American Friends Service Committee
Walker B. Healy, moderator, Presbyterian, U. S., Synod of Virginia
Mrs. Lawrence Hilgeman, president, United Church Women
Guy Hepler, Salvation Army divisional commander (Lt.-Col.) for Virginia
Joseph H. Hodges, bishop, Roman Catholic Diocese of Wheeling
Ernest L. Honts, pastor, Talbot Park Baptist Church, Norfolk
Allix B. James, dean, School of Religion, Virginia Union University
James A. Jones, president, Union Theological Seminary in Virginia
Walter Royal Jones, Unitarian-Universalist representative, Charlottesville
H. Myron Kauffman, president, Virginia Council of Churches; executive secretary, Virginia Convention of Christian Churches
William H. Kohn, president, Southeastern District, the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod
Charles E. S. Kraemer, president, Presbyterian School of Christian Education
Byrum C. Lee, Pearisburg, chairman, Virginia Ministerial Association, Church of God, Anderson, Ind.
William H. Marmion, bishop, Episcopal Diocese of Southwestern Virginia
J. Luther Mauney, president, Virginia Synod, Lutheran Church in America
Graydon E. McClellan, general presbyter, Washington City, United Presbyterian, USA
Earl H. McClenny, president, St. Paul's College
Francis X. Pirazzini, conference minister, Central Atlantic Conference, United Church of Christ
Lucius M. Polhill, executive secretary, Baptist General Association of Virginia
Paul Reich, rabbi, Congregation Beth El, Norfolk
John J. Russell, bishop, Roman Catholic Diocese of Richmond
David H. Scull, president, Virginia Council on Human Relations
Frank A. Settle, superintendent, Wytheville District, Holston Conference, Methodist Church
L. Bill Simmons, Virginia area minister, United Church of Christ
Stanley R. Wampler, executive secretary, Va. Tri-District Office, Church of the Brethren
Peyton R. Williams, ecumenical relations chairman, Episcopal Diocese of Southern Virginia

November 1, 1966

Mr. Aubrey N. Brown, Jr.
Planning Chairman
Conference on People, Religion and a Changing Virginia
17 East Carry Street
Richmond, Virginia 23219

Dear Mr. Brown:

It would be most helpful in preparing for the conference and in making suggestions of materials or films to have a fairly specific idea as to what the conference emphasis will be. Could you send me a copy of a proposed program or even a list of conference topics?

I know that this must be a very busy time for you; however, I need a little bit more to go on.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

MEET THE EXECUTIVES

We have a cordial welcome for the national and regional executives of religious bodies who are participating in our conference as consultants and resource people. They are assigned to discussion groups. At other times they will be found in Exhibit Hall B at their designated tables around the wall, in the order indicated below.

1. American Friends Service Committee, Wilton E. Hartzler, southeastern regional office, High Point, N. C.

2. American Jewish Committee, Brant Coopersmith, director, Washington

3. Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Jerome Levinrad, Richmond; Ted Freedman, Atlanta

4. Church of the Brethren Service Commission, Lee G. Whipple, Elgin, Ill.

5. Committee of Southern Churchmen, Andrew Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn.

6. Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, David Nickerson, Atlanta

7. Lutheran Church in America Board of Social Ministries, Herluf M. Jensen, New York

8. Mennonite Committee on Peace and Social Concerns, Paul Peachey, executive secretary, Washington, D. C.

9. Methodist Board of Christian Social Concerns, J. Elliott Corbett, Washington, D. C.
   Virginia Conference Board, Robert Regan, Jr., president

10. National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, Southern Field Service, James J. McGuire, New Orleans; Thomas H. Gibbons, Jr., Chicago (Monday only)

11. National Catholic Welfare Conference Social Action Dept., John F. Cronin, Washington, D. C.

12. National Conference of Christians and Jews, Va.-N.C., Peter Mellette, Richmond

13. National Council of Churches' Commission on Religion and Race, Anna Arnold Hedgeman, New York

14. Presbyterian, U. S., Division on Church and Society, Malcolm P. Calhoun, Irvin Elligan, George A. Chauncey, Richmond

15. Protestant Episcopal Division of Christian Citizenship, Cornelius C. Tarplee, New York

16. Southern Regional Council, J. Edwin Stanfield, Moreland Smith, Emory Via, Atlanta

17. United Church of Christ Committee for Racial Justice Now, W. Sterling Cary, New York

18. United Church Women, Maza Tilghman, New York

19. United Presbyterian, USA, Commission on Religion and Race, J. Metz Rollins, New York
    Office of Church and Society, John H. Marion, Jr., Nashville, Tenn.

20. YWCA National Board, Southern Region, Susan Love, Atlanta

21. Virginia Council on Human Relations, Robert L. Combs, Abner E. Lee, Bailey G. Wharton

22. Virginia Council of Churches, Myron S. Miller, George A. Williams

Opportunities

Some of these executives are expected by Monday morning (Exhibit Hall B). They will serve as resource people in the discussion groups. They will be in Exhibit Hall B for Afterhours Conferences each night in so far as there is a response (i.e., some will). At the tables in Exhibit Hall B you will find helpful material for your use.

You may wish to set aside a table for 10 for the conference dinner with an executive as the piece de resistance. If so, secure his or her consent, select the table on Tuesday (Grand Hall), prepare a card with his or her name and a "Reserved" sign and place it on the table, notifying your group as to the location. Caution: Do not conflict with another group's plan.

R E T U R N F O R M . . . .

TO: Virginia Council on Human Relations o 17 East Cary St. o Richmond, Va. 23219

Please send me the conference materials indicated below:

1. For congregational or organizational distribution and/or community mailing:

_____ copies of the follow-up bulletin on the conference, "The Religious Community and a Changing Virginia," 25 for 50¢ (2¢ tax), minimum; $1 per 100 (3¢ tax)

2. _____ set(s) of the major addresses and findings of the Conference on People, Religion and a Changing Virginia @ $1.25 per set (plus 4¢ tax). Single copies of individual addresses: 25¢ each plus 1¢ tax.

3. The following tape recordings of the major addresses (3 3/4 ips):

___ recording on 1 tape of Kelsey, Cronin, Rothschild, Turner $7.00 (plus 21¢ tax) ___ recording on 1 tape of the two Proctor addresses (luncheon and conference dinner), $4.00 (plus 12¢ tax)

4. I wish to have the 1-hour movie, "A Time for Burning," @ $10 (30¢ tax) for one of the following 24-hour (or less) periods (indicate preferences):

Dates: (1) (2) (3)

You will be notified of a confirmed date.

This 16 mm movie is good to arrange for community showing, inviting religious leaders of the area to see it and to join in a subsequent discussion period.

Information, Please

Please indicate here or, preferably, on a separate sheet, any steps that have been (are being) taken in your area as a follow-up of the conference in individual congregations and/or communities. What do you hope will be done? Names and addresses of most likely people who may be expected to see that something effective is done.

Please ship materials indicated above to:

Name (print)_____ Address_____

Organization_____ City_____ Zip_____

I am enclosing $_____ (be sure to add indicated sales tax)

SPEECH OF DR. SAMUEL D. PROCTOR

Conference on People, Religion and A Changing Virginia

November 29, 1966

Richmond, Virginia

. . . Concluding here this theme on People, Religion and A Changing Virginia, I would like first to get rid of the notion that some of us seem to be obsessed by the notion that churches as churches have failed and that this is why we are where we are. I think the one thing this conference ought to settle on is this --- that the churches cannot take the full blame for all the inertia and lethargy which has settled down upon us. The church cannot be responsible for the invention of slavery, the church cannot be responsible for the agony of the reconstruction or for all of the mistakes of the past out of which today's tensions have grown. The church as a matter of fact embraces a wide variety of people covering the entire spectrum of these issues and it cannot claim to be responsible for a posture of cleanliness and purity in matters that are social. It did not start out with this in mind and because it is so inclusive in terms of the American society and its entire fabric it is really very naive for us to continue this breast beating about the failure of the church.

The church is made up of the same folk we see on Broad Street, on Franklin and on Second Street, and there is no need to count them twice. We count these people in the Chamber of Commerce, in the political parties, in the labor unions, and in their professional associations, and that is who they are. And the mere fact that it is Sunday morning 11:00 o'clock or sometime on the Sabbath Day in the synagogue does not make any difference. These people are the same folk. And therefore the religious institutions cannot be held responsible for taking one hour or two hours in some place and reverse all that has happened for the remainder of the week. Now we could change all of this by changing requirements for religious membership, but no one is proposing that. The budget cannot stand it. But this has been in my mind a long time that whenever religious people come together they can spend the entire time talking about the failure of the church as we know it today, the church as a visible institution with mortgages, offices and real estate.

I remember riding on an airplane down to Charlotte to give a talk at a Southern Baptist retreat down there and some smart aleck at the airport arranged for me to be seated with Billy Graham going down. This was a very delightful experience because he is an engaging person and the one wonderful thing that happens to you when you are sitting with him is that the hostesses spend an awful lot of time dilly-dallying around because among other things he is a very handsome man, and these girls enjoy his company. Well, as we sat talking about everything in the whole world we discovered that we had run out of time. The plane was on the ground in Charlotte and we still were only half-way through our conversation. He said, "Now you have got to come to my place tomorrow." I told him I would be there.

I went to sleep that evening and I was going to stay overnight and go up and have breakfast with Billy Graham on top of his mountain. He has a mountain there in North Carolina. Now, I don't want to give you the wrong impression because this is a small mountain, but there is room enough on top of it, I suppose, for Billy Graham, and God, and Sam Proctor. We went up on top of the mountain and had breakfast.

Now on the way from Charlotte over to the Southern Baptist retreat there in Black Mountain near Montreat, North Carolina, where the Presbyterians have a hide-away also, we stopped at a little restaurant to get gasoline and a sandwich. One of the high school principals had met me to drive me over and I was in the deepest euphoria, after all having just flown down with Billy Graham, I was going to have breakfast with him the next morning. Incidently, he had just been at the White House talking with the President and it was one of those fellows from the White House staff -- one of the chauffeurs -- who happened to know me and who pulled this trick and arranged for us to sit together, because he does not like preachers and he thought anything he could do to embarrass us would be just wonderful. We stopped to get some gasoline and I asked this lady if we could have a sandwich and a cup of coffee. She said no, because I was Negro. But she had a sign in the window which said "Jesus Saves." So I tried to find out from her which thing really controlled her life. Now, I said to her: "First, I want you to know that they have just passed the Civil Rights Bill which says you have got to serve me by law. Do you respond to that? If you don't, let's try something else. I have worked in North Carolina, and just got off the airplane with Dr. Billy Graham and I am going to have breakfast with him. Does that impress you? And finally you have got a sign in your window which says 'Jesus Saves'. From what has he saved you?"

Well, none of these appeals got anywhere, but more than that we had a wonderful time. We were really laughing. It was a joking thing ---- deep fellowship. But I didn't get my sandwich, and I didn't get my cup of coffee. Now, here is a lady who belongs to a church and I am sure she is a Biblereading, testifying and praying dear sister. But the fact is she belongs to a lot of other communities too and these other communities to which she belong are the things that have really shaped her views on who gets a sandwich out of her truck-stop in rural North Carolina.

So this brings us to the next consideration, that the people in the churches have as many reasons for being in the churches as the single reason of prime religious motivation. These people are joined together by all kinds of concentric circles of concern. It starts out with family, it moves on to ethical centricity that seems somehow to be edified and strengthened by giving it the stamp of God's approval occasionally, but the fact of religious motivation that has something to do with social change, this can be a very peripheral area of the religious life in the institutional church and we should acknowledge this and move on and try to find other bases for manifesting our concern for social change rather than what the institutional church can do as a church. It is also true that it is getting rather late for us to be talking about this because a secular-oriented humanism is overtaking all of us.

The university community and the political community are just filled with all kinds of new leadership and new ideas. The field of journalism-- I remember talking to a recent leader who told me that a religious journalist from a New York newspaper had given a speech which made more sense to him in terms of religion than almost any he had heard from his pastor. Now, what I am saying is that here are people who start out with a kind of secularism that puts us to shame if we are going to lay down the performance of the church itself as church as something to be compared with secular humanism in our society. It really doesn't look very good by comparison. Now, I think we are all sophisticated enough to know that in this secular humanism there is largely the sentimentia of Jewish and Christian values that our grandparents have poured into the society and these secularists are draining on this. Now, how far they can cruise on it I don't know. I don't know when it is going to run out, but they are going full steam ahead right now.

I remember, in the Peace Corps we found relatively few volunteers who had any church affiliation at all, and one of the most troublesome moments I ever has was in riding down a little highway way down in North Nigeria going to visit a young girl from Annapolis, Maryland, who chose to be way out there by herself. She told me that he had been having roommates and sisters sharing all of her private property for so long that she just wanted to get on the edge of the desert and work with the Moslems or somebody to get away from all of this togetherness which has been imposed upon her all of her life. We said, all right, but this required visits, so I had a wagon loaded with four fellows going out to visit her. We talked about everything in this wagon, and among the things we talked about was religion and theology. They always teased me about being a preacher, but those fellows made no claim religiously whatsoever. They came from the big-name universities of the country and they had all had very formidable arguments for their atheism and their lack of churchliness. But on the way out there, here came a missionary trailing us in an American Chevrolet. We finally stopped and he came up behind us, saying we looked like Americans. Finding that we were, the fellows shook hands with him and he said he wanted us to come to his house after our visit and share some nice old American Maxwell House coffee, some good old American devils food cake, and some good old American this and American that and American the other. Now, we had been telling the volunteers that their success out there depended on their ability to get along out there without American this, American that and American the other, so he was just choking them to death, you know -- as a Christian missionary out there with all of this reliance on things being shipped out while these volunteers were taught that their real value was the extent to which they could identify themselves with the people, eat their food, drink their water and show them how to survive out there. Now, with all of your brains and technology, if you can't figure out how to survive out here for 24 months, how do you expect the Lord's other people to stay out here for a lifetime? So you have got to live out this thing by just staying here living on their market, eating their vegatables and fruit. Now here this missionary was telling them that he was going to exempt them from all of this you see. His motivation really should have been much higher. But when we came back they did not want to stop there. They said, "That phoney, we don't want to have anything to do with him." But I said, "No, now you are beset with spiritual pride which gives him oneupmanship on you. You have got to go there and see him anyway." When we got there, he pulled out his New Testament, saying, "Before we do anything else I want to know, are you fellows saved?" That was awful, I didn't know how to start with that. They had no idea what he meant, because as far as they were concerned he was the one who needed to be saved!

Yes, I am telling you that this secularism is overtaking us and if we are going to equate the performance of church as church in the area of social renewal, then this is not really the place to stake our claim. We have to stake it on a remnant within the church, and those who have spilled over outside of the church who may be called the remnant in exile. We have to count on persons like you who belong to the total family of institutional religion but who really cannot be identified with it in its totality and neither can any single institution identify with a group like this. This makes abundant sense and relieves us of the burden of having to keep a box score on what the church is doing as over against the problems or over against what is being done to redeem us by persons with a secular humanistic orientation. Now, when we come together with this kind of a candid appraisal of who you really are and why we are here, there are some things we ought to settle on, and one thing is this -- we have never been at this point before. And when you start talking about where we haven't been and how far we need to go, let us thank God that we haven't ever been this far before.

We are standing on a new plateau tonight and we are giving ourselves a vision of the horizon that we have really never seen. When those youngsters came running through that door singing together, I just sat there transfixed, and I felt that the nobliest thing I could do would be to give them my time and let them keep on singing and bouncing and clapping their hands to the glory of freedom. We have never been here before.

I look at television, almost every Saturday that is where you will find me -- looking at television. Do you realize that almost no major college team - north or south - fields its aggregation on a Saturday today without a Negro being somewhere in there. And what a shock I got to find out that this quarterback down there at Florida was a Negro. This just shocked me. And what a shock I also got when I heard that Baylor University, after beating Syracuse to smithereens by half time with that outstanding Floyd Little running for Syracuse, then said to the nation, now having beaten you with our white quarterback we want to show you that we have a Negro halfback too, and brought him out in the second half when they were already ahead by five touchdowns. We have never been here before.

I gave a commencement address over here in the Northern Neck of Virginia last June and one of the most humble looking young fellows in the class -- tall, thin, bright-eyed young fellow -- who sat there watching me all through the commencement address, was later awarded, what do you suppose -- from Lancaster, Virginia - White Stone, the white that is no whiter -- imagine a full-paid four-year scholarship to V.P.I., with topnotch board scores out of that little fishing and crabbing community of White Stone, Virginia. We have never been here before.

Public facilities opened, but I don't know what I am going to do about problems like this. I took a nap this afternoon and when I awakened I wanted to get fresh to study my talk tonight, so I called and asked for a cup of coffee and it costed a dollar. I don't know who is going to pay for that but all I am saying is that it is all right being here you know, but I am reminded of what my coach at A & T said when he kept going after the Negro athletes and finding out that brotherhood was spreading all over the place and all the halfbacks and topnotched forwards were going to Wake Forest and Duke. He said, "Segregation killed my daddy, but integration is killing me."

We have here in the State of Virginia a new United States Senator who was elected with avowed, open and overt support and campaigning by the Negro community. We have never been here before. We have a Negro in the U.S. Senate, one in the Cabinet, we have a Negro Solicitor General, a Negro on the Federal Reserve Board. Why 116 Negroes sit in the State Legislatures in the Senate and House of the 50 States of the Union. There is a Sheriff in Macon County, Georgia, and a Mayor of Flint, Michigan. These are all Negroes; we have never been here before. And I tell you I think that when we stop to assess what is going on it is a very healthy thing to think about what we have got to do, but it is also a very healthy thing to recognize that some things have happened in the United States and there are some things that should cause us to take heart regarding the future.

Now, the next thing we ought to do is to understand that we have run out of token gestures and we have got to face the hard issues. This is a great conference, but this is about the last time - you can't top this you know. We have just run the whole gamut. We have done everything -- bringing together 1,000 people at the John Marshall Hotel in 1966. This is about the summit of all the talkfest that we can plan and I don't believe that we are going to have much time left for this kind of a deliberative session on the same problem year after year. So, let us face it now. We have run out of token gestures such as one member of a choir, a meeting voting one member this, and somebody as the chairman and somebody as the vice-chairman. We have got our first Negro this and first Negro that, and we have even crowned a Negro girl a May Queen. We have done all of these nice polite things.

Now, we have come down to the hard issue regarding social change. These things have been polarized by the whole Black Power discussion and by the white fascists who seem to be growing and coming out of the woodwork, because they think if they are ever going to come out they had better come out now because things are getting serious, you see. Now the polarization of the issues has caused Negroes and whites to do an awful lot of soul-searching which makes the game today really far more genuine than some of the other things what gave us a little fluttering of hope but really were not very long-standing. Today, there is deep soul-searching. Negroes have been called to insularity and to separation by advocates of futility and Black Power and black cynicism. There have been sloganeers who have come among us and have said it is futile and nothing will happen, and we may as well start now some kind of Mau-Mau movement. The Negro has not only had to turn down the overt manifestations of this, but all of the subtleties of insularity in America. They have had to say no -- middle-class Negroes have had to be labeled Uncle Toms and all sorts of things because they have had to say no to all of these overtones of violent reaction and of black separatism in America. This had to be done in the open, in the press, on television - everywhere. The white community has had to sit and watch the Negroes wash their laundry in public, but it had to be done. In the same way, the white community had to be bold in turning down bids by the white fascists. So, this polarization has brought us closer and closer to the real hard basic issues. And passing out plaques and flowers now seems to be like taking aspirin for polio, as close to the issues as we have been brought by the white fascists and Black Power advocates.

The next thing is that the poverty program has snatched the cover off America, and has shown us what we've really got. With all of this abundance and growing gross national product, and with this $62 billion defense budget, the poverty people set a minimum standard of decency at $3,000 for a family of four and found out that there were 30 million white people in this country under that line and eight million Negroes. This comes as a shock to lots of people who thought that the whole poverty program was for Negroes, but four-fifths of the people who are covered by this 38 million figure are white people. White people in the city slums, white people in the rural poor areas of our Southland largely. But! when you consider that there are only 20 million Negroes, you see with eight million that means that two-fifths of the Negroes are in this poverty group which characterizes the Negro people as being the object of the poverty program. They are so predominantly poor, and those who are above the $3,000-line hover very close to it in the lower $4,000 and $5,000 and $6,000 levels. Now, is this country going to advertise itself all around the world as being the best system -- free enterprise system -- and representative of its government? If we are going to tell the people all over Asia, Latin America and Africa to follow us and we will show them the way, then we have got to do something and do something in a hurry about the 40 million people in this country who have an income inadequate for the minimum basic needs of a family of four. And if this system cannot do better than it is doing, then it raises grave questions about the extent to which we should advocate it for other people.

So, this brings the issue close to home. America has something very, very serious at stake with the failure to answer the economic need of the Negro poor in the heart of the city and then something like 30 million white poor who are largely rimming the city centers and in the rural suburbs across the country side. But the other thing that brings this issue so close to home are three elections which took place recently -- the election in Arkansas, the election in Maryland, and the election in Georgia. When candidates took off the muffles and came right out in the open and made these elections very, very obviously racial elections. When America had to stop and see how the liberal white community and the black community got together to meet this confrontation, to my mind it was most encouraging but it was again the first time we had to face this overt national political phenomenon when people were not hiding anything.

Mr. Mahony said, "Your home is your castle, protect it." Everybody knew what he was talking about. Everybody knew that he wasn't planning to have white folk live in the same homes with Negroes. People knew that was not what he was talking about.

Now then, with this kind of character, what has religion got to do with it? The persons who talk with the greatest sophistication use other words; they don't use the terms that have to do with religion. They say that we have to correct these by sociological methods, meaning that the data have to be changed. They say that the correction has to be made by educational methods; that we need a new kind of pedagogy that teaches people who have been left out by finding new symbols for them and meeting them at the threshold of their experience and tying them in to what middle-class people have been assuming all the time. You have got to prepare persons who have been in a non-verbal childhood for a verbal existence. You have got to have psychological renewal. We have got to melt down the ego and prepare people to live with one another and accept the people who are different without getting sick. We have got to have an economic reappraisal of things in equalized job opportunities. We have got to have a more responsible political representation. All of these things are said and the terminology being used is all very sophisticated -- sociological, educational, psyshological, economic and political. But I wonder if you recognize that all of these things are derivative. The psychologists describe things that have already happened. The economists are talking about what people have done. The sociologists take the minutes on what we have done. All of these things have to do with man after he has decided something. The scientists, and especially the social scientists, have been a long time acknowledging that they don't make anything happen. All they do is take notes on what has already transpired. Now what makes something happen? This action comes out of high religion.

So, we start out by saying that the church cannot be blamed with the failures or the successes, but we are not talking about religion when we talk about the church as church. That is not the same thing as saying we don't need a renewal of the spiritual life. As a matter of fact, I don't see how we are going to get out of this at all unless there is a renewal of the spiritual life. What does religion have to offer people who are trying to renew society? What does religion offer that nothing else in the society offers? Well, religion calls us to be penitent without really denying our basic selfhood. While other organizations are complimenting us on what we are in the periphery of our lives, religion comes to the heart of the matter and summons us to penitence without denying our selfhood, religion challenges man's self definition without destroying his dignity. Religion calls a man to recognize an unseen eternal order without exempting him from the requirements of temporal spatial demands around him. Religion summons him to infinity, but all the while reminds him of his finiteness. Nothing else does this for us but religion. Religion calls him to solitude, to refreshment and to rest, but it also defies his total withdrawal and requires him to leave the mountain and return to the level place where his brothers suffer. Religion recognizes his individuality before God, but requires him to save himself by finding communion with his neighbor. Nothing else does this for us. Religion assures man of God's help in every high endeavor, but demands the enlistment of his own images and his own commitment. It teaches him to live in a world of imperfection in both nature and in the will of man without losing his vision of a God of perfection that calls him to holiness. This is the work and the role of religion in the renewal of society, and we cannot make it without the highest ministrations of sound and deep religious experience. As the prophet said, as you lengthen your cords, you must strengthen your stakes, and nothing is going to support all of the high aspirations we have for a new society and a new Virginia like the proper manifestations of high religion in our midst.

Now, you may say that this is a long way around to say that people ought to love each other, and it is. It is such a long way around because every generation has to say it in the words that he understands. It is so easy to reject the vocabulary of another age and at the same time reject the words of the vocabulary and the experiences that the vocabulary stood for. Every passing generation has to ask itself in its own language, in its own thought currency how to say love in terms that will challenge, and inspire, and lift and edify. As Tennyson said, "Our little systems have their day; they have their day and cease to be." We have got to say it for our generation.

When Jesus met the disciples of John the Baptist, asking him if he were the Messiah or should they look for another, he said, "You go back and tell John what you have seen and heard -- the blind see, the lame walk, the deaf hear, the lepers are cleansed, the dead are raised, and the gospel is preached to the poor." Now, that is what the Messiah should look like in the First Century. The work for our age is different. Our freedom grows as we snatch little children out of the jaws of poverty. as we show new hope to adult illiterates, as we teach people how to live next door to those of a different hue, as we rebuild rat-infested ghettoes and reverse the spiral of futility in the lives of one-half million rejected youths, as we recapture the truths about the world and nature, and convey them to the late learners in language and symbols that they know and can understand, as we challenge the shapers of society to create an environment of hope for those for whom the shadows of hopelessness have stood still for altogether too long. As we awaken the gaints of business and industry to a wider challenge than the profit bearer and erase the whole line of color that stubbornly resist the upward mobility of the heirs of the slave system in this country and reassert in clarion tones the themes that made this country great -- that the Creator has endowed all men with rights that none can alienate, namely: life, and liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

RESOLUTION OF THE SPONSORS

The 1966 Conference on People, Religion and a Changing Virginia has been immeasurably gratifying to us who served as its sponsors. The coming together of 1,000 people from all parts of Virginia for two days in Richmond, representing more than 18 religious affiliations and both of our major racial groups, has been in itself a milestone in our state's history.

In order not to lose the inspiration and the impetus of this Conference, the sponsors recommended that we begin as soon as possible to hold a series of one-day regional conferences in different parts of Virginia in the course of the next year. Participants in this Conference, along with local Councils on Human Relations and other appropriate groups, will be asked to help with these gatherings.

As sponsors we do not desire to establish any new organization which would duplicate work already being carried on. However, we propose to keep in touch with one another to facilitate the future cooperation of our religious bodies, and to make it possible from time to time to give expression to sentiments of the religious community of the state on major questions of public concern. If specific action projects commend themselves, we shall also be in a position to recommend support for them.

Since our respective bodies differ widely in administrative structure, it should be noted that in forming a continuation committee of conference sponsors, and in such other statements as we may make, we speak as individuals.

Unanimously adopted by the Sponsors in attendance at the Conference.

[Nov. 29, 1966]

Res(?)

A Report on the Group Discussions

by

Rev. George A. Chauncey
Presbyterian Church in the U. S.
Richmond, Virginia

iiii

The Conference on People, Religion and a Changing Virginia was not designed to produce "official conference findings." It was designed, rather, to provide its more than one thousand participants with an opportunity to hear stimulating addresses by outstanding religious leaders, and then to discuss these addresses in small groups. The approximately forty discussion groups met four times during the conference. What follows is a report on some of the things discussed.

iiii

Three basic issues were examined in the first discussion period following Dr. George D. Kelsey's address on "The Theological Bases for the Social Concern of the Religious Community." One of these was the gap between our creed and our deed, or more precisely, the gap between the faith we profess and the faith by which we actually live. How does it happen, several groups asked, that we can pledge our allegience to the Sovereign God who requires that we do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with him - and yet live lives of lovelessness, racial pride, and indifference to social justice? Is it a matter of ignorance? Is it that we do not know our duty? Some groups seemed to feel that this is at least part of our problem. Said one group: "If we are, as Dr. Kelsey says, members of the Kingdom of God partly, it is apparent that some of us do not know the party platform!" Many groups thus irged that there be crash programs of theological and moral education in our congregations in which the demands of God for love and justice are made inescapably plain. Other groups, however, pointed out that the basic problem is not ignorance but sin, and that what is most needed, even of us within the religious tradition, is not so much a new idea as a new heart.

This thought led many groups to reflect on the process by which hearts - i.e., basic attitudes - are changed. Here considerable attention was given to the role which changed social structures have on transforming social attitudes. It was widely agreed that the enactment and enforcement of just laws do not in themselves solve all our problems, but they do take us a giant step forward - among other ways, by creating new situations in which new attitudes can emerge.

Finally, in that first discussion period, the helpful distinction between legal desegregation and genuine integration, between a society of just laws and a community of right relationships, was noted by several groups. No one wanted to by-pass the former in their search for the latter. No one wanted to ignore the demand for confrontation in their plea for community. It was widely recognized in this conference that we must do justice before we can love mercy, and that we must do both before we can walk humbly with our God. Yet in all this, it was recognized that the society for which the religiously sensitive person must work is one in which, as Dr Kelsey put it, "justice has been lifted above mere legality and purified by love."

In the second discussion period, following Father John F. Cronin's address on "The Role of the Religious Community in the Concern for Fair Housing," two attitudes were apparent. One was a general sense of the importance of this issue. The other was a widespread awareness that many white people are acutely sensitive at this particular point. Thus, one group observed that fair and open housing is the key to advance in other areas of the struggle for the just society - school and church integration, for examples; while another group observed that housing is an area in which we tend to fall back on our feelings rather than our faith - or the facts.

Why is this the case? Why is the white man so afraid of having a black man as his neighbor? Several groups discussed this question, developing many of the reasons mentioned by Father Cronin and adding others of their own. We are dealing here, it was said often, not only with the problem of race but also with the problem of poverty, and thus we face alienation, misunderstandings, and prejudice not only along color lines but along class lines as well.

While many groups were talking about how sensitive the white man is to the housing situation today, other were contending that he really is not sensitive to the problem at all - not, that is, until his own neighborhood (and his own economic self-interest) is affected. And the middle-class Negro is not sufficiently concerned either, some said. As evidence of this lack of concern, these persons pointed to the fact that we often have to have a riot in the ghetto to wake us up to the fact that there are people living over there in the slums with all those rats and roaches. How can we learn to hear those people without their having to throw rocks to get our attention? What will move comfortable, complacent middle-class folk - white and black - really to care?

This question led many groups to a discussion of concrete things the religiously motivated person can do. Great appreciation for Father Cronin's practical suggestions was expressed. Time and time again, it was underscored that we have a responsibility to know what the situation is in our communities. Ignorance of the needs of the neighbor is inexcusable. Moreover, we are called, some said, to learn whether housing codes are being enforced, and if not, why not; to speak to the powerful on behalf of the powerless; to work for both a federal fair housing law and for one in Virginia; and to initiate and/or actively support fair housing groups in our various communities.

Reports of these discussions indicated that there were many people at the conference who are ready to move in this area, and who are looking now for the handles they can grasp for effective action. It would indeed be shameful if those handles were not provided by appropriate religious or human relations groups.

As they moved into the third discussion period, participants had fresh on their minds the film, "A Time for Burning," Rabbi Jacob Rothschild's stimulating address on "The Role of the Religious Community in Changing Educational Patterns," Dr. William Kennedy's reaction in which he brought the problem quite down-to-earth here in Virginia with some rather depressing statistics, and Dean Samuel Gandy's reaction in which he raised the basic issue of the church's role vis-a-vis the state. With these four possible starting points before it, a discussion group could take off into practically any direction, and most of them did! Some groups spent the bulk of their time discussing the film. It was apparent that the film spoke to the participants at this conference with a piercing, prophetic word. The hope was expressed that the Virginia Council on Human Relations or some other group would secure copies of the print, and that the film would be shown at inter-faith, inter-racial meetings across the state.

In those groups which focused on the responsibility of the religious community in changing educational patterns, there was general agreement with Rabbi Rothschild that religion's role is not to accommodate to changes made by others but to be a catalyst in achieving changes we know are just and right. But how can the religious community do this? What concrete steps can we take? Here, as in previous discussions, great appreciation was expressed for the very practical suggestions offered by the speakers. We can, some suggested, conduct programs of education in the church and community which will move us and our neighbors to commitment to both excellence and equality in education. We can, others said, publicize the statistics quoted by Dr. Kennedy showing Virginia's poor rank in national educational achievements. We can, thirdly, bring pressure to bear upon school and governmental authorities to do everything possible to make this transitional period a fruitful one. And we can - and ought to - become much more actively involved in the political arena where the crucial decisions about education as well as other public issues are made.

Several groups expressed agreement with Dr. Kennedy that we ought to consider possible alternatives to our present "freedom-of-choice system in Virginia, which all too often is leading to resegregation in the schools. Several other groups raised questions about the moral propriety of churches' organizing or lending their facilities to "private schools" when the obvious purpose is to circumvent federal laws. Yet another group expressed great concern over the lack of multi-ethnic textbooks in Virginia. It was observed that the Virginia Council on Human Relations is now working on this injustice and needs our widespread support. (The Virginia Council, incidently, has some valuable material on this matter which is available from their office. Please enclose a small contribution to help cover costs of handling.)

Conversations in the fourth discussion period generally took one of two directions. Some groups dealt specifically with some of the issues raised by Mr. Warren Turner in his address on "The Responsibility of the Religious Community to Set its Own House in Order." There was general agreement in these groups that we ought to clarify our religious bases for social action, examine our own practices as institutions, focus attention on the really pressing problems and develop a more effective strategy. While no one depreciated the importance of careful planning, some persons expressed feat that we might exhaust all our energies in planning and never move to direct action. Said one person: "God may be embarrassed when we go off half-cocked, but he is even more embarrassed when we don't go off at all."

Most other groups spent this final discussion period evaluating the conference itself and discussing appropriate next steps in obedience. There was widespread agreement that the conference had been very helpful, though not a few persons expressed regret that we had come together so late. Many participants testified to the impact that the conference had had on them personally. Along with this widespread appreciation for the conference experience was an equally widespread conviction that the conference will have been in vain if we do not follow through with faithful action in our local communities. Numerous persons saw the need for interfaith and inter-racial dialogue groups back home, for joint action by Negro and white congregations through which they and others could express their concern. No one imagined that a faithful followup would be easy. It was anticipated that there would be strong resistance to change. But many persons at this conference seemed ready to pay a higher price for faithfulness. They sensed that God would be satisfied with nothing less.

Telephone (205) 887-3438

ALABAMA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS, INC.

POST OFFICE BOX 1310 AUBURN, ALABAMA 36830

DR. C. G. GOMILLION, President

BOB VALDER, Associate Director LEWIS BLACK, Director, Rural Advancement Project

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Vice Presidents

Dr. Raymond D. Fowler, Tuscaloosa
Dr. Lucius Pitts, Birmingham
Father Brice Joyce, Sheffield

Secretary

Mrs. Paul J. McCoy, Huntsville

Treasurer

J. E. Pierce, Montgomery
Rev. V. A. Edwards, Tuskegee Institute
James F. Kidd, Birmingham
Rev. Powers McLeod, Montgomery
Mrs. Bill Reed, Huntsville

BOARD MEMBERS

Dr. Joseph Bettis, Tuscaloosa
Allen Black, Jr., Florence
Mrs. John Cashin, Huntsville
Mrs. John Drew, Birmingham
Mrs. Virginia Durr, Montgomery
Dr. Luther Foster, Tuskegee Institute
Rev. Phillip Huckaby, Birmingham
Rev. Duncan Hunter, Huntsville
Rev. Otis E. Kirby, Decatur
Dr. Frederick Kraus, Birmingham
Dr. Beryl McClaskey, Birmingham
J. Allan Parker, Tuskegee
Stanley Rosenbaum, Florence
Mrs. Willease Simpson, Montgomery
Mrs. Nancy S. Spears, Auburn
S. C. Watkins, Tuscumbia
Mrs. A. W. West, Montgomery
Mrs. Kathleen K. Wood, Mobile
Rev. J. L. Ware, Birmingham
Abraham L. Siegel, Birmingham
Rev. Harold Long, Birmingham
Mrs. Fannye Harris, Tuskegee
Mrs. Grace Hooks, Tuskegee Institute
Thomas de Jefferson, Tuscaloosa
Ross Bonner, Tuscaloosa
Arthur Whitfield, Mobile
Mrs. James Kennedy, Mobile
Joe D. Wilson, Huntsville
Don Ring, Huntsville
Paul Wooley, Montgomery
Earl Pippin, Montgomery
Prof. George DeBoer, Florence
Mrs. Thelma Mullins, Sheffield
Mrs. Laura Daly, Talladega
Alfred Radney, Talladega

January 25, 1967

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

This letter is to confirm our agreement of some days ago--that you would serve as a resource person in the Employment workshop at our annual meeting on February 4, in Birmingham. An agenda is enclosed.

If you would like for us to make a hotel reservation for you for the night(s) of February 3 or 4, please let us know.

We shall be looking forward to seeing you at the meeting.

Thanks for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

Bob

Bob Valder

BV:mee

Enclosure

Any literature will be most welcome

THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
17 EAST CARY STREET • RICHMOND, VIRGINIA 23219
TELEPHONE: AREA CODE: 703-648-4444

A council that seeks — through fact-finding, discussion and action — to attain equal opportunity for all people in Virginia

AFFILIATED CHAPTERS
ALEXANDRIA
ARLINGTON
CHARLOTTESVILLE
ALBEMARLE COUNTY
COVINGTON
ALLEGHANY COUNTY
DANVILLE
FAIRFAX COUNTY
FRANKLIN
SOUTHAMPTON COUNTY
FREDERICKSBURG AREA
HANOVER COUNTY
ASHLAND
HOPEWELL
LANCASTER-
NORTHUMBERLAND
LEXINGTON
ROCKBRIDGE-BUENA VISTA
LOUDOUN COUNTY
LYNCHBURG AREA
MERCER-TAZEWELL
MONTGOMERY COUNTY
BLACKSBURG
NEW RIVER
GILES COUNTY
NORFOLK AREA
PENINSULA
HAMPTON-NEWPORT NEWS
PETERSBURG AREA
PORTSMOUTH-
CHESAPEAKE
PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY
RADFORD
RICHMOND AREA
ROANOKE VALLEY
ROCKINGHAM COUNTY
HARRISONBURG
VIRGINIA BEACH
WILLIAMSBURG

COLLEGE COUNCIL

COOPERATING GROUPS
AMELIA COUNTY
BEDFORD COUNTY
BRUNSWICK COUNTY
CHARLES CITY COUNTY
CHARLOTTE COURTHOUSE
GALAX
MARTINSVILLE
NEW KENT COUNTY
POWHATAN COUNTY
PRINCE WILLIAM COUNTY
ROCKY MOUNT
STAUNTON
SUFFOLK
WARRENTON
WAYNESBORO
WESTMORELAND COUNTY

January 27, 1967

Mr. Julian F. Carper
Acting President
Virginia State A.F.L.-C.I.O.
102 North Belvidere Street
Richmond, Virginia 23220

Dear Mr. Carper:

Thank you for your letter dated January 24, regarding serving on a panel discussion, "The Changing Virginia- Its Challenge to the Labor Movement" on Sunday morning, March 19 at the Godden Triangle Hotel, Norfolk, Virginia. As I understand the Honorable Henry E. Howell, Jr., Virginia State Senator, and Dr. Robert C. Bolander, Professor of History at Old Dominion College will also serve on the panel.

I would be very happy to accept this invitation, my wife and I also accept with pleasure your gracious invitation to attend the banquet on Saturday, 7:00 P.M. as your guest.

As I stated by phone recently to you --- Mr. Bruce Bishop, U.S. Post Office Department, Washington, D.C. had to postpone the date of the Banquet at the Hotel John Marshall, featuring Mr. Charle Morgan, ACLU, Atlanta, Geergia as the guest speaker. The new date will be Thursday, March 23rd, at 7:00 P.M. The charge will be $4.50 @, no-host banquet. Thank you for your willingness to promote this through the AFL-CIO.

Again, may I say thank you for the fine cooperation we have had between VCHR and AFL-CIO in recent months.

Sincerely,

Robert Lee Combs

Robert Lee Combs,
Executive Director

Every I need help on this.

If you have suggestions about my part on the panel, please let me know. Thanks. RLC.

BCL

February, 1967

TO: COUNCILS ON HUMAN RELATIONS

FROM: SRC URBAN PLANNING PROJECT

SUBJECT: CITIZENS AIDS

In the 15 months of the UPP assessment of Urban Planning in the South, we have concluded that the greatest need in obtaining effective and good Urban Planning would be more positive citizen participation. To assist in this we have prepared 5 pamphlets.

	DATE	PRICE
		Single	Bulk
1. NEIGHBORHOOD STABILATION
Guidelines for groups trying to build stable interracial neighborhoods. How do you recreate neighborhoods that can overcome the forces of segregation? That keep the profits of increased property values in the hands of the owners, instead of in the hands of real estate speculators? --Your action must be biracially oriented.	1966	.30	.20
2. A HOME OF OUR OWN
What families should know when buying their first home. How to shop? What to watch out for? --Get this into the hands of families considering making this big investment. They need your help!	1966	.60	.40
3. MR. MAYOR - SLUM GHETTOES IN YOUR CITY, Can We Solve Our Housing Dilemma?
A guideline for city officials in facing the total problems of slums. What should your city government be doing to provide good housing for all its citizens? --Your job is to get your mayor and councilmen to read it and then press them into action.	1966	.50	.40

4. NEIGHBORHOODS - WHERE HUMAN RIGHTS BEGIN

Experiences and evaluation of three interracial neighborhoods. Three cities where people acted: stabilized their communities and built a sense of civic pride. How to create stable, interracial good places to live? --Your participation based on what others have done should make for more constructive action.	1967	.50	.40

5. A GUIDE TO PROGRAMS FOR BETTER HOMES AND NEIGHBORHOODS

A layman's guide to government and private housing programs. Tells you the programs you are dealing with and how they operate. What public and private resources are available to provide good housing, equally available to all citizens? --Get with it! Being knowledgable is essential!	1967	1.00	.75

We hope that you will find these publications helpful to your program. We would appreciate your keeping us posted on your efforts in these areas of concern and on any results, positive or negative. And we would be grateful for any suggestions for improvement of or additions to these program aids.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

April 3, 1967

Mr. Abner E. Lee
Virginia Council on Human Relations
17 E. Cary St.
Richmond, Virginia

Dear Mr. Lee:

I have your copy of the advanced notice for your Equal Employment Opportunities in Virginia conference. I plan to be there.

I look forward to receiving any further information which you may have. My plan would be to talk a bit beyond just unions in the South and to talk about the general labor situation and begin to open up the general topic of discrimination in employment. Would you have any recent cases or trends involving Virginia which it would be well for me to incorporate in my remarks?

There were two small typographical errors in your draft program which I thought I would call to your attention rather than run the possibility of their being continued. Note the spelling of Workmen's in Workmen's Compensation and note the spelling of Ben Segal's last name.

I take it that the afternoon discussion will be in small groups. If I could intrude in your planning a bit further, I would raise the question as to whether you have allowed sufficient time for the afternoon discussion. Of course, you know your group much better than I. There will not have been much opportunity for discussion until the afternoon session.

I look forward to being with you.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via , Director
Labor Program

(Dictated but not read)

EFV/jd

Ala Council

April 3, 1967

TO; Bob Valder

From: Emory Via

These announcements may be of interest to you. If you have the right people, I would urge them to attend. I cannot be there myself.

I will underwrite the registration fee for one person to attend from the Alabama Council.

Gen. Corr.

Tennessee Council On Human Relations

1207 18TH AVENUE SOUTH • NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, 37212 • TELEPHONE 297-6568

PRESIDENT
WILLIAM G. POLLARD
VICE-PRESIDENTS
LEWIS S. SINCLAIR
VASCO SMITH
B. J. STILES
SECRETARY
MRS. ERNEST SILVER
TREASURER
W. D. HAWKINS, JR.

April 11, 1967

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
BAXTON BRYANT
ASSISTANT DIRECTORS
HARRY WIERSEMA, JR.
ISAAC RICHMOND, JR.
RESEARCH AND COMPLIANCE
MRS. JERI WIERSEMA

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

At the request of Mr. Bryant I am sending to you the names and addresses of the members of the Employment Committee of TCHR. Mr. Bryant would like for you to send pertinent information to each of them.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Juanita Wright
Mrs. H. Elliott Wright
Office Manager

jw

Mr. Seymour Shavin, 334 N. Crest Road, Chattanooga, Tennessee 37404
Mr. Leo Burson, 2228 Henry Avenue, Memphis, Tennessee 38108
Mr. Roger Cloutier, 168 Cumberland View Drive, Oak Ridge, Tennessee 37830
Mr. Mansfield Douglas, 1802 Beech Avenue, Nashville, Tennessee 37212
Mr. Jack LeFlore, 2225 Brooks Road, Knoxville, Tennessee 37915
Mr. Russell Sugarman, 588 Vance Avenue, Memphis, Tennessee 38126

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

MRS. RAY ALLEN, MEMPHIS
WILLIAM L. BARNES, NASHVILLE
GEORGE BARRETT, NASHVILLE
MRS. WALTER BISHOP, KNOXVILLE
ROBERT BOOKER, KNOXVILLE
WILL CAMPBELL, NASHVILLE
DAVID CAYWOOD, MEMPHIS
ROGER CLOUTIER, OAK RIDGE
MRS. LAWRENCE COE, MEMPHIS
JOHN COMPTON, NASHVILLE
W. T. CRUTCHER, KNOXVILLE
DANA CURTIS, JR., MEMPHIS
JAMES S. GILLILAND, MEMPHIS
JAMES D. GLASSE, NASHVILLE
LEROY GRAF, KNOXVILLE
JAMES GREGORY, EADS
H. E. HARRIS, MANCHESTER
ERNEST HOWARD, CHATTANOOGA
JOHN C. HULL, NASHVILLE
MRS. HENRY HARRELL, MURFREESBORO
CLAYTON JAMES, MURFREESBORO
MISS KATHERINE JONES, NASHVILLE
CLIFTON H. JOHNSON, HERMITAGE
MAJOR JONES, CHATTANOOGA
MRS. EUGENE S. KILGORE, JOHNSON CITY
MRS. WILLIAM KNOX, NASHVILLE
HUNTER LANE, JR., MEMPHIS
MRS. PHILLIP H. LIVINGSTON, CHATTANOOGA
GILBERT MERRITT, JR., NASHVILLE
M. D. MERRIWETHER, JACKSON
JOHN C. MICKLE, MEMPHIS
MRS. BERNICE MILLER, BOLIVAR
LEVI MOORE, RIPLEY
NORMAN MOORE, NASHVILLE
MRS. RILLA MORAN, NASHVILLE
HARRY MORGAN, NASHVILLE
MRS. HUGH MORGAN, NASHVILLE
MRS. FRED MUHLEMAN, CHATTANOOGA
DAN POWELL, MEMPHIS
JOHN PRICE, KINGSPORT
MRS. MARTHA RAGLAND, NASHVILLE
WILLIAM R. RAMSEY, OAK RIDGE
MRS. DAVID ROGERS, NASHVILLE
J. R. RUTTER, KNOXVILLE
MRS. EARL SASSER, NASHVILLE
MRS. BERNARD SCHWEID, NASHVILLE
CLIFFORD SEEBER, KNOXVILLE
SEYMOUR SHAVIN, CHATTANOOGA
LEO C. SIENER, NASHVILLE
LOU SILBERMAN, NASHVILLE
T. A. SMEDLEY, NASHVILLE
KELLY MILLER SMITH, NASHVILLE
MRS. LEE SPAULDING, TULLAHOMA
WHITWORTH STOKES, NASHVILLE
ROSCOE STRICKLAND, JR., MURFREESBORO
G. J. TARLETON, NASHVILLE
LANDON THOMAS, RIPLEY
MRS. JAMES M. TODD, NASHVILLE
TOM VANDERVORT, MURFREESBORO
FRED VENDETTI, KNOXVILLE
C. J. WALKER, NASHVILLE
CHARLES WINTERS, SEWANEE
C. E. YOUNG, LEBANON
MISS LOUISE YOUNG, NASHVILLE

Telephone (205) 887-3438

ALABAMA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS, INC.

POST OFFICE BOX 1310 AUBURN, ALABAMA 36830

DR. C. G. GOMILLION, President

BOB VALDER, Associate Director LEWIS BLACK, Director, Rural Advancement Project

April 12, 1967

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Vice Presidents

Dr. Raymond D. Fowler, Tuscaloosa
Dr. Lucius Pitts, Birmingham
Father Brice Joyce, Sheffield

Secretary

Mrs. Paul J. McCoy, Huntsville

Treasurer

J. E. Pierce, Montgomery
Rev. V. A. Edwards, Tuskegee Institute
James F. Kidd, Birmingham
Rev. Powers McLeod, Montgomery
Mrs. Bill Reed, Huntsville

BOARD MEMBERS

Dr. Joseph Bettis, Tuscaloosa
Allen Black, Jr., Florence
Mrs. John Cashin, Huntsville
Mrs. John Drew, Birmingham
Mrs. Virginia Durr, Montgomery
Dr. Luther Foster, Tuskegee Institute
Rev. Phillip Huckaby, Birmingham
Rev. Duncan Hunter, Huntsville
Rev. Otis E. Kirby, Decatur
Dr. Frederick Kraus, Birmingham
Dr. Beryl McClaskey, Birmingham
J. Allan Parker, Tuskegee
Stanley Rosenbaum, Florence
Mrs. Willease Simpson, Montgomery
Mrs. Nancy S. Spears, Auburn
S. C. Watkins, Tuscumbia
Mrs. A. W. West, Montgomery
Mrs. Kathleen K. Wood, Mobile
Rev. J. L. Ware, Birmingham
Abraham L. Siegel, Birmingham
Rev. Harold Long, Birmingham
Mrs. Fannye Harris, Tuskegee
Mrs. Grace Hooks, Tuskegee Institute
Thomas de Jefferson, Tuscaloosa
Ross Bonner, Tuscaloosa
Arthur Whitfield, Mobile
Mrs. James Kennedy, Mobile
Joe D. Wilson, Huntsville
Don Ring, Huntsville
Paul Wooley, Montgomery
Earl Pippin, Montgomery
Prof. George DeBoer, Florence
Mrs. Thelma Mullins, Sheffield
Mrs. Laura Daly, Talladega
Alfred Radney, Talladega

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Could you please send us 20 "Minimum Wage Campaign Kits?" We shall pay for them when you send them and will order more later.

Thanks very much.

Sincerely,

Bob Valder/mee

Bob Valder

BV:mee

April 13, 1967

Mr. Baxton Bryant
Executive Director
Tennessee Council on Human Relations
1207 18th Avenue, South
Nashville, Tennessee 37212

Dear Baxton:

All right, so I put down the date of April 29th! Now you tell me what it is, where, for whom, when and why.

I plan to be there, but give me a clue.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

17 EAST CARY STREET • RICHMOND, VIRGINIA 23219

TELEPHONE: AREA CODE: 703-648-4444

A council that seeks -- through fact-finding, discussion and action -- to attain equal opportunity for all people in Virginia

AFFILIATED CHAPTERS
ALEXANDRIA
ARLINGTON
CHARLOTTESVILLE
ALBEMARLE COUNTY
COVINGTON
ALLEGHANY COUNTY
DANVILLE
FAIRFAX COUNTY
FRANKLIN
SOUTHAMPTON COUNTY
FREDERICKSBURG AREA
HANOVER COUNTY
ASHLAND
HOPEWELL
LANCASTER-
NORTHUMBERLAND
LEXINGTON
ROCKBRIDGE-BUENA VISTA
LOUDOUN COUNTY
LYNCHBURG AREA
MERCER-TAZEWELL
MONTGOMERY COUNTY
BLACKSBURG
NEW RIVER
GILES COUNTY
NORFOLK AREA
PENINSULA
HAMPTON-NEWPORT NEWS
PETERSBURG AREA
PORTSMOUTH-
CHESAPEAKE
PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY
RADFORD
RICHMOND AREA
ROANOKE VALLEY
ROCKINGHAM COUNTY
HARRISONBURG
VIRGINIA BEACH
WILLIAMSBURG

COLLEGE COUNCIL

COOPERATING GROUPS
AMELIA COUNTY
BEDFORD COUNTY
BRUNSWICK COUNTY
CHARLES CITY COUNTY
CHARLOTTE COURTHOUSE
GALAX
MARTINSVILLE
NEW KENT COUNTY
POWHATAN COUNTY
PRINCE WILLIAM COUNTY
ROCKY MOUNT
STAUNTON
SUFFOLK
WARRENTON
WAYNESBORO
WESTMORELAND COUNTY

14 April 1967

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program, Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

We wish to thank you for your kind letter of April 3, 1967. We caught the name of Mr. Segal, but failed to catch workmen.

The manner in which you plan to discuss your topic is most timely, and we know of no situation here in Virginia that needs special mentioning.

Thanking you very kindly for your usual fine spirit of cooperation, we are

Very truly yours,

Abner E. Lee

Abner E. Lee

THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

17 EAST CARY STREET • RICHMOND, VIRGINIA 23219

TELEPHONE: AREA CODE: 703-648-4444

A council that seeks -- through fact-finding, discussion and action -- to attain equal opportunity for all people in Virginia

5 April 1967

AFFILIATED CHAPTERS
ALEXANDRIA
ARLINGTON
CHARLOTTESVILLE
ALBEMARLE COUNTY
COVINGTON
ALLEGHANY COUNTY
DANVILLE
FAIRFAX COUNTY
FRANKLIN
SOUTHAMPTON COUNTY
FREDERICKSBURG AREA
HANOVER COUNTY
ASHLAND
HOPEWELL
LANCASTER-
NORTHUMBERLAND
LEXINGTON
ROCKBRIDGE-BUENA VISTA
LOUDOUN COUNTY
LYNCHBURG AREA
MERCER-TAZEWELL
MONTGOMERY COUNTY
BLACKSBURG
NEW RIVER
GILES COUNTY
NORFOLK AREA
PENINSULA
HAMPTON-NEWPORT NEWS
PETERSBURG AREA
PORTSMOUTH-
CHESAPEAKE
PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY
RADFORD
RICHMOND AREA
ROANOKE VALLEY
ROCKINGHAM COUNTY
HARRISONBURG
VIRGINIA BEACH
WILLIAMSBURG

COLLEGE COUNCIL

COOPERATING GROUPS
AMELIA COUNTY
BEDFORD COUNTY
BRUNSWICK COUNTY
CHARLES CITY COUNTY
CHARLOTTE COURTHOUSE
GALAX
MARTINSVILLE
NEW KENT COUNTY
POWHATAN COUNTY
PRINCE WILLIAM COUNTY
ROCKY MOUNT
STAUNTON
SUFFOLK
WARRENTON
WAYNESBORO
WESTMORELAND COUNTY

Dear Friend:

The Virginia Council on Human Relations is presenting a conference on EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN VIRGINIA, on April 28, 1967, at Union Theological Seminary (Schauffler Hall), 3400 Chamberlayne Avenue, in Richmond.

We certainly hope that you will urge others to attend this conference.

Please find enclosed reservation applications which we will appreciate being returned not later than April 21. If more reservation forms are required, kindly give us a ring.

Thanking you very kindly for your usual kind spirit of cooperation, we are

Very truly yours,

Abner E. Lee
Equal Job Opportunity

AEL:rbm

Enc. - Reservation Forms

VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Presents

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN VIRGINIA

April 28, 1967

Union Theological Seminary (Schauffler Hall)
3400 Chamberlayne Avenue-Richmond, Virginia

Mr. Wallace Bless, Presiding

9:00 A.M.	Registration	Bailey G. Wharton, Acting Director Virginia Council on Human Relations
9:30	Purpose	Mrs. Richard M. Ballard, Jr., Chairman - Employment & Business Committee Virginia Council on Human Relations
9:45	Labor in Southern States,	Virginia in Particular Emory Via, Labor Project Director Southern Regional Council-Atlanta, Ga.
10:30	PANEL DISCUSSION -	A. N. Johnson, Moderator
	Workman Compensation	Julian Carper, Acting President The Virginia State AFL - CIO
	Minimum Wage 1942T not covered by	Hon. Henry E. Howell, Jr., Member The Virginia State Senate
	Equal Employment in Business - Col. S.C. Community Relations Council — recruitment & Job Develop. Program —	Winfred Mundle, District Manager N.C. Mutual Life Insurance Company Vice Mayor of the City of Richmond
	Training for Equal Employment - Expand training of employees Schools relate training to jobs	Robert Gray, Executive Director The Richmond Urban League
11:45 A.M.	LUNCHEON	Virginia Chapel Dining Hall
12:45 P.M.	Keynote Speaker	Benjamin D. Segal, Liaison Director Federal, State and Local Agencies-Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Washington, D. C.
1:30	GROUP DISCUSSION

"How Can We Achieve Our Goals"

Leaders

Wallace Bless	H. E. Howell, Jr.	Winfred Mundle
Julian Carper	A. N. Johnson	Benjamin Segal
Robert Gray		Emory Via

2:15	SUMMARY	Mrs. Richard M. Ballard, Jr., Chairman - Employment & Business Committee Virginia Council on Human Relations

FLORIDA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

6241 N. W. 17th Avenue Miami, Florida 33147

Phone 691-0220

Executive Director
AUGUST H. VANDEN BOSCHE

Rural Advancement Project
Director
LaVERT TAYLOR
P. O. Box 1874
Tallahassee, Fla. 32304
224-7755

April 14, 1967

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Project
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Dear Emory:

This is in reference to our conversation about the Workshop on May 5-6 at Winter Park. Will you be able to attend and participate in the section on employment? Ted Nichols of 1116 Plummer Circle, Melbourne, Fla. will be in charge of this area.

Also would you make a general presentation on this subject at one of the meals--Friday Dinner or Sat. Luncheon to the entire group?

The kit is a most adequate one and I hope that some of the councils will make extensive use of it.

Sincerely,

August H. VandenBosche
Executive Director

AHV:ag

cc: Ed Stanfield

EV called to explain Schedule Conflict - from Richmond - 4/28/67

Gen. Com

Va Council on Human Relations

VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Presents

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN VIRGINIA

April 28, 1967

Union Theological Seminary (Schauffler Hall)
3400 Chamberlayne Avenue-Richmond, Virginia

Mr. Wallace Bless, Presiding

9:00 A.M.	Registration	Bailey G. Wharton, Acting Director Virginia Council on Human Relations
9:30	Purpose	Mrs. Richard M. Ballard, Jr., Chairman - Employment & Business Committee Virginia Council on Human Relations
9:45	Labor in Southern States, Virginia in Particular	Mr. Bless Emory Via, Labor Project Director Southern Regional Council-Atlanta, Ga.
10:30	PANEL DISCUSSION -	A. N. Johnson, Moderator
	Workman Compensation	Julian Carper, Acting President The Virginia State AFL-CIO
	Minimum Wage	Hon. Henry E. Howell, Jr., Member The Virginia State Senate
	Equal Employment in Business -	Winfred Mundle, District Manager N.C. Mutual Life Insurance Company Vice Mayor of the City of Richmond
	Training for Equal Employment -	Robert Gray, Executive Director The Richmond Urban League
11:45 A.M.	LUNCHEON	Virginia Chapel Dining Hall
12:45 P.M.	Keynote Speaker	Benjamin D. Segal, Liaison Director Federal, State and Local Agencies- Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Washington, D. C.
1:30	GROUP DISCUSSION

"How Can We Achieve Our Goals"

Leaders

Wallace Bless	H. E. Howell, Jr.	Winfred Mundle
Julian Carper	A. N. Johnson	Benjamin Segal
Robert Gray		Emory Via

2:15	SUMMARY	Mrs. Richard M. Ballard, Jr., Chairman - Employment & Business Committee Virginia Council on Human Relations

Ark I 251

LEGAL AID BUREAU OF PULASKI COUNTY

ATTORNEYS

BURL C. ROTENBERRY, DIRECTOR
L. HOBSON MAHON
DELECTOR TILLER
HUBERT E. GRAVES

718-A WEST MARKHAM STREET
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS 72201
TELEPHONE: AREA CODE 501 FRANKLIN 6-3423

BRANCH OFFICE

815 EAST 14TH STREET
NORTH LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS 72114
TELEPHONE
AREA CODE 501
FRANKLIN 6-2791

May 8, 1967

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

Thank you for your letter of May 3 and check enclosed therewith.

It appears right now that I would be available for either July 8 or July 15 and I would be happy to participate again in another such seminar. I will await further word from you.

Yours very truly,

Burl C. Rotenberry

Burl C. Rotenberry

BCR/ew

June 13, 1967

Mrs. Alice N. Spearman
Executive Director
South Carolina Council on
Human Relations
1330 Laurel Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Dear Alice:

Just a brief note to thank you for your letter of May 26. I greatly appreciate your interest and follow-up on this matter. I trust we will soon be underway in South Carolina.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/csb

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES, INCORPORATED
ST. HELENA ISLAND
FROGMORE, SOUTH CAROLINA 29920

June 22, 1967

COURTNEY SICELOFF
DIRECTOR

(803) 524-4337

Mr. Harold Kramer
Atlanta Regional Office
1776 Peachtree Street
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Harold Kramer:

There is one name I would like to share with you and members of the private agencies who should be a good Greenville contact.

David Cairns is manager of the Cry-O-Vac plant in Simsonville, South Carolina, suburb of Greenville. This plant, a division of W. R. Grace Company, makes plastic bags. I understand that there is some talk concerning the mergering of Deering-Milliken Corporation and the Grace Company, but that may well come some time later. Although David Cairns is not in textiles, he apparently does have a good employment policy in his own plant and I gather knows personally a number of plant managers in the area. His 'phone number is 963-4111.

I also inquired concerning the Commissioners of the South Carolina Employment Security Commission which was discussed at our meeting. There are three members serving four-year terms, all ending simultaneously in 1968. Keith Aull who was the Executive Director of the Employment Security Commission until last year, indicated that two members have served since 1952 with one of them being appointed last ~~year~~ 1964. The Commissioners are elected by members of the General Assembly. To his knowledge, no Governor has ever submitted nominations to the General Assembly, has never met with the Commission nor is he aware of any contact whatsoever between the Governor and the Commission. Incidently, the present incumbents come from such metropolitan centers as Duewest, McCall and Greer, with respective populations of 1000, 2500 and 9,000.

It would appear to me that if we are to bring about any change in the Employment Security Commission it would have to come other than through the Commissioners.

With best regards,

Courtney Siceloff
CS/fm
cc: George Butler
Miss Jean Fairfax
Emory Via

June 26, 1967

Mr. Courtney Siceloff
Penn Community Services, Inc.
St. Helena Island
Frogmore, South Carolina 29920

Dear Courtney:

Thanks for the copy of your letter to Harold Kramer. Such information is quite useful and I trust you will continue to feed it to us.

You know by now that we have made a definite offer to Mordecai Johnson. No response from him yet because he has been on vacation. We are still pursuing other possibilities.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/csb

ARKANSAS
COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
1310 WRIGHT AVENUE
LITTLE ROCK, ARK. 72206
PHONE FR 6-3541

ARKANSAS VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT
REV. BEN GRINAGE, DIRECTOR

Res - No phone listed

June 26, 1967

Mr. Emery Via
Director
Labor Project
Southern Regional Conference
5 Forsyth Street NW
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

In response to your phone call the following names were selected from Jonesboro in Craighead County to represent the Negro community for the meeting scheduled on July 15:

✓ Rev. C.W. Wilkerson
803 Logan Street
Jonesboro, Arkansas

Howard D. Hill
322 W. Word Street
Jonesboro, Arkansas

Mr. H.L. Russell
P.O. Box 73
Jonesboro, Arkansas

Crumbler Funeral Home
710 E. Washington
Jonesboro, Arkansas

Omit

Insert IP

*✓ Rev. J.L. Lewellen qualifies to sit on the panel. The address is 702 Kitchen Street, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

I hope these people will serve you well.

Sincerely,

Rev. Ben Grinage

BG/ls

OFFICERS - FATHER WALTER B. CLANCY, CHAIRMAN • DR. W. H. TOWNSEND, VICE-CHAIRMAN
REVEREND A. M. ROBERTS, JR., TREASURER • MRS. FRANK N. GORDON, SECRETARY
STAFF - NAT R. GRISWOLD, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR • OZELL SUTTON, ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR

A Council to attain equal opportunity for all people

LEGAL AID BUREAU OF PULASKI COUNTY

718-A WEST MARKHAM STREET
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS 72201
TELEPHONE: AREA CODE 501 FRANKLIN 6-3423

ATTORNEYS

BURL C. ROTENBERRY, DIRECTOR
L. HOBSON MAHON
DELECTOR TILLER
HUBERT E. GRAVES

BRANCH OFFICE

815 EAST 14TH STREET
NORTH LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS 72114
TELEPHONE
AREA CODE 501
FRANKLIN 6-2791

July 17, 1967

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

My round trip auto mileage in connection with my trip to Jonesboro on July 15 for the labor institute was 278 miles.

Again, I enjoyed very much my participation in the program and thank you for the opportunity.

Yours very truly,

Burl C. Rotenberry

Burl C. Rotenberry

BCR/ew

THE HUMAN RELATIONS COUNCIL OF GREATER LAKELAND, LBA - JNW ES

Revised - Current - Membership List .....To: August 15, 1967

Officers - Members

Dr & Mrs. Herman F. Reissig, Chairman
1615 Elm Road,
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Rev. Hal Hyde, Jr., V/P
P. O. Box 711
Lakeland, Florida 33802

Rev. W. R. Lovelace V/P
1027 West 11th St.,
Lakeland, Florida 33801

Mr & Mrs. James A. Olson
Mr. V/P
Mrs. Recording Sect
508 Eastway St.,
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Mrs. Annie Lee Amos B/D
1620 N. Dakota Ave.,
Lakeland, Florida 33801

Dr. & Mrs. Alan Gessner, B/D
1806 New Jersey Road
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Clark Hoyt B/D
P.O.Box 408, The Ledger
Lakeland, Florida 33802

Mr. & Mrs. Adolph Lovett B/D
P. O. Box 1071
Lakeland, Florida 33802

Mrs. Alexander F. Steinberg B/D
1915 Shady Lane St
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Mr & Mrs. John H. Anthony, V/P
1236 North Virginia Ave.,
Lakeland, Florida 33801

Mr & Mrs. Melvin Estroff, V/P
2710 Berkeley Ave.,
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Dr. & Mrs. John S. Jackson, Treas
1336 North Dakota Ave
Lakeland, Florida 33801

Mrs. J. D. Thomas Corresp.Sect
926 S. Mississippi Ave.,
Lakeland, Florida 33803

~~Dr. &~~ Mrs. F. Layton Berquist B/D
Rt. 1, Box 134
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Mr & Mrs. John R. Harrison, B/D
1068 Lake Hollingsworth Dr
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Mr & Mrs. Peirce Lewis B/D
2804 Nevada Road
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Mr. & Mrs. John L. Snook B/D
1324 Edgewater Beach Dr.,
Lakeland, Florida 33801

Otis P. Williams, B/D
(Pres. Polk County NAACP)
1776 Bayview Dr.,
Lakeland, Florida 33801

MEMBERS

Mrs. Fannie Mae Allen,
915 North Missouri Ave.,
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. Helen Ardin,
403 W. Crawford St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr & Mrs. John Andras,
415 Hillside Dr
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Mr. Dickwin D. Armstrong
P. O. Box 331
Lakeland, Fla 33802

Dr & Mrs. Clyde E. Asbury, Jr
332 Courtland Circle
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Rev. R. J. Blaine,
1030 North Dakota Ave
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Rev & Mrs J. Oscar Brown
410 East Ridgewood
Lakeland, Fla 33801

James Caccamisi
421 Lake Bonny Dr
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. Robert B. Colvin
1851 Elm Road
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr & Mrs Edward A. Dewey
616 Lake Hollingsworth Dr
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Rev & Mrs Caxton Doggett
149 West Davis Blvd
Tampa, Fla 33606

Dr & Mrs. Albert Eskenazi
224 Anne Marie Circle
Lakeland, Fla 33803

G. Richard Flamand, Jr
Rt. 1, Box 927
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs Thomas S. Garber,
53 Buckeye Circle, N.E.,
Winter Haven, Fla 33880

Mr Lyman L. Hale
1114 E. Lime St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr. Morris M. Harris
304 W. Memorial Blvd
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr & Mrs. David E. Henley
2230 Tanglewood St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr & Mrs. Ambrose E. Austin
609 West Memorial Blvd
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Rev. C. H. Bolden,
703 W. 9th St.,
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr & Mrs J. T. Brunson
1015 North Ohio St.,
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs Lenore S. Cohen
2016 Reaney Road
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs. Dennis Cooper
406 West Valencia St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr & Mrs. Carl J. Dettman
1105 South Hartsell Ave
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs. O. D. Eger,
2224 Woodbine Ave
Lakeland, Florida 33803

Rev & Mrs Donald Evans
Rt. 6, Box 779
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Owen Flowers
706 Church Ave
Haines City, Fla 33844

Mrs. Margot Glazer,
615 Carey Place
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mr & Mrs. Leon Harpole,
550 West Oak Drive
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs. Annie Ruth Hicks
1437 Kettles Ave
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. Douglas Hoffer
2720 Easton Terrace
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Rev. Joseph Huntley
745 S. Ingraham,
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. Burnell Joe
1017 West 12th St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Dr. Juliane Jordan,
Florida Southern College
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Henri Landwirth
4204 Braemar Circle
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mr. Irving Levy
1034 S. Boulevard
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Dr & Mrs. Edwin T. Long
505 West Palm Drive
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs Alfred Mahany
550 Lake Bonny Dr
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. Lettie M. Matthews
810 W. 13th St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr. Peter Mobley
520 W. Quincy,
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Miss Rosie McCoy
915 N. Missouri Ave
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. Elveta Ortiz
715 W. Orange St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr. James Pearson,
631 West 5th St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Emmett Peter,
P.O.Box 408, The Ledger
Lakeland, Fla 33802

Mrs. Madeline W. Hutcheson
981 Lake Hollingsworth Dr
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Ulysses J. Johnson, Jr
Rochelle High School
W. 10th & N. Dakota
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr & Mrs Edward J. Keyes
17 Gordan Circle
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Dr. Charles M. Laymon
1921 Del Crest Place
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs. Dolores Kay Lewis
215 W. Valencia St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Samuel W. Luce
Rt. 1, Box 213
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mr. Christopher F. Masters
99 Bonisee Circle
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs. Dora Miller
603 Chatham Dr
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Donald E. Musselman
701 E. Charles St
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs H. W. Oldham
904 N. Dakota Ave.,
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. Joan V. Parker
307 E. Beacon Rd
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mr. Edgar T. Pickett, Jr
604 West Whitehurst St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Miss Jessica Price,
328 Allamanda St
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs. Ruth Reddick
413 West 9th St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Kenneth W. Ringdahl,
Florida State Employment Service
515 East Lime St
Lakeland, Fla 33802

Mrs. Earl Seger
68 E. St., Holiday Park
Lakeland, Fla

Rabbi Aaron Shapiro
2920 Redwood Ave.,
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs. Cathryn Browne Smith
P. O. Box 464
Lakeland, Fla 33802

Dr & Mrs. Ernest L. Snodgrass
15 Lake Hollingsworth Dr
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mrs. Gerald Strickland
533 Nansemond
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. E. F. Van Buskirk
518 East Charles St
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Ben F. Wood
113 Kim St
Auburndale, Fla 33823

Paul Wodall (WOODALL
735 El Paseo Dr
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mrs. Doris F. Reese
1107 West 9th St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr. Morris Schiff,
P.O.Box 2097
Lakeland, Fla. 33803

Mrs. Daniel G. Senkarik
Rt. 1, Box 361
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Mr & Mrs. Ken Shroyer
1409 Camphor Drive,
Lakeland, Fla 33803

Edward Strickland
2105 Bassedena Circle
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Mr. James N. Taylor
P. O. Box 3063
Lakeland, Fla 33802

Rev. J. L. Williams
318 West 6th St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

J. H. Woodall, Jr
738 Buena Vista
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Rev. Duane R. Zoller
938 Osceola St
Lakeland, Fla 33801

Total 119 members
(93 families)

November 6, 1968

Mrs. Carol Tucker
Administrative Assistant
Arkansas Council on Human Relations
1310 Wright Avenue
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206

Dear Mrs. Tucker:

Thanks for your order of 50 copies of "More Money For You." They are on their way under separate cover. Please not that this pamphlet was produced for 1967 and does not include the required changes in Minimum Wage payments for subsequent years. I would suggest a mimeographed insert.

Enclosed are two items from our Minimum Wage Campaign Kit and a copy of "The New 1966 Minimum Wage Law - With Explanation" which was prepared by the Commerce Clearing House. The leaflet "Some Simple Facts About The Fair Labor Standards Act" should give you the basic information you need for preparing a mimeographed insert.

Let me know if I can be of further assistance.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Enclosures

December 30, 1968

The Rev. Paul Matthias
Executive Director
South Carolina Council on
Human Relations
1420 Lady Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Dear Paul:

If you have not seen Transferring Military Experience to Civilian Jobs, Manpower Automation Research, Monograph No. 8, published by the U. S. Department of Labor (Manpower Administration) you may be interested in securing a copy.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

File Ala Council

February 14, 1969

Father Brice Joyce, Exec. Dir.
Alabama Council on Human Relations
303-A Foster Street
Auburn, Alabama 36830

Dear Mr. Joyce:

I thought you might be interested in knowing that this program is being held.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Enclosure - Troy State Univ. brochure

March 14, 1969

The Rev. Paul Matthias
Executive Director
South Carolina Council on Human Relations
1420 Lady Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Dear Paul:

I am glad that Courtney has been in touch with you about Clemson. Things have been moving fast and I had hoped to be in touch with you myself.

Your wires regarding the textile situation struck the right note and were most welcome. Trust I will see you before too long.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

May 14, 1969

Mr. John McCown, Executive Director
Georgia Council on Human Relations
52 Fairlie Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear John:

Per your agreement with Paul Anthony, the attached check for $5,000 represents the advance toward your quarterly payment.

Sincerely,

James N. Wood, Jr.
Executive Assistant

JNW/km

Enclosure - $5,000 Check

NEWSLETTER

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

818 17th Avenue South/Nashville, Tennessee 37203/Telephone: Code (615) 256-5691

VOLUME 11 NO. 2 APRIL-MAY, 1969

from the Directors Desk. . . . Bayton

The Southern Regional Council in cooperation with the Tennessee Council on Human Relations has published a special report, IN MEMPHIS: ONE YEAR LATER. The article is by Pat Watters and Ed Stanfield. It does a good job of reporting accurately and analytically events in Memphis over the last year. Copies have been sent to members of our Board; and additional copies are available for 35¢ if you would like to have one.

Our Memphis office was used as the coordinating center for the April 4th Commemorative March for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Our Nashville office was used to recruit some three busloads to participate and to hear Dr. Ralph Abernathy and Senator Edward Kennedy.

Kennedy's appearance was the best kept secret that I have been a part of in a long time. The police knew of his coming only one day in advance, the press only minutes before, and the people were surprised and shouted when he walked onto the platform and was immediately introduced.

It was an eerie feeling sitting there on the platform and seeing the response of the throngs of people in front as they first enthusiastically greeted him with applause and cheers and immediately scanned the tall buildings around looking for a would-be sniper. It was a great occasion, and for a moment one could again feel the presence of President John Kennedy, Dr. Martin Luther King, and Senator Robert Kennedy in his person. He talked the same language and renewed our faith in the ideals that these three great men lived by and died for. I believe he will continue to be worthy of the trust of all who looked to our martyred leaders.

We have spent a great deal of time since we reported to you last on several other things. We were much concerned with the situation at Lane College as it developed and exploded; but the State Council did not get involved until three young male students at Lane came to us and asked us to intervene. You will be interested in reading our report of that situation in this NEWSLETTER. Unfortunately, justice still eludes us there. We pray that this will not remain the case...An assault by a Metro policeman on a fourteen-year-old Negro girl, the arrest of sixteen young people in the Nashville area, and the Black Caucus at the Nashville Ford Plant are cases we will cover in the next issue, which we promise to have to you on schedule.

June 9, 1969

Mr. Baxton Bryant, Executive Director
Tennessee Council on Human Relations
818-B 17th Avenue, South
Nashville, Tennessee 37203

Dear Baxton:

I would like to be kept informed, if possible, about the establishment of Project Equality in Nashville. Has the Methodist Publishing House decided to join in yet? Are other Methodist groups cooperating? Would the Nashville experience be either instructive to or a model for Atlanta?

Your last Newsletter made TCHR sound quite active but I have been discounting what I have read recently. However, I trust you are finding enough to do to keep you busy.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

October 7, 1969

Mr. Ed Hamlet, Asst. Dir.
Tennessee Council on Human Relations
818-B 17th Avenue, South
Nashville, Tennessee 37203

Dear Ed:

Thanks for sending me the list of characters and chronology on the case involving the local Teamster members.

I do not think of anything further that I as an individual can do in the situation but will remain open to suggestions.

I think that it is good that you and Baxton are recognized as defenders of people's rights and that you were open enough in this case to help these men find an answer to their problem. It is, of course, the Tennessee Council's business but I would raise again with you whether making this affair a matter of TCHR business is wise or justified. In raising this question I do not mean to make any judgment as to the merits of the case but simply to raise the question of your own organizational purposes.

If I do come up with an useful idea I will be in touch with you.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

JOHN H. WHEELER, PRESIDENT
JOSEPHINE WILKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT
PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER, VICE-PRESIDENT
CHARLES G. GOMILLION, VICE-PRESIDENT
LUCIUS H. PITTS, VICE-PRESIDENT
RAYMOND M. WHEELER, CHAIRMAN, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
JOSEPH HAAS, COUNSEL
PAUL ANTHONY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

file

October 16, 1969

M E M O R A N D U M

TO: State Councils on Human Relations

FROM: Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

Mailed
Ark
Fla
Ga
La
Miss
N.C.
S.C
Tenn
Va.
Texas

- - -

For your information the following book is now available from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. at a cost of $1.50:

FOR ALL THE PEOPLE...BY ALL THE PEOPLE
A report on Equal Opportunity in state and local government employment
A Report of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, 1969

EFV/km

File

LCHR

First Federal Building
7986 Scenic Highway
Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70807

Louisiana Council on Human Relations

December 15, 1972

Mr. Alexis Herman, Director
Black Women Employment Program
Southern Regional Council
52 Fairlie Street N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Herman:

The Louisiana Council on Human Relations was thoroughly excited to hear of your Black Women's Employment Program and the success you have had with it. Our council has long been interested in this area, as the need is so great.

If possible, please send us your proposal information, funding sources, operational details, and possibilities for Southern Regional Council implementing a similar project through our council. At present, we have taken several steps in attempt to initiate such a program.

We wish you the best of luck with your program and hope, as well, that we can spread your success.

Sincerely,

Steven Montgomery

Steven Montgomery
Executive Director

sm/am
cc: Emory Via

Tax Study - Orders

Alabama LABOR COUNCIL, AFL-CIO
328-2164 • 1018 SOUTH EIGHTEENTH STREET
BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA 35205

BARNEY WEEKS, PRESIDENT
A. G. TRAMMELL, SECRETARY-TREASURER
WM. E. MINTZ, EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT

December 23, 1969

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program, Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Dear Emory:

12-30-69:s

Our check for $100 is enclosed. Please send us four hundred copies of "The Tax Structure of Southern States: An Analysis." 12-30-69:s

This is an excellent study of the tax structure which we feel will be invaluable for state legislators and we also hope to use it in some of the summer school programs. We appreciate your making this available to us more than you know.

Best wishes for the holiday season, and warmest personal regards.

Fraternally and sincerely,

Barney

Barney Weeks
President

mw

OPEIU-18

Enclosure

LCHR

First Federal Building
7986 Scenic Highway
Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70807

Louisiana Council on Human Relations

March 19, 1973

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
52 Fairlie St.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Dear Mr. Via;

The Louisiana Council on Human Relations is presently preparing a state wide program proposal to be submitted to the federal government under the new Emergency School Assistance Act.

The nature of our proposal is a monthly newsletter designed to disseminate information throughout the state on human relations problems in the schools and their attempted solutions. The project description calls for locally recruited reporters to report on all facets of human relations problems in the schools, including the problems, concerns, and ideas for solution as seen by local students, parents, and administrators; the activities of all public and private agencies and groups effecting or involved with human relations problems in the schools; and all court decisions; reapportionment debates; desegregation plans; federal, state, parish and private school desegregation aiding programs; and racial incidents and conflicts that relate to human relations problems in the schools and their attempted solutions.

It has been caculated that the key to many human relation problems in the schools is (1) the inadequate level of communication between students, parents, teachers, administrators, and community leaders; and (2) the general lack of statistical and factual information combined with the abundance of rumors and misinformation.

This project, by providing a regular and objective source of information, and a channel for communication would greatly reduce both parts of the information problem thus contributing to opening lines of communication and assisting problem solving in the various school districts throughout the state.

cont.

LCHR

Louisiana Council on Human Relations

First Federal Building
7986 Scenic Highway
Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70807

In an effort to comply with federal regulations and to reinforce our project need statements we are requesting the following from all individuals and/or agencies involved with human relations problems in the schools.

1. Official endorcement by you and/or your group or organization for the need for such a project as ours and a willingness to cooperate with it whenever possible.

2. Any statements you could make regarding human relations problems in the schools supporting-
   a. the need for such a project
   b. the lack of information in this area of human relations problems in the schools and its negative effects
   c. the presence of rumors and misinformation in this area and its negative effects.
   d. the state of communication between students, parents, teachers, adminstrators, and community leaders and the effects of rumors, misinformation, and lack of information on this communication.

3. A listing of any public and private groups within your area that are involved or concerned with human relations problems in the schools and their attemoted solutions.

It is our sincerest hope that you will be able to assist us in this endeavor. If there are any questions reqarding this matter pleasr contact us. Our sincere thanks for all your help.

Sincerely,

Steven Montgomery

Steven Montgomery
Executive Director

SM/sp

Ernest B. Furgurson

Atl. Const
W 27 1972

Charity Among the Democrats

DANVILLE, Va. — When whatever is going to happen at Miami Beach has happened, and the national Democratic Party looks beyond the presidential nomination to the campaign ahead and the nebulous future beyond that, it may wish it had a lot more politicians like Ruth La Countess Harvey Charity. But for the moment, that prospect looks dim.

Mrs. Charity is a symbol of the shakeup undergone by the old party since adoption of the new rules that grew out of the 1968 convention. She is one of a series of reasons why Virginia politicians have said periodically since 1966, when the senior senator, Harry Byrd, died, that old Harry must be turning over in his grave looking down on what is going on in the commonwealth. As he contemplates Mrs. Charity today, he may be spinning.

She is black, and obviously female. She is a lawyer, graduate of Howard University. For years, she has been associated with the causes of the NAACP. And for years, she has been trying to take a place in local and state Democratic Party politics.

Here, in the southernmost Virginia Piedmont, blacks are one-third of the population. Until after the Voting Rights Act of 1965, their role in party politics could hardly be measured, even in decimal points. When Mrs. Charity ran for the house of delegates in 1967, she found out the impact of that federal legislation still lay ahead.

"Even then," she says, "it was hard to find out how, where and when to file for office. It was more secret than the secrets of a secret order."

But she entered the primary — and won it. But in a locally unprecedented run-off, she lost it. She still insists the run-off was illegal, but that in the hopefully cooling climate following civil rights demonstrations here in the early 1960s, she did not want to push the issue in court.

Then, in 1968, she knew where to file, and had a better conception of her chances in a Democratic primary. She she skipped the primary and ran for Congress in the general election, but was buried that time in a regional landslide for George Wallace.

In 1970, four of the city's nine council seats were up. She ran yet again, and squeezed in by an 80-vote margin. As a city councilwoman, she has worked for a new library, and for community action and nutrition programs. Yet, until this spring, she and other blacks still had not taken anything like a proportionate piece of the strictly party action, either in city or state.

Finally, armed with the McGovern commission rules, she and other blacks packed the local caucus — just as the tightly organized conservative old guard had done for years past. Then, at the state level, they joined with other blacks, with the skillful McGovern forces and the liberals who had been fighting for party control since World War II. At last, they took the entire machinery out of conservative hands. And Ruth Harvey Charity, a black woman, civil-rights lawyer, became the Democratic national committeewoman from Virginia.

She clearly likes it. Her phone never stops ringing. In one call, she rearranges an appointment she had made as attorney for a young black who shot a policeman in Rocky Mount over the weekend. In the next, she tells a university student doing a senior project paper that she prefers to leave off any prefixes and just considers herself a "good Democrat."

And in the next, she is telling George Rawlings, the new national committeman and principal engineer of the state party revolution, that she would not be at all averse to making peace with the conservatives who were shut out at the state convention.

There, of course, is exactly where she differs with a high percentage of the young Democrats who have torn party control away from their elders in other parts of the country this spring. A great many of them have two motives only — to nominate George McGovern and to take revenge on the people who closed them out for so many years — and in their minds, those two aims tend to run together.

But if the party is to have any hope at all of defeating Mr. Nixon in the fall and continuing as the single major force in American politics, those young people and their older, long-frustrated comrades are going to have to see beyond the middle of July.

Leo Aikman

Va. Consul

THE AMERICAN DREAM OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY . . .

was nurtured is growing
will be fullfilled

IN VIRGINIA

THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

17 EAST CARY STREET • RICHMOND, VIRGINIA 23219

TELEPHONE: AREA CODE: 703-648-4444

A council that seeks — through fact-finding, discussion and action — to attain equal opportunity for all people in Virginia

The Religious Community and a Changing Virginia

In the major changes underway in Virginia today, the religious community has a fundamental and inescapable responsibility to see to it that adjustments are made in line with the highest claims of the Judaeo-Christian tradition.

This was one of the pressing conclusions of the November 28-29, 1966, Conference on People, Religion, and a Changing Virginia, when more than a thousand citizens of the Commonwealth came together for two days at the John Marshall Hotel in Richmond.

With a background of pre-conference studies, they prepared for small group discussions by hearing these major addresses:

Dr. George D. Kelsey, professor of Christian ethics at Drew University (N. J.), on "The Theological Bases for the Social Concern of the Religious Community"; Father John F. Cronin, assistant director of social action for the U. S. Catholic Conference, Washington, D. C., on "The Role of the Religious Community in the Concern for Fair Housing"; Rabbi Jacob M. Rothschild of the Hebrew Benevolent Congregation, Atlanta, Ga., on "The Role of the Religious Community in Changing Educational Patterns"; Mr. Warren H. Turner, Jr., vice-president of the Protestant Episcopal Executive Council, New York, on "The Responsibility of the Religious Community to Set its Own House in Order"; and, Dr. Samuel D. Proctor, president, Institute for Services to Education, Washington, D. C., with the final challenge on "Where Do We Go from Here?"

ECONOMIC AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS BEGUN OR PORPOSED IN SOUTH CAROLINA

COMPILED BY

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON
HUMAN RELATIONS

COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA

APRIL 21, 1971

I. Penn Center - New Thrust for the 1970's

Goals

Penn Center's program thrust is to improve the economic status of the black community. This is to be done by concentrating the programmatic goals of Penn in the following areas:

A. Conference Center - Penn would seek to improve its facilities as a major conference center.

B. Technical Assistance to Economic Cooperatives - The Center would provide technical assistance to local and regional cooperatives using public and private resources. The community surrounding Penn Center in Beaufort and Jasper Counties has experimented in cooperative ventures for more than forty (40) years. It is an economic concept that local families understand and are experienced. Although of small scale, currently there are several cooperative ventures operating including a grocery store, gas station, and federal credit union. On a much larger scale, there are two cooperative efforts which are of recent vintage--the Hilton Head Fishery Co-op and the planned Community Health Center which currently has a $750,000 appropriation. Without ventures, Penn Center became aware of the need for a central point to coordinate resources. The public and private agencies also expressed the opinion that such a central point was needed to coordinate the flow of manpower and funds.

   Penn also expects that other vertical and horizontal economic efforts will arise from these successful ventures and attempt to dove-tail into the ventures.

C. Creation of a MESBIC - This would enable the Center to establish a capital institution which would provide for the capital needs of the local community as well as selected regional ventures. The St. Helena Federal Credit Union has approached Penn Center concerning technical assistance to their financial institution including its operation and management. Penn sees the need for developing a capital institution which will be able to provide for resources to the people in the areas of economic and business development. The MESBIC would be an important institution in organizing cooperative ventures and could be created as a subsidiary of the credit union operated by the Penn Center staff. It would make loans to individual businesses, cooperative ventures, farming and other ventures. It could also be used by Penn Center or a subsidiary to provide capital for purchase of land which is lost by blacks each year in the county through attending land frauds, legal and illegal tax sales, foreclosure and losses caused by ignorance of the legal process.

D. Employment - Penn will seek to improve the number of blacks employed in existing industries and government. It will also seek to attract new industries to the area which will provide additional employment opportunities. Penn will seek to improve the number of blacks in existing industries and governmental agencies in the area. Currently, the majority of the civilian population is employed in the various military installations in the area. However, blacks occupy a disporportionate number of these jobs, and of the jobs blacks presently hold are generally blue collar, low-paid, and dead-ended. In the private sector, similar conditions exist.

II. The River Road Enterprise of John's Island

This effort has organized itself into a corporation. Its membership of 15 persons has raised $10,000 to be used in some business enterprises not yet determined.

Consideration has been given to acquiring a super market. But the type of super market that the organization deems economically feasible will cost $125,000; and this group has not been able to borrow any money for this type of investment.

Some thought has been given to the purchasing of a liquor store and re-invest the profits from such venture into other enterprises. Initial investment capital again is a limiting factor. At least $30,000 would be required to buy the type of package store that would be economically efficient. An additional $20,000 is needed for this type of project.

The C. O. Federal Credit Union has made loans to small businessmen to finance the operation of small farm businesses as well as non-farm businesses.

III. Statewide Homes Foundation, Inc.

The purpose of Statewide Homes, Inc., which was incorporated in October of 1968 and began its business operation in January 1969, is to secure home sites and construct or aid in the construction of homes for disadvantaged persons.

It is realized that patterns of substandard living are often difficult to change and that a majority of these people being served by this agency has built-in disadvantages. The ministry of Statewide Homes Foundation includes a program of social education emphasizing (1) personal sanitation and social hygiene, (2) family counseling, (3) consumer education, (4) community beautification and (5) civic responsibility.

Families benefiting from the ministry of Statewide Homes Foundation can be divided into four categories:

1. Families with insufficient income to secure adequate housing.

2. Families that have been displaced by eminent domain and face difficulty in re-location due to circumstances beyond their control.

3. Families that have difficulty in acquiring adequate housing due to their race.

4. The aging and physically handicapped, who because of their circumstances, find difficulties in acquiring adequate shelter.

IV. Benedict College's Community Development Institute

Benedict College is a black, liberal arts college deeply concerned with the reclamation and development of the improverished communities from which the majority of our students and staff come. For three years, college staff members have been planning Benedict's Community Development Institute, designed to implement a "total" approach to community reclamation, rather than the piecemeal approach of uncoordinated, and often unrelated, current federal, state and local programs. Benedict is concerned with the coordinated utilization of all community resources to evantually assure self-sustaining community growth. The Institute is designed to approach total development through concentrated academic programs preparing students for community development work coupled with the offering of immediate support services for the black community in the greater Columbia area.

Why Benedict College

Aside from the obligation that Benedict as a black institution feels toward the black community, there are several reasons why Benedict feels that it should engage in development work: the expertise that trained academicians can bring to such a project; the availability of significant concerned manpower (in terms of student field work based upon academic studies at the college); the recognition that education is no longer confined solely to classroom instruction; and the fact that someone in the region must begin to deal with the problem of total community development--experimenting, designing new models of social reconstruction, and scientifically analyzing the results.

Institute Programs

Aside from the inter-disciplinary academic programs in Community Development offered for Benedict students, specific programs will be offered to the community-at-large under the four inter-related subdivisions of the Institute: the Economic Development Center, the Social Welfare Center, the Educational Development Center, and the Public Administration Center. Initial programs include a Community Economic Education Program comprised of (1) practical course offerings, such as Cost Accounting, Purchasing, Statistics, and Computer Programming for community members, (2) a Consumer Education Project, (3) an Afro-American Studies Program,(4) programs designed to aid local schools for solving the problems posed by desegregation, and (5) new programs for the training of in-service and prospective teachers.

Other programs include (1) the development of a Businessmen's Association (already begun) utilizing a central administrative unit and a central bookkeeping operation, and ultimately developing cooperative trucking, warehousing and wholesale outlets, (2) a Community Development Corporation, (3) a Laboratory School project in cooperation with two formerly all-black high schools in Columbia, (4) a Social Welfare Program (already begun), (5) a long-range Research and Development Program, and (6) a Public Administration Program which will include the training of newly elected black officials from throughout the region.

V. Orangeburg County Comprehensive Health Program

Phase I of this program was begun in the Hamlet of Springfield, South Carolina which is located in the western section of the county. Though its population is only 800 residents, there are some 26,700 persons within 15 miles radii from Springfield. There are no medical doctors or dentists in the area. The County Health Department has a satellite clinic in the area that opens twice per month. The clinic provides preventive medicine, pre-natal care and planned parenthood. All other medical services are provided in the city of Orangeburg which is 22 miles from Springfield; and there is no local public transportation to Orangeburg. Medical services available in Orangeburg are complete and adequate.

Objectives

1. To provide limited services to the indigent populations of Springfield through satellite screening center located directly in the densely populated area making the health center easily accessible to the consumer.

2. To train a cadre of residents who can relate to, speak their language, and interpret their wishes to the Health Center by serving as Family Health Assistants, Outreach Workers or Family Health Advocates. To provide services such as Pediatrics, Geriatrics, Nutrition, Family Planning Pre-natal and Post-natal care, Laboratory Facilities and X-Ray.

3. To provide training facilities in order to make a career lattice viable and to avoid dead end positions--to encourage and facilitate the model of upward mobility to the consumers.

4. To provide development training for the advisory council in decision-making processes, program management, linkages, with federal, state and county related agencies, parliamentary procedures, group processes, etc. that would enhance their functioning as board members.

5. To provide transportation for the consumers from the satellite center as well as the locations of the specialized clinics.

6. To provide free drugs and prosthetics for all registered consumers.

7. To facilitate immediate health services by pre-registration of families in their homes by FHA's.

8. To encourage and facilitate environmental restoration and sanitation.

VI. Retention, Utilization, Reclamation and Acquisition of Rural Land

The objective of this effort is to determine the amount and location of land in South Carolina presently owned by black citizens. Organize these landholders first at the county level; and eventually at the state level. Determine why blacks have lost their land. Provide technical assistance to present and future black landholders in South Carolina so as to build an economic base whereby rural black people may live on the land with dignity and self-satisfaction.

The working plan proposed to reach these objectives is first to inventory the land. Phase 2 will study the accessibility and possible use of land that will give the greatest good to black owners. Phase 3 will address a program of economic development for rural landowners and Phase 4 will provide a fiscally and administratively sound management program.

VI. South Carolina State College Outreach Programs

South Carolina State College has four outreach programs that are directly related to low income residencts of the state.

1. Feasibility of Growing Feeder Pigs as a supplement to low income rural families.

2. Breeding soybeans for human consumption as an economic source of high protein food nutrients.

3. Preparation of tasteful and nutritional low cost meals for welfare payment recipients.

4. An exploratory study of seasonal farmworkers that will investigate the housing conditions along with educational and public aid facilities available to these transitory rural families. The Farmers Home Administration has expressed an interest in financing the improvement of housing for seasonal farmworkers. This study purports to supply the necessary data on which determinations for financing may be made.

Attach memo
Please xerox

Summary of a Conference on

Comprehensive Economic Development in the Coastal Plains Area of South Carolina

Penn Center

Frogmore, South Carolina April 21-23, 1971

A group of about fifty persons assembled at Penn Center, Frogmore, South Carolina, April 21-23, 1971 for the purpose of exploring the possibilities of developing a comprehensive and coordinated strategy for economic development in the coastal plains area of South Carolina.

Those present included representatives of several community and economic development projects in South Carolina, the South Carolina state government, South Carolina State College, the Federation of Southern Cooperatives and several national foundations, church mission boards and governmental agencies. (The full roster of those registered is attached to this summary.)

Mr. John Gadson, Mr. Rodney Albert and Mr. Charles Washington shared the role of chairman.

Wednesday evening, April 21

This was a very free-wheeling introductory session. The participants introduced themselves. The general purpose of the conference was explained. The discussion ranged widely over the problems facing the poor and black people of the South Carolina coastal plains region. There emerged a general consensus that the entire region shares many problems in common, that these are well known to the participants in this conference and that the group was ready to move on to discussion of lines of action to deal with the problems.

Thursday Morning, April 22

The opening statement at this session was made by Mr. James Clyburn, Assistant to South Carolina Governor John West for Human Resource Development. Mr. Clyburn reported in some detail on the plans of the governor's office in the fields of housing, education, health services and elimination of hunger.

Housing is the top priority on Mr. Clyburn's agenda. Almost half the housing in South Carolina is sub-standard. A bill has been introduced into the state legislature to create a State Housing Authority. A bill has also been prepared dealing with the problem of settling certain cloudy land titles.

The education problem in South Carolina is reflected in the current 52% drop-out rate before high school graduation. Mr. Clyburn's aim is a compensatory education program with emphasis on child care centers and a head-start type effort. Human resource money is being sought from the Coastal Plains Regional Commission for special educational effort in certain planning districts within the coastal plains area .

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

One problem in the health field is the fact that the State of South Carolina has no policy on health. Mr. Clyburn is emphasizing the importance of ambulatory health services which will get poor people out from under the high costs of hospital care. Governor West is planning to call a state-wide conference on health sometime in 1972.

With regard to the hunger problem, Mr. Clyburn pointed to the small percentage of school cafeterias which have a breakfast program. He also stated that only about 50% of eligible people in the state are receiving food stamps. He announced that beginning May 1, food stamps will be mailed to welfare recipients.

The remainder of the morning was devoted to discussion with Mr. Clyburn regarding the issues presented by him and a good many others. Among specific suggestions addressed to Mr. Clyburn were these:

1. The state government should seek ways to protect black people's ownership of land and homes. Mortgage insurance and programs to increase income were suggested.

2. There is need for programs of title clearance.
3. The big money must come from federal sources.
4. The state should require that a substantial proportion of new housing be built by blacks.

Some unhappiness was expressed that the governor's program as presented by Mr. Clyburn did not seem to be sufficiently comprehensive in dealing with the broad range of problems facing poor people. Mr. Clyburn's response was that resources are insufficient to do everything at once and that concentration on certain priority issues is essential if any progress is to be made.

Thursday afternoon, April 22

At this session representatives of various projects were asked to describe their economic development programs.

South Carolina Council on Human Relations. - Paul Matthias

The key economic development program is called RURAL (Retention, Utilization, Reclamation and Acquisition of Land) It is focussed in Bamberg County. An inventory has been made of land owned by black people. The project is now moving into a feasibility study with regard to the possible uses of this information. Ultimately program alternatives will be presented to the black land owners.

State-Wide Homes Foundation - Rodney Albert - reported in the absence of Rev. I. DeQuincey Newman.

[illegible] of the state. It has been approved by SEC to float bonds up to $1,000,000. A local housing corporation has been set up at Great Falls and 100 acres of land has been purchased. Hundreds of individuals have built homes in various parts of the state.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Rural Missions - John's Island - Rev. Willis Goodwin

This project started with day care centers but has moved in several directions including a health clinic and a pickle Coop. Plans under development include a sea food cooperative; preventive medicine program, expansion into fresh market produce, and a handcraft cooperative. Land titles are a serious problem in this area. Helping agencies have been the United Methodist, Lutheran and Mennonite Churches.

Sea Island Cooperative - Mr. P. T. Seabrook

This is an old cooperative in Frogmore. Mr. Seabrook's presentation emphasized the problems of inadequate member loyalty and participation due; in his opinion, to failure of the coop. to maintain educational programs for members, board and management.

Penn Center Tomato Growers Coop.- Mr. George Parris

This is a new cooperative with about 75 members representing about 300 acres. The cooperative has a tomato grader and intends to grade and market tomatoes for its members.

South Carolina Commission on Farm Workers - Mr. Al Fields

The Commission sponsors several buying clubs, has plans for a crabbing cooperative and is thinking about a construction company in the low income housing field.

Comprehensive Health Service - Mrs. Laura A. Bush

Several county and multi-county comprehensive health services were represented in the conference. Time permitted only a most sketchy presentation regarding their program. Environmental programs for preventive health are emphasized.

Williamsburg County Program - Rev. O. J. Nelson

This program emphasized leisure time activities for the aging.

As a part of this round-up, the group also heard briefly from Mr. Roy Williams of the Farmer Cooperative Service, U.S.D.A. and Mr. Jesse P. Perry, Jr. of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Mr. Williams described the kind of technical help the FCS could provide to the area through a multi-county cooperative development cooperation. Mr. Perry stated some of the questions any foundation would ask a group presenting a proposal for funding:

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

1. What do you want to do?
2. How do you propose to do it?
3. What resources do you already have available?
4. How long will it take to do it?
5. To whom else have you talked about it?

Following a coffee break the group moved into a general strategy session.

Shirley Greene listed some of the areas which might be included in a comprehensive development package: economic, housing, health, education, welfare, transportation. Also some of the factors which will be required: People, land, capital, credit, legal aid, technical assistance, training, management, political power. Also some of the sources for some of the factors are governmental agencies, foundations, churches.

Jim Pierce made a statement emphasizing the value and importance of agricultural coops in such a rural area as this where there is little likelihood of any considerable industrial development.

Ira Kaye pointed out the possibility of many jobs in such service areas as housing, health, education and day care. The picture is not simply industry or agriculture.

The general discussion developed, among others, the following main points:

-- The need of the area is for a comprehensive approach to development.

-- The situation is one of urgency. Bureaucratic procedures are too slow. Self-help coops are the key.

-- An alternative to the coop is the community development cooperative.

-- Legal services are an essential component of development.

-- CAP agencies should write legal aid into their budgets.

-- A community land trust might be a possibility.

-- Land is important, but it is not enough for black people to own it; they must be in position to use it in a profitable way.

Evening Session, April 22

This session zeroed in on the central question of the feasibility and desirability of some kind of coordinating committee or organization for development in the coastal plains area of South Carolina.

After considerable discussion of pros and cons and alternative patterns of organization, the group voted to proceed to the organization of an Ad Hoc Committee on Development. There were no dissenting votes.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

After further discussion it was voted that a few minutes be allowed for consideration of what such a committee should do, after which the chairman of this session (Mr. Charles Washington) should appoint the Ad hoc Committee from among the South Carolina people invited to this meeting. There were some dissenting votes on this motion.

The chairman declared a brief recess during which he asked each person to write out his suggestions as to what the Ad hoc Committee should do.

When the group reconvened, the chairman announced the following personnel for the Ad hoc Committee (supplemented by one person elected to the committee on Friday morning)

Mr. John Gadson, Frogmore
Mr. Rodney Albert, Columbia
Mrs. Laura A. Bush, Bluffton
Mr. Al Fields, Charleston
Rev. Willis Goodwin, John's Island
Mrs. Catherine Lewis, Conway
Rev. O. J. Nelson, Kingstree
Mrs. Eunice Rush, Orangeburg
Mr. George Smith, Frogmore
Mr. G. T. Twitty, Kingstree

Mr. John Gadson was later elected chairman by the Committee.

The Ad hoc Committee was asked to collect the papers, to meet following the evening adjournment to define their task, and to report back to the full group in the morning.

A motion to adjourn was lost. After a couple of other motions designed to define the functions and limits of the Ad hoc Committee were also debated and lost, a motion to adjourn was carried.

Friday Morning, April 23

The Ad hoc Committee reported five points defining its functions and responsibilities for the immediate future:

1. The Committee is to undertake a "study" to determine the areas in which there would be advantages for a coalition of effort.

2. The Committee recommends that the geographical area for this coalition effort be defined as the coastal plains of South Carolina.

3. The Committee is to develop a short statement of objectives based on the discussions of this conference.

4. The Committee is to call a conference of South Carolina coastal plains people to accept or reject the findings of the Ad hoc Committee.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

5. All these steps are to be taken within the next 90 days (amended by the group to "60 days").

These recommendations, with the amendment noted were approved by the conference. In the discussion the following additional points and clarifications were made:

Penn Center is seen as the focal point for this effort at least for the initial period.

The summary of this conference is to be sent to all persons who expressed interest in the conference as well as those who attended.

The offer of legal aid on land titles extended by Haywood Burns of the National Conference of Black Lawyers should be followed up promptly by the Ad hoc Committee.

Contact should be made by the Committee with the South Carolina state economic opportunity office.

The Ad hoc Committee is to search as diligently as possible for all local development groups and projects in the coastal plains area for invitation to the next meeting.

The Ad hoc Committee is to make every reasonable effort to secure the ideas and views of poor people as in-put for planning the coalition effort.

Whatever funds remain after covering the expenses of this conference from the $1000 grant of the United Methodist Rural Economic Development Action Program will be available for the further expenses of the coalition effort as determined by the Ad hoc Committee.

The representatives present from the Episcopal General Council Special Program and the Lutheran Church in America Board of American Missions agreed to see if their agencies could provide some grant money to assist the coalition effort.

It was agreed that funds for the coalition effort are to be handled for the present by Penn Center under the supervision of Committee Chairman John Gadson.

Chairman Gadson was granted authority to add members to the Ad hoc Committee.

The chairman requested all participants to send to him in writing their feelings and reflections regarding the conference.

In addition to these matters of business, a very helpful discussion was led by Charles Washington and Zack Townsend, attorneys, regarding legal problems related to land ownership. Topics covered included: ways of getting a moratorium on tax sales; problems of partition sales; problems of inadequate wills; problems of mortgage foreclosures.

John Gadson expressed appreciation to all who had participated in the conference. The group expressed appreciation to John Gadson and Penn Center.

The conference adjourned at about 11:30 A.M.

Summary by

Shirley E. Greene

SEG:dedh

Conference on

COMPREHENSIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN THE COASTAL PLAINS AREA

of

South Carolina

Mr. Rodney Albert
South Carolina on Human Relations
1420 Lady Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Mr. Thomas C. Barnwell, Jr., Director
Beaufort-Jasper Comprehensive Services
P. O. Box #1057
Hilton Head, South Carolina 29928

Rev. Merle Boos
Lutheran Church in America
Board of American Missions
327 South LaSalle Street- Room #332
Chicago, Illinois 60604

Mr. Robert S. Browne
Black Economic Research Center
112 West 120th Street
New York, New York 10027

Mr. Haywood Burns
National Conference of Black Lawyers
112 West 120th Street
New York, New York 10027

Mrs. Laura A. Bush
Box #172
Bluffton, South Carolina 29910

Mr. John C. Cole
South Carolina Commission for Farm Workers
285 Meeting Street
Charleston, South Carolina 29401

Rev. J. Harry Crout
S.C. Synod, Lutheran Church in America
P. O. Box #11487 - Capital Station
Columbia, South Carolina 29211

Mr. James L. Dodd, Jr., Director
Public Information, Department of Health, Education & Welfare
Peachtree - Seventh Street Building
Atlanta, Georgia 30323

Mrs. Mildred A. Dorsey
Comprehensive Health Services
P. O. Box #122
Port Royal, South Carolina 29935

Mr. Al Fields
1008 Lan 60 Avenue
Charleston, South Carolina

Rev. Edward Francis
Route #1 - Box #290
Moncks Corner, South Carolina 29461

Mrs. Georgia S. Good
Orangeburg County Consumer
Health Council
Orangeburg, South Carolina 29115

Mr. John Gadson
Penn Community Services
Frogmore, South Carolina 29920

Rev. W. T. Goodwin, Acting Director
Rural Mission, Inc.
Route #1 - Box #454
John's Island, South Carolina 29455

Mr. Shimon Gottschalk
14 Doran Road
Wayland, Massechusetts 01778

Rev. Shirley E. Greene
475 Riverside Drive - Room #363
New York, New York 10027

Mr. John W. Handy
Black Economics Research Center
112 West 120th Street
New York, New York 10027

Mr. R. L. Hurst
South Carolina State College
Orangeburg, South Carolina 29115

Mr. Ira Kaye
Office of Economic Opportunity
1200 Nineteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20500

Mr. Andrew Kidd
Route #1 - Box #132
Bluffton, South Carolina 29910

Mrs. Catherine Lewis
Harry-Georgetown

Conference on

COMPREHENSIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN THE COASTAL PLAINS AREA

of

South Carolina

Mrs. Mildred C. Mallory
602 Carteret Street
Beaufort, South Carolina 29902

Mr. Marcus Mathews
100 Maryland Avenue, N.E.
Room #104-A
Washington, D. C. 20002

Mr. Paul W. Matthias
South Carolina Council on Human Rklations
1420 Lady Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Mr. Andrew Marrisett
P. O. Box #218
Frogmore, South Carolina 29920

Mr. Rubuptene Magyck
Route #1 - Box #318-A Cross, South Carolina 29436

Mrs. Ollie M. McAlister
Beaufort-Jasper N.Y.C.
602 Carteret Street
Beaufort, South Carolina 29902

Mr. Joseph McDomick, Jr.
Penn Center
Frogmore, South Carolina 29920

Mrs. Frieda R. Mitchell
P. O. Box #19
Sheldon, South Carolina 29941

Mr. Daniel B. Mitchell
Black Economic Research Center
112 West 120th Street
New York, New York 10027

Mrs. Willie Mae Mitchell
Route #1 - Box #111
Bluffton, South Carolina 29910

Mr. O. J. Nelson
United Methodist Church
P. O. Box #296
Kingstree, South Carolina 29556

Mrs. Rosa Nesbitt
Route #1 - Box #146
Younges Island, South Carolina 29494

Mr. I. DeQuincey Newman
1523 Handen Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29203

Mr. Roger Nott
Economic Opportunity Council
Conway, South Carolina 29526

Mr. Jim Pierce, Executive Director
National Sharecroppers Fund
1947 Lansdale Drive
Charlotte, North Carolina 28205

Mr. J. P. Perry, Jr.
The Rockefeller Foundation
111 West 50th Street
New York, New York 10020

Eunice M. Rush
Orangeburg County Consumer
Health Council
Orangeburg, South Carolina 29115

Mrs. Laird Scott
Rural Mission, Inc.
Route #1 - Box #454
John's Island, South Carolina 29455

Mr. P. T. Seabrook
Box #25
Frogmore, South Carolina 29920

Mr. George Smith
Penn Center
Frogmore, South Carolina 29920

Conference on

COMPREHENSIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN THE COASTAL PLAINS AREA

of

South Carolina

Rev. Levern Stevenson
P. O. Box #538
Ridgeland, South Carolina 29936

Mrs. Muriel Tillinghast
Episcopal Church Center
815 Second Avenue
New York, New York 10017

Mr. Zack E. Townsend, Attorney
South Carolina Human Relation Center
205 Amelia Street
Orangeburg, South Carolina 29115

Mr. G. T. Twitty
Santee Coop.
Kingstree, South Carolina 29556

Mr. Charles E. Washington, Jr.
Star Route #1 - Box #331
Beaufort, South Carolina 29902

Mr. Raymond Williams
Farmers Cooperative Service
U. S. Department of Agriculture
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Clarence Wright
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

M-E-M-O-R-A-N-D-U-M

To: Emory Via

From: Clarence Wright

Re: Penn Conference - April 21-23, 1971

Date: May 20, 1971

Shirley Greene's summary of the conference activities is quite comprehensive and relatively accurate. Therefore, I'll just attach a few observations/comments:

1. Initially, the conference was billed as a statewide Economic Development Conference. The conferees (total group) did not designate a specific area of concentration.

2. Brothers Robert S. Browne, Black Economic Research Center, New York City, and George Smith, Penn Center Economic Development specialist both seemed quite mature and knowledgeable. Continued contact with both men is recommended. I think Brother Browne has a contract with Paul Mathias to do a feasibility study in connection with the South Carolina Council on Human Relations land project. According to Shimon Gottschalk of the Cambridge Institute and International Independence Institute, Brother Smith has a very sound reputation and has done some good things in the Brooklyn area prior to going to Penn Center.

3. Do you have any information on James Clyburn, Assistant to Governor West for Human Resource Development?

4. The attached proposal, "Project Black Land" was presented at the start of the conference and later dropped. What are your thoughts on the proposal? Can you see any ties with the Mathias project?

5. Although there was a great deal of discussion of the land situation in South Carolina, Paul Mathias and Rodney Albert were quite reticent about their endeavors. What is the status of their project?

6. There were very clear demands for assistance in Day Care which were not responded to. Any suggestions?

CW:mv
Attachments

BLACK EMPLOYMENT
in
SELECTED AGENCIES OF SOUTH CAROLINA
STATE GOVERNMENT

A COMPARATIVE STUDY
RACE-SEX-SALARY

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
APRIL 1971

PREPARED BY RODNEY ALBERT & PAUL MATTHIAS

INTRODUCTION

This is a report by the South Carolina Council on Human Relations dealing with the status of Black employment in selected agencies of South Carolina state government. The data for this document was obtained from records of the South Carolina State Personnel Division, questionnaires and personal interviews.

We make no claim that this is in any way an exhaustive study. To the contrary, it represents only an initial compilation of facts and information of which the citizens of South Carolina need to be aware. It is offered in the hope that it will encourage others both within and without state government to initiate thorough analyses of the situation as well as the necessary remedial actions.

TABLE I

STATE GOVERNMENT - EMPLOYEES
AND SALARIES IN EACH COUNTY BY RACE *

County	Employees		Total Salary	Average Salary
Abbeville	Black	28	107,987	3,856
	White	52	301,139	5,791
Aiken	Black	55	210,590	3,828
	White	121	722,142	5,968
Allendale	Black	21	83,449	3,973
	White	43	243,717	5,667
Anderson	Black	28	107,829	3,851
	White	166	904,080	5,446
Bamberg	Black	78	453,908	5,819
	White	47	262,058	5,575
Barnwell	Black	27	105,261	3,898
	White	60	370,088	6,168
Beaufort	Black	41	187,614	4,575
	White	96	610,277	6,357
Berkeley	Black	63	261,937	4,157
	White	138	807,426	5,850
Calhoun	Black	25	97,919	3,916
	White	50	332,388	6,647
Charleston	Black	113	446,483	3,951
	White	286	1,812,281	6,336
Cherokee	Black	13	51,292	3,945
	White	67	351,370	5,244
Chester	Black	38	151,564	4,146
	White	156	1,064,306	6,822
Chesterfield	Black	28	119,626	4,272
	White	192	1,278,333	6,657
Clarendon	Black	42	172,603	4,109
	White	79	447,886	5,669
Colleton	Black	33	128,791	3,902
	White	132	759,483	5,753

Darlington	Black	34	127,697	3,755
	White	74	423,590	5,724
Dillon	Black	30	116,991	3,899
	White	76	397,550	5,230
Dorchester	Black	297	1,150,586	3,874
	White	231	1,341,137	5,805
Edgefield	Black	23	87,580	3,807
	White	50	296,589	5,931
Fairfield	Black	38	153,606	4,042
	White	43	267,164	6,213
Florence	Black	100	390,380	3,903
	White	382	2,457,664	6,433
Georgetown	Black	36	148,396	4,122
	White	88	476,544	5,415
Greenville	Black	28	113,235	4,044
	White	406	2,572,708	6,336
Greenwood	Black	33	128,401	3,890
	White	160	1,129,921	7,062
Hampton	Black	23	94,246	4,097
	White	50	299,232	5,984
Horry	Black	17	68,188	4,011
	White	166	892,759	5,378
Jasper	Black	34	129,193	3,799
	White	47	250,899	5,338
Kershaw	Black	62	236,952	3,821
	White	109	700,932	6,430
Lancaster	Black	28	115,055	4,109
	White	80	452,363	5,654
Laurens	Black	259	998,449	3,855
	White	847	4,275,015	5,047
Lee	Black	36	135,894	3,774
	White	61	344,183	5,642
Lexington	Black	42	176,050	4,191
	White	260	1,652,960	6,357

McCormick	Black	29	109,159	3,764
	White	83	498,430	6,005
Marion	Black	25	93,501	3,740
	White	58	302,757	5,219
Marlboro	Black	39	148,298	3,802
	White	53	315,154	5,946
Newberry	Black	16	61,651	3,853
	White	94	583,503	6,207
Oconee	Black
	White	145	768,127	5,297
Orangeburg	Black	62	250,446	4,039
	White	219	1,452,422	6,632
Pickens	Black	2	7,364	3,682
	White	129	694,198	5,381
Richland	Black	872	3,814,820	4,374
	White	4,194	31,506,739	7,512
Saluda	Black	12	43,848	3,654
	White	63	321,148	5,097
Spartanburg	Black	93	489,704	5,265
	White	385	2,455,577	6,378
Sumter	Black	57	221,184	3,880
	White	117	700,039	5,983
Union	Black	24	94,864	3,952
	White	76	444,133	5,843
Williamsburg	Black	64	243,726	3,808
	White	100	575,695	5,756
York	Black	58	229,973	3,965
	White	133	766,653	5,764
No Definite County	Black	0
	White	20	218,000	10,900
TOTALS	Black	3,106	$12,866,290	$4,142
	White	10,684	$70,100,759	$6,561

*The information for this table was obtained from the State Personnel Division records dated October 2, 1970. It does not include data for all state agencies, including such large employers as the Department of Public Welfare, Department of Mental Health, Tax Commission and Employment Security Commission.

INTERPRETATION

An analysis of the data set forth in Table I shows that Blacks comprise 22.5% of the total work force in these state agencies but earn only 15.5% of the salaries paid out by them. When compared with the fact that Blacks comprised 45% of the working age population in South Carolina,* it is evident that they are neither being employed nor paid by the state government in proportion to their numbers.

The difference of $2, 419 between the average salary paid to White and Black employees in these state agencies indicates that Black workers in general are assigned to the relatively low paying positions. Such jobs, principally those of common laborers and general service workers, usually require few, if any entry skills, and are often characterized by limited opportunity to advance through the ranks by virtue of experience and demonstrated ability. Traditionally considered by many as "Negro Jobs", these positions are still apparently viewed by many in places of authority in state government in just such a light. Such persons would seem to entertain the fallacious concept which maintains that Blacks are suited only for certain kinds of work and certain kinds of jobs are suitable only for Blacks.

*1960 Census - (Essential labor force 14 and over)

TABLE II

SELECTED STATE AGENCIES - EMPLOYEES
BY RACE AND SEX *

	Black		White
	M	F	M	F
Agriculture Marketing Commission	3	0	12	5
Alcholic Beverage Control Commission	1	0	19	13
Arts Commission	0	0	1	4
Attorney General	0	0	25	9
Board of Bank Control Consumer Finance	0	0	3	1
Board of Bank Control Examining Division	0	0	14	6
Childrens Bureau	0	1	0	6
Civil Defense Agency	1	0	19	5
Commission on Alcoholism	0	0	6	4
Comptroller General's Office	3	1	9	34
Contractors Licensing Board	0	0	2	0
Dairy Commission	0	0	4	0
Department of Agriculture	1	0	94	39
Department of Education	89	3	494	224
Department of Labor	0	0	1	10
Department of Parks, Recreation & Tourism	21	9	140	61
Department of Veterans Affairs	0	0	4	4
Division of General Services	105	45	106	48
Education Television Center	14	1	128	34
Forestory Commission	2	0	42	15
Industrial Commission	0	1	11	35
Insurance Department	0	0	51	42
Interagency Council on Aging	0	2	5	5

	Black		White
	M	F	M	F
Judicial (Supreme Court)	1	0	3	6
Juvenile Corrections Reception and Evaluation	27	10	12	14
Planning and Grants	0	1	9	7
Pollution Control Authority	0	1	16	8
Probation, Parole and Pardon Board	6	1	79	61
Public Service Commission	1	0	45	17
Recreation Commission	0	0	2	2
Research and Statistical Division	0	0	3	4
Retirement Commission	1	0	3	36
Secretary of State	0	0	3	7
Soil and Water Conservation Committee	0	0	3	2
State Auditor	0	0	13	6
State Board of Health-Central Office	15	14	113	197
State Board of Health-County Office	0	1	12	31
State Board of Juvenile Correction	1	0	6	6
State Board of Juvenile Placement and Aftercare	2	0	2	3
State Development Board	1	0	26	17
State Law Enforcement Division	4	0	87	13
State Treasurer	0	0	3	2
Tax Commission	*2	1	334	219
TOTALS	301	92	2,000	1,262

*The initial information for this table was obtained from the State Personnel Division. In addition, each agency listed was contacted and asked if the information set forth in the State Personnel Division was correct. Fifteen agencies replied, some of which indicated different totals from what we had listed for them. In each of those instances in which a correction was made by the agency, we used that data rather than that provided by the State Personnel Division, and we have indicated these agencies with an asterisk.

INTERPRETATION

These forty-three agencies were selected for consideration because, with three or four exceptions, they represent fields of endeavor in state government which up until now have been open to Blacks only on a token level, if at all. This has been so even though the type of activities they engage in are in many instances of directo concern and interest to South Carolina's Black citizens.

Only thirteen of the forty-three agencies employ two or more Blacks.

The low number of Black women employees in several of the agencies raises the question of sexual as well as racial discrimination.

RECOMMENDATIONS

On the basis of this initial look at employment practices and patterns in South Carolina state government, we submit the following for consideration:

1. The responsibility for maintaining personnel information on all state government employees should be vested in one central State Personnel Agency. It would appear that this is not now the case since the records from the State Personnel Division did not contain data on such agencies as the Department of Public Welfare on the Employment Security Commission.

2. This central State Personnel Agency should be required to prepare and issue as public information an annual report setting forth for each state agency the total number of employees, with breakdowns according to race, sex, grade or salary level, and the counties in which they are employed.

3. The Governor's Advisory Commission on Human Relations should on the basis of its evaluation of employment practices and employee utilization patterns in state government agencies prepare and implement a program of action which is calculated

   (a) to eliminate or neutrelize all discriminatory barriers to equal employment; and

   (b) to undo any patterns of minority underutilization which have been brought about by past discrimination.

Such a program should include an annual performance reporting to the citizens of South Carolina on all state government agencies, and should cite statistical progress since the previous year as well as set forth in narrative form what affirmative action has been taken in each instance with regard to the following guidelines:

RECRUITMENT

1. Maintain consistent continuing communication with black shcools, colleges, community agencies, community leaders, organizations, publications, and other sources affording contact with potential black and minority applicants in the job area.

2. Inform all applicant sources, both generally and each time a specific request for referral is made, that black applicants are welcome and that discrimination in referrals will not be tolerated.

3. Fully inform each black applicant of the basis for all action taken on his or her application - Supply in detail the basis for rejection, including evaluation of test and interviews. Suggest to rejected black applicant possible method for remedying disqualifying factors.

4. Invite blacks to visit state government facilities; expalin employment opportunities and the non-discriminatory policies of particular agencies.

5. Solicit cooperation of academic and technical schools to establish curricula which will provide black candidates with the skills and education necessary to fulfill manpower requirements.

SELECTION

1. Take steps to assure that tests used for the purpose of selecting or placing applicants are demonstrated to be valid in forecasting the job performance of black applicants.

2. Pending validation, discontinue or modify the use of tests, minimum academic achievement, or other hiring criteria which screen out a disproportionate number of black applicants.

3. Make use of tests comprised of a sampling of work to be performed on the job.

4. Make increased use of the probationary period, affording an opportunity for on-the-job training and enabling the applicant's ability to be judged on the basis of job performance.

PLACEMENT AND PROMOTION

1. Make available to black applicants and to present black employees a complete description of positions for which they may be eligible to apply.

2. In the initial placement of newly hired employees, whenever possible place them in a position or area with low black concentration.

3. Broaden job experience and facilitate transfer of blacks by creating a system of temporary work experience assignments in other positions or areas of work.

4. Individually appraise the promotion potential and training needs of black employees, and take action necessary to permit advancement.

5. Announce all position openings on a basis which bring them to the attention of all agencies and makes clear that blacks are eligible and encouraged to apply.

DISCIPLINE

1. Formulate disciplinary standards and procedures in writing, and distribute them to all employees.

2. In case of proposed displinary action, inform the employee of the infraction alleged and afford an opportunity for rebuttal. If the rebuttal is unsatisfactory, clearly state the reasons why.

FACILITIES

Assure that facilities, including all work related facilities and those used in employer-sponsored recreational or similar activities are not segregated, whether by official policy or by employee practice.

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Pick up — 12:00 Noon
6 & Lincoln St.
Columbia

May 5, 1971

Meet Mathis
at Coffee Shop
9:00 - 9:15

Atl.
7:35a — #910
Pi — 8:56a
8:35 — 9:55
DL #329 (1 stop)

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

This letter comes to confirm our telephone conversation of yesterday, in which I requested your services for the May session of our Board of Directors Orientation Program.

The subject of the session, to be held May 22 in Columbia, is economic development. The first part of the session will be led by our Associate Director, Rodney Albert, who will discuss the status of rural economic development in the state and the South, with particular emphasis on cooperative efforts in agriculture and small industry.

I am asking you to lead the second part of the session, which should deal with economic development in the more urban setting in the state and region, with particular emphasis on the organized labor movement.

What we are attempting to get at, really, is a consideration not just of economic development, but of reformative economic development. We want to look at concepts of economic development designed to facilitate the self-help and self-determination efforts of those segments of the population who have been the objects of oppression and exploitation--blacks and working class whites. In the urban context, then, we want to look at organized labor as the potential force which could assure that the rights and interests of working class people not just be considered, but indeed prevail out of the current industrial boom in our state and region.

In that light, I think appropriate topics would be, first, a look at the philosophy of organized labor, secondly, at the historical development of the movement in the South, thirdly, at where the movement stands at this point in time in the South, and lastly at where the movement is headed in the South.

Our meeting will be held on the Benedict College campus in Columbia, and will commence at 10:00 A.M. Lunch will be taken at approximately 12:30 P.M., and your portion of the program will begin at around 1:30. The duration and form of your time will be left to your discretion.

1420 Lady Street / Columbia, South Carolina 29201 (803) 252-3651

Mr. Emory Via May 5, 1971

I want to thank you for your agreeing to come and help us out. We will, of course, reimburse you for all costs involved, and will be happy to assist in making whatever arrangements are needed at this end of the line for your transportation, etc.

I will look to hear from you in confirmation of your coming, and regarding any additional arrangements that should be made.

Sincerely,

Tim Rogers

Tim Rogers
Administrative Assistant

TR:mgg

CP - S.C. Human Rels.
5/27/71

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

May 14, 1971

MEMORANDUM

TO: Board of Directors Orientation Program Participants

FROM: Tim Rogers, Administrative Assistant

RE: May Orientation Session

The May session of the Board of Directors Orientation Program will be held Saturday, May 22, from 10:00 A.M. to 4:00 P.M., at Benedict College in Columbia. The Benedict College Campus is located at Harden and Blanding Streets; we will meet in the Group Study room located on the 12th floor of Mather Hall. Mather Hall is the very tall dormitory building, the tallest building on campus, and can be seen from any point on the campus. The easiest access to Mather Hall is through the main gate on Harden Street. Directional signs will be posted.

The May session will deal with the issue of economic development in South Carolina and the South. The morning portion will be lead by SCCHR Associate Director Rodney Albert, who will discuss economic development in rural areas, with special emphasis on cooperative efforts in agriculture and small industry.

In the afternoon, Emory F. Via, Director of the Resources Development Center of the Southern Regional Council, will lead a discussion on economic development in urban areas, with special attention to the role of organized labor.

Orientation Program participants will be the guests of SCCHR for lunch at the Benedict cafeteria.

We'll look forward to seeing you on the 22nd.

1420 Lady Street / Columbia, South Carolina 29201 (803) 252-3651

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

May 25, 1971

JUN 1 1971

Dr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Just a note to say thanks for your fine presentation this past Saturday. Our prospective Board members seemed to be very interested in what you had to say, as was I, and it was very helpful.

Should you want to pursue the consultant discussion with the director of the Governor's Advisory Commission on Human Relations, his name is George Hamilton and his telephone is (803) 758-3261.

Take care.

Sincerely,

Paul

Paul W. Matthias
Executive Director

PWM:mgg

1420 Lady Street / Columbia, South Carolina 29201 (803) 252-3651

COUNCIL CURRENTS

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

MAY 1971

WE'RE MOVING!

During the first week in June, SCCHR will move into new offices in the Columbia Building, located on the corner of Main and Gervais Streets (directly across from the capitol building in Columbia.) The move is necessitated by the expansion of the SCCHR staff with the beginning of the Operation Advocacy program June 7.

Our new address, effective June 7, will be:

The Columbia Building - Suite 200
1203 Gervais Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Our new telephone number, also effective June 7, will be: 253-832~~4~~5

* * * * *

SAMPLE QUARTERLY ATTACHED

Accompanying this issue of the newsletter is a recent issue of SOUTH TODAY, published monthly by the Southern Regional (SRC) in Atlanta.

Up until now SCCHR has made this digest available to our members for $2.00 a year. Beginning immediately, anyone who wants to start receiving it each month should write directly to:

South Today
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Their voluntary subscription rate is $2.50 per year.

SCCHR will continue sending copies only to our member subscribers until their subscriptions expire. Thereafter they too will deal directly with SRC if they wish to continue receiving SOUTH TODAY.

If the attached issue is one you've already seen, please pass it on to a friend.

SPECIAL EDITION

This issue of CURRENTS is given over to SCCHR's recently released report on Black Employment in Selected Agencies of South Carolina State Government. The report is reprinted in its entirety beginning on page two.

BLACK EMPLOYMENT
in
SELECTED AGENCIES OF SOUTH CAROLINA
STATE GOVERNMENT

A COMPARATIVE STUDY
RACE-SEX-SALARY

INTRODUCTION

This is a report by the South Carolina Council on Human Relations dealing with the status of Black employment in selected agencies of South Carolina state government. The data for this document was obtained from records of the South Carolina State Personnel Division, questionnaires and personal interviews.

We make no claim that this is in any way an exhaustive study. To the contrary, it represents only an initial compilation of facts and information of which the citizens of South Carolina need to be aware. It is offered in the hope that it will encourage others both within and without state government to initiate thorough analyses of the situation as well as the necessary remedial actions.

TABLE I

STATE GOVERNMENT - EMPLOYEES
AND SALARIES IN EACH COUNTY BY RACE *

County	Employees		Total Salary	Average Salary
Abbeville	Black	28	107,987	3,856
	White	52	301,139	5,791
Aiken	Black	55	210,590	3,828
	White	121	722,142	5,968
Allendale	Black	21	83,449	3,973
	White	43	243,717	5,667
Anderson	Black	28	107,829	3,851
	White	166	904,080	5,446
Bamberg	Black	78	453,908	5,819
	White	47	262,058	5,575
Barnwell	Black	27	105,261	3,898
	White	60	370,088	6,168
Beaufort	Black	41	187,614	4,575
	White	96	610,277	6,357
Berkeley	Black	63	261,937	4,157
	White	138	807,426	5,850
Calhoun	Black	25	97,919	3,916
	White	50	332,388	6,647
Charleston	Black	113	446,483	3,951
	White	286	1,812,281	6,336
Cherokee	Black	13	51,292	3,945
	White	67	351,370	5,244
Chester	Black	38	151,564	4,146
	White	156	1,064,306	6,822
Chesterfield	Black	28	119,626	4,272
	White	192	1,278,333	6,657
Clarendon	Black	42	172,603	4,109
	White	79	447,886	5,669
Colleton	Black	33	128,791	3,902
	White	132	759,483	5,753

Darlington	Black	34	127,697	3,755
	White	74	423,590	5,724
Dillon	Black	30	116,991	3,899
	White	76	397,550	5,230
Dorchester	Black	297	1,150,586	3,874
	White	231	1,341,137	5,805
Edgefield	Black	23	87,580	3,807
	White	50	296,589	5,931
Fairfield	Black	38	153,606	4,042
	White	43	267,164	6,213
Florence	Black	100	390,380	3,903
	White	382	2,457,664	6,433
Georgetown	Black	36	148,396	4,122
	White	88	476,544	5,415
Greenville	Black	28	113,235	4,044
	White	406	2,572,708	6,336
Greenwood	Black	33	128,401	3,890
	White	160	1,129,921	7,062
Hampton	Black	23	94,246	4,097
	White	50	299,232	5,984
Horry	Black	17	68,188	4,011
	White	166	892,759	5,378
Jasper	Black	34	129,193	3,799
	White	47	250,899	5,338
Kershaw	Black	62	236,952	3,821
	White	109	700,932	6,430
Lancaster	Black	28	115,055	4,109
	White	80	452,363	5,654
Laurens	Black	259	998,449	3,855
	White	847	4,275,015	5,047
Lee	Black	36	135,894	3,774
	White	61	344,183	5,642
Lexington	Black	42	176,050	4,191
	White	260	1,652,960	6,357

McCormick	Black	29	109,159	3,764
	White	83	498,430	6,005
Marion	Black	25	93,501	3,740
	White	58	302,757	5,219
Marlboro	Black	39	148,298	3,802
	White	53	315,154	5,946
Newberry	Black	16	61,651	3,853
	White	94	583,503	6,207
Oconee	Black
	White	145	768,127	5,297
Orangeburg	Black	62	250,446	4,039
	White	219	1,452,422	6,632
Pickens	Black	2	7,364	3,682
	White	129	694,198	5,381
Richland	Black	872	3,814,820	4,374
	White	4,194	31,506,739	7,512
Saluda	Black	12	43,848	3,654
	White	63	321,148	5,097
Spartanburg	Black	93	489,704	5,265
	White	385	2,455,577	6,378
Sumter	Black	57	221,184	3,880
	White	117	700,039	5,983
Union	Black	24	94,864	3,952
	White	76	444,133	5,843
Williamsburg	Black	64	243,726	3,808
	White	100	575,695	5,756
York	Black	58	229,973	3,965
	White	133	766,653	5,764
No Definite County	Black	0
	White	20	218,000	10,900
TOTALS	Black	3,106	$12,866,290	$4,142
	White	10,684	$70,100,759	$6,561

*The information for this table was obtained from the State Personnel Division records dated October 2, 1970 and includes data for seventy state agencies; not included are such large employers as the Department of Public Welfare, Department of Mental Health, Tax Commission and Employment Security Commission.

INTERPRETATION

An analysis of the data set forth in Table I shows that Blacks comprise 22.5% of the total work force in these state agencies but earn only 15.5% of the salaries paid out by them. When compared with the fact that Blacks comprise 45% of the working age population in South Carolina,* it is evident that they are neither being employed nor paid by the state government in proportion to their numbers.

The difference of $2,419 between the average salary paid to White and Black employees in these state agencies indicates that Black workers in general are assigned to the relatively low paying positions. Such jobs, principally those of common laborers and general service workers, usually require few, if any entry skills, and are often characterized by limited opportunity to advance through the ranks by virtue of experience and demonstrated ability. Traditionally considered by many as "Negro Jobs", these positions are still apparently viewed by many in places of authority in state government in just such a light. Such persons would seem to entertain the fallacious concept which maintains that Blacks are suited only for certain kinds of work and certain kinds of jobs are suitable only for Blacks.

*1960 Census - (Essential labor force 14 and over)

TABLE II

SELECTED STATE AGENCIES - EMPLOYEES
BY RACE AND SEX*

	Black		White
	M	F	M	F
Agriculture Marketing Commission	6	0	26	7
Alcholic Beverage Control Commission*	1	0	19	13
Attorney General*	0	0	18	9
Board of Bank Control Examining Division*	0	0	14	5
Childrens Bureau	0	2	0	18
Civil Defense Agency	1	0	21	7
Comptroller General's Office*	3	1	9	34
Department of Agriculture*	1	0	94	39
Department of Education*	89	3	494	224
Department of Labor	0	0	23	16
Department of Parks, Recreation & Tourism*	21	9	140	61
Division of General Services*	105	45	106	48
Educational Television Center*	14	1	128	34
Forestry Commission	2	0	385	125
Industrial Commission*	0	1	11	35
Insurance Department*	0	0	51	42
Interagency Council on Aging*	0	2	5	5
Judicial	1	0	13	23
Juvenile Corrections Reception and Evaluation	26	10	12	15
Planning and Grants	0	1	11	8
Probation, Parole and Pardon Board*	6	1	79	61
Public Service Commission*	1	0	45	17

	Black		White
	M	F	M	F
Secretary of State	0	0	4	11
State Board of Health-Central Office	16	26	156	280
State Board of Health-County Office	0	26	115	382
State Board of Juvenile Correction	1	0	7	6
State Development Board	1	0	26	17
State Highway Patrol*	4	0	665	0
State Law Enforcement Division*	4	0	87	13
Tax Commission	2	1	334	219
TOTALS	305	129	3,098	1,774

*The information for this table was obtained from the State Personnel Division records dated October 2, 1970, and verification of its accuracy was requested from the agencies listed. In those instances where agencies provided corrected data, we have used their figures and indicated these agencies with an asterisk.

Information on the Tax Commission did not appear in the State Personnel Division records which we used. The totals were provided upon request by the Tax Commission office.

INTERPRETATION

These thirty agencies were selected for consideration because, with a few exceptions, they represent fields of endeavor in state government which up until now have been open to Blacks only on a token level, if at all. This has been so even though the type of activities they engage in are in many instances of direct concern and interest to South Carolina's Black citizens. There are of course other agencies with records similar to many of these, however we have attempted only to provide a sampling in this study which sets forth the figures on less than one-third of the total number of state government agencies in South Carolina.

We believe this table speaks for itself. Perhaps the only comment we should make is that the low number of Black women employees in most of these agencies raises the question of sexual as well as racial discrimination.

RECOMMENDATIONS

On the basis of this initial look at employment practices and patterns in South Carolina state government, we submit the following for consideration:

1. The responsibility for maintaining personnel information on all state government employees should be vested in one central State Personnel Agency. It would appear that this is not now the case since the records from the State Personnel Division did not contain data on such agencies as the Department of Public Welfare and the Employment Security Commission.

2. This central State Personnel Agency should be required to prepare and issue as public information an annual report setting forth for each state agency the total number of employees, with breakdowns according to race, sex, grade or salary level, and the counties in which they are employed.

3. The Governor's Advisory Commission on Human Relations should on the basis of its evaluation of employment practices and employee utilization patterns in state government agencies prepare and implement a program of action which is calculated:

   (a) to eliminate or neutralize all discriminatory barriers to equal employment; and

   (b) to undo any patterns of minority underutilization which have been brought about by past discrimination.

Such a program should include an annual performance reporting to the citizens of South Carolina on all state government agencies, and should cite statistical progress since the previous year as well as set forth in narrative form what affirmative action has been taken in each instance with regard to the following guidelines:

RECRUITMENT

1. Maintain consistent continuing communication with Black schools, colleges, community agencies, community leaders, organizations, publications, and other sources affording contact with potential Black and minority applicants in the job area.

2. Inform all applicant sources, both generally and each time a specific request for referral is made, that Black applicants are welcome and that discrimination in referrals will not be tolerated.

3. Fully inform each Black applicant of the basis for all action taken on his or her application - Supply in detail the basis for rejection, including evaluation of tests and interviews. Suggest to rejected Black applicants possible methods for remedying disqualifying factors.

4. Invite Blacks to visit state government facilities; explain employment opportunities and the non-discriminatory policies of particular agencies.

5. Solicit cooperation of academic and technical schools to establish curricula which will provide Black candidates with the skills and education necessary to fulfill manpower requirements.

SELECTION

1. Take steps to assure that tests used for the purpose of selecting or placing applicants are demonstrated to be valid in forecasting the job performance of Black applicants.

2. Pending validation, discontinue or modify the use of tests, minimum academic achievement, or other hiring criteria which screen out a disproportionate number of Black apllicants.

3. Make use of tests comprised of a sampling of work to be performed on the job.

4. Make increased use of the probationary period, affording an opportunity for on-the-job training and enabling the applicant's ability to be judged on the basis of job performance.

PLACEMENT AND PROMOTION

1. Make available to Black applicants and to present Black employees a complete description of positions for which they may be eligible to apply.

2. In the initial placement of newly hired employees, whenever possible place them in a position or area with low Black concentration.

3. Broaden job experience and facilitate transfer of Blacks by creating a system of temporary work experience assignments in other positions or areas of work.

4. Individually appraise the promotion potential and training needs of Black employees, and take action necessary to permit advancement.

5. Announce all position openings on a basis which bring them to the attention of all agencies and makes clear that Blacks are eligible and encouraged to apply.

DISCIPLINE

1. Formulate disciplinary standards and procedures in writing, and distribute them to all employees.

2. In case of proposed disciplinary action, inform the employee of the infraction alleged and afford an opportunity for rebuttal. If the rebuttal is unsatisfactory, clearly state the reasons why.

FACILITIES

Assure that facilities, including all work related facilities and those used in employer-sponsored recreational or similar activities are not segregated, whether by official policy or by employee practice.

* * * * * * *

REPORT ELICITS BROAD RESPONSE

The preceding SCCHR report brought reaction from a number of political figures and other prominent individuals when it was discussed at a May 10 press conference in Columbia.

Reps. James L. Felder and I. S. Leevy Johnson of Richland County called for a state civil service system in South Carolina to combat employment discrimination, and said they would propose such legislation in the General Assembly next year.

Johnson said that "any agency head who says he can't find qualified Blacks is unqualified himself to be holding such a position."

Felder agreed and suggested that Black principals and teachers displaced in the transition to a unitary school system would be a good source from which state agencies could recruit experienced Black administrators.

Also present at the press conference were James Courson, representing the S. C. Republican Party, Rev. I. D. Newman, representing the Black Caucus of the Democratic Party, SCCHR staff members Paul Matthias and Rodney Albert who prepared the report, and SCCHR state president, Atty. Mordecai Johnson.

In a prepared statement, Atty. Johnson declared that "These facts -- these figures -- speak for themselves. They speak so loudly that we can't hear excuses and mere promises and nitpicking responses. They speak so loudly that we can't hear mere words in rebuttal. They literally cry out for corrective action."

The report was personally presented to Governor West by Matthias and Albert, and copies were sent to all members of the Governor's Advisory Commission on Human Relations which is also examining state agency employment practices. It was stressed that SCCHR's study is limited in scope and is designed only to facilitate the Advisory Commission's efforts by giving an initial picture of discrimination in selected state agencies, and by making suggestions as to methods that might be adopted to deal with this unacceptable situation.

Copies of the report have also gone to all state legislators, department heads, and appropriate federal agencies.

CALENDAR OF UPCOMING EVENTS

June 12.....SCCHR Executive Committee Meeting, Ramada Inn (Flaming Pit Restaurant), I-26 and U.S. 378, Columbia at 10:00 A. M - 12:30 P.M.

June 12.....SCCHR Board of Directors Meeting, Ramada Inn (Flaming Pit Restaurant), I-26 and U.S. 378, Columbia at 2:00 P.M.-4:30 P.M.

June 26.....Fifth session of the SCCHR Board of Directors Orientation Program.

* * * * * * *

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
Staff Members

Paul W. Matthias.....Executive Director
Rodney Albert.....Associate Director
Ida L. Johnson .....Outreach Worker
Tim Rogers .....Administrative Assistant
Mary G. Golding.....Administrative Secretary
Hattie M. Glover .....General Secretary

Membership Categories

__ $5 Regular __ $2 Student
__ $8 Husband and Wife __ $100 Corporate __ $1 Associate __ $10 In addition, send me the quarterly Materials Distribution.

NAME:_____
ADDRESS:_____
CITY:_____ STATE:_____ ZIP:_____

S. C. Council on Human Relations
1420 Lady Street - Suite - 207
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Non-Profit Org.
U.S. Postage
Permit No. 758
Columbia, S.C.

Mr. Paul Athony
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

PRESS RELEASE October 18, 1971

South Carolina Council on Human Relations
Suite 200, Columbia Building
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

SCHR

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Columbia. The following is an open letter from Paul W. Matthias, Executive Director of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations, to South Carolina Governor John C. West.

October 18, 1971

The Honorable John C. West
Governor of South Carolina
The State House
Columbia, South Carolina

Dear Governor West:

During the past week, successive articles in both Columbia newspapers and other newspapers in the state have indicated that South Carolina has been chosen to receive $2 million from the United States Department of Labor under the Emergency Employment Act to place AFDC mothers in jobs to be created from those funds.

We welcome any opportunity and any source of funds provided this state which will effectively, and with due regard for human rights and dignity, improve the financial and living conditions of those mothers and children who now eke out an existence on the minimal amount they receive from the welfare department. (Presently a woman with three children, and no other source of income is expected to survive on a maximum of $104 per month.)

However, as headlined and reported in the newspapers, certain aspects of this proposed project seem to us to be of a character that would infringe upon human rights and dignity. Indeed, the project could bring about even more suffering for the children and the mothers involved.

Consultation with the Director of the State Department of Public Welfare, Dr. R. Archie Ellis, and with the member of your staff who indicated he was responsible for coordinating the functions of the various agencies involved in the project, have not alleviated our misgivings. Our concern is made more urgent in view of the fact that the project is supposed to be approved by November 1st, then go into effect in the four counties of Charleston, Greenville, Horry and Orangeburg.

The two major points which cause us concern are as follows:

(1) The mandatory requirement to work under threat of reduction in the amount of welfare payments.

This approach assumes, initially, that the opportunity to work is not sufficient motivation for mothers on welfare to accept employment, but rather that they must be coerced -- much like recalcitrant adolescents -- into job situations.

The truth of the matter -- as attested to by most of the welfare caseworkers with whom we have talked -- is that most mothers receiving AFDC would welcome the opportunity to work, if only they could find jobs. The fact that South Carolina presently has an unemployment rate of some 5.4% - 61,300 unemployed persons - is testimony enough that the jobs are not now available. Additionally, some AFDC mothers may well have valid reasons which would prohibit them from accepting employment. We sincerely question whether provisions in the project proposal designed to protect the rights of the AFDC mother and her children in such circumstances will be adequate.

(2) The possibility of additional suffering and hunger on the part of innocent children.

Should the threat to reduce a check be put into effect, a mother and her three children with no other source of income than governmental assistance would be compelled to live on less than $85 per month, rather than the present maximum of $104 per month. The statement that only the mother will suffer, and not the children, is patently absurd. The fact is that the whole family, including the children, would be forced to live on an even smaller amount than the miserably low grant they now receive from the welfare department.

We are convinced that the course this state and this nation must take lies in putting priority on increasing the level of governmental assistance payments across the board to realistic levels, and improving the over-all job situation so that those welfare recipients who can work will be able to do so. Recognizing, however, that the limited financial resources of South Carolina are such that the state must avail itself of all reasonably attainable federal money -- even within the context of limite and questionable programs such as in the instant case -- we cannot expect you, nor would we want you to ignore the offer of these funds to the state.

However, we do feel that if the project is implemented in its present form, more harm will come as a result than could possibly be offset by the project's more positive dimensions. Accordingly, we do urge you to insist on at least the following alterations in the proposed Emergency Employment Act project for employment of AFDC recipients as a pre-condition to South Carolina's participation therein:

(1) The mandatory work requirement, with the accompanying threat of reduction in welfare payments, should be removed, so that this project may become a "work opportunity" program rather than the "work enforcement" program it now is.

(2) Under no condition should the project contain any provision which may cause reduction in payments presently contributing to the support of minor children.

I shall be most happy to discuss with you, at your pleasure, this most urgent matter.

Sincerely,

Paul W. Matthias
Executive Director

PWM:mgg

cc: Dr. R. Archie Ellis
Mrs. T. K. McDonald
Mr. W. W. Smoak, Jr.
Rev. Frederick C. James
Dr. W. Wright Spears
Mr. James H. Sherard
Mr. Thomas L. Poteat
Mrs. J. Derham Lewis

****

For further information, contact:
Tim Rogers
Administrative Assistant
South Carolina Council on Human Relations
Suite 200, Columbia Building
Columbia, South Carolina 29201
(803) 253-8325

PRESS RELEASE October 25, 1971

United States Commission on Civil Rights
Southern Field Office
75 Piedmont Ave., N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia

SCAR

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Greenville. The following is an open letter from Dr. W. F. Gibson, Chairman of the South Carolina State Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights, to South Carolina Governor John C. West.

October 25, 1971

The Honorable John C. West
Governor of South Carolina
The State House
Columbia, South Carolina

Dear Governor West:

I am writing with reference to the proposed "work-enforcement" pilot project for AFDC mothers in South Carolina, to be funded by the U.S. Department of Labor under the federal Emergency Employment Act. As Chairman of the State Advisory Committee (SAC) to the United States Commission on Civil Rights, I am compelled to protest against the proposed project in its present form.

As you know, last month SAC released a comprehensive report on the welfare system in South Carolina, along with a list of recommendations for improvements in the present system. While I applaud efforts by your administration to obtain additional monies to facilitate the plight of poor people, it seems clear to me that certain aspects of the proposed "work-enforcement" project will only be counter-productive to the end of a just system of provision for those who must depend on governmental assistance for their survival.

My first objection is relative to the "work-requirement" provision of the proposed project. This seems to me, first of all, to be a direct insult to AFDC mothers, the majority of whom want employment but have not been able to find it in the past. These people do not have to be "forced" to work, and a program built around this philosophy would have the two-fold deficiency of perpetrating the myth with the general public that welfare recipients are "lazy" and can only be dealt with in a punitive manner, and secondly, generating considerable hostility among those poor who are treated in this fashion. Additionally, I question the adequacy of administrative procedures set up to determine whether or not an AFDC mother has sufficient justification to refuse to accept employment in a particular context.

I am also concerned that this program might become racially identifiable, as did the Work Incentive and Training Program (WIN). In the period from October to December, 1970, 637 of 717 participants in South Carolina's WIN program were Black. Of 125 participants referred from the WIN program, 107 were Black. Such figures in the proposed "work-enforcement" project inevitably would be interpreted by the state's Black citizenry as indicating discrimination. The proposition of an involuntary Black work force being created to meet the state's manpower needs is hardly one that would contribute to improved race relations.

The proper approach to this problem would seem to me to be in creating a situation of full employment, where jobs, training and other allied services such as day care, transportation, etc., would be provided to welfare recipients, who would then be allowed to choose arrangements suitable to their particular circumstances.

I also object strongly to any project which holds the possibility that payments to a family now receiving AFDC would be reduced as "punishment" to a mother who refuses to accept a job designated for her by the state government. As noted in SAC's report, payments to all welfare recipients are already grossly inadequate, and they are so low in the AFDC category that our Committee felt these persons were being discriminated against. To reduce payments further would be an unconscionable act, particularly in light of the fact that innocent children would be penalized.

Unless these aspects of the proposed plan are altered, I think it would be most inadvisable for South Carolina to participate in the project. To do so would be totally inconsistent with your stated goals of economic justice, and reconciliation between divergent racial and economic groups in our state.

Sincerely,

Dr. W. F. Gibson
Chairman
S. C. State Advisory Committee
U. S. Commission on Civil Rights

WFG/kmp
cc: Dr. R. Archie Ellis
Mrs. T. K. McDonald
Mr. W. W. Smoak, Jr.
Rev. Frederick C. James
Dr. W. Wright Spears
Mr. James H. Sherard
Mr. Thomas L. Poteat
Mrs. J. Derham Lewis

October 26, 1971

Rev. Paul Mathias, Director
SCHR
1203 Gervais Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Dear Paul:

I saw and applaud the news releases from SCHR and SAC regarding the "Work Enforcement" Project.

Is there any special Washington pressure to cast the program in one mold rather than another? Could the state's position be altered if Washington indicated acceptance or encouragement of such alterations?

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center

EFV/gms

SCCHR

COUNCIL CURRENTS

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

NOVEMBER 1971

ANNUAL MEETING DECEMBER 4; FANNIE LOU HAMER TO SPEAK

The 1971 SCCHR Annual Meeting will be held Saturday, December 4, on the campus of Columbia College in Columbia. The agenda for the Annual Meeting appears on page five of this issue.

The speaker for our Banquet Saturday evening will be Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer, the celebrated fighter for human rights from Ruleville, Mississippi. One of twenty children, Mrs. Hamer worked for 18 of her adult years as a sharecropper. In 1962, she began a life of activism which has included the founding of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, running on the independent Democratic slate headed by Charles Evers in the recent Mississippi elections, and the founding of the Freedom Farm Co-op in Sunflower County, Mississippi. Mrs. Hamer has received honorary degrees from Toughallow College and Shaw University.

Excerpts from an article which appeared in the October, 1971, issue of ESSENCE magazine, entitled "Fannie Lou Hamer Speaks Out," are reprinted on pages 6 and 7 inside.

The Annual Banquet has always been a vital catalyst for the enthusiasm and unity of the Council, a time for renewing our spirits and our commitment. This year the Executive Committee has decided to make a special effort to attract new SCCHR members in conjunction with the Banquet. Each Council member is asked to pass along his copy of this issue of CURRENTS to a friend who is not now a member of SCCHR, and to ask that friend to be with us at our Annual Banquet.

Ticket prices for the Banquet will be $6 for Council members, and $11 for non-members. The cost of a new membership and Banquet ticket are equal to that of a purchase of a Banquet ticket by a non-member. Tickets may be ordered from the SCCHR office, or purchased from any member of the SCCHR Board of Directors, or any local council president. Reservations placed through the SCCHR office should be made no later than Wednesday, December 1.

The deadline for submission of nominations for the James McBride Dabbs Award has been extended to November 26. Nominations should be addressed to Mrs. Catherine Lewis, c/o the SCCHR office.

FORCED WORK: THE WELFARE DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

SCCHR has been embroiled in the escalating controversy over a proposed experiment involving welfare recipients in four South Carolina counties. The experiment calls for cutting welfare payments to recipients who refuse jobs designated for them by state government. A report on the dispute begins on page 2.

WELFARE DEMONSTRATION PROJECT: A STATUS REPORT

Wednesday, October 13, Governor John West announced that South Carolina would be one of five states to participate in a "demonstration project" involving welfare recipients in four of the state's counties: Orangeburg, Horry, Greenville, and Charleston. The project would be administered under the U.S. Department of Labor, with funds provided from the recently-passed Emergency Employment Act. Other states participating would be New York, New Jersey, Illinois and California.

The project would be designed to test the effectiveness of threatening to reduce welfare payments to recipients -- principally mothers receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) -- if those recipients refuse to accept employment designated by state government. "Public service" jobs would be created by the Emergency Employment Act (EEA) funds for use in the project.

In three of the four counties, the project would require recipients to accept the new jobs or have their checks cut. A mother with three children, receiving a maximum of $104 per month under present South Carolina Department of Public Welfare (DPW) regulations, could have her check reduced to as little as $65. In the fourth county, recipients would not be penalized for refusing to accept jobs.

Soon after the announcement, several groups began raising questions about the proposed project. SCCHR Executive Director Paul Matthias was the first to publicly question the proposal. In an open letter to the Governor, dated October 18, Matthias questioned the need for a program to "force" welfare mothers to work, while pointing out the distinct possibility that innocent children could be penalized were the project to be implemented.

Statements critical of the proposal were subsequently issued by representatives of the state NAACP, League of Women Voters, professional and student affiliates of the National Association of Social Workers, the Midlands Welfare Rights Organization, the South Carolina State Advisory Committee to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, the United Citizens Party of South Carolina, and other groups. News media coverage of the developing controversy became extensive. Editorials ciriticizing Matthias and others for questioning the proposal appeared in several of the state's commercial newspapers, while articles challenging the forced-work project and commending those opposing it appeared in several state collegiate newspapers, including the Clemson TIGER and the Winthrop JOHNSONIAN.

In the wake of the criticism, the approach of state officials to the issue became markedly different, at least in their public comments. While earlier statements had emphasized that welfare recipients were being given an ultimatum, with little attention to the possible inequities and further suffering of welfare mothers and their children, later comments had a considerably altered emphasis. DPW Director Archie Ellis made several statements to the effect that the project should be dubbed "work encouragement" rather than work enforcement. Governor West subsequently announced that some $3 million in federal funds had been obtained to set up comprehensive day care programs in the state, with priority for the four counties involved in the demonstration project.

more

Meanwhile, South Carolina's proposal for participation in the project, which was supposed to have been submitted by November 1, has not yet been submitted. Legal challenges to the project's implementation are also being prepared.

In an effort to encourage state legislators to speak out, the SCCHR Executive Committee authored a letter to members of the General Assembly, asking their cooperation in obtaining definitive responses to as yet unanswered questions concerning the proposal. The text of that letter is reprinted immediately following this article.

The future of the forced-work experiment is still in doubt. Whether or not it is implemented could well depend on concerned citizens making their feelings known to those in position to affect the final decision.

* * * * *

Reprinted below is an open letter from the SCCHR Executive Committee to the following: Members of the Orangeburg County Legislative Delegation
Members of the Richland County Legislative Delegation
Members of the Charleston County Legislative Delegation
Members of the Greenville County Legislative Delegation
Members of the Horry County Legislative Delegation
Senator John Drummond, Greenwood County
Senator Eugene Zeigler, Florence County
Representative Thomas Smith, Florence County

Dear Sir:

The Executive Committee of the Board of Directors of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations wishes to call to your attention the proposed Welfare Demonstration Project scheduled to go into effect in the four counties of Charleston, Greenville, Horry, and Orangeburg. The enclosed material, abstracted from an official copy of the Proposal Model received from the Governor's Office, provides information on the basic elements of the project.

In recent weeks, several organizations throughout the state have publicly expressed concern about certain aspects of this project. This Committee feels that the concern expressed has not been adequately answered. We are requesting that you take whatever steps are appropriate to seek clarification on the following questionable aspects of the project:

1. Project participation is mandatory for Welfare Mothers judged employable in three counties. Refusal to participate means a reduction of from $20 to $40 in the welfare check of that family. (Maximum grant for an AFDC mother and three children is now $104 per month; this ranks South Carolina 49th among all states.) Who is going to judge whether or not a mother is employable under the conditions prescribed? What protective measures will be provided to guarantee that a mother is not unjustly punished?

-more-

2. Why is it necessary to convey the impression that Welfare Mothers must be forced to work when our State Director of Public Welfare himself says that only 4.8% of employable mothers receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children are not actively seeking work?

3. Why is "work" in this program construed to be only a job outside of the home? Are women who are filling the roles of both father and mother in maintaining a home and rearing children not working?

4. How many children in the state will be forced to live on less money each month as a result of this Project? In the case of the mother who refuses to participate without "good cause" are there provisions or programs available to help that family? Are we simply going to allow them to starve a little more until the mother comes to her "senses"?

5. What kinds of public-service jobs will be created for the Project participants? Since many of them are untrained and unskilled and this project does not include job-training, can they really hope to move into economically viable jobs? Is a program which creates jobs with outside resources, and not by economic demand, a wise program? Will the jobs continue when the outside funds are terminated?

6. Will this program become racially identifiable as was the case with the Work Incentive and Training Program? Such a possibility would do nothing to further amicable relationships between black and white people in this state.

7. Is it possible that participating mothers may earn enough to become ineligible by a few dollars for welfare benefits, services or Food Stamps? Will they become too rich to receive welfare, but too poor to buy medical services or sufficient food for themselves and their children?

The members of this Executive Committee would appreciate any information you can provide to clarify the questions raised above.

Yours sincerely,

Attorney Mordecai Johnson, President
Dr. Robert J. Moore
Attorney Theo Mitchell
Mrs. Catherine Lewis
Mrs. Freida Mitchell
Mr. Willar Hightower
Dr. Edward Beardsley
Mr. M. Hayes Mizell

The Executive Committee of the
S. C. Council on Human Relations

The 1971 Annual Meeting of the
South Carolina Council on Human Relations

Date: Saturday, December 4, 1971
Place: Columbia College, Columbia, South Carolina

AGENDA

Afternoon Session - Cottingham Theatre (on campus)

1:00 P.M. - Board of Directors Meeting
3:00 P.M. - Break and Registration
3:30 P.M. - Annual Membership Business Meeting

Executive Committee Reports*
Atty. Mordecai Johnson, President
Mr. Willar Hightower, Treasurer
Staff Report*
Mr. Paul Matthias, Executive Director
Nominating Committee Report*
Dr. Robert J. Moore, Chairman
Credentials and Awards Committee Report*
Mrs. Catherine Lewis, Chairman
Local Council Reports*

5:30 P.M. - Unstructured Discussion Groups (SCCHR Staff members will be available to discuss current and projected programs.)

Evening Session - Daniel Dining Hall (on campus)

7:00 P.M. - Banquet

Presentation of Outstanding Local Council Award
Presentation of James McBride Dabbs Award
Introduction of Speaker
Address - Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer

*Discussion and/or balloting, as appropriate, to follow reports.

FANNIE LOU HAMER SPEAKS OUT

(Editor's note: The following are excerpts from an article in the October, 1971, issue of ESSENCE Magazine.)

(When I was a child.) I really didn't know what everything was about but I just couldn't understand why the white people that weren't working were always riding in nice cars, two or three cars, and a truck. I just couldn't understand. They had everything, and it seemed that we worked all the time and didn't have nothing.

Later on, when I was in my early teens, my parents finally got enough money out of a crop to buy three mules and a wagon and a cultivator. That was a fortune! My father planned to rent the land which would have given us a chance to buy a house and it wouldn't have been so hard for us. So I remember one night, my parents had to move out of the house on the plantation we were staying in and move into another one while ours was being repaired. All of our livestock stayed behind, and some man went to our lot, stirred up about a gallon of Paris green in our livestock's food, and killed everything we had. I remember hearing my father say, 'I would be willing to just join hands with any man that would do anything that dirty and just shoot it out with him.' He never was able to get back on his feet again.

I really don't hate any man. There has got to be something wrong psychologically with a person, to have me beaten, because of the color of my skin. They are in worse shape than I am because hate is something that is like a cnacer and there's no cure, so far. They've spent billions of dollars, trying to cure cancer but it ate them up. Hate is the same way. It eats away at a human being until they become nothing but a shell. That same hate will make you stay up at night, that's the reason you have the Ku Klux Klan and all of these other hate groups. That a man would stay up all night, trying to figure out how he can fix a sheet to make a point in it, to go out and terrorize another human being is really stupid. The point is not in the sheet it's in his head. And if I hate a man because he hates me, I'm no better than this man.

This is what is destroying this country today. Hate. Hate and racism. 'Righteousness exalts a nation but sin is the reproach to any people,' and hate has done so much now to this country until white America is frightened to death. In the Book of Galatians, it says 'Be not deceived, for God is not mocked, for whatsoever man soweth, that shall he also reap.' These men live with this night after night, after night.

We hear a lot of talk about how many Jewish people were destroyed in Nazi Germany - over six million, but they don't talk too much about how when they were bringing our people here on the slave ships from Africa, they destroyed 40 million of our people. Today, the man is living with this. The Devil believed in God and he trembled; the white man today is frightened to death and he's frightened because of his guilty conscience. They said 'Black people are savages.' But, they are the savages. They got this belief because of their guilt. Do you know, one Scripture says, 'So thinketh a man, so is he' so if you think a man is a savage, this is exactly what you are.

-more-

And this man, can't rest at night. He's afraid of his own shadow. He's so afraid, he's not only killing my kids, he's killing his own. Look at what happened at Kent State. Look what happened at Jackson State, and in Drew, Mississippi. Look what happened a few years ago to Medgar Evers.

Some folks say, 'Well, I didn't care nothing about them killing the Kennedy's, they were white.' But I wept with Mrs. Joseph Kennedy because I am a mother too. I wept, because Bobby Kennedy was a man and he had a right to live, and I wept when John F. Kennedy was killed. I wept when Malcolm X was killed because I hate to see people shot down or murdered for nothing. I can't help what people say about me. Say, I should hate white folks. I don't hate anybody and I can't help it that I don't hate anybody. 'Cause I would rather be in this condition and get me a good night's sleep. Nobody on earth can tell me these people who hate, sleep, because if they did sleep, they wouldn't have the time to be going around bombing folks' houses and shooting Black folks in the back.

A house that's divided against itself cannot stand. If you got a family and you can't get along with that family, it's going to be a split somewhere. A nation that's divided against itself is on its way out, you know. Regardless of how we feel, and how we think we've been mistreated and how we think and talk about what we ain't goin' to take, somewhere along the line we have to talk to somebody. Come, let's reason together because this country is not going to survive as an all Black America but it's going to survive if all people try to work together, to save this sick country. It's just like Martin said, 'America is sick and man is on the critical list.'

I'm goin' to do all I can for every oppressed person because if I try to do something for one and oppress the other, than this is not right. So that's the reason my whole fight is for the liberation of all people because no man is an island to himself; when a white child is dying, is being shot, there's a little bit of America being destroyed. When it's a Black child shot in America, it's a little bit of America being destroyed. If they keep this up, a little of this going, and a little of that going, one day, this country will crumble. But we have to try to see to it that not only the lives of young and adult Blacks are saved in this country but also the whites. Of all the bad that they had done, some of those people are good and of all of the good that we have done, we got some bad ones too and that's what it's about.

My bother used to preach a sermon that is so true, on the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen. 'If you didn't have faith in a chair, Fanny, you couldn't sit in that chair if you didn't believe it would hold you. But you didn't question that chair. You sat down because you have faith to believe it will hold you. And that's what I have in this country. I have faith to believe if we turn away from the dirty things that we've been doing - the white society against the Black man in this country and against all minority groups in this country - maybe this time we could come together and build this country. Then I wouldn't have any trouble singing the National Anthem."

DABBS EXHIBITION OPEN AT USC

A literary exhibition entitled JAMES McBRIDE DABBS -- SOUTHERNER is now open to the public at the South Caroliniana Library on the horseshoe of the University of South Carolina campus in Columbia. Last day of exhibit December 4.

COUNCIL CURRENTS is the newsletter of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations, Inc. (SCCHR). SCCHR is a private, non-profit research and action agency committed to the attainment of social justice and equal opportunity for all peoples in South Carolina. President: Attorney Mordecai C. Johnson, Florence, S. C.; Executive Director: Paul W. Matthias; Associate Director: Rodney Albert; Administrative Assistant and Editor of COUCIL CURRENTS: Tim Rogers. News items for COUNCIL CURRENTS are welcome.

Membership Categories

__ $ 5 Regular
__ $ 8 Husband and Wife
__ $100 Corporate
__ $2 Student
__ $1 Associate
__ $10 In addition, send me the regular Quarterly Materials Distribution

NAME: _____
ADDRESS: _____
CITY: _____ STATE: _____ ZIP: _____

S. C. Council on Human Relations
1203 Gervais Street
Columbia, S. C. 29201

Non-Profit Org.
U. S. Postage
Permit No. 758
Columbia, S. C.

Mr. Paul Anthony
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

HAAS, HOLLAND, LEVISON & GIBERT

HERBERT J. HAAS (1905-1953)

JOSEPH F. HAAS
J. KURT HOLLAND
S. JARVIN LEVISON
ROBERT H. WALLING
HUGH W. GIBERT
RICHARD N. HUBERT
THEODORE G. FRANKEL
EDWARD L. GREENBLATT
RICHARD D. FLEXNER
DAVID F. ROCK
WILLIAM R. KING
RICHARD C. FREEMAN III
ANDREW C. HALL
HAROLD D. CORLEW
LESLIE J. SCHREYER*

*N.Y. BAR ONLY

LAW OFFICES
2709 FIRST NATIONAL BANK TOWER
ATLANTA, GA. 30303

TELEPHONE 525-6141
AREA CODE 404

February 16, 1972

Mr. Jim Wood
Southern Regional Council
52 Farlie Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

RE: South Carolina Council on Human Relations

Dear Jim:

This is in reply to your letter dated February 2, 1972 enclosing a letter from Paul W. Matthias, Executive Director of South Carolina Council on Human Relations.

Mr. Matthias raised certain questions concerning the tax implications of a grant proposed to be made through his organization to Parallax Media Project ("Parallax"). Specifically, he raises three (3) questions and I will respond to them in the order they are presented in his letter.

1. If Parallax is a "Private Foundation", the Council must exercise "expenditure responsibility" to determine that the grant is not used for prohibited activities such as partisan politics. Expenditure responsibility means that the grantee must constantly furnish the grantor with reports and financial statements indicating the application of the funds. If the funds are improperly applied, the granter organization must take steps to recover such funds.

If the Council properly exercises its expenditure responsibility, I doubt that it would be jeopardized by any impermissible application of the funds.

2. Expenditure responsibility applies only until the grant is expended. Thereafter, the grantor is not responsible for any misconduct by the grantee, unless it had reason to anticipate such conduct at the time it made the grant.

3. I am enclosing language that should be contained in the grant letter so as to comply with the requirements of expenditure responsibility.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

David

David F. Rock
For the Firm

DFR/pjs
Enclosure

Dear _____,

The terms and conditions of our grant are as follows:

1. Funds disbursed to you in connection with our grant will be used only for the purposes designated in our grant letter.

2. Within ninety (90) days after the close of your fiscal year, you will submit an audited statement of income and disbursements, and a detailed schedule indicating how funds received from us during the previous year have been expended. If an audited statement is not available, please have the statement verified by an officer of the organization. This information whall be kept by you for a period of four years.

3. Annually, or sooner upon request, we will expect a narrative report, signed by an officer of your organization, indicating the entire spectrum of your activities, including a detailed description of projects conducted with funds received from us and the progress that has been made in accomplishing the purposes of the grant.

4. Upon completion of the grant, you will submit a final report detailing all expenditures made from the grant and indicating the progress made towards the goals of the grant.

5. You will repay any portion of the amount granted which is used for the purposes other than those designated in the grant letter.

6. We will expect your full cooperation in supplying any additional information and in complying with any procedures which may be required by the Internal Revenue Service in order for us to establish that we have exercised "expenditure responsibility" with respect to the grant made to you.

7. No part of the funds received by you pursuant to our grant will be used to carry on propaganda, or otherwise to attempt, to influence legislation or to influence the outcome of any specific public election, or to carry on, directly or indirectly, any voter registration drive, or for any purpose which is not religious, charitable, scientific or educational.

8. We will expect immediate notification if: (i) your exemption is revoked, (ii) you have any reasonable grounds to believe that it may be revoked, or (iii) you believe that you cannot continue to expend the grant in the manner designated in our grant letter.

Sincerely yours,

We agree to abide by the terms and conditions set forth in this letter.

By:_____

Dated: This_____ day of _____, 19____.

August 12, 1970

Mr. Paul Mathias, Director
South Carolina Council on Human Relations
1420 Lady Street, Suite 207
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Dear Paul:

I was interested in reading in your "July Council Currents" of the loan from the National Sharecroppers Fund for a rural land program.

Would you have other information, such as, the proposal that went to NSF, which you could share with us? We would be very much interested in this and other plans of SSCHR in the economic development field.

Please feel free to call on us if there is any way in which we can be of assistance.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development

EFV/gms

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

August 21, 1970

File

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I plan to be in Atlanta this coming Tuesday, August 25 and shall try to get by SRC in the late afternoon probably between 4 and 5 p.m. I will bring our copy of the proposal for the Rural Land Program about which you wrote.

I will also want to see Paul Anthony for a few minutes while there, so would you please ask him if he can reserve me about that amount of time while in the office.

P.A.

Sincerely,

Paul

Paul W. Matthias
Executive Director

PWM:mgg

1420 Lady Street / Columbia, South Carolina 29201 (803) 252-3651

Black Activists, Whites Unite Efforts

Atl. Const 8/20/72

By JACK BASS
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, S.C. — South Carolina's new 19-member Human Affairs Commission is dominated by moderate-to-conservative whites and activist blacks — and it's no accident.

The membership includes eight blacks and 10 whites, with one vacancy yet to be filled by Gov. John C. West. Only three of the 18 appointed members are women, two of them black.

Although most of the blacks long have been involved in traditional civil rights activities, only one of the whites — businessman Malcolm Haven of Charleston — had been very active in race relations before being appointed by West to either the new commission or its predecessor, the Governor's Advisory Commission on Human Relations.

Philip G. Grose Jr., an aide to West, explained recently that the appointments were designed to provide black members who are sensitive to the problems of discrimination and whites who are in positions to solve the problems. "The long range solutions must come from total community awareness and support," he said.

THE NEW commission will deal with discrimination and race relations at all levels, but the primary focus will be on discrimination in employment. The Commission will have broad authority to issue orders after investigating complaints of discrimination against any state or local governmental body.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Authority in dealing with complaints involving private employers is more limited. The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission will handle such complaints if the state agency fails to obtain a conciliation agreement within 120 days.

The male whites on the commission are all business executives or lawyers, with top executives from several major corporations, including President Arthur M. Williams Jr. of South Carolina Electric & Gas Co. and chief executive officer John H. Lumpkin of South Carolian National Bank. The commission chairman is Harry Lightsey Jr., a Columbia attorney and former chairman of the S.C. Democratic party, who served as chairman of the advisory commission.

The black members have more varied backgrounds, including a college president, Dr. Benjamin Payton of Benedict College; a minister, the Rev. Matthew McCollum of Orangeburg, who also is state NAACP president; a professional civil rights executive, Elliott Franks III of the Columbia Urban League and several veteran community orgainzers.

When the legislature approved the act creating the new commission, officials of six human rights groups—five of them white—urged the governor "to appoint citizens who have shown a consistent concern for the civil rights of all the people of this state."

Although the S.C. Council on Human Relations alter offered a list of whites with such records, not one from the list was appointed.

M. Hayes Mizell, South Carolina Community Relations Director for the American Friends Service Committee, said he has hardly heard of most of the governor's new white appointees, but he added, "It doesn't bother me the whites don't have any sterling civil rights records, so long as they are fair-minded people with an understanding of the issue. I'm withholding judgment. If they move aggressively in the field of discrimination in employment, then good."

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

Emory F. Via

S.T.T.H.R.

Re Task Force

Gary Meyers – Pres. Keene SGA

Richard Geroger –

Do they know about it? – What's happening

Please return
Butch Wright

"PROJECT BLACK LAND"

Background and Justification:

For a core component of its program of Black Economic Development, Penn Community Services has formulated the following proposal on Black Land ownership.

This proposal is based on the recognition of several facts and ideas. One of these is awareness of devastating erosion of Black Land ownership over the past seven decades through innocence, attendant land frauds, legal and illegal tax sales, mortgage foreclosures and partition sales. This loss is continuing at an alarming rate. A recent report states that in Hancock County, Georgia, where Blacks once owned 60% of the land, they now own only 7%, and in Beaufort County, a rough survey conducted by a local attorney revealed that since 1965 some 300 acres of land worth $200,000 were sold for taxes.

A second factor is that of Black Land remaining, the majority of it is almost hopelessly tied up and rendered economically useless by operation of the laws of intestacy upon the title.

Yet another fact, which may seem contradictory, is that in the South land constitutes the greatest potential economic asset which Black people have.

Preservation and utilization of this asset is the keystone of Black Economic Development and is the ultimate determinate of success or failure.

Objectives of Project:

This project seeks to:

1. Prevent the further loss of Black land ownership through and by reason of tax sales, mortgage foreclosures and partition sales.
2. Mobilize legal and technical resources in a concentrated effort to turn this potential economic asset into a positive and actual instrument for economic elevation of the Black Community.
3. To develop new techniques and methods in the achievement of items 1 and 2.

Methods of Implementation:

It is proposed to carry out this project in the following manner:

Penn, as the sponsoring agency, would cause to be formed a non-profit corporation called "Black Land Services, Inc." The coporate purposes would include and cover the following activities:

1. The survey of those properties of Blacks which have been the subject of tax sales within the past five (5) years, and notification of the owners with advice as to the status of their property and possibilities of recovery.

A broader, comprehensive and in depth survey and inventory of land owned by Blacks in the areas of activity.

2. The purchase of land at tax, foreclosure and partition sales with appropriate arrangements with the owners for redemption by them where this is possible;

3. Where such arrangements are not possible, the corporation would hold the property under the conditions described in the following paragraphs;

4. The provision of emergency funds to aid owners in critical situations threatening loss of land. For example: Funds could be made available to pay taxes and stop a pending sale; or, funds could be made available to enable owners to successfully bid at foreclosure or partition sales; or, where an owner is in such financial stress that sale of his property is thought to be the only relief, funds could be made available, with appropriate safeguards, to make this unnecessary;

5. The corporation would give legal assistance to indigent Black land owners. Where possible, this would be by referral from a list of cooperating attorneys. There is no agency providing legal services for the poor in Beaufort County, and the nearest service program is located at Charleston, South Carolina;

6. The corporation would conduct a continual program of education on the legal consequences of land ownership, the value of estate planning, and resources available for land use and development.

It would achieve this objective by holding a schedule of seminars, forums and institutes. It would make its services available to other private or governmental agencies, and educational institutions.

The non-profit structure provides the most feasible method for Penn and is highly compatible with its philosophy of community service. A possible drawback is that persons or groups motivated by profit would hesitate to invest resources, and the opportunity for gain could plague the organization during its existence, particularly where the opportunity is great. Arguable objection may also be made that the organization would become a dormant holder of property with no impact upon Black Economic Development.

These possibilities can be avoided by adoption of the view that the corporation's overriding goal is the achievement of community good. This is not to say, however, that its existence will not provide opportunities for individual or group economic gain. Indeed the corporate concept here involves a constant "spin-off" vehicle, with land being placed in the hands of Black entrepreneurs as a tool of production.

Some examples: The corporation purchases property on foreclosure sale and holds title. Three members wish to construct low income dwelling units. They would apply to the corporation to buy at a modest profit to the corporation, secure a loan from the MESBIC and proceed to provide the improved housing for members of the Black community;

Or: Land owned by Blacks is bid on by the corporation at a tax sale. Pending possible redemption by the owners, the corporation would rent or lease the property to a local Black farming cooperative, which could in turn use the lease document as assets in its operation;

Or: An individual in the Black community desires to sell his land and has offers from a white land developer who intends to erect a subdivision. The corporation would actively encourage formation of a new Black company to develop the property at a profit with the aid of technical personnel from the MESBIC.

The affairs of the corporation would be governed by a board made up of Black people who live in the areas to be covered by the activities of the project.

Geographical Extent of Project:

Several counties in the Southeastern section of South Carolina, Beaufort, Jasper, Hampton, Colleton and Charleston, are representative, it is believed, of Black land ownership problems. Within this area Blacks constitute a large percentage and sometimes a majority of the total population. The area is one where agricultural, industrial, and tourist interests are in competition with each other for land space. Added to these factors is the documented and undisputed proverty of Blacks in the midst of affluence.

Penn concludes that in this contaxt, and in these counties a meaningful project for Black Land must be developed as a part of Black Economic Development.

TIME TABLE

This proposal is written for a two year period, starting April 23, 1971 through April 23, 1973 for development and refinement.

2 - 9 months

Incorporation and organization of a non-profit corporation, Black Land Services, Inc., will be completed, scope of the survey, and estimates of actual costs completed, staff employed.

6 - 18 months

Notification and advice to owners of status of land loss through tax sales, activities for sales continues, situations catalogued and classified, inventory and maps completed, arrangements with co-operating attorneys sought and concluded, education programs scheduled and conducted, assistance in partition sales and mortgage foreclosures rendered, property purchase to be held in trust for original owners, development of property and new enterprise encouraged.

12 - 24 months

as

Findings published, organizational techniques utilized, evaluation and reports of project and format for continuation completed.

PROPOSED BUDGET

BLACK LAND SERVICES, INC.

Personnel: (Per Year)
Attorney-Legal Analyist (Part-time)	$ 7,500.00
Project Coordinator	9,000.00
Secretary	5,200.00
	21,700.00
Consultants and Contract Services:
Accounting, Survey Stipends Consultants, Temporary Secretarial & Clerical Help	10,000.00
Travel:
Estimated 30,000 miles over area via auto @ .10	3,000.00
Out of Town Travel	700.00
Volunteer Expenses	1,000.00
Rentals, Lease or Purchase of Equipment:
Desks, chairs, typewriters, tables filing cabinets, copy equipment, etc.	2,900.00
Consumable Supplies:
Paper, Ink, pencils, postage, etc.	750.00
Funds for Legal Fees, Research & Referrals:	10,000.00
Educational Programs & Publication Costs:	6,000.00
Capital Fund for Loans & Land Purchases:	30,000.00
TOTAL BUDGET	$ 86,050.00

Please return
Butch Wright

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES, INC.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Penn Center, a community of history and achievement for 100 years, is located in the far Southeastern corner of South Carolina in Frogmore, South Carolina. The area is coastal and contains an area population of approximately 70,000 with 40 per cent of the population identified as Black.

Frogmore, St. Helena, and the other small islands on the coast are believed by many scholars to be one of the rare remaining areas in this country in which identifiable remnants of an African culture remain.

Since the founding of Penn School in the 1860's, the Center has been a beacon light for blacks not only in the surrounding area, but the entire South. Graduates of the school, and later of the Community Center have made important, and significant contributions to the cultural, social, political and economic fabric of the South. Throughout this period, Penn has been at the forefront in two revolutions which benefited blacks in this country. Secondly, the the 1950's Penn made a major change in its program to concentrate on activities in human relations, such as voter education and registration, merit employment, and general community organization for social services including health and recreation.

Now Penn is seeking to undergo a third change in its programmatic format necessitated by the change of emphasis in the Black community in the area and the Southern Black community as a whole. This is the development of the black community around community economic development in which Penn would be the center for national, regional, and local technical assistance.

Penn Center recognized that for declining population areas such as the rural South, in order to keep the talents of the young, it must provide opportunities for their endeavors after they complete school. Penn is also cognizant of the direct relationship the rural, unskilled, mostly poor population migration has had, and continues to have on urban centers creating social and economic disorganization.

It is with this thought in mind that Penn is developing its new programmatic thrust for the 1970's.

GOALS

Penn Center's program thrust is to improve the economic status of the Black community. This is to be done by concentrating the programmatic goals of Penn in the following areas:

A. CONFERENCE CENTER - Penn would seek to improve its facilities as a major conference center.

B. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE TO ECONOMIC COOPERATIVES - The center would provide technical assistance to local and regional cooperatives using public and private resources.

C. CREATION OF A MESBIC - This would enable the center to establish a capital institution which would provide for the capital needs of the local community as well as selected regional ventures.

D. EMPLOYMENT - Penn will seek to improve the number of Blacks employed in existing industries and government. It will also seek to attract new industries to the area which will provide additional employment opportunities.

After submitting our initial request to the Field Foundation for assistance for the Economic Development Program, the National Urban Coalition sponsored a conference at Penn Center to help us focus on rural economic development. The Coalition then assigned a consultant to work with us over a period of time in developing the concept.

We have also received assistance recently from VITA (Volunteers for International Technical Assistance) in the area of food service, lodging, and housing.

In our new thrust there are six divisions, including:

MESBIC--(Minority Enterprise Small Business Investment Corporation) When developed with its own Board of Directors and Penn serving as the parent organization, this fund will provide venture capital and technical assistance for those who have a change to succeed in business ventures in the area. We have made contact with key businessmen in the area, and we are following up these contacts. The idea has met with favorable reaction from all those contacted. An organizational meeting is planned for the near future.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE--The program also calls for educational provision and the provision of technical assistance through our staff and by maintaining contact with other organizations who will be able to give assistance to local people in human resources and economic ventures. Among the kind of organizations that we are proposing to help are cooperatives, credit unions, small businesses, housing, and efforts that will work toward the creation of new jobs.

Our housing efforts will have two objectives: the provision of adequate housing, and the development of economic potential for home construction.

MANPOWER AND EMPLOYMENT-- The staff will work actively for better employment opportunities through existing agencies as well as work toward the creation of new opportunities.t We will seek manpower training programs that will help us train individuals in skills and management types of jobs.

CONFERENCE CENTER-- With the assistance of the National Urban Coalition and VITA, as well as working with other individuals, we believe that Penn's facilities can continue to serve a need as a conference center provided certain important steps are taken. These steps include capital improvements, special recruitment efforts, improved management efforts, and an improved public relations program. Several suggestions for improvements have been made by the Property Committee and some of these are being followed up now. We have made a building-by-building cost analysis for improvements of the facilities and this analysis is presently being worked on by our consultant with the Coalition.

BLACK LAND SERVICES-- We have all waited too long to attempt in a real way to slow down the loss of property from the hands of Black people in this area, as well as the rest of the South. We asked Attorney Charles Washington, Jr. to work with us in looking for ways in which Penn might provide assistance to local people who find themselves in difficulty with land ownership. In a brief survey, we found the rate at which Black landowners are losing their land on tax sales alone is alarming. Therefore, Penn proposed to organized Black Land Services, Inc. whose objective will be to help stop the outflow of land ownership. We are planning an organizational meeting on April 23. We have received a letter of commitment from the Black Economic Research Center for some financial assistance in this effort.

CULTURAL PROGRAM-- We are developing a cultural center at Penn with at least the following features:

A library of information about Blacks, including books, art, music, youth and adult programs, as well as other creative activities that might be put together with a creative staff. The program will base its core program on the riches of the local area.

We have received a grant from HEW through its Emergency School Assistance Program, Community Group, to do a cultural program for a one year period. We are in the process of implementing this program presently.

The above new program thrust takes into consideration suggestions that were made in the evaluations of the recent community development training program, the Program Review Committee meeting of a year ago, committee meetings that were held with members of the Board during the year, and suggestions coming from various groups and individuals.

If we are able to implement these programs, we will be on the way toward developing meaningful programs that may have regional and national implications.

To help us start the new thrust, Mr. George Smith has accepted a position on Penn's staff as director of Economic Development Programs. His official starting date was April 12, 1971. Mr. Smith has an A. B. Degree from Clark College in Business Administration, has worked on his Masters in Accounting, and has worked for the Bedford-Stuyvesant Restoration Corporation in the packaging and provision of technical help to grassroots businessmen in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn.

TIMETABLE

This proposal is written for a two-year period, starting October 1, 1970 through October 1, 1972. There will be several phases as follows:

3 - 6 months

Data will be gathered, staff will gear-up, consultations with technical persons, consultive assistance, community preparation and organization, planning, estimates gathered, community cooperatives established, new resources and funds sought, additional staff hired.

8 - 12 months

We will work with getting people into existing public and private industries; renovation of buildings, creation of MESBIC, technical assistance services provided and private resources sought, conferences held, land purchases made and held in trust.

12 - 24 months

Completion of renovations, new building planned, resolved loans made, major conferences being held, new cooperatives started, new evalutions being made, major job placement.

MORE HAPPENINGS AROUND THE COUNTRY THIS SUMMER

CHICAGO.....Training began under the now-funded Chicago Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity Inc. to increase minority employment in the building trades. Ninety men, from ages 17 to 40, are enrolled in an eight-week program conducted by Local 150 of the Operating Engineers.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI representative Arline Neal has been elected to the 21-member National Labor Advisory Committee of the Office of Economic Opportunity.

INDIANA.....HRDI President Rothman and Director McGlotten spoke at sessions of the State Summer School in Bloomington. Rothman also spoke to the OEO Midwest Labor Leadership Training Conference.

SOUTH CAROLINA.....Ninety blacks and other minority youths will be prepared for apprenticeship in the building and construction trades in four new Urban League programs in Aiken, Charleston, Columbia and Greenville. They will receive ten weeks training to pass entrance exams in the trades plus additional counselling after they become apprentices.

TENNESSEE.....HRDI's Memphis representative, Bill Ross, conducted the session on manp ... Ross also serv ... relations.

ST. ... ase minority empl ... ics who can qual ... g program at what ... or Department has

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

Gwen Sapp

Apprenticeship - Outreach
South Carolina

Columbia - Milt Green
(803) 754-6524 - LEAP(?)

CONN ... representative Don ... tate AFL-CIO conv

NORT ... iscussed at the ... was the spea ... ended.

WASH ... jobs is pro- pose ... bill provides fede ... schools, police and fire departments and other agencies. Up to 3 billion dollars is authorized for the first year of operation.

HOUSTON.....HRDI representative Don Bridges was one of the experts on hand to brief teenagers at the 5th Texas AFL-CIO Summer Youth Citizenship Conference. Youngsters attending this annual five-day conference are sponsored by local unions to help defray expenses and Bridges was responsible for contacting some 100 locals.

MOBILIZATION FOR LAND RETENTION, ACQUISITION, AND UTILIZATION

A PROPOSAL SYNOPSIS

from the National Sharecroppers Fund

and the
South Carolina Council on Human Relations

Rural Project (Retention, Utilization, Reclamation, and Acquisition of Land)

BACKGROUND

That a great redistribution of the Black population of the United States took place between 1910 and 1960 is well known, and that this fact has tremendous implications for social and economic life throughout the nation is widely accepted.

Nevertheless, even the more general aspects of the changing population have never been thoroughly explored, and many significant changes within a given community, district, state, or region still are awaiting analysis.

We are concerned with a very narrow segment of this chaotic pattern of dispossession, migration, disillusionment, and ghettoization - the retention, acquisition and utilization of Black landholdings, and their effect upon Black migration.

Between 1920 and 1960 the number of rural-farm Blacks fell off by more than 450,000 (a 70% drop). In South Carolina, the decade 1950-60 saw a dramatic exodus of Blacks from farms. In every county in South Carolina there were fewer Blacks on the farms in 1960 than in 1950 with losses running as high as 7,422 (77%) in Spartanburg County; 7,352 (66%) in Berkeley County; 9,033 (37%) in Orangeburg County, and 7,023 (30%) in Williamsburg County.

Why these Blacks left, where they went, what was taken with them, and what they left behind are questions which remain inadequately answered. However, we are certain of one legacy left behind - land ... Land which could have provided a real and practical means of participation in the political and economic life of these rural communities ... land which could have provided better education and healthier lives for their off - spring ... land which could have provided more equitable returns for the labor and sacrifice of their daily struggles.

Land represents an unreplenishable value, and that value represents power. Throughout South Carolina we are witnessing the increased impoverishment and dispossession of the small Black landowner through denial of meaningful participation in government assistance programs, through discriminate use of the laws of eminent domain, and through unmitigated chicanery. The NSF and the SCCHR see the continued ownership of land by Blacks as crucial to the reversal of trends driving Blacks into urbanized squalor and continued economic and political disenfranchisement.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVES

*To inventory the amount of land presently owned by Black citizens in the State of South Carolina beginning with Orangeburg, Allendale, and Bamberg Counties;

To organize at both the local and state level these Black landholders;

To sensitize these organized landholders to understand some of the primary causative factors responsible for the dramatic and chaotic disposition of Black landholdings in South Carolina;

To identify and develop individuals and organizations capable of guiding relatively uneducated landholders in the retention, acquisition, utilization, and disposition of land;

To create a sales referral service so that Black landholders may sell parts or all of their land to other Blacks;

To create an emergency holding fund to enable despondent landowners to weather emergency situations which would normally lead to "crisis sales: and financially unsound dispositions.

*These counties were chosen primarily on population and voting statistics, and proximity to the state capital - Columbia.

If the project is not fully funded, we would have to move to alternate continguous counties of Fairfield, Newberry and Union. A survey of Union County has been completed, and although these counties offer less potential, interest in the project has been substantially developed.

The ideal combination would be Jasper, Orangeburg, Williamsburg, and Fairfield Counties.

The immediate aim of the project is to end the erosion of Black land tenure in South Carolina. It is hoped, however, that this effort in South Carolina will become a model which can be duplicated across the South.

THE SPONSORS

The National Sharecroppers Fund and the South Carolina Council on Human Relations will administer the project and provide technical assistance as needed.

The National Sharecroppers Fund (NSF) is a private, non-profit organization which has worked for the improvement in the quality of rurual life for over 32 years. NSF supports a broad, national program of rural community development, farmer organization, educational activities, and cooperation with other rural-oriented agencies.

The South Carolina Council on Human Relations (SCCHR) is a private, non-profit, multi-racial organization involved in a number of human relations, economic development, educational, and fair housing projects throughout South Carolina. SCCHR has 13 local councils and over 1400 members, and has been incorporated by the State of South Carolina since 1954. SCCHR sponsored the first Headstart programs in South Carolina.

OPERATIONAL PROCEDURE

Local student and other volunteer help will be utilized to identify Black landowners in a selected area. The assistance of local morticians, ministers, and octogenarians will augment searches of the real estate title records in the county seats. These rudimentary title searches will also be performed by local persons, who will have been trained by local attorneys. Expenses, such as travel, in connection with these tasks will be borne by the project.

A sample survey of Union County, South Carolina (Appendix A) indicates the necessity of organizing the project with both resident and non-resident thrusts.

The initial organizational phase of the effort for resident landowners will consist of exposure to seminars and workshops focusing on, but not limited to, such topics as:

History of land tenure, especially Black land tenure;
Economic and Political importance of land tenure;
Legal rights and obligations of land tenure;
Assistance programs available to maximize utilization and productivity of land;
The importance of holding on to land and/or selling land to Blacks

Non-resident landowners will be exposed to the same basic information via a "Black Land Tenure Packet:, which will emphasize the importance of their landholdings to the total development of minority peoples in the region. Local attorneys, university economists, retired agricultural extension workers, university agricultural staffs, etc. have indicated a strong interest in assisting in the development of a comprehensive approach to this project.

The effectiveness of this initial educational thrust will determine the point at which resident and non-resident landowners will be brought together for long-range planning and actualizing sessions. We anticipate that the first phase will involve at least three months of concentrated title searches, etc.

A sales referral bureau will be established to promote sale of land to Blacks and to investigate FMHA and other federal assistance programs.

Emergency capital in a revolving fund will be raised to purchase and hold land in jeopardy of foreclosure, or to further the cause when an owner is forced to sell before he can locate a Black buyer. The Black Economic Research Center's Southern Land Bank has already begun efforts to establish a similar fund.

A second type of technical assistance which is envisioned, but not budgeted, by this proposal would be provided to Black landowners in a given county by a three-person team: a lawyer, an accountant, and an industrial engineer. They would be supported by consultants and/or staff with special knowledge in a variety of business enterprises. This team would prepare economic analyses of possible economic ventures, do the legal-work for community-based corporations, design and install accounting systems, recruit and/or develop competent management, and seek financial backing. A supplimentary proposal will be submitted after the land inventory phase of the project has been completed.

Group action by the Black, and the poor, is more effective than individual action in bringing about social, economic and political change. The success of group action relies heavily on its leadership. Good leadership consists, in part, of the ability to identify programs, to design programs and to marshall human, financial and physical resources. Black landowners represent an essentially untapped and roughhewn source of leadership in South Carolina. The NSF and SCCHR hope, through this project, to make life more equitable for all of our citizens, both urban and rural.

BUDGET

PERSONNEL COSTS

Salaries and Wages	First Year
1 Project Director	$ 10,000.00
1 Secretary/Research Assistant	6,500.00
1 Secretary (½ time)	2,400.00
3 Field Representatives (¼ time)	4,500.00
	$ 23,400.00
Fringe Benefits @ 15% of total salaries	3,510.00

Staff Travel
1 Project Director	2,200.00
1 Secretary/Research Assistant	1,000.00
3 Field Representatives ($600 each)	1,800.00
Legal Consultants	1,200.00
	6,200.00

Space Costs and Rentals
Office Space @ $100/month	1,200.00
Office Equipment	1,200.00
Telephone @ $200/month	2,400.00
Postage	1,200.00
Conferences	1,000.00
Miscellaneous	1,500.00
	8,500.00
TOTAL	$ 40,610.00

State Divs - Ark.

March 18, 1952

Mr. C. C. Walker
1216 Chester St.
Little Rock, Ark.

Dear Mr. Walker:

We are very grateful for the good letter giving us the facts about the Washington's birthday meeting of the Arkansas Division.

It is heartening to hear that you had such a good occasion.

Mr. Deer told me that you all wanted 300 copies of RACE AND LAW ENFORCEMENT. I was driving west and mailed them to him from Thiontown, Alabama, the other day. It will be quite a job to get them out to the people who will carry them to the sheriff, but I am sure it will help matters to do it.

With warm regards,

George S. Mitchell
Executive Director

GSM:ec

W. W. WILKE, PRESIDENT OCIE LEE SMITH, V. PRES. CHAS. C. WALKER, SEC'Y. MRS. W. FLOYD BATES, TREAS.

Southern Regional Council

ARKANSAS DIVISION
1020 RINGO STREET
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

RECEIVED
MAR 15 1952
Southern Regional Council

March 13, 1952

Mr. George S. Mitchell
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

On Friday Evening, February 22, 1952, some 50 persons gathered in the Continental Room of the Hotel Marion in this city for a Luncheon Meeting of the Arkansas Division of the Southern Regional Council. Our toastmaster, the Reverend W. W. Wilke, called us together by some introductory remarks about the purpose of the meeting. He then asked God's blessings upon the food and for the success of the occasion.

After a delicious meal of fruit cocktail, ½ fried chicken, string beans, scalloped potatoes, tomato salad and cherry cobbler with coffee (or milk if desired), the meeting was opened by an informal introduction of all persons present. The majority of the group came from the local community, followed closely by a representative number from Pine Bluff. Other cities were represenated as far away as Texarkana and Dayton, Ohio.

Then the Master of Ceremonies, Mr. Wilke, called upon Attorney J. R. Booker to introduce the guest speaker, Mr. Harry S. Ashmore, Executive Editor of the Arkansas Gazette. Our speaker, very informally, spoke at length about the progress of understanding which was now taking place throughout the South. This understanding was due to improved economic conditions and educational facilities for both Negroes and whites. However, the most obvious weapon which had become available was the use of the ballot. Mr. Ashmore continued that as long as there was proper leadership in both groups, the South could reach the point where a minimum of friction might exist. Nevertheless, he feared that some smart race-baiter (Negro or white) could exploit the voters and destroy the good work quite easily and disastrously. Our speaker was definitely opposed to FEPC Legsilation, stating that private business should be left to hiring voluntarily those whom it wished. He closed out his great speech by permitting questions from the floor.

W. W. WILKE, PRESIDENT OCIE LEE SMITH, V. PRES. CHAS. C. WALKER, SEC'Y. MRS. W. FLOYD BATES, TREAS.

Southern Regional Council

ARKANSAS DIVISION
1020 RINGO STREET
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

After this great speech which our toastmaster had to interrupt because of the lateness of the hour, an appeal was made for memberships in the Arkansas Division of the Southern Regional Council. Practically every member present pledged and paid for the fee. With approximately $60.00 taken in, and a renewed interest in the desire for racial harmony in and throughout this area and a deeper understanding for working towards a common goal, the meeting closed with benediction by the secretary, the Reverend Charles C. Walker.

Only one new officer was elected to a post. He was the Reverend Lewis H. Deer who is now president. The Reverend Mr. Deer is pastor of the Pulaski Heights Christian Church, a fearless champion for brotherhood, social justice and christian democracy. The entire membership regrets the loss of the Reverend Mr. Wilke as president. However, his decision to remain active as a member of the Executive Council encourages the work very much.

Personally, I certainly would like to do something to interest our white friends in the movement. Although both Mr. Wilke and Mr. Deer did everything possible to invite white persons to the luncheon meeting, only 10 appeared. I do not believe that white people are indifferent, but they do not wished to be "counted or seen." So our main job here is to do something to stir our friends from the white group.

The Hotel Marion was exceedingly cooperative in granting the Council one of its very large dining rooms. And since it is one of the largest and best hotels in the city, such a step was sincerely appreciated.

I would suggest you contacting through mail Mr. Charles Hicks. He is Ass't Director of Negro Education of the State of Arkansas. His address is the Educational Building, State Capitol, Little Rock, Arkansas.

With sincerest regards, I remain

Charles C. Walker
Charles C. Walker
Secretary

P.S. My local address is:
1216 Chestnut St

State Divs - Ark

December 15, 1952

Rev. Charles C. Walker
1216 Chester St.
Little Rock, Ark.

Dear Mr. Walker:

How very kind that was of you to write so warmly! I felt a lift of the spirit in working with you and your friends in Little Rock; you've got a real chance to go ahead.

My final suggestion to Scott Hamilton and one or two of the others at a luncheon the second day was that Little Rock build on the precedent of the voluntary admission of Negroes to the University of Arkansas, and acquire a reputation of doing all of these things ahead of time. I doubt whether any single thing would so greatly contribute to the future growth and prosperity of the city as that. If business people are thinking of coming South, the wise ones would pick a city which had already put itself on a course which would solve all of these tangles of prejudice.

Prosperity and success to the Arkansas Division.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell
Executive Director

GSM:ec

December 12, 1952

Mr. Charles C. Walker
1216 Chester St.
Little Rock, Ark.

Dear Mr. Walker:

Thank you for your letter of December 10.

I am sending you today 25 copies of the new, mimeographed edition of WHAT KIND OF SOUTH DO YOU WANT? More if you need them.

Sincerely,

Emily Calhoun
Secretary to George S. Mitchell

Lewis Deer

[redacted], PRESIDENT OCIE LEE SMITH, V. PRES. CHAS. C. WALKER, SEC'Y. MRS. W. FLOYD BATES, TREAS.

Southern Regional Council

ARKANSAS DIVISION
1020 RINGO STREET
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

RECEIVED
DEC 12 1952
Southern Regional Council

December 10, 1952

Southern Regional Council Headquarters
63 Auburn Avenue
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Sirs:

This letter is being written as an expression of sincere gratitude for the personal appearance in our city of Dr. George S. Mitchell. Words simply do not adequately portray the great feeling of "lift" which the members in this area received by his messages: first, at an evening luncheon-dinner at the Hotel Marion; and second, at a college chapel hour at Philander Smith College.

Since there is such an extent of enthusiasm among the official family of the Arkansas Division and since there have been some inquiries concerning the work of the Council, it has been requested that a letter be written to your office for any available literature on the official board members, the present work and the intended goals. This literature is very much needed here to be mailed out to prospective persons in lieu of securing additional members. (Enclosed is a sample of material sought. Unfortunately, this is not up-to-date.)

Thanking you in advance for your earliest consideration in this matter and joining in best wishes for a continuation for the success of the work-here in the South-, I am

Very truly yours,

Charles C. Walker

Charles C. Walker
Sec'y
1216 Chester Street
Little Rock, Ark.

CCW

(Not printed at Government expense)

Congressional Record

United States of America

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 85th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

Origins and Aims—Report on Negro Voters

SPEECH

OF

HON. PAUL H. DOUGLAS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 26, 1957

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, at various times in the past I have quoted the publications of the Southern Regional Council. The Southern Regional Council is composed entirely of southerners, men and women of good will of both races in the South. It is in no sense a lobbying organization. I have been able to obtain material it provides through the Library of Congress, at my request.

I think the statement which has been prepared on the origins and aims of the Southern Regional Council should be printed in the RECORD at this point so as to indicate the high qualifications of the council and its emotional attachment to the South. So I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the statement be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL: A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF ITS ORIGINS AND AIMS, APRIL 1956

"The South of the future toward which our efforts are directed, is a South freed of stultifying inheritances from the past. It is a South where the measure of a man will be his ability, not his race; where a common citizenship will work in democratic understanding for the common good; where all who labor will be rewarded in proportion to their skill and achievement; where all can feel confident of personal safety and equality before the law; where there will exist no double standard in housing, health, education, or other public services; where segregation will be recognized as a cruel and needless penalty on the human spirit, and will no longer be imposed; where, above all, every individual will enjoy a full share of dignity and self-respect, in recognition of his creation in the image of God." (From a Statement of Policy and Aims of the Southern Regional Council (1951).)

SRC AND THE COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION

The Southern Regional Council and its predecessor, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, have a history of 35 years of constructive activity.

In the troubled days following World War I, race conflict and the lawlessness of terror organizations reached such proportions that the need for new techniques of restoring harmony could not be ignored. To meet this need, interracial committees were formed in cities and towns throughout the South. It was found that by bringing together influential members of both races grievances could be aired, mutual problems discussed, and a meeting of minds effected. This method had such beneficial results that interracial committees became an established part of the life of the South in the early twenties. Their influence became southwide through the formation of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, a central organization with headquarters in Atlanta.

The commission was founded in 1919 by a group of the South's leading church men and women. Among them were Dr. M. Ashby Jones, prominent Baptist minister, Dr. John Hope, president of Atlanta University, Mr. John J. Eagan, businessman and philanthropist, Dr. Plato Durham, dean of the Emory University Theology School, Dr. Robert Moton, president of Tuskegee Institute, and Dr. Will W. Alexander, the commission's director. Its work in behalf of sound race relations was acclaimed by the South's leading newspapers, religious leaders, and by many public officials.

The commission helped organize, extend, and guide the work of State and local interracial committees. It assisted them in making their influence felt by newspapers, civil authorities, churches, school officials, police administrators, and health officers. It gave much attention to factual analysis of the problem of lynching and other forms of interracial violence. Its auxiliary, the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, under the direction of Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, did much to educate public opinion in the causes and possible remedies for such violence.

From these early activities, the commission built up a body of acquaintance and confidence that has been an increasing asset through the years. The traditional barrier between the races was broken down to allow an interchange of ideas and mutual trust. The notion of cooperative action by people of good will, both white and Negro, took root and has continued to grow. In its 25 years of operation, the commission made the meeting of white and Negro citizens for the discussion of common problems an accepted practice almost everywhere in the South. It marshalled thousands of southern church people in opposition to lynching and other injustices, brought new light to bear on race relations, issued 2 million copies of pamphlets and leaflets, and symbolized the faith of the southern white people and Negro people in the processes of mutual agreement and cooperation.

Transition to SRC

In 1939 the leaders of the commission began to explore the possibility of expanding the activities of the organization to permit a broader approach to the problems of the South. In October, 1940, the commission instructed its executive committee to "take whatever steps are necessary to carry out the plans for the formation of a council on southern regional development," which would include in its program "the work of the commission and other activities connected with the economic, educational, and social development of the South."

Meanwhile the efforts of other progressive southerners were leading them to a similar purpose. The first movement in that direction took place when a group of southern Negro leaders met in Durham, N. C., on October 20, 1942, to set forth just what the Negro wants and is expecting of the postwar South and Nation, and to enlist the aid of interested white southerners. The result of this historic conference was a comprehensive statement covering the following areas: Political and civil rights, industry and labor, service occupations, education, agriculture, military service, and social welfare and health. Many social thinkers regarded the Durham statement as the most hopeful pronouncement on race relations that had come out of the South in the last 75 years.

In April 1943 a group of southern white leaders met in Atlanta to consider the statement of the Durham conference. These white leaders found the statement so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum, and so demonstrative of good will, that they gladly pledged their cooperation. "The need," they concluded, "is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation, and mutual respect."

SRC organized

Representatives of both the Durham and Atlanta conferences met in Richmond in June 1943, to work out further details. The Durham statement was adopted as a general guide to action, and a continuing committee was appointed to devise practical means of approach. The organizing meeting of the council was held in response to a call issued by some of the South's finest leadership, including C. H. Gillman, Georgia director, CIO; George L. Googe, southern director, AFL; M. Ashby Jones, Baptist minister; Ryland Knight, Baptist minister; Rabbi David Marx, The Temple, Atlanta; Bishop Arthur J. Moore, the Methodist Church; Ralph McGill, editor, the Atlanta Constitution; Stuart R. Oglesby, Presbyterian minister; Most Rev. Gerald P. O'Hara, bishop of Savannah-Atlanta; Dean S. Paden, president, King Hardware Co.; J. McDowell Richards, president, Columbia Theological Seminary; Bishop John Moore Walker, the Protestant Episcopal Church; Goodrich C. White, president, Emory University.

Following the deliberations of this group and a subsequent conference with southern Negro leaders, the SRC was chartered early in 1944. The incorporators were Bishop Arthur J. Moore; Ralph McGill; Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University; Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University; and Dr. Howard W. Odum, professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina. At the charter meeting, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation met and formally merged its program and assets with those of the council. A strong and democratic council had been established to attain through research and action the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region.

Since this auspicious beginning, the council's membership has included distinguished southerners, white and Negro, in all walks of life. Dr. Odum was the first president of the organization. He was succeeded by Paul D. Williams, of Richmond, Va., a prominent Catholic layman and cofounder of the Catholic Committee of the South. Mr. Williams served as president for 6 years—from 1945 until 1951. He was succeeded by Mr. Marion A. Wright, widely known as a South Carolina attorney active in civic and educational affairs, now living in Linville Falls, N. C.

How SRC works

The Southern Regional Council consists of a board of some 80 southerners representing the major religious faiths, both races, and the 13 States of the region. These people are the Southern Regional Council. They make the policies and review all activities at an annual meeting. They elect an executive committee which meets at least every 3 months to give closer direction to the organization. And full reports of all activities are sent to the members quarterly. The council is nonprofit, nonpolitical, and nondenominational.

Financial support for the council has come from many different individuals and organizations. Some of the organizations are: the Julius Rosenwald Fund, General Education Board, the Fund for the Republic, Division of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Church, Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church, Phelps-Stokes Fund, Catholic Committee of the South, Board of Education of the Methodist Church, Ashby Jones Memorial Fund, Committee on Woman's Work of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Marshall Field Foundation, the Doris Duke Foundation, various trade unions, and some business firms. Individuals support the council through contributions, legacies, and payment of membership dues.

What SRC does

The council's present functions may be summarized as follows: (1) Clearinghouse and coordinating work with numerous agencies working on southern problems; (2) research and survey to determine the facts and the state of public opinion as a basis for sound social action; (3) educational activities through a monthly bulletin, the New South, and through pamphlets, press, radio, television, conferences, and personal contacts; (4) consultative services to private and official agencies; (5) promotion of specific programs of action through the council staff and affiliated State organizations.

Following are some of the areas with which the SRC's educational program has been concerned:

Employment of Negro policemen in southern communities.

Newspaper handling of racial news.

Community self-surveys, in which local people of both races study their problems as a basis for achieving local solutions.

Conferences of leading white and Negro southerners with common concerns and a common desire to further democratic practices in their areas of interest—religion, health, housing, education, etc.

Voluntary decisions to open professional associations, private colleges, public libraries, and the like to all qualified persons without respect to race.

The right to vote without racial discrimination or intimidation.

Impartial enforcement of the law and administration of justice in the South.

Orderly compliance at the community level with the recent decisions of the Supreme Court holding public school segregation unconstitutional.

Church support

Church people have always been the moving force in the southern interracial movement. This is as true today as it was 35 years ago. All of the major religious groups represented in the South have taken their stand in favor of the principle embodied in the Supreme Court's segregation ruling. The Court ruling was endorsed by the Southern Baptist Convention, many of the southern conferences of the Methodist Church, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (southern), the Province of Sewanee (southeastern) of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Catholic Bishops of the South, the various Jewish religious and fraternal groups, and virtually all of the other denominations found in the South. It is only natural that many religious southerners should seek to put the principles of their faith into everyday practice.

The Southern Regional Council and the affiliated State groups have enjoyed both financial and moral support from religious bodies representing the three major faiths.

Dr. George S. Mitchell, executive director of the council, received the 1953 annual award of the Catholic committee of the South "for his significant contribution to the welfare of the South."

Affiliated State organizations

With the aid of a grant from the Fund for the Republic, the Southern Regional Council is assisting interracial organizations in 12 Southern States—Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. Each of these organizations has its own membership, officers, and staff. In each case, people of the State involved make their own decisions as to policy and program. Affiliation with the Southern Regional Council is voluntary, and the purpose of the short-term financial aid from SRC is to help the State groups become strong, self-sustaining human relations agencies.

Toward the South of the future

The Southern Regional Council's main asset is and has always been those southerners who believe deeply in democratic practices, and who know firsthand the problems of the region. On such people rest the hopes of the South. They have wanted a regional organization, not out of any provincial desire to separate the South's problems from the Nation's, but out of the conviction that such an organization has unique advantages. It can express the best and often neglected elements of Southern thought and conscience; it can serve as a convincing demonstration of southerners working together as fellow citizens without regard to race; and it can tap local resources and initiative often inaccessible to national groups.

The Southern Regional Council and its affiliates seek to be practical organizations, aiming at working solutions rather than spectacular pronouncements. They hold the belief that every community must ultimately find its own answers within the framework of law and conscience. They offer no master blueprint, no sovereign remedy for the South's human problems. But they do offer a method—that of representative citizens, white and Negro, coming together in equal dignity to find the best ways to move ahead.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, following the statement with respect to the Southern Regional Council, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a most extraordinarily able survey the Southern Regional Council has made, which is just off the press, under date of July 18, 1957. Again I wish to emphasize I have obtained the material at my request from the Library of Congress to show that it was in no sense forced upon me, so to speak.

The survey deals State by State with the various ways in which Negroes are prevented from voting in the South. I highly commend this factual account to the Members of the Senate, as we debate part IV of the bill.

There being no objection, the survey was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEGRO VOTER IN THE SOUTH—PART OF A REPORT OF A SURVEY BY THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

(Furnished on his request to Senator DOUGLAS by the Library of Congress, Legislative Reference Service)

DISCRIMINATION AND INTIMIDATION

Just as the main segregationist movement has switched from the white sheet of the Ku Klux Klan to the white collar of the citizens council, so has the pattern of discrimination against the Negro southerner changed in recent years.

In no field is this gradual shift to subtler methods seen more clearly than in a study of Negro registration and voting. Killings, beatings, the dragging of Negroes from their homes in the middle of the night—these are now rare occurrences, compared to previous decades.

Overt violence is, in brief, the exception rather than the rule for racist dealing with assertive Negro citizens. The threat of violent tactics, however, is kept alive in some areas by anonymous telephone calls to Negro leaders. Crosses still are burned, jobs threatened. Occasionally, homes are shot into or bombed.

But, today, with less obvious means employed generally, Negroes interested in voting are far more likely to be barred by a question on the Constitution than by a rope or whip.

Alabama

The Alabama consultant directed a field survey in each of the counties in his State. According to these reports:

Negroes might be treated courteously, as in Bullock County, Ala., where the board of registrars has received Negro applicants pleasantly, let them fill out forms, then told them they didn't pass—with no reasons given. In this county, with 5,423 Negroes of voting age, only 6 were registered in the summer of 1956. In 1953, more than 100 attempted to register; in 1955, only 20 even tried, and of these 19 were refused. One of the six registered succeeded only on his seventh trip to the board.

In other counties of central Alabama, like Bullock, Negroes encounter greater difficulty. This is the black-belt section of the State, so-called because of the dark rich soil, an area where 15 counties have populations over 50 percent Negro.

Among these is Dallas, where only 275 of the 18,132 Negroes of voting age are registered.[1] In 1956 alone, at least 350 were turned down. Some reported that they filled out questionnaires 3 or 4 times but still were not sent registration certificates. Many reported they were given no help in filling out forms although white applicants were. One Negro teacher who registered was fired allegedly for being "too smart;" this frightened many other teachers.

Marengo, another county in the Alabama black belt, simply seems to have stopped registering Negroes. Of 10,223 eligible, 170 were registered before the Supreme Court decision calling for an end to segregated schools. This, plus formation of a local citizens council, is reported to have hardened the lines of white resistance to Negro equality and to have put the brakes on Negro registration.

In Monroe County, Ala., where 140 of the 5,914 Negroes of voting age are registered, other hopeful applicants said more often than not they found the board of registrars had "misplaced the application forms" or told them to return later. Registrars in Hale County, where 130 of 7,036 eligible Negroes are on the voting roll, have turned down 300 in the past 2 years for "failure to fill out forms correctly."

One Negro teacher in Alabama said she was refused because she didn't know the address of her estranged husband. Many Alabama boards require two voters to vouch for all Negro applicants and some require Negroes to produce white character witnesses. Registrars in one county where about 2 percent of nearly 7,000 Negroes over 21 have registered announced that a "good white man" must accompany Negro applicants.

In a black-belt county which is somewhat less than 50 percent Negro, registrars closed their office when a group of Negroes appeared. Other Negro applicants said they were told when the board would meet but then found no one present on arrival. A Negro leader who encouraged other Negroes to vote reported he was threatened anonymously by telephone and told to stop his activities or he would be run out of town. Only about 200 of over 5,000 Negroes have registered.

A Negro leader in Coosa County, Ala., also said he was threatened. Crosses were burned in front of the homes of two leaders of a Negro voters' drive in Choctow County. In the latter, 112 of 4,819 Negroes of voting age are registered; 28 said they were turned down on their first try, but accepted the second time. Most of those initially refused are teachers; maids and yardmen have found it somewhat easier to enroll.

Birmingham and surrounding Jefferson County present one of the gloomiest pictures for Negroes in the South. In no other major city of the region has it been so difficult for them to vote. Only about 7,000 of 121,510 Negroes over 21 are registered; at least that many more have been turned down. Instead of the standard form and the character witnesses, Jefferson County registrars have employed another method unique in the State: Added questions about government. They might ask on what date the 10th amendment to the Constitution became effective, what was the 14th State to be admitted to the Union, on what date did Oklahoma change from a territory to a State? They have recognized no limits to their power to interrogate. While Negroes have been the board's main target, white union members, particularly if they wear overalls or work clothes, have reported that they sometimes find registration difficult or impossible. Negroes appearing before the board often have been questioned for from 35 to 40 minutes; they have had to line up separately, and the longer the line the longer the questioning.

Strong, in his study of Jefferson County, described the method used by registrars to avoid suits with the following hypothetical case: a person who failed to satisfy the board was told orally he did not qualify; the applicant then secured an attorney and filed a suit, which was a signal for the board to register the plaintiff. His suit collapsed and no court has an opportunity to pass on section 33 of the Alabama Code and the "qualified to register" phrase.[2]

In Macon County, Ala., home of famed Tuskegee Institute, many college trained Negroes have found the barriers impregnable. Negroes outnumber white persons about 5 to 1; of the 14,526 of voting age, 1,100 have registered. By contrast, the Associated Press reported in April 1956, that 2,700 out of a total Macon County white population of 5,000 had registered, or that fewer than 100 white persons over 21 had failed to do so. An Alabama observer said that the board of registrars would sit until all white citizens interested had registered and then resign. In any event, for the major part of 1956, there was no board in the county, for 2 of the 3 members resigned and it takes at least 2 to transact business. This was at least the third time in a decade this had happened.

[1] Registration figures used are those of 1956.

[2] Donald S. Strong, Registration of Voters in Alabama (Bureau of Public Administration, University of Alabama).

North Carolina

In North Carolina, as in other States with literacy laws, the registrar has considerable latitude. He can have the applicant copy indicated sections of the State constitution or he can dictate. Some Negroes have protested the use of dictation, since a registrar often reads too fast or uses a particularly difficult section. However, the State board of elections has upheld a registrar's right to use this means of testing.

A Negro attorney in a rural eastern county of North Carolina said that in certain precincts of this and adjoining counties, "It takes a white man only a few minutes to get registered, but it may take an hour for a Negro. Actually, the latter is given an academic rather than a literacy test. In this county, the tests are tough and the literacy rate low, which doubly handicaps the Negro. The tests given here actually require an interpretation of law."

A Negro college graduate in North Carolina who attempted to register for the May 1956, primary said he was turned down because he could not write a section of the State constitution from memory. Some registrars who want to disqualify Negroes have asked for a definition of such words as "ordained," "sovereignty," "posterity," etc. The replies often do not satisfy the registrar.

But there are counties throughout the State, including the rural piedmont and eastern sections, where literacy requirements are ignored for anyone, white or Negro, who wants to register. In others, only Negroes are required to do some reading. In some rural North Carolina counties, Negroes can register with a minimum of trouble only if sponsored by white persons.

Louisiana

Louisiana applicants for registration have been given a rather complicated form and the law has barred any help in filling it out. In most instances, completion is regarded as evidence of literacy although the registrar may, if he wishes, examine an applicant. There has been wide variation in the practice of helping applicants and in the strictness with which forms are scrutinized for mistakes. In some parishes, Negroes have found it almost impossible to satisfy the high standards demanded of them. In others, both Negroes and whites have been permitted to copy from previously completed forms and mistakes have been overlooked.

If a person is unable to complete the form satisfactorily, he still may qualify in some parts of Louisiana. In a number of parishes many white and Negro illiterates have registered under the physical disability provision of the State constitution. This makes it possible in some instances to control their ballot, because such registrants are entitled to ask for assistance in voting. Practice varies widely with respect to registration of illiterates but, as a rule, where literate Negroes have found it easy to qualify, illiterate Negroes also have met few obstacles.

Under one Louisiana statute which adds to the difficulties of Negro voting, two bona fide registered voters can challenge by affidavit the right of a person to be registered. The person challenged has to respond within 10 days by appearing before the registrar to prove his right to remain on the voting list. If a person fails to appear, his name is removed automatically. Citizens council groups have purged several hundred Negroes from voting lists through this device in more than a dozen parishes, including Natchitoches, Webster, and La Salle. They are able to learn which Negroes have registered under another Louisiana law which permits any 25 registered voters, by application, to copy or photostat registration records.

The Colfax Chronicle, county weekly of Grant Parish, reported (October 12, 1956) that members of the citizens council worked in the registrar's office that week in a frank effort to disfranchise the county's 864 Negro voters. The Chronicle also reported:

Their action followed a White Citizens Council meeting in Dry Prong attended by State Senator William Rainach and other Louisiana segregation advocates. W. J. B. Jones of Colfax County, WCC president, said the group voted unanimously to try to purge Negro voters. Louis Earl Stevens, council secretary, subsequently estimated that at least 90 percent of the Negro registrants were challenged in Grant Parish.

Where, instead of writing out colored on registration blanks the applicant simply put "C," the applications were challenged as being incorrect. Each Negro's age in years, days, and months was refigured and often found off by a day or so. The Chronicle checked the first 100 white registrations in one ward and found only one card which would meet the standards set by the WCC for Negroes. Four, including the superintendent of schools, figured their ages incorrectly. In a further check, the Chronicle discovered that not a single member of a citizens council committee had filled in correctly all the blanks. Needless to say, only the Negroes were challenged. Of the more than 700 Negroes purged 2 weeks before the November general election, 399 had cleared the challenges a week before the deadline.

The Chronicle commended Registrar Maxine Mosley for her fairness in dealing with the Negroes challenged.

Not all members of the white community supported the purge effort. District Attorney Sam L. Wells said he would be a witness and sign affidavits for those challenged registrants whose place of residence he knew of his own personal knowledge. J. M. Straughan of route 8, Colfax, wrote the Chronicle:

"I'm a southerner born and raised right here in central Louisiana and I am opposed to integration as strongly as any southerner could be. But what has integration got to do with the removal of Negroes from the registration rolls. I for one, will be glad to sign an affidavit for those colored voters I know to help keep them from being imposed on."

On February 25, 1957, the Justice Department made public some FBI findings on registration of Negroes in Louisiana. Assistant Attorney General Warren Olney III, said the FBI material indicated that testimony by Louisiana Attorney General Jack P. Gremillion to a House Judiciary Subcommittee "might have left a misleading impression in a number of respects." Olney's statement was in a letter to Chairman EMANUEL CELLER, Democrat, of New York, who presided at hearings in which Gremillion testified against the Eisenhower administration's civil-rights proposals.[8]

Olney said that Gremillion had mentioned "some difficulty with respect to voting" in Ouachita Parish, but contended this was "more or less an exception."

In fact, Olney asserted, the FBI investigated the handling of registrations in 10 Louisiana parishes and found that 8,552 Negroes were challenged when they tried to register in 1956.

Olney said that in Ouachita Parish there were some 4,000 registered Negro voters in the early fall of 1956 but that after a purge in October "there were in excess of 3,000 Negro voters deprived of the right to vote in the general election of November 6."

The Justice Department official challenged a number of Gremillion's statements, including his claim that registrants had a free choice in selecting the section of the United States Constitution they wished to interpret as part of their test.

"In none of the 10 parishes is there any evidence that the registrar permitted the applicant to choose which clause of the Constitution he wished to interpret," Olney said.

"Specifically, in the case arising from Ouachita Parish, the investigation by the FBI disclosed that the registrar of voters in examining applicants used a card on which was written an excerpt from the Constitution, which card was given to the registrar by the Citizens Council of Ouachita Parish."

Gremillion had told the committee that when a registered voter was challenged, the registrar sent a record of the challenge to the registrant, including a reply form, giving him 10 days to appear and establish his right to remain on the rolls by presenting statements from three voters registered in the same parish.

Olney said this did not appear to be the general practice in the parishes investigated. In six, he added, registrars "did everything to discourage the filing of reply affidavits in the statutory form and generally refused them when offered." He told Chairman CELLER that the FBI found instances of registrars refusing to accept white persons as supporting witnesses for Negroes on grounds they were of a different race.

[8] Associated Press, Washington, D. C., February 27, 1957.

There appeared to be a concerted effort in October 1956 by white citizens councils in Louisiana and other Southern States to get Negro registrants off the rolls or to prevent their registration, Olney added.

"With respect only to cases which have been investigated by the FBI," he continued, "the following numbers of Negro voters were challenged in each of the following parishes:

"Bienville, 560; Caldwell, 330; De Soto, 383; Grant, 758; Jackson, 953; La Salle, 345; Lincoln, 326; Ouachita, 3,240; Rapides, 1,058; and Union, 600."

However, there still are areas in Louisiana where there are no Negro registrants to challenge. For example, in one parish, which is over 50 percent Negro, none of the 4,500 Negroes of voting age had registered at the time of the 1956 general election. Only one had tried in recent years. A local priest recounted the Negro's experience: when he appeared, the registrar immediately took him to the sheriff, who asked, "Aren't you happy here? Is something wrong with the way things operate around here? If you aren't happy perhaps we could arrange for you to leave." The hapless Negro promptly assured the sheriff of his happiness and allowed that his attempt to register had been a tragic mistake. He remained in the community but his wife lost her job.

There are no Negroes registered in Tensas, East Carroll, Madison, and West Feliciana Parishes, all counties with populations over 50 percent Negro. "In these parishes," the Louisiana consultant said, "subterfuge is unnecessary to discourage Negro registration. Negroes know they should not and cannot register and therefore rarely attempt to do so."

In the general election in November 1956 Louisiana voters defeated a proposed constitutional amendment designed to help the Citizens Council cut Negro voting even more. The measure was drafted by the legislative watchdog committee on segregation which previously had won approval easily for its proposals. The amendment, which was turned down by an unofficial total of 190,410 to 178,833, required certain administrative steps before a voter losing his registration could take the matter into court. Thus, said the Associated Press in a dispatch from Baton Rouge, it would have set up "administrative barriers to a Federal court action."

South Carolina

In South Carolina the prevalence of discriminatory tactics in some counties where Negroes are in the majority is quite evident. Registration books are moved from place to place to keep Negroes from getting a certificate; they are given literacy tests that have little to do with reading and writing the State constitution, as required by South Carolina law; Negroes complain that if a number go together to register in some counties, clerks will pass only one or two and tell the rest the books are closed for the day. In a few counties, Negroes who had been certified have complied with demands of employers and other white persons that they remove their names from registration books. Some have said they were threatened with harm for attempting to vote, and many landlords reportedly have warned their Negro tenants that if they registered they would be fired.

Calhoun County, S. C., with more than twice as many Negroes as whites—10,449 to 4,304—has no Negroes registered, although 4,437 of them are of voting age. "Any Negro who tries to get a registration certificate is called a smart Negro and sooner or later leaves the community," a field consultant said.

McCormick County, S. C., where the population split is 5,998 Negroes, 3,589 whites, also has no Negroes registered out of the 2,625 over 21. All Negroes who had registration certificates in 1948 had their names purged from the voting list. The majority of Negroes in the county are sharecroppers; reportedly, they could not sell their produce until their names were removed.

In another South Carolina county, Abbeville, where only 15 of the 3,687 Negroes of voting age are registered (as compared to 6,000 of the 8,951 whites), an atmosphere of fear was found. Three years ago a Negro cottonwood worker was said to have been beaten at night for voting. Since then, Negroes have not taken part in elections and almost all of those who had registration certificates have lost them.

Texas

Intimidation as a means of limiting Negro voting in Texas was found to be relatively rare. Recent violence in the State usually has been aimed at school integration, notably in Mansfield. There have been occasional reports of local discrimination against potential Negro voters, generally in the form of a segment of the white population playing on the ignorance of the poorly educated among the Negroes—to imply, for example, that property taxes must have been paid to vote. But, by and large, the poll tax remains the only obvious deterrent.

Virginia

While discrimination in applying provisions of the Virginia poll tax and registration law is not found generally in that State, nevertheless it has been reported in certain counties and a few cities. Some Negro leaders feel that poorer white citizens often experience the same difficulties as do Negroes.

The poll tax can be an effective barrier for the politically uninformed, the educationally handicapped, and the socially disadvantaged. Just the use of words confuses many of the poorly educated who often do not know that in paying their Virginia capitation tax they have paid their poll taxes. Some tax collectors reportedly have discouraged voting by telling Negroes they do not have to pay poll taxes. Many Negroes have reported they did not receive poll-tax bills along with their property-tax notices, as did their fellow white citizens. These and similar methods have been employed to discourage Negroes from paying their poll taxes in some counties and it often seems that only those who know the legal requirements and insist on paying can win their right to register.

As for registration itself, Negroes sometimes encounter further barriers in Virginia. The same discriminatory methods of administering literacy tests found in other States turn up here and there in the State, where in some counties Negroes have to meet all the technical requirements of grammar, punctuation, and handwriting in filling out their application forms; they alone are given reading or education tests, or have to complete printed forms containing legal phraseology. Some white registrars will see white applicants at any time but are busy or ill or do not have their books when Negroes appear. When registrars operate in their homes, this presents a particular problem because of the long-standing southern custom of Negroes appearing in white homes only in a servant capacity.

Florida

In 1940, Florida had 51 counties with no Negroes registered, by 1946, only 4, and 10 years later only 2. However, the number of counties in which Negroes are registered gives an exaggerated picture of the extent of Negro registration. In some counties Negro electors constitute a small proportion of those on the voting lists. This is seen, for example, in the following counties:

County	Negro population over 21	Negro percentage of total population	Number of Negroes registered, 1956
Flagler	872	45.6	13
Gadsden	10,930	56.1	3
Liberty	333	18.1	1
Taylor	1,945	30.5	77

In the counties where Negro suffrage is limited most sharply, fear is a major deterring factor. In parts of the State, indirect methods are used to discourage Negro voters and the open threat has been reported, too. In one county, the first Negro registrants in history were subjected to several forms of intimidation—cross burnings, bomb-throwings and shots fired into their homes. All but one of the registrants in this county withdrew their names from the rolls.

In another Florida county, in the plantation section, it was reported that Negroes, most of whom live in rural areas, are not permitted in the business district on election day. In still another county one supervisor of registration has told Negro applicants, "Come on in and register," while sitting with his legs stretched across the door. Other Negroes complained that loungers around a courthouse told them, "Go ahead and register if you can take what comes afterward."

Georgia

Field studies were made in a number of Georgia counties representative of the various subregional areas of the State. One of these is Early, located in the extreme southwest portion of Georgia on the Alabama line. It is in a cluster of counties considered the hard core of the State in terms of resistance to integration. In such counties as Early, Miller, Seminole, and Decatur, the Negro population is from 30 to 50 percent of the total. In other southwest counties such as Clay, Calhoun, Baker, Dougherty, Quitman, Randolph, Terrell, Lee, Sumter, Webster, and Stewart, the Negro percentage of the total population is over 50 percent. The means of excluding Negroes as registrants in these counties is similar to that reported in other areas of the South. In some, there is the ever present threat of racial violence, which erupts on occasions. Often, police brutality against Negroes indicates to them they cannot depend upon law enforcement authorities to offer them protection if they try to vote. In recent years, economic pressures have been directed against Negroes militant enough to demand educational and political equality.

In some instances, Georgia sheriffs, instead of the boards of registrars, question prospective Negro registrants about the Constitution. Sheriffs, being white and also the "law," Negro applicants thus receive two warnings at one time.

In Early County, only 226 Negroes of the 4,790 over 18 (the legal voting age in Georgia) are registered. Many others who went to the courthouse to register said they later were summoned to appear there before the board of registrars to answer questions. The majority of those who showed up were disqualified and those who did not were removed from the list automatically. This is an effective method of disqualifying Negroes there who often think of going to the courthouse for any reason with misgiving. They know they are not expected to drive their cars up to the courthouse square to park.

Separate ballot boxes for white and Negro votes continue in use in many Georgia counties. This practice of separating ballots on a racial basis is an indirect technique of disfranchising some of the Negro voters who are unwilling to take a chance on having white persons discover how they voted.

Often, racial incidents have an effect both in the community involved and in adjacent counties. There is disagreement on the extent to which they deter registration, but fear of violence is bound to condition the thoughts and actions of some. In Walton County, Ga., many Negroes interviewed said there is more fear of lynching outside the county than inside. This county was the scene of an unsolved daylight lynching in 1946 of 4 Negroes—2 men and 2 women, 1 of whom was pregnant. One Negro in Walton said he did not think that Negroes generally are afraid to register there. He added that the so-called leading Negroes are afraid but the Negro working by the day isn't. Negro teachers and ministers seem to be afraid because of what they may lose; but what it is, I don't know."

Arkansas

In Arkansas, on rare occasions, clerks in the sheriff's office may tend to discourage poll-tax payments through various means of discourtesy. For the most part, however, the poll tax is more important in Arkansas as a source of revenue than as a device for the disfranchisement of the Negro. In 1956, voters rejected an amendment to repeal it. Some important Negro leaders opposed its abolition. They believed that if the State dropped the poll tax it might adopt registration procedures requiring the filling out of forms or answering of questions and that Negroes then would experience far more difficulty than at present.

Mississippi

Finally, Mississippi. All forms of violence, intimidation and discrimination reported from other States were found here. Where other sections usually rely on 1 or 2 means of limiting Negro registration, Mississippi, home of the White Citizens Council, apparently uses them all. As a result, the State which has the highest percentage of Negroes in the country has the lowest percentage registered. Only 4 percent were on the list of qualified voters in 1955, although Negroes make up 41 percent of the total population of voting age.

In the 13 Mississippi counties listed as having a population of more than 50-percent Negro, a total of 14 votes was cast in the 3 elections on which information was available for 1954. Five of the counties had no Negroes qualified and 3 had 1 registered who never voted. In the 7 counties having more than 60-percent Negro population, 2 votes were cast by Negroes in 1954.

Violence, threats, and economic reprisals discouraged Negroes interested in voting in Mississippi. Some instances were publicized but it may reasonably be supposed that others went unreported. In 1955 alone, a string of reports of brutality and illegal tactics came out of the State.

In the early spring of that year, Gus Courts, a Negro grocer at Belzoni, Miss., was told to move from his home and withdraw his name as president of the local NAACP chapter. He was forced to move his grocery store and advised to remove his name from the voting rolls. He refused; and, in November 1955, he was shot and seriously wounded by a group of men in a car who fired into his store.

Recovering from his wounds, Courts told a reporter: "I've known for a long time it was coming, and I'd tried to get prepared in my mind for it. But that's a hard thing to do when you know they're going to try to slip up and steal your life in the night and not in the bright. It's bad when you know you might get shot just walking around in your store. That's a hard kind of life to lead."

Courts was puzzled as to why anyone would want to shoot him for, "I've never been a troublemaker and I've never had on handcuffs. I'm 65 years old and I've never had the vote. That's all I wanted."

Courts' predecessor as NAACP president in Belzoni, the Rev. George Washington Lee, was killed May 7, 1954. The United Press, in a story from Belzoni on the Courts shooting, gave this background on the Lee death:

"The Reverend Lee was shot, allegedly on the day he refused a request from a white citizen that he remove his name from the voters' registration list. In that death, first of three race killings in Mississippi this year, Lee reportedly was driving down a Belzoni street when a car in which two white men and a Negro were riding suddenly came from behind and a shotgun blast shattered the Negro's car."

A coroner's inquest returned a verdict of accidental death and made no reference to the wounds in the dead man's face.

Other incidents in Mississippi in 1955, as reported by wire services and newspapers: T. V. Johnson, Belzoni Negro undertaker, was told to remove his name from the voting rolls if he desired continued credit; the Rev. James Hargroves fled the State after he was threatened with the fate of the Reverend Lee if he continued to work for the NAACP. In August, Lamar Smith, a Lincoln County Negro, was shot fatally; no indictment was returned, although reports indicated there were several witnesses to the shooting. Elsewhere, the home of a Negro leader was fired upon, and crosses were burned in front of the homes of two others. There were additional instances of violence against Negroes for activities other than voting.

If, despite the harassment and brutality, Negroes still try to vote in Mississippi, there is the State's registration law to act as a deterrent. The rigid education test, the essay on citizenship, all the requirements of the tighter registration law passed in 1954, present innumerable opportunities for the white registrar opposed to Negro registration.

LEGAL, SOCIAL, AND ECONOMIC FACTORS

The legal weapon most widely used in the South to discourage Negro registration is some form of literacy or constitutional interpretation test.

This weapon is the successor to the white primary—long the most effective method of restricting voting. Another weapon effective in the past, the poll tax, also has lost much of its sting with increased economic opportunity. Today only five States retain the poll tax—Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia.

Some of the requirements in Southern States based on literacy or constitutional interpretation tests include:

Alabama

In addition to the usual basic qualification, the Voters Qualification Amendment of 1951 provides: "The following persons * * * shall be qualified to register * * * those who can read and write any article of the Constitution of the United States in the English language which may be submitted to them by the board of registrars, provided, however, that no person shall be entitled to register as electors except those who are of good character and who embrace the duties and obligations of citizenship under the Constitution of the United States and under the constitution of the State of Alabama, and provided, further that * * * each applicant shall be furnished * * * a written questionnaire * * *. Such questionnaire shall be answered in writing by the applicant, in the presence of the board without assistance."

Georgia

A registrant must be able to read correctly in English any paragraph of the State or United States Constitution and correctly write the same when read to him. Only those unable to read or write because of physical inability may qualify if they can understand and give a reasonable interpretation of constitutional sections read to them. There is a property alternative: 40 acres of land in the State on which an elector resides or property in the State assessed for taxation at $500 or more.

Mississippi

In 1954, Mississippi voters approved a constitutional amendment tightening the State's registration law. It makes ability to read and write a prerequisite; before that, an applicant could register if able to read or understand the Constitution when read to him. In addition to literacy, the amendment requires a new applicant to satisfy the county registrar as to his knowledge of citizenship under a constitutional form of government and to state why he feels he should be given the right to vote and what it means to him. Applicants are to write their own statements without aid.

Virginia

Unless physically unable, the prospective voter must apply to the registrar in his own handwriting, without aid, in the presence of the registrar, stating therein his name, age, date and place of birth, residence and occupation at the time and for the 1 year next preceding and whether he has voted previously and, if so, the State, county, and precinct in which he voted last. Also, he must answer on oath any questions affecting his qualifications as an elector, submitted to him by the registrar; questions and his answers must be reduced to writing, certified by the said officer and preserved as part of his official records.

South Carolina

A registrant must be able to "read and write" any section of the State constitution. An alternative is ownership and payment of taxes for the previous year on property in the State assessed at $300 or more.

Arkansas

Except for the usual requirements of age and residence, the one dollar, noncumulative poll tax is the only requirement for voting. Members of the Armed Forces are exempt. Certain adults are required by law to possess a poll tax receipt: those receiving wages, salaries, or other compensation paid from public funds (this includes white and Negro teachers) and those who apply for a license or permit from the State.

Louisiana

A prospective voter must be able to read and write and understand the duties and obligations of citizenship "under a republican form of government." Also, he must be able to read any clause in the State or United States Constitution and give interpretation satisfactory to the registrar. If he is unable to read or write, the applicant is entitled to register if he is a person of good character and reputation, attached to the principles of the Louisiana and United States Constitutions and if he is able to interpret any section of either. If an applicant is unable to read or write due to a physical disability, then the foregoing requirements may be waived. However, such an applicant must be accompanied by two witnesses who are registered voters from the applicant's precinct. No person may be a witness for more than two applicants.

North Carolina

Prospective voters must be able to read and write any section of the Constitution to the satisfaction of the registrar, who may have the applicant copy indicated sections of the State constitution or may dictate any section he chooses.

With such broad discretion left to registrars it is easy to see why Negroes may find it almost impossible to qualify in one county and comparatively easy in the next. In the last analysis, a Negro's ability to vote in a State with a literacy law still often depends on an individual registrar's sense of justice—or prejudice.

Socioeconomic factors also operate in determining the number of Negroes who vote. Racial, economic, and social patterns of any southern community exert a powerful influence on Negro registration.

Statistics on education, urbanization, farm tenancy, income, and racial composition help paint a fairly accurate picture of why Negro registration is above or below average.

Relatively few Negroes are likely to be registered in counties where they make up a large proportion of the population, in counties where education and income medians are low, and in counties that are predominantly agricultural and have a high rate of farm tenancy.

At the same time, in counties where Negroes comprise a large part of the population, white registration tends to be above normal.

Negroes are more likely to be registered in counties where they represent a small percentage of the total population, where they are better educated, are less dependent on the whims of white landlords and employers and are in a sounder economic position generally.

There are exceptions to these generalizations, of course; but Georgia presents a fairly typical picture.

In Georgia's 157 counties with Negro population of voting age, the median percentage of eligible Negroes registered is 25. However, the range of the registration figures is wide.

In only five Georgia counties does the number of Negro registrants exceed the number of white registrants, although there are more Negroes than whites of voting age in 27 counties.

The population ratio and its effect on voting is strikingly shown in Georgia figures. In counties where the percentage of Negroes in the population is below the State average, 69 percent show Negro registration above the State median; 68 percent of the counties above the State average in Negro population are below the median in Negro registration. The association is even more marked in counties with a population over half Negro—80 percent of these fall below the median in Negro registration.

The relationship between education and political participation also turned up in the Georgia survey. In counties where Negroes rank above the State median in the number of school years completed, 89 percent also are high in Negro registration. By contrast, only 37 percent of the counties below the median in Negro educational attainment have high registration figures.

As to the significance of economic factors, it is found that of the Georgia counties having median family income above the State figure of $1,130, 61 percent have high Negro registration. In counties below the median income level, only 35 percent are high in the number of Negroes qualified to vote. In short, Negro registration tends to increase along with overall income.

Also, there is a tendency in Georgia for predominantly industrial counties to rank higher in Negro registration than those primarily agricultural. Among counties in which farm income exceeds manufacturing income, 37 percent are high in Negro registration, as contrasted with 58 percent in counties where manufacturing exceeds agricultural income.

The agricultural counties in Georgia deriving more farm income from livestock, dairying, and poultry are somewhat higher in the percentage of Negroes registered than those in which the income stems largely from row crops. Also, there is a definite relationship between tenancy and registration. Among the Georgia agricultural counties which exceed the State average in the number of farms operated by tenants, only 34 percent have high registration figures, but among the counties below the State average in tenancy, 63 percent rank high in Negro registration.

Social and economic factors which influence Negro registration in Georgia apply in large measure over much of the South.

438693—63815

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1957

File - VEP

THE EFFECTS OF FEDERAL EXAMINERS AND ORGANIZED REGISTRATION CAMPAIGNS ON NEGRO VOTER REGISTRATION

- - -

A SPECIAL REPORT

OF

THE VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

OF THE

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

- - -

JULY, 1966

To what extent do federal examiners influence the level of Negro voter registration in the Southern counties to which they are assigned? What is the effect of organized registration campaigns, particularly those assisted by the Voter Education Project?

A study by the Voter Education Project seeks to answer these questions. Registration figures were compared for counties with federal examiners, with VEP programs, with both, and with neither.

The results follow a predictable pattern. Highest Negro registration figures are found in those counties with both federal examiners and VEP-assisted programs. Next comes counties with federal examiners, followed by counties with VEP programs. Lowest registration levels are found in those counties with neither.

As of late June, federal examiners had been assigned in 41 counties in four states. They had registered a total of 122,905 persons. No federal examiners have been assigned in Georgia or Virginia or in 26 North Carolina counties which come under provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

At the time of the comparisons, there were only two counties in Mississippi with VEP-affiliated programs. Mississippi counties with neither were selected at random from various sections of the state. Alabama and South Carolina counties were chosen from the area immediately surrounding counties with federal examiners and VEP programs.

Urban counties were excluded because these counties generally have long-standing registration programs and other special histories which set them apart from rural counties. Louisiana was not included for lack of recent and adequate parish-by-parish registration figures. Federal examiners have been assigned to five Louisiana parishes.

Georgia furnishes a state example of low Negro registration where no federal examiners are present. Georgia's Negro registration is second lowest at 43.1 per cent of the Negro voting age population. In the adjoining states of Alabama and South Carolina, the figures are 48.9 per cent and 50.3 per cent respectively. Mississippi has the lowest Negro registration: 30.9 per cent of the voting age population.

The Voter Education Project assists, through small grants, programs of registration, citizenship education and leadership training in 11 Southern states. For further information about the attached tables, contact Marvin Wall, research director, Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Atlanta, Georgia 30303, (Area Code 404, 577-2986).

ALABAMA

BOTH	Negro Registration	Voting Age Population	Per Cent Registered
Hale	3,940	5,999
Perry	3,719	5,202
Marengo	5,535	7,791
	13,194	18,992	69.5

FEDERAL EXAMINERS
Greene	3,801	5,001
Wilcox	3,932	6,085
Lowndes	2,353	5,122
Dallas	10,260	15,115
Elmore	2,717	4,808
Autauga	2,275	3,651
	25,338	39,782	63.7

VEP
Sumter	3,369	6,814
Choctaw	2,971	3,982
Conecuh	1,822	3,635
Barbour	3,487	5,787
	11,649	20,218	57.6

NEITHER
Clarke	2,495	5,833
Monroe	2,380	4,894
Butler	1,731	4,820
Pike	3,015	5,259
Bullock	2,980	4,450
Russell	3,901	10,531
Washington	1,403	2,297
Crenshaw	1,210	2,207
Escambia	1,755	5,685
	20,870	45,976	45.4

MISSISSIPPI

BOTH	Negro Registration	Voting Age Population	Per Cent Registered
Coahoma	7,553	14,604	51.7
FEDERAL EXAMINERS
Leflore	6,868	13,567
Neshoba	904	2,565
Jones	2,568	7,427
Jefferson	3,038	3,540
Claiborne	1,937	3,969
Holmes	4,891	8,757
Carroll	1,036	2,704
DeSoto	1,825	6,246
Madison	5,871	10,366
Jeff Davis	1,843	3,222
Benton	942	1,419
Clay	1,624	4,444
Humphreys	787	5,561
Walthall	1,328	4,540
Newton	1,075	3,018
Simpson	882	3,186
Warren	5,116	10,726

	Negro Registration	Voting Age Population	Per Cent Registered
Jasper	721	3,675
Noxubee	1,461	5,172
Rankin	1,503	6,944
Winston	1,003	3,611	.?
	47,223	114,659	41.2
VEP PROGRAM
Issaquena	377	1,081	34.9
NEITHER
Lincoln	392	3,913
Panola	2,186	7,250
Sunflower	2,059	13,524
Attala	866	4,262
Amite	847	3,560
Alcorn	139	1,756
Franklin	338	1,842
Sharkey	398	3,152
Washington	4,811	20,619
Pontotoc	243	1,519
Choctaw	159	1,105
Harrison	3,482	9,670
Lauderdale	5,306	11,924

Continued -3- (Mississippi)

Lowndes	1,260	8,362
Pike	2,090	6,936
Tunica	468	5,822
Wilkinson	597	4,120
Adams	5,829	9,340
Montgomery	67	2,627
George	115	580
Yazoo	1,051	8,719
Lee	709	5,130
Stone	101	868
Scott	664	3,752
Lafayette	775	3,239
Quitman	1,238	5,673
	36,190	149,264	24.2

SOUTH CAROLINA

	Negro Registration	Voting Age Population	Per Cent Registered
BOTH
Clarendon	5,182	7,735	67.0
FEDERAL EXAMINER
Dorchester	3,836	5,370	71.4
VEP
Williamsburg	5,356	10,535
Sumter	7,791	15,380
Beaufort	3,963	7,247
	17,110	33,162	51.6
NEITHER
Georgetown	4,119	7,173
Orangeburg	8,289	17,355
Bamberg	1,332	3,807
Barnwell	1,759	3,242
Lee	2,554	5,446
	18,053	37,023	48.8

FOR RELEASE

Voter Education Project
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
JAckson 2-8764

WEDNESDAY

DECEMBER 14, 1966

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH, 1966

Despite the much-publicized evidence of "white backlash" in the 1966 November elections, the growing Negro vote proved itself a major factor in elections across the South.

This was the finding in a post-election survey conducted during November by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council.

Election results gathered by VEP in 11 Southern states show that Negroes supplied the winning margin for a U. S. senator, one and probably two governors, and at least two U. S. House members.

In addition, Negro voters helped throw the two party nominees in the Georgia governor's race into a deadlock. And they helped a Senate newcomer to outpoll an established political name in separate Senate races in Virginia.

Twenty Negroes were elected to state legislatures in the South---an increase of nine. And Negroes were elected to county-level posts --- in one case, to the office of sheriff--- in such Deep South states as Georgia, Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi.

The Negro vote clearly provided the margin for Winthrop Rockefeller's election as governor of Arkansas. The Republican candidate received approximately 300,000 votes. The Democratic candidate, ardent segregationist Jim Johnson, got about 255,000 votes.

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH, 1966 -- 2.

An estimated 80,000 to 90,000 Negroes voted, more than 90 per cent of them for Rockefeller. Thus Negroes supplied Rockefeller's margin of 45,000, with plenty to spare.

Negro registration in Arkansas is estimated at between 115,000 and 120,000. If the turnout is put at 80,000, which VEP sources say would be a conservative figure, this would be two thirds of the registration.

Negro voters in South Carolina plainly provided the margin for a U. S. senator and probably for a governor.

Ernest F. (Fritz) Hollings was elected to the Senate over Republican candidate Marshall J. Parker by a mere 12,000 votes. Gov. Robert E. McNair defeated Republican challenger Joseph O. Rogers Jr. by a more comfortable 72,000 votes.

The Negro turnout was estimated at 100,000---just over half the Negro registration of 191,000. The Negro vote went almost totally Democratic.

Bucking the tide was Sen. Strom Thurmond, a Republican who won reelection by over 100,000 votes despite the solidly Democratic Negro vote.

All the same, wrote one Carolina newsman: "One, and only one, general conclusion appears possible: Neither party can win statewide or congressional races in South Carolina without Negro voting support."

Commenting on his race, Hollings said Parker "generated the Negro bloc vote, insulted them on the basis that they could be bought" and thus "corralled them into my corner."

In North Carolina's Fifth Congressional District, Negroes provided the victory margin for Democrat Nick Galifianakis over Republican G. Fred Steele Jr. Returns from eight predominantly Negro precincts in Forsyth County gave Galifianakis 5,156 votes to Steele's 284. Four predominantly Negro precincts in Durham County gave Galifianakis 2,400 and Steele 163. Galifianakis won by 5,300 votes.

In the Sixth Congressional District, Rep. Horace R. Kornegay found himself in a tight race as Greensboro Negroes switched their support on election eve to Republican Richard B. Barnwell. Kornegay, considered a solid favorite, had his victory margin trimmed to fewer than 2,700 votes. Kornegay has voted consistently against civil rights and Great Society programs.

Negroes provided the margin for Democrat Ray Blanton over Republican Julius Hurst in West Tennessee's Seventh Congressional District. Blanton won by about 2,700 votes, despite the fact that the district went for Republican Howard Baker in the U. S. Senate race by 3,000 votes. Nine predominantly Negro precincts in Memphis gave Blanton 7,824 votes to Hurst's 353.

Baker sought Negro support in his race against Democrat Frank Clement and thus cut into the latter's vote total across the state. Baker won decisively by 100,000 votes. Clement had edged Sen. Ross Bass in the Democratic primary by drawing away some Negro support from Bass in a close contest.

In Memphis, in the Ninth Congressional District, redistricting and a non-presidential year drop-off in the Negro turnout caused Rep. George W. Grider to lose to conservative Republican Dan Kuykendall. Grider lost by 4,000 votes.

Six Negroes were elected to the Tennessee Legislature ---an increase of five. Three are from Memphis, two from Nashville, and one from Knoxville. The latter was the only Democrat elected to Knox County's eight-man legislative delegation.

Returns from selected precincts indicated that about half of Georgia's 300,000 registered Negroes voted. Their votes were split about evenly between Republican Howard (Bo) Callaway and write-in candidate Ellis Arnall. Reports indicate that thousands of write-in votes were not counted because of misspellings and other technicalities.

Arch-segregationist Democrat Lester Maddox received a scattering of Negro votes. In some areas he was the beneficiary of straight-party voting, as was Mrs. Wallace in Alabama.

Neither Callaway nor Maddox received the required majority, and the whole issue immediately landed in the courts. Callaway got 451,032 votes and Maddox 448,598, with the Arnall write-in campaign receiving 57,832. However, Arnall leaders contended that only about half the write-in votes actually got counted and reported.

Negroes won 11 seats in the Georgia Legislature---an increase of one. The new legislator is from Augusta. The total includes Julian Bond of Atlanta, who again was elected to the seat that had been denied him by the Georgia House.

Negro county commission candidates were elected in Liberty, McIntosh and Hancock counties. In addition, a Negro was elected to the school board in Hancock County, which in the general election became the first Georgia county to have federal poll watchers.

Three Negroes were elected to the Legislature in Texas ---two in Houston and one in Dallas. One, Miss Barbara Jordan, a Houston attorney, was elected to the Senate. They are the first Negroes to be elected to the Texas Legislature in this century.

Alabama Negroes, faced with choosing between two segregationists who were the major candidates in the governor's race, did not turn out as heavily as they did in the May primaries. Returns from selected precincts and counties indicate that, in most cases, the Negro turnout was less than half the registration. The May 3 turnout was estimated at 74 per cent. Negro registration in Alabama stands at just under 250,000.

With no clear choice to make between the two major candidates, Negroes divided their votes between Democrat Lurleen Wallace, Republican Jim Martin, and independent Carl Robinson. Mrs. Wallace, wife of Alabama's stormy outgoing governor, was an easy winner with more than 500,000 votes. Martin polled 252,000 votes and Robinson 46,000. In some areas Martin ran ahead in predominantly Negro boxes and in others Mrs. Wallace did. But in many cases, the front-runner among Negroes was the third candidate, Robinson.

In the Senate race, Negroes voted heavily for Sen. John Sparkman over Republican John Grenier. Sparkman won handily, 482,000 to 313,000.

Five Negroes were elected to office in Black Belt counties. Among them was Lucius Amerson, who turned back a write-in effort to be elected sheriff of Macon County.

In Dallas County, meanwhile, Sheriff Jim Clark's write-in campaign also failed. Clark, one of the nation's better-known segregationists, had been defeated in the May primaries by Wilson Baker, who had the help of Negro votes. Baker narrowly defeated Clark's general election write-in try.

In Lowndes County, an outnumbered but unified white vote prevailed over the independent Lowndes County Freedom Party ("Black Panther") slate. A light Negro turn-out and the fact that some Negroes voted for white candidates contributed to the defeat of the "Black Panther" slate. A 53-year old Negro was assaulted in Lowndes, it was reported, as he waited to pick up an election clerk. There were charges that intimidation kept some Negroes from voting.

State Senator William B. Spong coasted to an easy victory in one of two Virginia contests for the U. S. Senate. Spong amassed about 425,000 votes, against some 243,000 for his Republican challenger and 58,000 for the Conservative candidate.

In Virginia's other U. S. Senate race Harry F. Byrd Jr. won. However, Byrd ran considerably behind Spong with 383,000 votes. Spong had more than 58 per cent of the vote in his race, whereas Byrd had 54 per cent in his.

At least part of the difference is explained by the Negro support Spong received. Many Negroes who supported Spong voted for Byrd's Republican opponent, Lawrence M. Traylor.

With Negro support, Spong narrowly defeated Sen. Willis Robertson during the summer for the Democratic nomination.

However, George C. Rawlings Jr., who last summer unseated congressional powerhouse Howard W. Smith with the help of Negro votes, was defeated in the general election by Republican William L. Scott in Virginia's Eighth District. Smith supporters teamed with Republicans to down Rawlings. Scott called it a "bipartisan victory," but he added that "many factors" were involved.

Similarly, Republican Claude Kirk was elected governor of Florida with the help of Gov. Haydon Burns, the incumbent Democrat who was defeated in the primary. Kirk rolled up 821,000 votes against Robert King High's 668,000.

"White backlash" undoubtedly helped Kirk. Florida voters last May rejected Burns' suggestion that they "follow the lead of the people of Alabama" after the big Wallace landslide. However, they proved more receptive to Kirk's somewhat more subtle position that "a man's home is his castle."

An estimated 50,000 to 55,000 Mississippi Negroes voted, out of approximately 170,000 registered. Their votes in the U. S. Senate race were split among Freedom Democratic Party-backed Clifton Whitley, Republican Prentiss Walker, and Democratic incumbent James O. Eastland. Sen. Eastland was reelected with about 230,000 votes, against Walker's 94,000 and Whitley's 28,000.

A Negro was elected to the school board in Jefferson County, becoming the first of his race to be elected to a county office in Mississippi since Reconstruction. A member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, he downed a white candidate by a vote of 225 to 133. Negro candidates running in another half-dozen counties were defeated. A Negro led a field of six in a race for supervisor in Leflore County, but he lost a runoff election in late November.

Louisiana Negroes gave heavy support---as did the state generally---to a proposal to permit Gov. John J. McKeithen to run for reelection in the 1967 elections. The amendment won by a vote of 436,761 to 192,819. Despite the lack of major statewide contests, a sampling of several Negro precincts indicated turnouts in the 50-60 per cent range.

A Negro was elected to the school board in West Feliciana Parish. However, a white write-in campaign defeated a Negro nominee for the school board in Madison Parish. Negroes had been elected during the summer to school boards in East Carroll and Iberville parishes. A Negro candidate also had been elected during the summer in West Feliciana.

Here and there across the South, racially conservative Republicans continued to nudge out moderate and liberal Democrats in congressional races. However, of seven Deep South Republicans who rode the Goldwater tide to victory in 1964, only three were reelected, all in Alabama. Three of the GOP congressmen---Callaway in Georgia, Martin in Alabama, and Walker in Mississippi---sought higher office, and one Republican incumbent in Alabama was defeated. The Callaway race is still undecided, and the Martin and Walker bids were unsuccessful.

Negro registration in 11 Southern states now stands at 2.7 million. In 1962 it was 1.5 million; in 1964, 2.2 million. Current white registration in the South is approximately 14.4 million.

In the 1964 presidential election, four of the six Southern states carried by Mr. Johnson would have gone to Sen. Goldwater if it had not been for the Negro vote. The five Southern states carried by Sen. Goldwater were those in which Negro registration was at or below the regional level.

Said Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the Voter Education Project:

"The results of the 1966 elections plainly indicate the strength and influence of the Negro vote in the South. Yet this strength is far from what it ought to be. Only about half of the Negroes of voting age are registered in the South, whereas 70 per cent of the white adults are registered to vote. This is a gap that must be closed if Negroes are to have a fair share of the voice in Southern politics.

"The results also reflect, in several states, the impact of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. As we stated on the first anniversary of the Act last August, the registration increases of the past year demonstrate the need for more federal examiners. This applies to the three affected states to which examiners have not been sent and to many counties in the four states to which examiners have been sent.

"The results also indicate the value of countless private efforts to stimulate registration and voting in the South. In that connection, the Voter Education Project is pleased to report that programs with which it has been associated have registered 100,000 voters during the year now ending."

The Voter Education Project, a program of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., supports projects of voter registration, citizenship education and leadership training in the 11 Southern states.

The Voter Education Project is nonpartisan and endorses no parties or candidates. Mr. Jordan pointed out that voting in the South often crosses racial lines, with Negroes supporting white candidates in some races and whites supporting Negroes in others. He also pointed out that the 1966 elections again demonstrated that Negroes will vote freely across party lines, basing their choices on the stands of candidates rather than on party affiliation.

JOHN H. WHEELER, PRESIDENT
JOSEPHINE WILKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT
RUFUS E. CLEMENT, VICE-PRESIDENT
STEPHEN J. WRIGHT, VICE-PRESIDENT
PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER, VICE-PRESIDENT
RAYMOND M. WHEELER, CHAIRMAN, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
JOSEPH HAAS, COUNSEL
PAUL ANTHONY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

Comm

January 3, 1967

Dr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Emory:

Thank you again for your valuable contribution to our legislative seminar. You may be interested to know that at the conclusion of the meeting the legislators rose unanimously to vote that a similar program be held prior to the legislative season next year. This was, in large measure, a tribute to the part you and the several other speakers played in making the seminar a success.

Again, we are grateful, and we wish you a pleasant and prosperous 1967.

Sincerely yours,

Vernon

Vernon E. Jordan, Jr.
Director
Voter Education Project

VEJ/pf

File - VEP

Bessemer Voters League

Mrs. L. J. Bowman White, Secretary
No. 4, Green Spring S. W. Phone AL 4-2796
Birmingham, Alabama

MR. ASBURY HOWARD, President
REV. LEON GLOVER, 1st Vice President
MR. CHARLIE McALPIN, 2nd Vice President
MRS. HELEN COOLEY, Assistant Secretary
MRS. PEARL SMITH, Treasurer
REV. G. W. SLONE, Chaplain

June 20, 1967

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director of Labor
5 Forsyth St. N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Sir:

Enclosed is a letter to Director Jordan and some material from the Bessemer Voters' League which was paid by the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union. As Vice-President of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, I have been successful in getting Mine, Mill's Executive Board to pay the greater part of the operating expense of the Bessemer Voters' League. As of now, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers is affiliated with the United Steel Workers of America, and we will merge beginning July 1st. My home station is now in Denver, Colorado,. As of July 1st I will be with the United Steel Workers of America and my home station will be in Bessemer. I have been President of the Bessemer Voters' League for seventeen (17) consecutive years.

I am seeking the Labors support in the expansion of our activities. The expansion of our Registration Drive for the Bessemer Voters' League will be in the following counties where there are no organizations and co-ordinate our work in the Fifth Congressional District with the existing organizations. The counties are as follows: Bibb, Perry, Hale, Sumpter, Chilton, Green, Marengo, Shelby, Pickens, Tuscaloosa, and the Bessemer Cut-off.

It would be greatly appreciated if Labor can assist in both financial help and guidance. It would also be greatly appreciated if you would send a field representative from your office to secure first hand information on what we have done and are planning to do.

Very truly yours,

Asbury Howard

(Mr.) Asbury Howard

AH/cc

cc: Mr. Vernon E. Jordan

June 20, 1967

Mr. Vernon E. Jordan, Jr.
Director of Education Project
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Sir:

Enclosed is some information of the progress and state information we have furnished a portion of Jefferson County and especially the Bessemer Cut-off. You will note a "Dear Leader Letter" which is self-explanatory. We are beginning our special registration drive of which we are expecting to reach our stated goal of 500 new voters in the nine (9) days that the Jefferson County Board of Registrars will be in Bessemer We are beginning this drive with a Six Hundred ($600.00) Dollar office deficit, but we feel that someway some friends or organizations will help us. We are very grateful for the assistance of Mr. W. T. Patton gave to the Bessemer Cut-off the month of March and April. I feel and know that if we in the Bessemer Cut-off sponsor our own Registration Drive, we would achieve greater success.

As you know, the Bessemer Cut-off is in the Western part of Jefferson County. In Jefferson County we have two (2) court houses; one located in Birmingham and one in Bessemer. In the Bessemer court house we elect our own officials. It is the intention of the Bessemer Voters' League to expand our Registration Drive in the counties where there are no organizations and co-ordinate our work in the Fifth Congressional District with the existing organizations. The counties are as follows: Bibb, Chilton, Pickens, Green, Hale, Perry, Shelby, Marengo, Sumpter, Tuscaloosa and the Bessemer Cut-off.

If it is at all possible, we would like to solicit your financial help and guidance in this undertaking. We would like for you to send a field representative from your office to get further information and to evaluate the work that we have done and are planning to do. The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers has been paying a large part of the operation for the Bessemer Voters' League including the enclosed material. As of June 30th, Mine, Mill as such will no longer be in existence and as of July 1st Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union will merge with the United Steel Workers of America.

Very Truly yours,

Asbury Howard

(Mr.) Asbury Howard

AH/cc
cc: Mr. Emery F. Via
Mr. Thaddeus Olive, Jr.

From Cold Prison Walls

Asbury Howard Haunts America

Hands That Can Still Pray

ED. NOTE: This cartoon was called "obscene, libelous, low and indecent" by a Bessemer, Ala. court and caused the author, Asbury Howard, civic and Labor leader, to be beaten by a mob and thrown into an Alabama chain gang.

"I have been aware that sooner or later I'd be 'in trouble' with the white powers-that-be. . . Almost any Negro in the South has been forced to decide that if he fights for his rights he may risk even death. . . I am convinced that the mob which beat and kicked me and screamed insults had become aware that their system is a lost cause."

—from Asbury Howard in a Bessemer jail

Doing President Eisenhower's Bidding

This is the story of a man who was thrown into jail for doing something President Eisenhower has urged every American citizen to do.

Doesn't make sense, does it?

Not only was this man thrown into jail, he was made an example, to warn others like him not to take the President's words seriously. To make sure the example was known, widely and thoroughly, the man first was beaten by a mob right in the city hall while the police looked on and did nothing. Later, after the stitches had been removed from his scalp, he was thrown into jail and assigned to a work gang on the city streets. He is seen every day of his six-month sentence; the example is not lost on anyone in town.

As a Negro who believes in a fair deal for all people, he became a leader in the Bessemer chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, holding the office of vice president, when that organization was "legally" banned in his state.

As an American who takes his citizenship seriously, he became president of the Bessemer Voters League, an organization of Negroes dedicated to winning the right to vote. As President of the League, he did what is done by every office holder from President Eisenhower down to the village Justice of the Peace, by every editor — he talked about the right and duty of everyone to register and vote. But, true to form, he did something more than talk; he took action to overcome fear, to encourage Negroes to pay their poll tax and to vote. He hired a sign painter (who happened to be white) to make a poster of the cartoon reproduced on the front of this folder.

WHAT HAPPENED

Here is what happened after that:

JANUARY 22, 1959: Before the sign was even delivered, police, acting without warrants, arrested Mr. Howard and the sign painter, Mr. McAllister. They were charged with printing "obscene matter" and "breach of the peace".

January 25

FEBRUARY 23: Howard and McAllister appeared on these ridiculous charges, were convicted, and each sentenced to six months in jail and $105 fine. They appealed the convictions.

As Mr. Howard was descending the city hall steps after the trial, with his wife and son, he was attacked by a mob of some 40 white men, who beat and kicked him while police and city officials looked on and did nothing. His body was a mass of bruises; 11 stitches were taken in his scalp.

Asbury Howard, Jr., a Korean war veteran, tried to defend his father. For this, he was arrested, charged with "disturbing the peace" and "resisting arrest". None of the mob was arrested.

FEBRUARY 23 Howard and McAllister appeared in court on their appeals. These were denied; bail was revoked; they were thrown into jail. Half an hour later, Asbury Howard, Sr., was in a work gang on the city streets.

Several weeks later Asbury Howard Jr. appeared in the same court to face charges placed against him as a result of his having come to the defense of his father against the mob attack. He was found guilty of the two charges and given a sentence of six months and $300.00 fine on each charge. Sentences to run concurrently. He is now out on bail, his case having been appealled to a higher court.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

If you have not lived in the South, this may be a little hard to believe. What meaning does it have for the rest of the country, aside from our feeling of outrage that this could happen in The Land of The Free?

Actually, this is a pitched battle in a struggle of which the outcome will affect all of us — our wages, the bargaining power of our unions, our civil rights, the level of prosperity or depression.

When Asbury Howard and those who are with him can break through and win the ballot, they will cut the ground from under the center of backwardness and reaction in our country. That backwardness means low wages and anti-union laws, among other things. It is based on denying the vote to Negroes while keeping the white people's attention focused on the phony "race" issue.

So the politicians of the South are re-elected year after year. They form a center of political power in the Democratic party and in Congress. By combining with right-wing of the Northern Republicans, they beat down legislation desired by the majority — legislation that is promised in the campaign speeches and platforms of the Northern Democrats: repeal of the Taft-Hartley, higher minimum wages, lower taxes, more jobs through adequate appropriations for housing, schools, hospitals and roads.

This is the reason for the desperate viciousness of the attack on Asbury Howard. If it succeeds — if Mr. Howard and the others serve out their terms in jail and on the work gang, it will be a serious setback for democracy and unionism. But if, in the stronghold of reaction, the voice of democratic America can be heard and the convictions of these three men can be reversed, it will be a tremendous victory.

Reestablish Democr

Federal Action To W

The man's name is Asbury Howard. He is one of the best known residents of Bessemer, Alabama, an industrial suburb of Birmingham.

BELIEFS INTO ACTION

Mr. Howard is a man who puts his beliefs into action. A religious man, he is not only a church member, not only a church goer; he is a deacon and Sunday School superintendent.

As a iron ore miner who saw the need for a union, he not only joined, he became active; he advanced rapidly from shop steward, to local president, to International Union representative, to International Union vice president — of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

LEST WE FORGET

"A Civil War was fought. The Southern slaveholders were defeated. For some 20 years after defeat of the Southern Rebels, Negroes and white labor voted in mass.

"Over 29 Negroes went to the U.S. Congress from the South. Negroes and poor whites held public office in the South in the 20 Reconstruction years after the War. In the U.S. Congress today there are only four Negroes, or less than 1% of that body, while Negroes are 10% of the nation."

Educators, Clergy, Support Howard's Freedom!

New York. — Over sixty leading educators, clergy and other citizens from all parts of America have joined in an appeal to the Attorney General of the United States to investigate the case of Asbury Howard, NAACP and Voters League leader in Bessemer, Alabama. . .

STARTS APPEAL

The appeal to the Attorney General was initiated by Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr, theologian and vice president of Union Theological Seminary, New York; Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, minister emeritus of Riverside Church, New York; Dean Liston Pope of Yale university Divinity School; Norman Thomas, Socialist leader, and Rev. A. J. Muste, secretary emeritus of the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Other signers include:

Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, Cleveland; Frank P. Graham, former U.S. Senator and president, University of North Carolina; Emily Greene Balch, Nobel Peace Prize Winner; Norman Cousins, editor, Saturday Review; J. Robert Nelson, Dean of the Divinity School of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.; Bishop Richard S. Emerich, Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Michigan;

Henry S. Commager, historian; Edmond Cahn, professor of law, New York University; president Herbert Gezork of Andover-Newton Theological Seminary, Newton, Mass.; Huston Smith, professor of philosophy, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; and President John A. Mackay of Princeton Theological Seminary.

CITY ORDINANCE

Howard's conviction for having the poster made was under a city ordinance prohibiting "The publication of intemperate matter tending to a breach of the peace, or any matter prejudicial to good order."

The signers declare their support of the American Civil Liberties Union in charging that a "flagrant violation of the First Amendment" is involved in Howard's conviction for seeking to reproduce a newspaper cartoon.

They furthermore agree with the A.C.L.U. that "a de factor conspiracy occurred when, in violation of the federal civil rights law, police officers stand by as a citizen is assaulted in the City Hall of his community while he was there under compulsory process."

Reprint from the Chicago Defender

acy In The South!

in The Vote In Dixie!

See Back Page

Action Needed Now-

Here is what you can do for Asbury Howard and for yourself —

1. Write a letter or telegram to President Dwight D. Eisenhower, your two Senators, your Representative and U.S. Attorney General William P. Rogers. Address all letters and telegrams to Washington, D.C.

   Urge them to act at once for the immediate release and full freedom of Asbury Howard, Sr., McAllisted and Asbury Howard, Jr. Ask them to give their support to legislation to wipe out the poll tax and other tricks aimed at denying the vote to Negro citizens.

   Urge them specifically to use their influence to secure passage of the Douglas-Powell-Cellar Civil Rights Bill.

2. Take this folder to your union, church and/or club. Urge all members to take the action outlined above.

3. Participate in the Chicago Committee to Win the Vote in the South.

   Send contributions to aid the defense and to build public understanding of the meaning of the Asbury Howard Case.

4. Telephone your friends and let them know about this case and about what the Chicago Committee to Win the Vote in the South is doing.

Support Grows For Howard's Defense

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission is observing the facts in this case.

The American Civil Liberties Union has entered the defense.

The National Association for Advancement of Colored People, outlawed in the South, supports the defense.

The AFL-CIO Civil Rights Commission has called upon all International Unions, City and State Councils, to come to the defense of Asbury Howard.

Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, in an interview with President Eisenhower, brought the facts in this case to his attention.

Senator William Langer (Rep., N.D.) is calling for a public hearing in Congress.

Senator Thomas Hennings (Dem., Mo.), Chairman of the Human Rights Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, is considering holding hearings on the case.

Responses of support have come from the independent states of Africa and from trade unions in nearly every country in the world. Appeals have been made to the United Nations. A group of Chicago unionists have formed the Chicago Committee to Win the Vote in the South.

CHICAGO COMMITTEE TO WIN THE VOTE IN THE SOUTH

1110 South Oakley Boulevard - Tel. MO 6-7010 - Chicago 12, Illinois

Milton P. Norman, Chairman

James Pinta, Sec'y - Raymond Dennis, Vice Chair. - John Thomas, Vice Chair.

Ashury Howard 1930 Exeter ave. Bessemer, Alabama

B E S S E M E R V O T E R S L E A G U E

4½ North 20th Street June 17, 1967

Dear Leader:

It is with great pleasure that we can come into your home in this manner with a message and an appeal for special help and full cooperation in our three-month registration drive.

MESSAGE FROM THE COORDINATOR OF VOTER REGISTRATION

MRS. HELEN COOLEY

My Fellow-Workers: This is to inform you that we are planning a Special Registration Drive for July, August, and September.

Registration has been very slow all this year. In May, less than 12 persons registered at the Bessemer Court House. The enemies of Freedom are pleased with this kind of registration, but you and I are not. So with your help we must add 500 new voters to our rolls by the end of September. With your help, and only with your help, this goal can be achieved. You have never let me down and I know you will not now, at a time when I need you so badly to achieve my stated goal.

This is what President Johnson had to say just before signing the Voting Rights Act into law on August 6, 1965: "Let me now say to every Negro in this country, 'You must register, you must vote, and you must learn so your choice advances your interest and the interest of the nation.'"

My fellow-leaders, the Congress and the President have done their part. President Johnson has called on you to search your household and your relatives, neighbors and friends, and if there be any among you who have not registered to vote, it is your duty to see that they are registered. Will you heed the President's message?

I will be calling you for a meeting so we can work out our registration program together.

A MESSAGE FROM PRESIDENT ASBURY HOWARD

I should like to concur with the efficient Coordinator of Voter Registration in her message and appeal to you to come over to Macedonia and help us. I plan to be on the scene during those months. If we are to be successful in this drive we must make personal contacts. If we fail in our first try, we will try and try again. Don't take "No" for an answer. In 1966, our young people, who were too young to vote at the time, demonstrated in Bessemer and were beaten and jailed trying to get Federal registrars sent into Jefferson County in order to make it easier for the adults to qualify to vote. Their cases are now on appeal in the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. Please don't let the youths' struggle, suffering and going to jail be in vain. Your Coordinator will never forget those young people coming into the office screaming and seeking first-aid treatment.

"THE HARVEST TRULY IS GREAT BUT THE LABORERS ARE FEW."

Asbury Howard

—After being mobbed and beaten by an irate group of white men for the "heinous" crime of having sign painters reproduce a cartoon showing a Negro in chains praying for his rights.

—Fifteen or more policemen stood idly by and offered no assistance.

IN HIS OWN WORDS, MR. HOWARD GIVES THIS ACCOUNT OF WHAT HAPPENED:

As he left the courtroom after posting bond, Howard found some forty white men lined up along the walls of the lobby and stairway leading down to the main floor of the city hall. Here is how he has described what happened next: "As I was about to take the last step down, I was struck a terrific blow from the rear which landed on the right side of my head. . . . It knocked me off my feet. The crowd of men around the wall rushed towards me. . . . They lashed out with their feet in a vicious effort to stomp and mutilate my face, head and body. I struggled the best I knew how upon my back upon the floor. I finally managed to reach a corner. In the meantime my son, Asbury, Jr., was struggling down the stairway to my rescue. The mob turned on him. My son put up a furious battle against unequal odds. After he refused to give up but kept on fighting back, they gave ground and began to scatter. There were about fifteen or more policemen in and about the courtroom. The only arrest they were able to make was that of my son. All members of the mob were allowed to escape unmolested. My son was charged with disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. He was placed under $600 bond. . . . After escaping the mob, I needed medical care. I was badly shaken up, bruised, and bleeding badly. The blow I received on my head opened up a very bad wound that took ten stitches to close. I was very weak because of the amount of blood I had lost. As I waited outside the city hall for an ambulance, I was ordered to move along by a police officer. He told me 'Get away from here or else I will carry you up stairs and lock you up.' Two of my friends helped me to walk a block or more to a car and I was taken to the Bessemer General Hospital and was given the medical care I needed." Asbury Howard, Jr., was later sentenced to one year's hard labor for his efforts to defend his father in the Bessemer City Hall. He is now out on bail pending appeal, but his father served his sentence on what the Negro press usually refers to as a CHAIN GANG.

EASTER HATS MADE OF TOWELS

These judicious women and others not shown, sacrificed their Easter hats for Freedom while their leader was in jail for urging his people to Register and Vote. Seated are Mesdames Catherine Jimerison, Adly Alford, Helen Cooley, center, Miss Julia Carter and Carrie P. Jackson. Standing: Lula Rice, Laura Smith, Lizzie Ford, Carrie Sager, Erlean Benton, Annie Mae Carter, and Margaret Knox.

V O T I N G I N S T R U C T I O N S

1. ANY PERSON WHO CANNOT READ MUST NOTIFY THE POLLING OFFICIALS AT THE TIME YOU GIVE YOUR NAME. THEN HE OR SHE MAY TAKE A PERSON OF THEIR OWN CHOOSING INTO THE BOOTH WITH THEM TO VOTE.

2. WHEN YOU ENTER THE VOTING BOOTH THERE IS A SWITCH TO YOUR UPPER LEFT. REACH UP AND TURN THE SWITCH TO YOUR RIGHT. THE CURTAIN WILL CLOSE. YOU ARE NOW READY TO CAST YOUR SECRET BALLOT.

3. TURN EACH SMALL LEVER DOWN OVER THE BOX BY THE PERSON'S NAME YOU ARE VOTING FOR. THEN YOU WILL SEE AN (X) IN THE BOX. CHECK YOUR LIST AND IF YOU HAVE VOTED FOR THE WRONG PERSON, PUSH THE LEVER UP OVER THE WRONG NAME AND TURN THE LEVER DOWN BY THE RIGHT NAME OR NAMES YOU WANT TO VOTE FOR.

4. WHEN YOU HAVE FINISHED VOTING, TURN THE TOP VOTING SWITCH TO YOUR LEFT. THIS SWITCH AUTOMATICALLY RECORDS YOUR VOTE.

COURTESY: BESSEMER VOTERS LEAGUE

The Bessemer Voters League

REPORT

No. 1, May, 1967

ASBURY HOWARD
President

REV. LEON GLOVER
First Vice-President

WILLIE DAVIS
Second Vice-President

MRS. L. J. WHITE
Secretary

MRS. PEARL SMITH
Treasurer

MRS. HELEN COOLEY
Assistant Secretary

Despite Past Gains, Much Work Remains

As our statement of principle and aims makes clear (see box below), the Bessemer Voters League actively seeks both to register increasing numbers of people in the community and to educate them politically. For the last 20 years, these have been its major tasks.

'Now That You're Old Enough To Vote, Suh, Ah Hope You'll Vote For Me'

The Congressional passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 helps us immeasurably in this endeavor. Last year, for the first time, federal registrars were sent to our county, in accordance with one of the major provisions of the new law.

Many of the barriers on the Negro's path to the ballot box have been removed. Yet, fear and intimidation still must be overcome if we are to achieve our maximum voting strength.

Significant gains were made here in Bessemer in last year's election . . . make no mistake about that. Yet, realize, too, that much work remains to be done prior to our next general election in November, 1968. For powerful forces will again be arrayed against us—determined to strip us of recent gains, as well as to hold the line against further advances.

First Level – The Precinct

Effective political work begins at the precinct level, where success can be experienced. The truth of that statement was clearly shown in last year's May primary election, in which four Negroes from Precinct No. 33 (now changed to No. 1) were elected to the Jefferson County Democratic Executive Committee—Atty. David H. Hood, Israel Williams, Sam Allen, and Charles Moorer.

Since being sworn in, Atty. Hood has been appointed a member of the vacancy committee and has been successful in having three more Negroes appointed to the executive committee—Willie Davis, Abraham Dale, and Herman Woods.

Throughout the county, 37 Negroes now serve on the 120-member group.

A major step toward political equality for the Negro in Jefferson County, the achievement has been paralleled in only two other of Alabama's 67 counties—Mobile and Macon—although in those counties the numbers gaining seats were far smaller.

Obviously, the struggle for political equality will be long and arduous. We must move forward step by step, while never losing sight of that ultimate objective.

Other Gains

For the first time in history in Jefferson County, four Negroes last year were in the run-off election as candidates for the State House of Representatives — Atty. Hood, Dr. James T. Montgomery, L. S. Gaillard, and Atty. Arthur Shorer. Of 54 Negro candidates for state and county office throughout Alabama in 1966, 23 received sufficient votes to be in the May 31 run-offs.

In Macon County, that run-off produced the first Negro sheriff in the state's history—Lucius Amerson. Two other Negroes there—L. A. Locklair and Harold Webb—won positions as tax collector and member of the Board of Education respectively.

(Continued on Page 4)

Statement of Principle and Aims of the Bessemer Voters League

We acknowledge with humility the divine power of the Almighty God and implore His guidance during these critical days that He may point out to us and the people of the world the pathway to everlasting world peace and domestic tranquility, and preservation of our cherished American way of life and the fundamental principle of the government of the people, for the people, and by the people.

The Bessemer Voters League stands today where it has always stood, with feet firmly planted on the solid foundation of the Constitution of the United States. The Bessemer Voters League is non-partisan, but we reaffirm our devotion and pledge anew our allegiance to the true principles of the historic Democratic party—the party to which we have given our full support since the election of the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Harry Truman, the late John F. Kennedy, and President Lyndon Johnson.

Article II, Purpose and Aim, of the Bessemer Voters League Constitution: Section I. The purpose of this organization shall be to develop fellowship among qualified voters and increase the number of voters. Section II. This organization aims to stimulate and politically educate people in this area.

WE MUST NEVER FORGET . . .

Major civil rights gains have been made in the last few years, but they have been achieved not without great cost. Since the lunch-counter sit-ins began in 1960, over 30 persons are known to have been slain in the South for reasons directly related to their civil rights activities. Scores of churches have been destroyed or damaged by fire or bombs.

As we continue today the fight for equality, let us remember always the names of those brave martyrs who gave "the last full measure of devotion" to the noble cause.

ONE DEATH IN 1967 — MISSISSIPPI

WHARLEST JACKSON, 37, was a former treasurer of the Natchez branch of the NAACP. A Negro who had been promoted at the Armstrong Rubber plant to a job traditionally held by a white, he was killed by a bomb on February 27. Less than two years ago, George Metcalf, a fellow worker of Jackson's and president of the local NAACP, narrowly escaped death when a bomb was planted in his car.

THREE DEATHS IN 1966—ALABAMA 2, MISSISSIPPI 1

SAMUEL YOUNGE, JR., Negro, Tuskegee, Ala.; Marvin Segrest, white, charged with murder, on bail.

DAVID COLSON, Negro, Camden, Ala., shot Jan. 23 by J. T. Reaves, white.

VERNON DAHMER, NAACP leader, Hattiesburg, Mississippi, died of burns received in fire set by nightriders.

SIX DEATHS IN 1965 — ALABAMA 5, LOUISIANA 1

O'NEAL MOORE, Negro deputy sheriff, shot and killed by nightriders in Bogalusa, Louisiana.

Rev. Reeb

REV. JAMES REEB, a Boston minister, was beaten on a Selma street and died two days later in a Birmingham hospital. Three men indicted on murder charges and acquitted.

VIOLA GREGG LIUZZO, a Detroit mother of five and wife of a Teamsters union official, murdered on Highway 80 between Selma and Montgomery, Alabama on the night the Freedom March ended. Three Klansmen convicted of criminal conspiracy; sentenced to ten years. Now on appeal.

JIMMIE LEE JACKSON, a Negro youth, killed in a voter registration demonstration in Marion, Alabama. No arrest.

WILLIAM BREWSTER, Negro, Anniston, Alabama, shot by nightriders. Three arrests; one man convicted of second degree manslaughter.

JONATHAN DANIELS, white, Hayneville, Alabama, killed in daylight shooting; white man who shot him acquitted.

SEVEN DEATHS IN 1964 — MISSISSIPPI 5, GEORGIA 1, FLORIDA 1

James Chaney

JAMES E. CHANEY, Negro, ANDREW GOODMAN and MICHAEL SCHWERNER, white, were slain shortly after having been released from a Philadelphia, Mississippi jail. Twenty-one men were arrested by the FBI. Indictments against them were dismissed, but they have been reindicted.

LEMUEL PENN, Negro educator from Washington, D.C., shot to death while driving home from Army reserve duty at Fort Benning, Georgia. Four Klansmen arrested; two were tried and acquitted.

HUBERT ORMSBY, Negro, Mississippi, found floating in a river wearing a CORE T-shirt. Verdict was accidental drowning.

LOUIS ALLEN, Mississippi, who had witnessed an earlier killing of a Negro civil rights worker, was himself slain. No arrest.

MRS. JOHNNIE MAE CHAPPELL, Negro, Jacksonville, Florida, shot by a white youth cruising a Negro neighborhood after demonstrations. Killer sentenced to ten years on manslaughter charge.

NINE DEATHS IN 1963 — ALABAMA 8, MISSISSIPPI 1

ADDIE MAE COLLINS, CYNTHIA WESLEY, CAROL ROBERTSON, and DENISE McNAIR were the four small Negro girls killed while in Sunday school when their church in Birmingham was bombed. No arrests.

JOHNNY ROBINSON, Negro, killed in rioting which followed the church bombing. No arrest.

VIRGIL WARE, a Negro boy, was killed by a white youngster who was riding with a friend on a motorscooter. They were convicted of manslaughter but paroled after a lecture by the judge.

JOHN L. COLEY, Negro, Birmingham, shot and killed in rioting that followed the bombing of home of Attorney Arthur Shores.

WILLIAM MOORE, white postman from Baltimore, killed by bullet from a passing car during his protest march across Alabama.

MEDGAR EVERS, a Mississippi field secretary for the NAACP, killed by an ambush sniper outside his home in Jackson. Two trials of the accused slayer ended in hung juries.

THREE DEATHS IN 1962 — MISSISSIPPI

PAUL GUIHARD, a French reporter, and RAY GUNTER, a local TV repairman, were killed by a rooftop sniper while they were at the University of Mississippi during the rioting over the admission of James Meredith, a Negro. No arrests.

CPL. ROMAN DUCKWORTH, Negro, Taylorsville, Mississippi, shot by policeman for refusing to move to rear of a bus. No conviction.

ONE DEATH IN 1961 — MISSISSIPPI

HERBERT LEE, Negro, active in civil-rights activities, was shot by a white Mississippi state legislator. No conviction.

ONE DEATH IN 1960 — GEORGIA

MATTIE GREEN, Negro, Ringgold, Georgia, was killed when a bomb exploded in her home. No arrest.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 . . . A Tribute to the Battle of Selma

The Voting Rights Act of 1965—certainly one of the most far-reaching of the many legislative accomplishments of the 89th Congress — is a living tribute to that year's struggle of Selma, Alabama. Led by the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and involving more than 30,000 persons from across the country, the five-day freedom march from Selma to Montgomery, 50 miles away, is without doubt the single dramatic episode responsible for guaranteeing Congressional passage of the voting rights proposals laid before it by President Lyndon Johnson.

"The cries of pain, the hymns and protests of oppressed people, have summoned into convocation all the majesty of the government of the greatest nation on earth," said the President on March 15, 1965, in a speech to Congress and the American people which promised the introduction of voting rights legislation.

Only a week before, on Sunday, March 7, the first attempt at the freedom march had been made, with some 600 demonstrators being turned back by club-wielding state troopers and members of Selma Sheriff James Clark's posse. The Rev. James J. Reeb and Mrs. Viola Gregg Liuzzo were to lose their lives in the struggle of Selma.

ALTHOUGH APPARENTLY UNCONSCIOUS this woman is ordered to her feet on March 7, 1965 by an Alabama state trooper. Sheriff Jim Clark's Dallas County possee, too, helped turn back with tear gas and whips this day's civil rights march, but later in the month the Selma-to-Montgomery march was succesful.

Provisions of New Law

What are the major provisions of the law which that struggle produced—a law that in less than two years on the books has come close to doubling Negro registration throughout the South? These important features are listed below:

- It allows the use of federal registrars in states or counties where less than 50 percent of those persons of voting age were registered or voted in 1964. (Covered under this formula are Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina, Virginia, 27 counties in North Carolina, and small areas in Arizona.)
- It suspends the use of "literacy" tests or similar "qualification" devices in those areas.
- It prohibits the denial of voting rights because of an inability to read or write English, providing a person has completed the sixth grade of an American flag school.
- It calls for the Justice Department to challenge in court the constitutionality of poll taxes used in state and local elections in Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia. (Federal court panels have found such poll taxes unconstitutional.)
- It authorizes federal examiners, upon determining that properly registered voters were turned away from the polls, to obtain federal court orders impounding the ballots until persons entitled to vote have been allowed to do so.

MRS. PAUL DOUGLAS, WIFE OF THE THEN-U.S. SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS, confers with Asbury Howard, president of the Bessemer Voters League, during the 1965 civil rights struggle in Selma, Alabama. On March 9, Mrs. Douglas led more than 2,000 demonstrators across the Alabama River bridge before they were halted by state troopers. The march to Montgomery ended on March 25, when 30,000 persons, Negro and white, arrived in the heartland of the old Confederacy.

Signed on August 6, 1965

Signed into law by President Johnson on August 6, 1965 in the President's Room off the Senate chamber, where Abraham Lincoln on August 6, 1861 had signed a bill freeing slaves who had been pressed into service of the Confederacy, the voting rights measure, said President Johnson, would "strike away the last major shackle" of the Negro's "ancient bonds."

"In our system," the President had said in his March 15 message to Congress, "the first right and most vital of all our rights is the right to vote. Jefferson described the elective franchise as 'the ark of our safety.' It is from the exercise of this right that the guarantee of all our other rights flows."

(Continued on Page 4)

Much Work Remains to be Done

(Continued from Page 1)

Elsewhere in the South, too, major gains were won in 1966. In Georgia, nine Negro incumbents, including Julian Bond, who previously had been denied his seat, were re-elected to the House of Representatives. John Hood of Atlanta and Richard Dent of Augusta won new seats, while William Merriet became the first Negro Republican to be eletced to the legislature since Reconstruction.

In Texas, the color bar was broken for the first time by the election of Barbara Jordan to the state Senate and Curtis Graves and Joseph E. Lockridge to the state Assembly. In Tennessee, the number of Negro representatives increased from one to six.

Mississippi saw its first Negro of modern times elected. He is Robert Lee Williams, now a member of the Jefferson County Board of Education.

Six Congressmen Re-Elected

Despite the dire warnings raised nationally concerning the so-called "white backlash," all six Negro Congressmen won re-election. Edward Brooke, running on the Republican ticket in Massachusetts, became the first Negro U.S. Senator since Reconstruction.

According to a study by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, the Negro vote clearly was the margin of victory of one U.S. Senator (Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina), two Congressmen (Nick Galupanikus of North Carolina and Ray Blanton of Tennessee), and at least one governor (Winthrop Rockefeller of Arkansas) in the South last November.

Registration Figures

At the end of last year, Negro registration in 11 Southern states stood at 2.7 million, as compared to 1.5 million only four years previously. Yet, still only about half of the Negroes of voting age are registered in the South.

Combine that fact with figures showing that only from one-half to three-quarters of those registered actually voted, and you see the magnitude of the potential still to be reached. In Alabama, while the Negro turnout in the May 3 election was estimated at 74 percent of those registered, this figure dropped to less than half the registration for the May 31 run-off.

The recent presence of federal registrars in Bessemer undoubtedly will ease the problems associated with encouraging registration. In the first few months after the Voting Rights Act went into effect on August 9, 1965, close to 35 percent of many thousands of newly registered Negroes across the South were certified by such federal examiners.

Yet, while you can't vote if you're not registered, registration by itself equally does no good. We must organize and educate now so that in future elections those who are registered do cast ballots.

A Tribute to the Battle of Selma

(Continued from Page 3)

"Unless the right to vote be secured and undenied, all other rights are insecure and subject to denial for all our citizens. The challenge of this right is a challenge to America itself," President Johnson had stated.

"Let me now say to every Negro in this country," declared the President in signing the new law, "You must register. You must vote. And you must learn, so your choice advances your interest and the interest of the nation. For your future, and your children's future depend upon it."

Towards the close of 1964, Alabama had some 111,000 Negroes who were registered to vote—only 23 percent of the total who were eligible. That figure today is up to 275,000 more than double what it had been prior to the passage of the new law.

Throughout the deep South prior to 1965, the Negro vote had amounted to only about 12 percent of the total there because of the systematic disenfranchisement over scores of years. Potentially, however, the Negro vote is approximately 30 percent of the total.

A block that powerful surely could play a decisive role in making great progress on the other fronts now poisoned by racial discrimination—in the area of job opportunities, in the area of equality of education, in the area of the fair administration of justice.

THERE ARE MANY WAYS OF GIVING IN THE STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM. The women above and other members of the Bessemer Voters League sacrificed their Easter bonnets a few years ago, substituting hats made of towels. Seated: Catherine Jimerison, Adly Alford, Helen Cooley, Julia Carter, and Carrie P. Jackson. Standing: Lula Rice, Laura Smith, Lizzie Ford, Carrie Sager, Erlean Benton, Annie Mae Carter, and Margaret Knox.

"If there is no struggle, there is no progress. Those who profess to favor freedom, and yet deprecate agitation, are men who want crops without plowing up the ground. They want the rain without thunder and lightning. They want the ocean without the awful roar of its many waters. This struggle may be a moral one; or it may be a physical one; or it may be both moral and physical; but it must be a struggle. Power concedes nothing without a demand. It never did and never will. Men may not get all they pay for in this world; but they must certainly pay for all they get."—FREDERICK DOUGLAS,

Father of the Protest Movement.

Officers & Stewards

BULLETIN

No. 1, January, 1966 14

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF MINE, MILL AND SMELTER WORKERS

A. C. SKINNER
President

ASBURY HOWARD
Vice-President

IRVING DICHTER
Secretary-Treasurer

Dramatic Gains in Negro Registration In South Despite Increasing Violence

Negro voting strength, which proved to be a powerful influence in scattered municipal elections in the U.S. this past November, is increasing rapidly in the deep South as a result of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 — quite possibly the most far-reaching of the many accomplishments of the 89th Congress last year. Passed overwhelmingly by both houses, the new law stands as a tribute to the thousands of persons, Negro and white, who took to the streets in the struggle to awaken the conscience of America.

Pratt in The Sacramento Bee

The Challenge

While the registration picture is still far from rosy, substantial progress has been made in the five months since President Johnson signed the Act on Aug. 6. Major problems, however, are the increasing threats to and intimidation of Negroes in many areas—and violence—plus the reluctance of Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach to up sharply the number of federal registrars being used.

Major Provisions of the New Law Are:

- It allows the use of federal registrars in states or counties where less than 50 percent of those persons of voting age were registered or voted in 1964. (Covered under this formula are Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina, Virginia, Alaska, 27 counties in North Carolina, and small areas in Arizona.)
- It suspends the use of "literacy" tests or similar "qualification" devices in those areas.
- It prohibits the denial of voting rights because of an inability to read or write English, providing a person has completed the sixth grade of an American flag school.
- It calls for the Justice Department to challenge in court the constitutionality of poll taxes used in state and local elections in Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia. (Now in progress.)
- It authorizes federal examiners, upon determining that properly registered voters were turned away from the polls, to obtain federal court orders impounding the ballots until persons entitled to vote have been allowed to do so.

Progress to Date

In the five deep South states that are the major targets of the Voting Rights Act—Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, and South Carolina—there were, in the middle of November, an estimated 4,400,000 white and 815,000 Negro voters, comprising about 72 per cent and 34 percent respectively of the total voting age population there. Of these, some 225,000, or slightly over one-quarter of the total Negro registration, have been registered since the Voting Rights Act went into effect on Aug. 9. Of the 225,000 newly registered Negroes, 77,525 or very close to 35 per cent have been certified by federal examiners.

If all those of voting age in the five

(Continued on Back Page)

The Last Stronghold

Conrad in the Los Angeles Times

Professors Fail!

A key provision of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 prohibits, in states where less than 50 percent of the persons of voting age were registered to vote for the 1964 presidential election, the use of so-called "literacy" tests in qualifying persons who wish to register.

Negroes in Alabama previously were subjected to "literacy" tests, which, among other things, required voter applicants to answer correctly certain questions based on the obscure Twelfth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

A poll of professors teaching constitutional law at American law schools asked them to answer four of these "routine" questions without looking up the Twelfth Amendment. Of the 384 responses that were returned, 70 percent of the answers were wrong!

Wide World Photo

SELMA, Ala., Feb. 16, 1965—Prospective Negro voters line up at the courthouse to sign book to establish a number for future registration days. Today, since the Voting Rights Act of 1965 went into effect in August, lines much longer than this are forming in many areas throughout the deep South and thousands of Negroes are NOW being allowed to register for the first time.

Mine-Mill Active in Registration, Voter Education Programs in S.C. and Ga.

New registration of Negro voters in two Southern cities where Mine-Mill has local unions has been proceeding at a greatly increased rate since passage of the federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 in August. The two locals, Local 870 in Savannah, Ga. and Local 863 in Charleston, S.C., are now active also in campaigns to instruct these new voters in the use of voting machines and on other election material, according to a recent report from International Representative Jesse Doster, in order to ensure that these votes won't be lost, as a substantial number of Negro votes have been in the past.

The Charleston local is now busily registering its members and their families, while the county's Civic Organization, in which many Mine-Mill members are extremely active, is setting up classes throughout the area to provide instruction in the use of the voting machines.

"You mean, suh, let them mingle ballots in the same box as ours?"

Herblock in the Washington Post

Crusade for Voters

In Chatham County, in which Savannah is located, over 1,000 votes were voided in the 1964 election. Here, too, the Mine-Mill local is involved in voter education, helping to support a fulltime secretary, whose duties include teaching the newly registered Negroes in the use of the voting machine. The Crusade for Voters, which maintains an office on West Broad Street that is open six days a week, has been able to obtain a voting machine, so that the secretary can teach anyone who stops by in its use. Doster is a member of the executive board of the Crusade for Voters.

Some five years ago, when Local 870 helped to organize the Crusade for Voters, there were only about 8,000 Negro voters in Chatham County and only about 10,000 in the First Congressional District, which is comprised of 20 counties, in several of which Negroes outnumber the whites by as much as 3 to 1. Today, there are 26,000 registered Negroes in Chatham County (56,317 voted there in the presidential race in 1964, carrying for Sen. Goldwater by almost 10,000), while there are about 45,000 registered Negroes now in the First Congressional District (close to 36 percent of the 125,793 that went to the polls there in 1964 to give Goldwater a 3 to 2 margin).

Of the 46 counties in South Carolina, federal registrars are currently working only in two—Colleton and Dorchester, in both of which Negroes outnumber the whites approximately 2 to 1. While the number of Negroes that have been registered in these counties are not now available, the president of the NAACP there estimates the figure to be between 1200 and 1500. The two counties in 1964 went heavily for Goldwater, with the total vote of 13,401 being almost evenly split between the two counties.

Both Colleton and Dorchester counties, along with Charleston County, are in the First Congressional District, presently represented in the U.S. House of Representatives by L. Mendel Rivers (Dem.), which carried by a better than 2 to 1 majority for Goldwater over President Johnson, with a total vote of 88,887 being cast. Some 16,000 Negroes are now registered in Charleston County alone.

The Civic Organization hopes to increase this latter number by an additional 10,000 before the end of this spring.

THE BESSEMER, ALABAMA STORY

by Asbury Howard
International Vice-President

During a Christmas visit to Bessemer, Alabama, I participated in the continuing voter registration campaign there. I want to report here to the officers and stewards of our union on that drive, for what is happening in Bessemer is an example of what is also taking place in many other southern communities.

The County Board of Registrars holds sessions in Bessemer on three days each month—the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of the last week. To register, you must be at the Bessemer courthouse on one of those three days unless you are prepared to travel to Birmingham, some 15 miles away, where you can get in the line there, hoping that the registrars will get to you before they close for the day. The board sits in Birmingham three days each week except for the last week of the month.

No More "Literacy" Tests

Although the Voting Rights Act of 1965 allows federal registrars to go into certain communities in the South where local authorities refuse to comply with the law, none have yet come to this county. At the same time, the new law has greatly increased the number of Negro applicants here by removing the fantastic obstacles placed in the path of the prospective Negro voter. On many occasions, I have called your attention to the so-called "literacy" tests that were used in southern states to disqualify Negro voters. The Voting Rights Act has done away with such phony tests.

The Bessemer Voters League, in conjunction with the NAACP and the Civic League, concentrated on the registration period during the week of December 27. Earlier in the month, John Doar, assistant U.S. attorney general in charge of the Civil Rights Division, had said that "Negro voting registration still is not going as well as I would like in the Birmingham area, particularly in Bessemer," indicating that federal examiners might be sent in unless the situation improved. In spite of the fact that many more Negroes than whites were registering in Bessemer (864 to 22, for example, on Oct. 25, 26, and 27), Doar estimated that some 80,000 Negroes of voting age were still unregistered in Jefferson County.

While the December campaign was not successful in getting federal registrars assigned to the area, so many unregistered persons lined up at the courthouse that the local board was compelled to extend registration for two additional days that week. In the five-day period at the end of the month, 2,399 new voters were registered, of whom 2,187 were Negroes. Many others were turned away because of the still too limited time for registration.

Very active in the drive were Will Thomas, president of Mine-Mill Local 531, who is also president of the Bessemer chapter of the NAACP, and Jesse Gaines, a Mine-Mill convention delegate from Local 109 for many years until his retirement, who heads the Civic League.

It is interesting to note that even prior to the December campaign the head of the Bessemer Chamber of Commerce sent out a plea (see box this page) to unregistered whites to join the registration line. In days gone by, when a white came to register he was taken care of ahead of any Negroes, who were always subjected to long waits. The rule is now "first come, first serve," and many segregationists are not anxious to get into that kind of a line. It is amazing what a lesson in democracy even this simple process of lining up for registration can hold!

City Election Coming Up

The Board of Registrars will not sit again in Bessemer until the last week in February, after the city election on Feb. 1. In the last such election, one reactionary, racist city councilman was defeated. It will be interesting to see what results next month's balloting produces, in view of the greatly increased Negro registration.

The new law has made registration enormously easier, but the battle isn't over yet. There are many areas in the South where intimidation and violence still prevent the Negro from exercising his rights of citizenship and where federal registrars and protection are sorely needed. In Lowndes County, many Negroes have been evicted from the homes in which they have lived since birth because they went down to the courthouse to register.

While the act of registering still remains one of the bravest acts of patriotism in far too many places in the South, we shall overcome!

Action Now or Regret Later

"We must consider a condition that has been rapidly developing in our community for the past few months. Next year is an election year and the federal laws have taken from us the right to set qualifications for our voters as have been our practice for nearly a hundred years.

"Urge your employees, friends and acquaintances who have never registered to vote that it is imperative that they get in 'that line' and register, even if the line is not to their liking. In checking with the Board of Registrars, it has been suggested that if the white people get to the Court House early, 7 or 7:30 a.m., they can form their line and be first.

"Please give this problem your prompt consideration. We must act now, or we shall surely regret it!"

—Bessemer, Ala. Chamber of Commerce President Locke H. Jones, in a Nov. 5 letter to all Chamber members.

CROWING ROOSTER (right), Democratic party's emblem in Alabama, used on election ballots and campaign material, for years has forced Negroes wishing to support the party's ticket to vote for the white supremacy slogan. Alabama's attorney general, a Democrat, has asked that the emblem be dropped. Meanwhile, a recently formed all-Negro Freedom Organization in Lowndes County, backed by SNCC, has adopted the black panther symbol, which, it says, "will eat up that old rooster."

Dramatic Registration Gains

(Continued from Page 1)

states were registered, 1,800,000 Negroes and 1,700,000 whites would be added to the registration rolls, making totals of 6,100,000 white and 2,600,000 Negro voters.

While it is clear that Negroes, even if all were to get registered, cannot dominate numerically statewide elections in the deep South, they can and soon will in many localities and counties in the South. In Wilcox County, Ala., for example, Negroes who were disenfranchised until the new law, now comprise some 55 percent of the total registration. Federal registrations have also given Negroes a slight majority on the East Carroll Parish voting list in Louisiana.

This fact is extremely important, since it is often the public officials on the local level that have been responsible for the harassment and brutality to Negroes in the South.

Beyond this, however, it is clear that the Negro voice is going to become much more influential even in the statewide elections, in spite of the fact that the present numbers of unregistered Negroes and whites are roughly equal.

Why? Because undoubtedly more of the new registrations will be Negro than white. In Alabama, for example, up to Dec. 4, federal examiners had added 35,501 Negroes to the poll books to only 183 whites—a ratio of almost 200 to 1. As mentioned above, about 72 percent of the eligible whites are already registered, and despite appeals from public officials, Chambers of Commerce, or what groups have you, it is always extremely difficult to get registration much above that figure.

Negroes, only 34 percent of whom are registered, can be expected to sign up in much larger numbers, now that they are at last being given that chance.

Percentage Gain Can Be Tremendous

What this means in terms of percentages is tremendous. Systematically disenfranchised for scores of years, the Negro vote had until passage of the Voting Rights Act amounted to only about 12 percent of the vote in the deep South. Potentially, however, the Negro vote is roughly 30 percent of the total there.

That's a big difference. A voting bloc that strong simply cannot be disregarded in any kind of an election, particularly since the South is beginning to emerge from the long period of single party domination.

The big problem at the moment is the increasing intimidation of the Negro that attempts to register in many Southern communities. This intimidation ranges from killings to beatings and bombings to evictions and firings.

It is extremely significant that the federal registrars, currently active in only 32 of the hundreds of counties in the deep South, have signed up about 35 percent of the newly registered voters. While local boards of registrars have been doing a much improved job on their own in many counties, it is obvious that in many other areas resistance to registering the Negro persists. In many cases, that resistance includes violence.

The federal Civil Rights Commission, in a report early in December, sharply criticized the Justice Department on the implementation of the Voting Rights Act, recommending that many more federal examiners be sent to the South. Stating that the Attorney General had not acted under his authority to designate counties for federal registrars on the meritorious complaint of 20 or more citizens, the commission also called for the initiation of programs designed to notify potential voters about registration requirements and to encourage them to register.

Engelhardt in The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

"There's a Lion in the Streets"

Appeal to President

"We call upon the President of the United States to make the presence and the forces of the federal government visible in the state of Alabama by ordering federal marshals to the . . . counties . . . where violence and terror are the order of the day. These federal marshals should have the power to make on-the-spot arrests . . .

"If the federal government cannot provide protection for people seeking civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution, then people will have no protection but themselves. We find it increasingly difficult to ask the people of the Black Belt to remain nonviolent.

—John Lewis, national chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, following the murder on Jan. 4 of Samuel Younge, a civil rights worker in Tuskegee, Ala.

OFFICERS and STEWARDS BULLETIN

International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers
941 East 17th Ave., Denver, Colorado 80218

RETURN REQUESTED

PROGRAM TO GET OUT THE VOTE ON ELECTION DAY

In order to arouse the apathy that exist among the voters, we must organize and work toward the end of getting every known and unknown voter to the polls on election day.

To accomplish this task, I would suggest:

(1) Call the interested leaders together in each district, and organize a " Get out vote campaign".

(2) Organize a car pool for the people who need transportation.

(3) Organize baby sitters if needed on election day.

(4) Organize a telephone committee to call all voters five days before the election, and urge them to go both to the call meeting the night before the election and to the polls on election day.

(5) Send announcements to the Ministers' Conference and churches about the meeting, and urge the people to go to the polls to vote.

(6) Set up area captains and have them set up block workers.

(7) The block workers should be responsible for knocking on doors of every voter a week or ten days before the election and tell them of the importance of the coming election.

(8) The time for beginning the organizational structure is now, (normally thirty days before any election).

(9) Make use of everybody, the retired, the unemployed, the shut-ins, the professional workers, the plant workers, and the housewives, etc.

BESSEMER, ALABAMA

Founded September 9, 1887, by Henry F. DeBardeleben. Bessemer was named for Sir Henry Bessemer, the English scientist who invented a process for making steel. Bessemer was incorporated as a town in 1888, as a city in 1889. The 1960 census population of Bessemer was 33,500 (14,509 white, 18,982 colored, and 9 others). Present estimated population of Bessemer is 39,500.

Bessemer has a Commission form of government. The Commission is composed of Jess Lanier, President; Ed Porter, Police Department; Tom Ashley, Street Department. The Commissioners serve for four years.

The City Recorder (judge) is James Hamrick, who serves a four-year term.
The City Attorney is J. Howard McEniry, Jr.

The Sheriff of Jefferson County is Mel Bailey.
The Chief Deputy in charge of Bessemer Cut-Off is James Thompson.
The Deputy Probate Judge is Harris Moore.
The Bessemer Circuit Judges are Edward Bell and Gardner F. Goodwyn, Jr.
The Civil and Criminal Judge is Walter Briggis.
The Solicitor in Bessemer Cut-Off is James Hammond.

NEGRO MEMBERS OF DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, Precinct 1:

Community Center, Braswell Housing Project ---------	David H. Hood
Community Center, South Bessemer Housing Project ---	Sam Allen
National Guard Armory ----------	Willie Davis
Brighton Junior High School ----------	Herman Woodward
City Hall, Brownville ----------	Abram Dale
McNeil Community Center ----------	Israel Williams
Bryant Chapel A.M.E. Church ----------	Charles Moorer

KNOW YOUR ELECTED STATE AND COUNTY OFFICIALS WHO TOOK OFFICE JANUARY 1, 1967

UNITED STATES SENATOR	John J. Sparkman (D)
GOVERNOR	Mrs. Lurleen Wallace (D)
LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR	Albert Brewer (D)
ATTORNEY GENERAL	Mac Donald Gallion (D)
SECRETARY OF STATE	Mabel Amos (D)
STATE TREASURER	Agnes Baggett (D)
STATE AUDITOR	Melba Till Allen (D)
STATE SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION	Ernest Stone (D)
COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE	Richard Beard (D)(ck f/corr.)
ASSOCIATE MEMBER PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION	Jodie Connell (R)
U.S. REPRESENTATIVE 5TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT ..	Armistead Selden (D)

SENATORS FROM JEFFERSON COUNTY:

Place 1 - Hugh Morrow (D)	Place 5 - George L. Bailes (D)
" 2 - Leland Childs (R)	" 6 - Eddie H. Gilmore (D)
" 3 - John Hawkins (D)	" 7 - Paschal P. Vacca (D)
" 4 - Richard Dominick (D)

MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FROM JEFFERSON COUNTY:

Place 1 - Paul Meeks, Jr. (D)	Place 11 - Tram Sessions (D)
" 2 - J.T. Waggoner, Jr.(D)	" 12 - Newman Yeilding (D)
" 3 - Robert L. Ellis (D)	" 13 - R.F. Holman (D)
" 4 - Hubert Kilgore (D)	" 14 - Verbon E. Crane (D)
" 5 - Richard Dill (D)	" 15 - Quinton Bowers (D)
" 6 - Joe Money (D)	" 16 - John W. Cook (D)
" 7 - Bob Adwell (D)	" 17 - Frank House (D)
" 8 - Raymond Weeks (D)	" 18 - Marvin Cherner (D)
" 9 - Tommy Watkins (D)	" 19 - Tom Gloor (D)
" 10 - Robert C. Gafford (D)	" 20 - Thomas H. Jackson (D)

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS - W. Cooper Green, President

No. 1 - E. H. Gilmore (D)	No. 2 - Thomas B. Pinson (D)

TAX ASSESSOR	Earl T. Rogers (D)
TAX COLLECTOR	J.D. Smith (D)

Courtesy of BESSEMER VOTERS LEAGUE

HANDS THAT CAN STILL PRAY

THE COST OF THE STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM IN BESSEMER, ALABAMA, AS TOLD BY ASBURY HOWARD, JR.

SPONSORED BY THE INTER-CITIZENS COMMITTEE, BOX 1443, BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA.

As a result of the painting of the above cartoon in Bessemer, Alabama, [redacted] my father and I were jailed, sentenced, and mobbed in the very Court of Justice, and none of our attackers were arrested.

The picture was taken by my father from a Kansas City newspaper, and was to be used in our local Voter's League meeting place to urge Negroes to vote. Dad hired a white painter to make a copy, but before it was completed, it was seen by a white person who immediately notified the police. The police Chief came and arrested Dad on the afternoon of Wednesday, Jan. 22, 1959. He was charged with breach of the peace and inciting to riot. The trial was held on Saturday, Jan. 25, 1959. At the trial, Dad was found guilty and sentenced to six months in jail and fined $100.00 plus costs. My father appealed the decision.

As we were leaving the court room on the way to the bonding company to make appeal bond, two white men stepped in front of me, separating me from Dad. This happened while we were going down a narrow stairway to the lobby of the court building. As Dad got to the bottom step in the lobby of the court building, one of the men in front of me nodded to a strongly built white man who was standing at the bottom of the stairway with blackjack in hand. I realized that the men were blocking me so they could get to Dad. When the man nodded, I shouted to Dad to look out. At that moment, the man with the blackjack swung and struck Dad on the head with the blackjack. Immediately about forty white men who were gathered in the lobby sprang to the attack. Many of them had blackjacks and knives in the halls of Justice. My mother rushed out and cried, "They're killing my husband and my son". One of the men placed a knife on her stomach and told her if she hollered again he would cut her entrails out.

When the men jumped on Dad, I shoved the two men blocking me down the stairway and dived headlong into the bunch. Both my father and I were fighting for our very lives in the halls of Justice. The odds were almost forty to one against us, and we were severely mobbed. There was an officer at the door, and there were many officers in the court building, but none of them came to our rescue. Finally, after what seemed about eight or ten minutes, a group of officers came from upstairs calling on everyone to break it up. My father's face and mine were bloody, and our bodies were much bruised, yet no arrests were made, and all the men immediately left the lobby and went outside. A witness said that my father was so dazed as he came from the court building that his eyes were fixed and he seemed to be in another world.

A large crowd gathered outside, which the officers began to disperse. I noticed that I was being pushed in the opposite direction from my father. When I tried to get to him, I was arrested and jailed on the charge of disorderly conduct and disobeying an officer. At my trial, I was found guilty and sentenced to 360 days and fined $200.00 plus costs. I appealed the decision.

My father did make bond, but the officials said it was improperly made out. So he was jailed and had to serve the sentence. He served his time working on the streets of Bessemer. And though we are continually harrassed and intimidated, we will not give up in our struggle for justice and equality before the law.

The artist who made the painting was likewise sentenced to six months and fined $100.00. Unable to secure a lawyer, he served the sentence, and Dad paid the fine.

Both my father and I are registered voters, but the Registrars are seeking to remove our names from the list of voters because of the charges laid against us. For two years I served in the Armed Forces, one of them being spent in the Korean Conflict. But when we seek to exercise the Democracy at home for which we fight abroad, we are met with mob violence and jail sentences, while the mobs go free.

On the same day of the attack, we filed a complaint with the F.B.I. So far, no action has been taken against the perpetrators of this foul deed. Naturally we ask, "What is the duty of loyal citizens? - What is the reward for loyalty and good citizenship? - What rights are guaranteed to the Negro citizens of Alabama?"

Will you help us in our fight to make America more truly the Land of the Free?

Asbury Howard, Jr.
ASBURY HOWARD, JR.

THE INTER-CITIZENS COMMITTEE
BOX 1443
BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA

J.L. WARE, President

C.H. OLIVER, Secretary

1967

You CAN do everything but worship. 11:00 o'clock on Sunday is the most segregated hour in America.

"Segregation is our God, and we shall have no other before Thee."

Birmingham News — BESSEMER, ALA., WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1965

Waiting to register to vote—This line of applicants to register to vote formed early Monday morning, first day of registration in Bessemer under the recently-passed voting rights bill. Applicants were admitted in batches of 50 to the Court House, where they went to the registration offices on the third floor. Officials registered 305 Negroes and 10 white persons Monday, turning away 150 they were not able to accommodate.

Birmingham News — Tuesday, August 17, 1965

We Brought It On Ourselves

CONFESSION, THEY SAY, is good for the soul; and when it comes to this business of voting rights, the soul of the South could use a little shriving.

For days now, the federal registrars have been at work. For over a week, key provisions of the franchise laws of six states have been suspended. Five years of humiliation, in some cases, lie ahead. And Southerners, whose long memories of "The War" are cultivated in cradle and classroom, are complaining bitterly of a second Reconstruction.

Some of this resentful protest is directed at the purposeful registration of illiterate Negroes, and on the face of it, the protest is valid. Surely the Constitution has been perverted when a sovereign state is prevented from requiring, as a minimum, that a voter be able to write out his name, address and occupation.

Discriminatory application

ANOTHER PART OF THE PROTEST goes to the Voting Rights Act itself. It is full of tricks, triggers, and traps; it is patently unfair and discriminatory in its application; it tramples ruthlessly across provisions of the Constitution that historically have reserved certain powers to the states. And all this is true.

But Southerners have an obligation, painful though it may be, to put those long memories to work in an examination of their conscience. The discomfiting truth is that what the South has done in the past speaks so loudly that few persons pay much attention to what the South says today. Those of us who have been born, bred, and brought up in Dixie should gaze upon the indignities of this new occupation with a certain clear understanding: We brought it on ourselves.

What about these Negro illiterates? Why, sire, the truth is that white illiterates have been registered all along. Everybody knows it. The evidence of a hundred court cases proves it. And when Mr. Katzenbach, on television, rubs it in, there is not a word to be said in reply.

South is culpable

WHAT ABOUT THESE TRICKS and devices? God rest us, we of the South invented tricks and devices! There was that beautiful little grandfather clause, early in the century, which gave permanent registration to all men—and their lineal descendants—who were registered in 1860, but required all others (meaning Negroes) to register anew. The Supreme Court threw that out. Then there was the device of the white primary, conducted for the benefit of a Democratic Party that denied membership to Negroes. And the Supreme Court threw that out.

There was the poll tax, which had to be paid for three full years, six months prior to an election. When the Virginia Constitutional Convention of 1902 adopted this device, someone asked Carter Glass if it wouldn't discriminate against the Negro. "Discriminate?" he cried. "That is exactly what we mean to do."

Louisiana and Mississippi came up with the "reasonable interpretation" rule. It was a real tricker. The law provided that a prospective voter could be required to give a "reasonable interpretation" of any clause in the state or federal Constitution, and left it to the local registrars to define their own rules of reason. In courthouse squares, the knee-slappers were told:

"Well, Rastus," says the registrar, "tell me what is meant when it says that no state shall grant letters of marque and reprisal?"

"Why suh, that means this ol' nigguh ain' goin' vote in Sunflower County!"

Was funny then

IT SEEMED FUNNY, then. There were other trickers that required affidavits of good character, and barred those who lived in

CURTAIN GOING UP
—Baldy, Atlanta Constitution

common law cohabitation. There were registrars who couldn't be found, or stayed out to lunch for 30 days. And the funny thing, really, was that all the time, some of these Southerners were braying to the heavens about how much they loved the Constitution. They cried the Tenth Amendment from the housetops; and they buried the Fifteenth where no one could find it.

To be sure, not all of these sins occurred in all of the South. Over most of the area, especially in recent years, Negroes have in fact registered without let or hindrance. Today the segregationist Democrats who once disdained the Negro vote are bidding furiously for it. Most of the South has got religion, but there is more expedience than penance in the sudden conversion.

True enough, two wrongs don't make right; and you ought not to attack violations of the Constitution by violating the Constitution. In this case, two wrongs have made a voting [illegible] Now we live with it. (c)

1,030 sign up at Bessemer

BESSEMER, Aug. 26 — A record number of persons registered to vote in a three-day session of the Board of Registrars in the court house here this week.

Board officials said a total of 984 Negroes and 46 white persons were registered, in the first registration here since passage of the voting rights bill.

Officials said these totals are much greater than the total in a comparable period for the entire county in previous years.

ABOUT 400 complaint forms were signed, a board spokesman said, by Negroes who were not able to register. It was estimated a total of 650 persons were turned away during the three-day period.

Officials said the great majority of those registering lived in Bessemer, with scattering of registrants living in other communities of the Cutoff Division.

Extra help was employed for the Bessemer registrations and the office was open from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m., with no registrants admitted after 3.

File - VEP

T E N T A T I V E A G E N D A

LOCAL GOVERNMENT SEMINAR
CLARK COLLEGE, KRESGE HALL

JULY 27-29, 1967

* * * * * * *

THURSDAY, JULY 27

3:00 - 5:00 p.m.	-	Registration, Brawley Hall
6:00 - 7:00	-	DINNER - College Dining Hall
		FIRST SESSION
	-	Vernon E. Jordan, Jr., Presiding
	-	Greetings, Q. V. Williamson
	-	Remarks, Paul Anthony - Director, SRC.
		"Why We Are Here" -- Vivian Henderson President Clark College
	-	Keynote Address -- Bayard Rustin Director A Philip Randolph Inst.
	-	Question and Answer Period
9:30 - Until	-	'Get Acquainted Reception' Paschal's Executive Suite

FRIDAY, JULY 28

8:00 a. m.	-	Breakfast -- College Dining Hall
9:00 - 10:00	-	SECOND SESSION
	-	"Kinds of Local Government" -- Samuel DuBois Cook Professor Duke University
10:00 - 10:30	-	COFFEE BREAK
10:30 - 12:30	-	"Problems of Urban Government" -- John Field U. S. Conference of Mayors
12:30 - 1:30	-	LUNCH, College Dining Hall

FRIDAY, JULY 28 (Cont'd)

1:30 - 3:00 - THIRD SESSION, Kresge Hall

- "Practical Problems of Negro Councilmen"

Panel: Q. V. Williamson, Aldermatic Board, Atlanta
Henry Marsh, City Council, Richmond, Va.
John Stewart, City Council, Durham, N. C.
C. S. Hamilton, City Council, Augusta, Ga.

3:30 - 4:00 - COFFEE BREAK

4:00 - 5:30 - "Problem Areas of Urban Government"

Housing -- Robert Thompson
Assistant to the Regional Administrator
Dept. Housing & Urban Dev.

Crime -- John O. Boone
Director
Crime and Corrections, SRC

Education -- Jean Fairfax
NAACP Legal Defense & Educational Fund,

Welfare -- Marian Wright
Attorney at Law
Jackson, Miss.

6:30 - 8:00 - RECEPTION -- Paschal's Executive Suite

8:00 -10:00 - FOURTH SESSION

DINNER -- Paschal's Matador Room

Guest Speaker, Alfred M. Pelham
Assistant Vice-President for Finance
Wayne State University

SATURDAY, JULY 29

8:00 - - BREAKFAST, College Dining Hall

9:00 - 10:30 - FIFTH SESSION, Kresge Hall

"The City, The Law, The Poor"
Jack Greenberg
Director-Counsel
NAACP, Legal Defense & Educational Fun

10:30 - 11:30 - Open Discussion

11:30 ADJOURNMENT

File VEP - Labor Program

V.E.P. NEWS

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

SEPTEMBER 1968 VOL. 2, NO. 9 Southern Regional Council, Inc. 5 Forsyth St., N.W. Atlanta, Ga. 30303

OVER 3 MILLION NEGROES ON VOTING LISTS IN SOUTH

More than three million Negroes are on the registration rolls in the South for the 1968 presidential election, according to newly prepared figures of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council.

Figures compiled during the spring and summer of 1968 show a total Negro registration of 3,112,000 in 11 Southern states. This is an increase of 947,800 over Negro registration in the South for the 1964 presidential election.

Negro registration in the region now is 16.5 per cent of the total, as against 13.2 per cent in 1964.

White registration stands at 15,702,000 in the region, up from 14,264,000 in 1964. However, much of the increase in white registration has occurred in Texas, and is attributed in large part to registration of Mexican-Americans.

Sixty-two per cent of all voting-age black persons in the region and 78.1 per cent of all eligible whites are registered to vote. Only 43.3 per cent of the Negro voting age population was registered in 1964.

In Mississippi, where Negroes comprised the smallest percentage of voters in any Southern state four years ago, blacks now have greater voting strength than in any of the other 10 states. The ratio of Negro-to-white voters has climbed from 5.2 per cent to 26.6 per cent. Only 6.7 per cent of voting age Negroes was registered in 1964, compared with 59.4 per cent today.

In South Carolina, the Negro registration figure has been brought back to 189,000—the same number who were registered when statewide re-registration began a little over a year ago. White registration, on the other hand, has dropped by 143,000 to 587,000.

The Voter Education Project is publishing county-by-county registration figures, by race, for seven states. The four states not included are Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee and Virginia. Copies of the booklet may be obtained by writing VEP.

BLACK OFFICIALS TO MEET DEC. 11-14

The Rev. John Morris, former executive director of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity (ESCRU), has joined the Voter Education Project staff to coordinate a "Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials" planned in Atlanta Dec. 11-14.

Morris is in charge of planning the program and making arrangements for some 225 Southern Negro officeholders expected at the conference at the Dinkler Hotel. The Southwide conference will be similar to VEP's Louisiana and Mississippi institutes for black elected officials. Negro elected officials across the South will be invited.

In a preliminary invitation to Negro officeholders Oct. 3, VEP director Vernon Jordan said: "As an outgrowth of the Voter Education Project's various programs in recent years, this unprecedented meeting will focus on both general problems common to Negro elected officials, as well as on the specific duties of each category of public office."

(Continued on page 4)

VOTER REGISTRATION IN THE SOUTH

SPRING-SUMMER, 1968

	White VAP*	Negro VAP	White Registered	% White VAP Registered	Negro Registered	% Negro VAP Registered	% Negro
ALABAMA	1,353,058	481,320	1,117,000	82.5	273,000	56.7	19.6
ARKANSAS	850,643	192,626	640,000	75.2	130,000	67.5	16.9
FLORIDA	2,617,438	470,261	2,195,000	83.8	292,000	62.1	11.7
GEORGIA	1,797,062	612,910	1,524,000	84.7	344,000	56.1	18.4
LOUISIANA	1,289,216	514,589	1,133,000	87.9	305,000	59.3	21.2
MISSISSIPPI	748,266	422,256	691,000	92.4	251,000	59.4	26.6
N. CAROLINA	2,005,955	550,929	1,579,000	78.7	305,000	55.3	16.2
S. CAROLINA	895,147	371,873	587,000	65.6	189,000	50.8	24.5
TENNESSEE	1,779,018	313,873	1,448,000	81.3	228,000	72.6	13.6
TEXAS	4,884,765	649,512	3,532,000	72.3	540,000	83.1	13.2
VIRGINIA	1,876,167	436,720	1,256,000	67.0	255,000	58.4	16.9
TOTALS	20,096,735	5,016,100	15,702,000	78.1	3,112,000	62.0	16.5

*VAP = Voting Age Population

Corrects mathematical error in previous table.

1964: 13.2%

Voter Education Project

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, NW, Atlanta, Ga. 30303

DR. SAMUEL D. COOK
Chairman

PAUL ANTHONY
H. A. (HANK) BROWN
DR. C. G. GOMILLION
DR. VIVIAN W. HENDERSON
JESSE HILL
NORMAN HILL
FRANK SMITH
RUSSELL SUGARMON
DR. C. H. THOMAS, JR.
JOHN WHEELER

VERNON E. JORDAN, JR.
Director

2 STATES HOLD FINAL PRIMARIES

The last 1968 party primaries and primary runoffs in the South were held in Georgia and Louisiana in September.

The Georgia joint Democratic and Republican primary was Sept. 11, and a Democratic primary runoff was held Sept. 25. Louisiana's Democratic primary runoff was Sept. 28.

While 32 Negro candidates will be in the running in Georgia Nov. 5, only nine will have arrived there by overcoming opposition in the Sept. 11 primary. Four others who made it into the runoff Sept. 25 were defeated in the second election.

An Atlanta Negro attorney, Maynard H. Jackson Jr., polled 206,000 votes in a statewide race Sept. 11 against Sen. Herman E. Talmadge. Talmadge, who faces Republican opposition for the first time this fall, won by 488,000 votes.

Four candidates in Democratic primary races for the state House of Representatives—including incumbent John Hood of Atlanta—defeated their opponents. The Atlanta metropolitan area county of DeKalb will be represented by a Negro for the first time next winter with the election of the primary winner, who defeated a Negro opponent. The other winners were in Fulton County and in Chatham County. Chatham also has never had a Negro representative in the Legislature.

As a rule, Georgia's successful Negro candidates were in the largest metropolitan areas. The exception was Hancock County, where Negroes outnumber whites about 3-to-2. All three Negro candidates won, including an incumbent county commissioner, a new candidate for county commission and a young woman running for ordinary.

Other primary winners were candidates for county commission in Bibb and Chatham counties.

Thirty-one black candidates lost to whites and three others lost their races to Negroes. In Taliaferro and Sumter counties, Negroes failed to get enough petition signatures to get their names on the ballot. A black candidate for sheriff in Sumter County was forced to move to another city because of harassing phone calls to his pregnant wife.

The only Negro running in Louisiana's Democratic primary runoff Sept. 28 received 12,000 white votes—enough combined with black votes to make him the first Negro nominee to the East Baton Rouge Parish council.

A recount showed that a black candidate for the Jackson Parish school board did not receive enough votes to get into a runoff.

DIRECTOR'S DIRECT LINE

'68 Results Could Depend On Black Vote

As reported elsewhere in this issue of V. E. P. News, more than three million Negroes in the South are registered to vote in next month's presidential election. This is 16½ per cent of the total registration in the region, or about one out of every six voters in the South.

At a glance 16½ per cent might not sound like a politically influential force. But given the vast uncertainties of the 1968 election formula, this one-sixth might very well decide how the South's 128 electoral votes are cast.

There are ample recent historical grounds for saying this. In 1964, the Negro share of the South's vote was even smaller than it is this year. Four years ago, black registration was only 13.2 per cent of the regional total. Yet a 1964 study by the Southern Regional Council found that the Negro vote in the presidential election tipped four states into the Johnson column. These states were Arkansas, Florida, Tennessee, and Virginia. One other state, North Carolina, might have gone to Goldwater by a narrow margin if it had not been for the Democratic ballots cast by Negro voters.

It is even more probable that the Negro vote, now nearly one million stronger in the South, can be the balance of power in 1968. This year instead of two major candidates for President there are three. There will be an even closer division of the white vote. Each of the major candidates—Mr. Nixon, Mr. Wallace, and Mr. Humphrey—can claim (on grounds that we will not take the time to discuss here) a sizeable white following in most of the 11 Southern states. It is reasonable to assume, therefore, that Negro voters could very well decide the issue in a half-dozen or so Southern states.

Much of this hinges, of course, on how well Negroes turn out Nov. 5. To be sure, black turn-outs in some of the primaries this summer were disappointing. This was true in Georgia, South Carolina, and several other states.

As we have said several times before in this space, registration is but one step in becoming involved in the political process. Important as it is, registration alone stands for very little. Registration must be followed by a pattern of voting in each and every election. Indeed, many states require (in theory, at least) regular voting by removing the names of non-voters from registration lists.

To be sure, Negroes are at a marked disadvantage in getting voters to the polls. Many community organizations across the South have told us that they do not have the money and the means to get people to the voting places. This is, of course, but one more example of the discriminatory political and social tax that Negroes in the South are forced to pay because they are severely disadvantaged economically.

Unfortunately the Voter Education Project cannot supply funds for get-out-the-vote programs. We have had many requests for such assistance. We are bound to say, always, that we are not permitted to use our funds to support get-out-the-vote efforts.

Organizationally, however, Negroes can take more effective steps now to increase voter turn-outs. This is a subject about which more will be said in the future. For the moment, however, community leaders would do well to get the VEP booklet, "How To Conduct a Registration Campaign," and use the same outline for setting up a get-out-the-vote program. If you'll write us, we'll be happy to send you a copy of the booklet.—VERNON E. JORDAN JR.

MORE THAN 100 BLACK CANDIDATES NOV. 5

BY JANET WELLS

The names of at least 113 black candidates will be on the ballots in 11 Southern states Nov. 5. And if a suit filed by the National Democratic Party of Alabama in federal court is successful, the number of black candidates will increase substantially with the addition of 91 names to that state's ballots.

Not counting the NDPA candidates, the Negroes running for office include 41 candidates for state house of representatives, nine for state senates, and three independents running for the U. S. House of Representatives.

Ten Negroes who survived the May 7 Alabama primary will be running Nov. 5. They include three candidates for precinct constable in Jefferson County; one for board of revenue, two for justice of the peace and one for school board in Macon County; one for school board in Bullock County; one for constable in Lauderdale County, and one for justice of the peace in Pike County.

Ninety-one persons, including candidates for presidential elector and for U.S. House of Representatives from each of Alabama's eight congressional districts, are seeking to get their names on the general election ballot under the label of the NDPA. Secretary of State Mabel Amos has refused to certify all but two of the state level candidates and a number of others on the local level.

A decision on whether NDPA candidates' names would be on the ballot was expected by Oct 11. The case was heard Sept. 30 by a three-judge panel in the U.S. District Court in Montgomery.

NDPA candidates are seeking local offices in 17 counties, and one is running for state house of representatives from Madison County. No one is sure how many of the 91 candidates are white, but probably about 15 are.

In Georgia, 32 Negro candidates—most of them for the state Legislature and several of them opposing other Negroes —will be on the ballot Nov. 5.

There are 18 black candidates for the State House of Representatives. Two are from Augusta, one from Columbus, one from Savannah and the rest from Atlanta.

Three of the five black candidates for the state Senate are seeking the same Fulton County seat. Incumbent Sen. Horace Ward of Atlanta is running unopposed, and a Negro attorney from Macon is running against a white Republican.

There are two Negroes running for county commission in Chatham County and in Hancock County and one each in Bibb and Muscogee counties. Hancock also has a candidate for ordinary. Other candidates throughout the state are independents running for coroner in Baker and Clay counties in southwest Georgia.

In Virginia, three Negroes are running as independents for the U.S. Congress.

The Rev. J. Cornelius Fauntleroy of Newport News is running against incumbent Rep. Thomas N. Downing in the First District. S. W. Tucker of Emporia is running his third consecutive race against Fourth District Rep. Watkins M. Abbitt.

Mrs. Ruth Harvey Charity is opposing two white males for the Fifth District seat held by retiring Congressman William M. Tuck.

Fourteen black candidates in Tennessee's four major cities are running for office in the general election. All except two candidates for constable in Knoxville are seeking seats in the state Legislature.

In Nashville, where there are also two Negro candidates for the state House, a black independent has filed to run against the Negro Democratic nominee for the Senate. Another Negro independent is running against a Negro Democrat for a Memphis House seat.

There are two other candidates for the House and one for the Senate from Memphis, two for the House from Knoxville and one for the House from Chattanooga.

Fourteen Negroes are running in the Arkansas general and city elections.

The five black candidates for the state House of Representatives include two from Little Rock and one each from Forrest City, Marvell and Dermott. There are four candidates for justice of the peace in Pulaski County and one in Crittenden County. In Pine Bluff two Negroes are running as independents for the board of aldermen, and in Helena's Nov. 5 non-partisan city election, there also are two black candidates for aldermen.

In Texas, five Negroes, including three incumbents, are running for the state Legislature.

Two of the incumbents, State Sen. Barbara Jordan and Rep. Curtis Graves, both of Houston, are unopposed. State Rep. Zan W. Holmes, elected June 18 to fill the unexpired term of the late Joe Lockridge, faces Republican opposition.

A Negro Republican from Houston and one from Dallas are seeking state House seats.

Three Negro Democrats are running against white Republicans for the Florida House of Representatives from Dade, Broward and Palm Beach counties. Other Negro candidates are running for county commission in Dade County, county prosecutor in Broward County and constable in Duval County.

At least nine black candidates are running in North Carolina.

A Greensboro attorney and a minister from Winston-Salem are seeking state House seats. Winston-Salem (Forsyth County) also has a black candidate for state district judge and for the school board.

There are two Negro candidates for county commission and one for school board in Durham County. There also are black candidates for school board in Guilford and Vance counties.

Ten Negroes will be seeking office in Louisiana Nov. 5. They include a candidate for parish council in East Baton Rouge Parish, two candidates for school board in Madison Parish and one for school board in West Feliciana Parish. The Negro incumbent town marshal of Patterson is running for re-election.

Due to a court order for reapportionment of East Carroll Parish, the primary election there was postponed until Nov. 5. Running in that election will be two primary candidates for school board, in addition to two incumbent Negro police jurors and one black member of the school board who must be re-elected from the parish at large.

Negroes in four South Carolina counties are candidates for local offices.

In Beaufort County there are three black candidates for county council, two for school board and two for magistrate, A Negro is running for county council in Fairifeld County, for school board in Newberry County and for coroner in Florence County.

Although no black candidates won primaries in Mississippi June 4, Negroes in a number of counties were expected to file nominating petitions by the Oct. 6 deadline for county school board posts. September 26 was the deadline for filing to run for county election commission, made an elective office for the first time by a new Mississippi law. Elections for both offices will be Nov. 5.

The Reverend John Morris

SOUTHWIDE MEET

(Continued from page 1)

A planning session for the conference was held in Atlanta Sept. 28. Participating were Nils R. Douglas of New Orleans, chairman of the Louisiana Voter Education Project; Dr. Vivian Henderson, president of Clark College and a member of the VEP's advisory committee; Mrs. Taunya L. Banks of Jackson, Miss., director of the Mississippi Center for Black Elected Officials, a VEP project; Mississippi state Rep. Robert Clark; Richmond, Va., City Councilman Henry Marsh; Dr. Samuel Cook of Duke University, chairman of the VEP's advisory committee; James Felder, director of the South Carolina VEP; Georgia state Sen. Horace Ward; Michael Chanin, director of Clark College's Southern Center for Studies in Public Policy, and Georgia state Rep. Julian Bond, former research associate with the VEP.

All attended except Rep. Bond, who was out of town and submitted his suggestions in a letter.

Born in Brunswick, Ga., Morris was graduated from Columbia University and received his bachelor of divinity degree from Virginia Theological Seminary in 1954. From his ordination as an Episcopal priest in 1954 until 1958, he was vicar of a church in Dillon, S.C.

In 1957 he was an editor of "South Carolinians Speak," a book appealing for an end to resistance to racial change in that state.

A founder of ESCRU, Morris served as its executive director in Atlanta from 1958 until 1967.

Last January Morris received ESCRU's Bishop Lichtenberger Human Rights Award. He is married and has four children.

OVER 500 ATTEND SCVEP MEETING

More than 500 representatives of South Carolina county voter registration projects met in Orangeburg Sept. 21 to discuss getting out the Negro vote in November. They heard Georgia state Rep. Julian Bond call for racial solidarity in voting.

Bond delivered the main address at the one-day meeting sponsored by the South Carolina Voter Education Project. Titled "The Negro in the Mainstream of Politics," the conference was held at South Carolina State College.

Bond was head of the loyalist delegation which replaced half of the regular Georgia delegation at the Democratic convention in August. During the summer he worked for VEP as a research associate.

"Racial self-interest, racial consciousness and racial solidarity must always be paramount in the deeds and words of the black political animal," Bond told the group, which also included more than 200 students.

"If self-interest is forgotten, then organized racism will continue to dominate and frustrate the best of organized political actions of any group of black people and will leave them powerless and defenseless," he said.

Forty counties were represented at the conference. Registration was 285 for the morning session and reached 553 by afternoon.

The purpose and main emphasis of the program was to encourage local projects to work for a large turnout of Negro voters Nov. 5.

Participants in panel discussions included three black delegates to the Democratic convention from South Carolina and representatives of the Democratic and Republican parties speaking on behalf of their national candidates. A representative of the American Independent Party and candidate George Wallace was invited but did not attend.

The convention adopted four resolutions. The first declared that the federal investigation of the violence at South Carolina State last spring, when three students were killed by police, was not satisfactory.

Other resolutions expressed dissatisfaction with South Carolina's abuse of the freedom-of-choice plan of desegregation; called for all major state and national candidates to give their definitions of "law and order," and called for the state's voting age to be lowered from 21 to 18.

V.E.P. News Vol. 2 No. 9
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Address Correction Requested)

October 15, 1968

Mr. Vernon E. Jordan, Jr.
Voter Education Project
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Sir:

I have frequently heard that a new broom sweeps clean. But a new carpet? What's to be expected? Just a little more cover-up of the region's problems, perhaps.

As for me, I'll be sweeping something under an ordinary rug in Owensboro, Kentucky on Thursday. My loss and my regrets;

Best wishes to all and sundry.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Kathy

The V.E.P. Intern News

A PUBLICATION OF THE VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT SUMMER INTERN PROGRAM

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 FORSYTH ST., N.W.
ATLANTA, GA. 30303

VOL. II -- No. 2 July 1969

THE STOUFFER RETREAT

Sandra Philpot

* * * * *

At the Second Annual Stouffer Scholars' Retreat at Quail Roost, Durham, North Carolina, four college students participated in a panel discussion on "The College Scene Today." The four students were Calvin Rogers, North Carolina Central University, Durham, North Carolina; Edith Ervin, Talladega College, Talladega, Alabama; Sandra Green, 69 Graduate of Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.; and Sandra Philpot, Bennett College, Greensboro, North Carolina. The three sister members of the panel are VEP summer interns.

The panelists gave a brief run-down of our institution in terms of the setup of the curriculum, problems we had been confronted with, ways and means of how we had attempted to solve them, and our views of the colleges today.

Cont'd p. 2.

Reprint

The Summer Intern Director wrote a letter recently to Marvin Wall, Director of Research, informing him of the program's progress.

Eugene McLemore

Dear Marvin:

We can take great pride in the dedication and skills of the students selected for the Summer Intern Program. This program has definitely established itself as a vital part of the Voter Education Project. After observing the interns for the past six weeks, I have no doubt as to their concern and worth to the communities in which they have been assigned.

For the most part, each intern is living up to the basic philosophy which the program espouses. That is, they are actually becoming a part of the communities in the true sense of the word. In more specific terms, this means that they are attending church, organizing youth leagues, and in some areas teaching black history classes.

Of course, some are experiencing the many frustrations and anxities which characterize voter

Cont'd p. 2.

Stouffer Scholars' Retreat

All panelists except Sandra Green attend predominantly black, but white oriented liberal arts colleges. The education students have been receiving at these institutions, according to the panelists, has not been geared toward adequately preparing black students to help solve the problems of the black community. We agreed that just setting up a Black Studies Program on campus was not enough. The entire curriculum needs to be revamped in order for black students to get the most of their college education.

Due to the fact that Sandra Green graduated from a predominantly white liberal arts college, she has had to deal with situations that many of the Stouffer Scholars had faced or would face in their predominantly southern white prep schools.

Campus violence, a part of the college scene today, was dealt with by the panelist from Bennett. The one campus used as an example was Duke University in Durham, from which the idea of Malcolm X Liberation University stemmed. The black students at Duke realized, after running against the brick wall of racism, that a counter institution, whose purpose would be to provide a framework within which black stu dents could receive an education relevant to the needs of the black community and the struggle for liberation, was necessary. Thus Malcolm X Liberation University will open in October, 1969 in Durham, North Carolina.

As stated in the purpose of Malcolm X Liberation University it will "develop a Black Ideology, crystalize and project positive self-awareness for black people, and create an educational process that builds and diseminates concepts, techniques and concrete skills to the black community."

Cont'd p. 3.

Eugene McLemore

registration drives. Doors have been slammed in their faces, some community meetings have produced only three or four people, some key project personnel have shown lack of genuine community concern, and, in many cases they have discovered that the "so-called" leaders are not leaders at all. Yet, their desire to see black people become politically effective in their communities have not been tarnished or impeded by these negative experiences.

An intern in North Carolina said that "for the first time in my life I am beginning to fully understand the problems confronting black people in this country. Prior to my intern assignment, it was easy for me to use high lofty phrases and generalize rhetoric and my expression of problems faced by the black community. Today, however, it is a different story and I hope to return home and be just as effective there as I have attempted to be here."

One intern was assigned to her home community; she thought that she had returned to a model community for voter registration. However, this assignment gave her the opportunity to know her community for the first time. She didn't have any idea that the black people in her community had so much fear and apathy toward voter registration and political participation. This caused considerable frustration, so much in fact, that she pondered with the idea of dropping out of the program. Of course, she did not and has become one of the most effective interns we have.

From North Carolina to Louisiana, VEP Summer Interns are "doing their thing": and in this instance, "doing their thing" means helping black people become politically potent. Having to canvass at 105° plus, attending nightly community meetings in various sections of a county is not an easy task.

Cont'd p. 3

Stouffer Scholars' Retreat

This, and other institutions with the same ideology is what black brothers and sisters need in order for us to receive a relevant education.

When asked by Brother Vernon Jordan, Jr., Director of the VEP, who was moderator of the panel, we gave our expressions about SDS, representation on boards of trustees and permissions. The general consensus of the panel was that there is no need for SDS trying to speak to the needs of black people and make decisions for black people, or with them. No coalitions should be formed with white liberals and groups such as SDS in our revolutionary struggle. Black people are quite capable of doing "our own thing."

In terms of representation on boards or communities that make decisions that affect student life, be it in the classroom, or on or off the campus.

# #

A SOLUTION

Utilize and synthesize to realize
THE PROBLEM: years of deception frustration castration vacillation mis-education forced integration social degradation brutal segregation racial exploitation intellectual masturbation
MUST LEAD TO postulation
on a new situation:
Liberation through Africanization
---Kerry Holman

Eugene McLemore

But these dedicated students have taken on the responsibility of working with and for communities across the South and they are doing it admiringly.

Sincerely,

Eugene McLemore
Director
Summer Intern Program

# #

HOW PROUD I AM-------
TO STUDENT INTERNS

How proud I am
How great I feel,
To know Student Interns
Are for real.

We are growing quick
We are growing fast,
And we are understanding
Blackness as a fundamental task.

Some of our naturals are thick
And some are thin,
But our love for Black people
Is as strong as a hurricane wind.

How proud I am
How great I feel
To know Brothers and Sisters,
Who are for real.

---Charles Whitaker, Jr.
Newberry County, S. C.

# #

A MESSAGE ON ALLEGIANCE

By

Tap Taplin

# # # #

Voter registration, citizenship education, and leadership training, the three objectives of the Voter Education Project are unquestionably means to better the welfare of black people within the existing power structures. As interns we have committed ourselves to these aims, but I think that it is important that we begin to make some distinctions. An important aspect of our job is to remind black elected officials that they represent black folk. They have nothing to gain by protecting the existing power structures when it does nothing to aid black folk. If a man has to take a stand in defense of his people, a stand that opposes the system then the job can be sacrificed. Black elected officials must recognize that it is only with black votes and limited liberal white strength that they have those offices.

This is not an unjust accusation, but a reaffirmation of our first commitment to the black people of the South. I think some black elected officials have shirked that commitment in defense of a "breakthrough." Recently a black judge was appointed by one of our Southern Governors. At the National Democratic Party Hearings on Reforms in that state, this judge refused to publicly testify to the discriminatory practices of that party in the state. This refusal was not because the judge did not recognize how unjust the Democratic Party was in Louisiana, but because he did not want to antagonize the Governor, who had just appointed him. It made no difference to him that all the black leaders who had pressured the Governor's office for this appointment were there testifying. This particular official should be reminded that he faces no dilemma.

His office exist for a black man because of pressure from other black men.

Last summer three black police jurors once had occasion to be called into consultation with a white judge, long known to be the political boss in that area directly before an important police jury vote. They should have nothing to be consulted about. Their only consultation should have been with the black constituency that they represented. At election time black elected officials have to answer to a black electorate, and no matter how many "consultations" those police jurors had with the white judge it will not keep them their jobs. Of course if it did then they should not want a seat on the police jury.

The only vested interest that black officials have is the welfare of black people. One black elected official told me that he could not be seen with a group of welfare demonstrators, all black, on the steps of the state capitol because it would damage his image. What image is he worried about? We have not reached the point of political sophistication where we can start to defend our image for white folks. It does not make a bit of difference how we appear before them. When election time comes around the only image they see is that of a black man.

As interns our own objectives should always classify as paramount the welfare of black folk. This would mean that we will not work to increase registration only to strengthen the lid of repression and oppression over black people. Mr. Jordan pointed out at the beginning of our program that we claimed to crave a "black experience," but I wish to remind him that the experience is not to sell our own commitments short. Black political participation is only valuable to us in the context of a political system that can benefit black folk. We are not out in the field working to create a class of officeholders who are nothing but white folk's political janitors.

Fellow interns we must serve as the conscience of these men who our people elect to represent us. When we see that an elected official, a leader, begins to adapt the values of the system, over the values of black folk, he must be brought back home. In a time when many of our people have decided to abandon efforts for even the tangible results of registration because they are affiliated with a repressive system, we cannot let the few scraps of evidence of success we do have appear tainted in any way. No, Mr. Jordan, we are not "just rhetoric" for nine months of the year either, but we will refuse to commit ourselves to black political participation in the South if that is to mean that black elected officials forget who they represent.

# #

WE TELL IT LIKE IT IS

Murdock Smith

. . .In Lee County, Arkansas.

It appears that the best thing that could happen here wo would be the creation of some issues over which the black people could get together and work together. At times I have been sorely tempted to call Atlanta and ask to be withdrawn for I felt that the money could be better spent elsewhere, but now I do believe that it is here in a place like Arkansas that the real battle will come. The white people here have been very 'smart', though I do not know whether it is intentional or not, they have given just enough to keep the black people from effectively organizing. In a situation such as it is in Mississippi, Alabama, or Louisiana, in my opinion, more readily handled

Cont'd p. 7

Pat Ware

. . . In Laurens, South Carolina

Our greatest difficulty seems to be convincing our people that it isn't senseless or useless to go to the polls and voice your choice. They cannot seem to understand that they can and must affect changes in their own community. Instead of getting together and forgetting personality differences, they seem to be compelled to continue to bicker among themselves. This difficulty to make the people see the need of organization and the need to accept the responsibility for their own destinies has caused me much anxiety. The need for citizenship classes for the people are apparent. Unfortunately, the people in this town have tended the civic meetings (at least the ones I attended) very sparingly. These meetings just don't seem to be their

Cont'd p. 7

Murdock Smith

for in such states the racial co-option has been and still is very strong and powerful and very apparent. In those states the black people know who their 'enemy' is and has a definite objective, while in a state such as Arkansas the lines are not as clear, it may be that the black people realize who their 'enemy' is, but it is more that they feel that time will bring change---but time is very rapidly running out, if not already totally gone. The people here cannot or will not get together and work together to gain their full rights, in all fields, this may be the result of many years of conditioning or resignation to the fact that the white people here do not want them to participate in political affairs. The greatest difficulty in beginning to solve the problem here is to assist in the realization that the black people must express a unified voice in all issues, a solid voting block which could effectively bring about their desires and demands. As to what could possibly change this situation I do not know, except a continuing effort through stressing the importance of working together.

Pat Ware

groove. Of course there are probably reasons for this I don't know about. Maybe and probably our communication techniques aren't very effective. There seems to be a trend in the black communities of many of the little towns of Laurens County towards prosperity. Too many of the people seem to have become complacent and to have accepted what they have as the zenith of achievement. Too often after knocking on the door of a relatively new, nicely furnished home we have been told "No, I'm not registered. It doesn't do a thing but stir up trouble, besides I'm doing just as well or better than a lot of people who are registered." What do you tell such a man? You stand dumbfounded for a couple of seconds because you know he has children who will or are already attending public schools and he pays property tax and all the other taxes for which he is content not to try to influence how they are spent.

# #

In political work, "quite often "caution becomes cowardice," indifference becomes complicity, pity becomes castration, and right without might becomes wrong.

# #

Edith Erwin - - - - Franklinton, North Carolina

Desegregation in the public schools has brought with it the usual problems. Parents complain that their children are all placed together, usually with a black teacher. On the buses, the black students oftentimes have to sit together, usually with a black teacher. One parent cited an example where her six year old daughter was made to sit in the back of the bus, but a teacher who was also on the bus. The child had been sitting where she pleased before that. In addition to the previously mentioned problems, there is also the problem of black principals being replaced by white ones.

Black students in one area, the Youngsville township, cited problems they have encountered. They have no representation in student government affairs, no participation in extra-curricular activities, and other minor problems. To try and counteract these problems, the students have formed a Black Student Organization in hopes of alleviating some of the same problems in September.

Edith Erwin

Measures are now being taken to negotiate matters with the school board. This meeting will probably take place around the latter part of August.

# # # #

KATHLEEN KNOX

Rock Hill, South Carolina

I have also become emotional a time or two when I see the small children and how they are oftentimes suffering. One home that I went to in the rural, about 10 miles on the outskirts of Rock Hill revealing the horrors of poverty, neglect and malnutrition working in full force, brought tears to my eyes. When we called at the house to pick up the mother , who is the head of the household of 4 children, she was ready and waiting. She asked us to excuse the appearance of her kitchen because she had not been at home all day. There were two girls, one seven weeks old and the other girl 18 months of age and two boys (ages: 8 and 10).

Upon entering the house there was a distinct odor which I realized in a few minutes was coming from the baby. The little baby was so small until I was afraid at first to handle her for fear of hurting her. Flies were all around the baby as she lay on the couch and when she attempted to cry, there was only

Cont'd p. 9.

LORRAINE TAYLOR

Grambling, Louisiana

I have been through a lot experiences this summer. I experienced seeing and hearing some things I've never seen nor heard before and I don't think I will ever see or hear again.

While canvassing one day I started a conversation with a middle aged lady. She told me that one day a White man wanted to get her attention, so he addressed her as "Nancy." She immediately replied by saying "My mother didn't name me Nancy and I do not wish to be referred to as Nancy. He changed that quick, then decided to answer his question.

One man wasn't going down to register until he found out a Negro was running for office. He said it would do no good to be a registered voter if some of our people couldn't run for office. He also said he knew full well there were many educated Blacks who could hold some of these offices and he feel they should be given a chance. This was an elderly man speaking.

Cont'd p. 9.

Kathleen Knox

a muffled sound---not the cry of a healthy baby. Her skin was and had a spotted appearance. The 18 month sister presented a picture of the other physical extreme. Her body was fat and puffy---I gathered from eating such things as cheese puffs which provided the 3 older children with a meal while I was there.

The baby began to cry and holding her was not the solution. I asked the oldest child if she might be hungry. He told me that she had not eaten since early that morning. That really got to me because I had learned from my mother---a pediatrics nurse---sometime ago that a baby that young should be fed every 4 hours. Why had this little girl who needed nourishment so badly suffered until 6:00 in the evening was the question which went continuously through my mind. I got up and went to the kitchen and prepared her a formula which she was gulping so fast until I was praying that she would not choke. The baby fell asleep and I spent the rest of my time playing with the other 3 children. The situation puzzled me! I realized that the situation was due to our social structure. Why does a black woman and mother have to spend all of her day working in a field with hardly any pay and have to neglect her children? In this situation, I then asked myself, "Does she have a choice?" I concluded that this young black lady due to the injustices found within our structure must try to provide for her family the best way that she can. However, these are the injustices that we as young people and leaders of tomorrow must not let stand.

Lorraine Taylor

I've witnessed grown men running and hiding so we wouldn't see them. When I look at all this and really think about it, I'm glad I was a part of all this or I should say I'm glad that I had a little to do with trying to improve the Black communities.

I went to a home where the people were putting up peas so they would have some type of food in the winter.

We went to pick up a lady on Sunday to take her down to the courthouse to register. She got in the car with a big bottle of pills in a bag. She said that the bottle of pills and two small bottles cost her forty-dollars.

It was for her grandson who had polio. She said if she have to pay forty-dollars for medicine what will they be able to eat. Her grandson only gets forty-dollars from the welfare.

While we were taking her down to register, we stopped at a drugstore in downtown Ruston. We checked the price of the medicine there and it was approximately twelve or thirteen dollars less than what she had paid for it.

Then we visited a home where a very elderly coupled lived. They grew many types of vegetables which a White man would buy.

We asked them would they go down and register. They said the white man told them they were too old to register.

We immediately changed that and took them down to register.

"ALL BECAUSE OF THE DOLLAR"

All because of the dollar, men lie, steal and kill and even you will do the same for a dollar.

All because of the dollar, there is hunger in the land and theres' hell in the eyes of the have nots who cannot get the dollar that is so much needed.

All because of the dollar, War is carried on; guns are made; blood runs like water; men cry like babies and bombs are dropped on high class animals.

All because of the dollar, teachers lie like hell; some make off the wall statements; students cheat and some buy the teacher. Plus some just don't give a damn;education is in a fix.

All because of the dollar, people commit suicide; folks take some kind of pill or drug; some drink alcohol while others sex themselves out of this world.

All because of the dollar, I hate you; you hate me; Blacks hate Whites; Whites hate Blacks and everybody hates somebody or dislikes them.

All because of the dollar, the White House is in a fix; The President is all mixed up and Congress sets back on their hindparts not giving a damn;oh yes! "they give a damn about taking all the poor folks money and leaving the rich alone."

All because of the dollar, Justice sold out to Injustice; Right fainted when Wrong stepped in; Hate ran Love out of business; Peace gave birth to world wars and man himself has become a thing that money controls.

All in all, we will see the dollar bring us to our destruction, and nobody cares about the disease that is eating the inside of America up. Oh! what a cancerous dollar. The dollar, the No. 1 killer in America.

--- Jesse Franklin
Wilson, North Carolina

MILLENNIUM ?

I've grown weary
Of hearing empty words
Of seeing wingless birds
Of feeling cold callous hands
Of being nothing to the world.

Sunrise!
Just a streak, signals another
False hope.

Sunset mingles with Darkness
The cold sets in
The path home becomes blurred
I can see very little besides nothing
Oh but how I feel
The piercing pain
Of putrid progress.

----Weldon Rougeau

Voter Education Project, 5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Vernon E. Jordan, Jr., Director

Weldon J. Rougeau, Field Director

Eugene McLemore, Director, Summer Intern Program

EV

T E S T I M O N Y

of

VERNON E. JORDAN, JR.

Director,

Voter Education Project,

Southern Regional Council, Inc.

- - -

B E F O R E T H E

Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights,

Committee on the Judiciary,

United States Senate

- - -

February 25, 1970

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the opportunity to appear here today. My name is Vernon E. Jordan Jr. For the past four years I have been Director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., whose offices are located in Atlanta, Georgia.

This will be among my last few public appearances in my present capacity, for at the end of this month I will depart my present job to become Executive Director of the United Negro College Fund, whose offices are in New York.

Since 1962, Mr. Chairman, the Voter Education Project has been giving small grants to various organizations, most of them Negro organizations, in eleven Southern states for the purpose of conducting voter registration drives in their localities. For the most part, these drives have been conducted among black people for the very good reason that most whites in the South are registered to vote, whereas Negro registration in the South has been abysmally low. Since 1962, Mr. Chairman, Negro registration in the South has more than doubled. This has been accomplished partly through the efforts of my organization, and partly because of the legislation we are here to discuss today: the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Before the Voting Rights Act was adopted less than one-third of the Negro voting-age population of the South was registered to vote. The exact figure was 33.1 per cent against a white registration of 73.2 per cent of the white voting-age population. In Alabama less than one-fourth of the voting-age Negroes were registered to vote when the Voting Rights Act was signed by President Johnson, and in Mississippi the figure was an incredibly low 8.3 per cent. In fact in November of 1963, Mr. Chairman, the Voter Education Project reluctantly discontinued the funding of local registration drives in Mississippi because all the money and effort expended by these drives could get only a handful of Negroes registered to vote, and the results thus were running dishearteningly behind the efforts.

Today 59.5 per cent of the black population is registered to vote in the seven states covered by the 1965 Act. There has been an increase of 897,000 Negroes registered to vote in these seven states. Nevertheless, black registration continues to run significantly behind white registration. White registration is 83.8 per cent in the seven states covered. The increase in white registration has been 1,058,000---or 161,000 more than the black increase. Let me quickly explain that when I speak of the eleven states covered, I am referring to the six states fully covered, and the state of North Carolina, which is covered to the extent of 39 counties. Let me also explain, just to clear up any misunderstandings, that I have used 1960 census figures on voting-age population, simply because these are the only official population figures available by race for the various political subdivisions of the South.

These 1960 figures grow more outdated every minute, of course, but they remain useful as guideposts to the various levels of white and black registration.

The remarkable growth of black political strength in the South since 1965 has been amply described in the course of the debate on extension of the '65 Act. I am reviewing that growth briefly today, because my organization has been so much a part of it, and because I feel that it is such an important development in the recent history of the South. Let me mention just one more statistic that is, like the others cited in this debate, the product of our organization: that is, the 540 black men and women who hold elected offices in the eleven Southern states. Many of these officials---indeed the largest number of them---hold offices in the states covered by the Act. I can assure you, in the strongest way I know how, that only a fraction of these officials could have been elected to office without the dramatic increases in black registration which have occurred over the last several years.

It is because of my first-hand knowledge of what has been accomplished under the 1965 Voting Rights Act, and it is because of my first-hand knowledge of how much more needs to be accomplished, that I have felt deeply and most earnestly that the 1965 Act should be extended. Indeed, I feel that the Act not only should be extended, but also should be strengthened and put to more effective use than it has been.

Now I am aware that the Administration proposal would continue some provisions of the 1965 Act and extend these provisions to the entire nation. For example, the Attorney General still would have the power to send federal examiners into the South to register voters, and would have the additional power to also send these federal examiners to other parts of the country. But one wonders how meaningful such a provision is when one looks at the number of counties designated for federal examiners even under the present Act. Under the present Act, only 64 of the 556 Southern counties covered have been designated for examiners. One wonders if the time has come to extend the coverage of the Act, when so little use has been made of the Act even in the area presently covered. Few Southern black people, only recently enfranchised by the 1965 Voting Rights Act, will take comfort in knowing that a county in Illinois or Indiana can be designated for federal examiners, when only two have been designated in South Carolina---and none in Virginia and North Carolina---under the current Act. As a footnote I might add that no county has been designated for federal examiners during the current Administration, which took office more than a year ago. I might also point out that the percentage of Negro registration remains abysmally low in many counties to which no examiners have been sent.

In short, one wonders how examiners and observers are going to be sent all over the country when not even enough can be assigned in the Deep South, where the need for such examiners has been well-established by overwhelming statistical and historical evidence.

But putting all that aside, there remains an important and crucial difference between the present Act and the Administration bill. The difference, of course, is the deletion of Section 5 of the present Act, and the substitution of a new section that would be far less effective.

Section 5 of the present law requires any state or political subdivision covered by the Act to submit any changes in election laws or procedures to the Attorney General for approval. This is an essential provision of the present Act. Without that provision, the states covered could nullify the gains in black registration simply by adopting election laws and procedures that would render black votes ineffective which is what some of the states and communities are trying to do anyway, as ably reported by the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights in their study, "Political Participation," published in May of 1968. If it had not been for Section 5 of the present Act, there is no telling to what extent the states and communities covered might have legislated and manipulated to continue their historical practice of excluding Negroes from the Southern political process.

The Administration proposal would remove the fragile 1965 wall of protection from around the thousands of newly registered Negro voters in the South. If the Attorney General had "reason to believe" that a state, county, city, or town were using discriminatory laws or procedures, he could go to court and try to get a restraining order. Notice that the state, county, city, or town involved would not have to submit its changes in election laws and procedures to the Justice Department. Rather, the Justice Department would have to seek out these changes. If the Attorney General---through intuition or hard information---felt that the changes were discriminatory, then he could, if he wished, file suit to prevent the use of these laws or procedures. A three-judge court would rule. At some date in the distant future, long after the new laws or procedures had been applied, and quite likely after several elections had been held, the three-judge court could find that the new procedures were indeed discriminatory and order them stopped.

How would the Attorney General find out if the state, county, city, or town had adopted a discriminatory new procedure? Merely reading the changes in the state election code would not be enough. Southern lawmakers, administrative officials, and party officials are adept at their efforts to deny the Negro the ballot. They have demonstrated their skill at evading and thwarting every effort to bring black people into the mainstream of Southern life.

Our last information at the Voter Education Project was that the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department has fewer than 100 lawyers to enforce all of the civil rights legislation on the books in all of the fifty states of the United States. This is, of course, an impossible task.

But if the task is impossible now, consider how much more impossible it would be if the Administration bill is passed. Changes in election laws and procedures would not be mailed in by the Attorney General of Mississippi. Neither would they be mailed in by the City Clerk of Selma, Alabama. They would not be submitted by the County Commission of Baker County, Georgia. Rather, the Justice Department, with its already small and overburdened staff, would have to seek out these discriminatory new procedures, investigate them, prepare a suit, and take them to court.

This is not merely additional work for an already understaffed division of the Justice Department; it is an open invitation to the states, cities, counties, and towns covered by the Voting Rights Act to change their laws and procedures at will. The more the changes, the more the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department will have to pursue the changes.

Already civil rights laws are being ignored and flaunted all over the South, particularly in remote rural areas. The theory was explicitedly stated by a white man to one of our field workers in Southwest Georgia last summer: "It will take the Justice Department a hundred years to get down to a little county like ours."

The Administration proposal is a clear signal to officials of the white South: "Go back to your old ways. Even the meager enforcement machinery that already was there is being taken away. You need no longer fear interference from Washington in your treatment of black people in your communities. You need no longer worry about blacks being elected to your city and county offices."

Mr. Chairman, for the last four years the Voter Education Project has helped finance 100 or so voter registration and citizenship education programs in eleven Southern states. Usually these are short programs lasting six or eight weeks. In exchange for our funding, we ask these programs to send us weekly reports. These reports, Mr. Chairman, provide some of the most fascinating and revealing reading as any to be found anywhere about what is going on in the South today. Many of these reports tell of harassment and intimidation of Negroes who fear that if they register to vote that they will be evicted from their farms or discharged from their jobs, or have their welfare checks cut off. Not even the present law and the present enforcement machinery can motivate thousands of Southern Negroes to overcome the fear and the apprehension ingrained by generations of white oppression, to go to the courthouse to register, and later to vote.

Consider the report we received last November from Humphreys County, which is located in the Mississippi Delta, and in which a civil rights worker, George Lee, was shot to death in the courthouse square attempting to register in 1955. In October of last year the project we supported in Humphreys County reported as follows: "People in this area still fear the courthouse and don't want to register because they feel they will lose their jobs, or will have to move off the plantation with no place to go, or their welfare, social security, etc., checks will be cut off because this has happened in the past." Later in October a field representative of the Voter Education Project visited Humphreys County. He found that only a few days prior to his visit the plantation owner "happened" to show up at the courthouse precisely at the same time some of his tenants were arriving to register to vote. The plantation owner, who holds an office in the county, told the tenants that they had a choice between registering to vote and returning to the plantation.

This was reported to the Justice Department. In November came another report from the Humphreys County project saying: "Justice Department sent FBI's into county last week to investigate. We have not gotten any results." We talked to the Humphreys County registration leaders a few days ago, and they had heard nothing further from the Justice Department.

I quote these reports to indicate the slowness and general ineffectiveness of the present enforcement machinery. How much slower and how much more ineffective will the machinery be when the provisions of the Act and the task facing the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department is spread, paper-thin across the nation? How much more reluctant will black people be to overcome their ingrained fears when the word gets back to the crossroads, bayous and ghettoes---as it gradually will---that Uncle Sam no longer will be looking over the shoulders of the Southern whites who control the election machinery of the region.

Already there are efforts to manipulate, gerrymander and baffle the black voters of the South. Predominantly black voting places suddenly are moved without notice on the eve of elections. Voters are shifted from one precinct to another without notification. District elections are changed to at-large elections so as to dilute the black vote. Political boundaries are redrawn, and elected offices are changed to appointive offices. Qualifying fees and other qualifications for seeking offices suddenly are changed in subtle ways designed to make it difficult for Negroes to run.

The same states that were the most efficient, determined and malicious in their efforts to keep black people off the registration rolls can be expected to be the most efficient, determined and malicious in their efforts to cancel out the growing black vote. Congress was mindful of this possibility when it put Section 5 into the Voting Rights Act. If there were those who felt that the states covered by the Act would repent and turn from their evil discriminatory traditions in five short years, then those people were overly optimistic and sadly mistaken.

Mr. Chairman, I am a life-long resident of one of the seven states covered by the Voting Rights Act. I am quite familiar with the atmosphere in my state and with the white supremacist attitudes of the politicians who tightly control local politics in my state, particularly in rural areas. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, my position as director of the Voter Education Project for the past four years has carried me into virtually every corner of the other six states. I have been in close contact with blacks at the grassroots level who are seeking to enter and use the political process in order to push for remedies to the injustices imposed on them at birth by a white-controlled society. I know---as well as any man in this room that Canton and Grenada and Selma and Sandersville and hundreds of other Southern communities stand poised and ready to eliminate the burgeoning black vote in their jurisdictions. The slightest flicker of a green light from Washington is all these white-dominated communities need. When they receive the signal, they will act!

More than mere politics is involved here. More than a few legislative seats and school board positions are at stake. In fact, the entire future of black people in the Deep South is at stake. I am sure I do not have to explain to this distinguished subcommittee that politics affect every aspect of our society. Politics determine whose roads get paved; whose garbage gets collected; who gets job opportunities and what kind; and who gets good schools and who doesn't. Indeed, more than one of the registration projects we have supported have told us in recent months that the level of black voter registration would influence whether or not schools in the community would be peacefully desegregated.

It is ironic, Mr. Chairman, to see states that have established international reputations for practicing discrimination complain that the 1965 Voting Rights Act discriminates against them. These states are under suspicion, and rightfully so. These states have been assigned special obligations toward their black citizens of voting age, and rightfully so. It is no great burden to require these states to inform the Attorney General of changes in their election laws and procedures. These states know why this requirement has been placed on them. These states know very well---as well as I do---why it needs to be continued. As Mrs. Taunya Banks, director of our Mississippi Center for Elected Officials, puts it: "It is inconceivable that Congress can actually believe that just five years under the Voting Rights Act can eliminate over 100 years of racial discrimination in the South."

Once before, Congress has said to Southern Negroes: "If you are wronged, and if your voting rights are abridged, take it to court." The Voting Rights Act was a recognition of the hollowness of that advice. Mrs. Banks, who is a lawyer, points out that the preparation of such cases can involve hundreds of hours. A small corps of lawyers, underpaid and overworked, already carries a heavy responsibility for pressing litigation on behalf of oppressed Southern Negroes. It is absurd to expect that they can take on the additional load of combating the hundreds of discriminatory changes that will be made in election laws and procedures if Section 5 is not extended in its present form.

When the attorney general of Mississippi appeared before the House Judiciary Committee last summer to ask that the Voting Rights Act not be extended, he made many interesting statements, according to the transcript. One was that Negroes "could go to the registrars of Mississippi and register themselves without fear." Mrs. Banks is among the thousands of Mississippi Negroes who would dispute that testimony, for she told us in a recent communication that she expects many Mississippi counties to require complete re-registration and she anticipates that "many blacks will become disfranchised, since many county and city registrars still insist on intimidating prospective black registrants." Let me just say, Mr. Chairman, that we could, if we wished, fill this room many times over with black people who could refute the testimony of the attorney general of Mississippi.

We live in a time, Mr. Chairman, when many young black people are advising other blacks to give up working for change through the American political system. I must confess that there are many times when I can see the point of their advice. We live in a time when high governmental officials are insisting that everyone must work through the existing system. One wonders if these officials realize how insensitive that advice must sound at times to people who must risk their jobs, their livelihood and their well-being even to get their names on the list of registered voters.

When former President Johnson presented the Voting Rights Act to Congress in March of 1965, he said with determination: "We shall overcome." But five years later the black voter in the South faces hostile Southern white faces just as resourceful and recalcitrant now as they were then. The new black voter, still substantially outnumbered by whites, must rely on help from Washington to preserve the tenuous gains that have been made. I personally believe, based on my experience and the facts presented here, that the proposal that passed the House will seriously, perhaps tragically, undermine the federal support. I hope the Senate will restore Section 5 to its present form and do nothing that would weaken the present Voting Rights Act. Unless the Senate does so, I am convinced that the political process in the South will suffer a grievous setback.

###

THE ATLANTA ELECTIONS OF 1969

by Charles S. Rooks

The Voter Education Project, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

THE ATLANTA ELECTIONS OF 1969

by

Charles S. Rooks

The Voter Education Project, Inc.

An organization assisting minority groups participating in the southern political process

Atlanta, Georgia

June, 1970

Published by

The Voter Education Project, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Copyright, 1970, by VEP
Price: $1.00

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The author wishes to acknowledge the invaluable contribution to this study which was made by Misses Pat Madsen and Emma Jane Neelley. Their patient computation of voting returns provided the basis for the entire report. Not only did they make it possible for this study to be done without the aid of a computer, but the charm and good humor which they displayed in their work made the author thankful at times that a computer was not available.

Special appreciation is also due to Mrs. Janet Shortt, who typed this study, and to Miss Marge Manderson, who drew the graphs for it.

C.S.R.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

		Page
LIST OF TABLES		iii
LIST OF FIGURES		v
I.	The Atlanta Elections of 1969: Introduction	1
II.	The Mayoralty Election: October 7	6
III.	The Mayoralty Election: October 21 Run-Off	19
IV.	Voter Turnout in Mayoralty Elections: October 7 and October 21	25
V.	The Vice-Mayoralty Election: October 7	34
VI.	The Board of Aldermen Elections	41
VII.	The Board of Education Elections	52
VIII.	Bloc Voting and Racial Polarization in the 1969 Atlanta Elections	58
IX.	Conclusion	67

LIST OF TABLES

Table		Page
1	Comparison of Vote Received in Black Precincts by Massell and Tate, October 7, 1969	7
2	Proportion of the Vote Received by Leading Mayoralty Candidates in Black Precincts of Highest and Lowest Socio-Economic Rank, October 7, 1969 (in Percentages).	8
3	Comparison of Vote Received in Different Groups of White Precincts by Cook, Millican, and Massell, October 7, 1969	15
4	Proportion of the Vote Received by Leading Mayoralty Candidates in White Precincts of Highest and Lowest Socio-Economic Rank, October 7, 1969 (in Percentages)	16
5	Voting Support Received by Massell in White Precincts, October 7, 1969	22
6	Percentage of Registered Voters Casting Ballots in Mayoralty Elections, 1969 . .	27
7	Voter Turnout in Precincts of Highest and Lowest Socio-Economic Status in 1969 Mayoralty Election	29
8	Levels of Turnout Among Different Groups of Voters: Number of Precincts in Which Different Percentages of the Registered Voters Cast Ballots in Mayoralty Elections, 1969	32
9	Voting Support Received by Maynard Jackson From Different Groups of White Voters October 7, 1969	35
10	Inverse Relationship Between Areas of Strong Support for Maynard Jackson and Areas of Strong Support for Millican: Distribution of Precincts in Maynard Jackson's Highest and Lowest Quartiles for Millican and Distribution of Precints in Millican's Highest and Lowest Quartiles for Maynard Jackson	37

List of Tables - continued.

Table		Page
11	Levels of Turnout Among Different Groups of Voters in Aldermanic Elections: Percentages of Registered Voters in Each Group Who Cast Ballots in Different Types of Aldermanic Elections on October 7 and 21	48
12	Levels of Turnout Among Different Groups of Voters in Board of Education Elections: Percentages of Registered Voters in Each Group Who Cast Ballots in Different Types of Board of Education Elections on October 7 and 21	56
13	Voter Cohesion Among Blacks and Whites: Percentage of Vote Received by Candidate Who Was the Leading Vote-Getter Among Black and White Voters in Each Election	62
14	Percentage of Vote Given by Voters of One Racial Group to Candidates of the Other Racial Group	66

LIST OF FIGURES

Figure		Page
1	Precinct Map of Atlanta, Showing Different Categories of Voters (DeKalb County Omitted)	11
2	Proportion of the Vote Received by Leading Mayoralty Candidates from Different Groups of Voters, October 7, 1969 (in Percentages).	13
3	Proportion of the Vote Received by Leading Mayoralty Candidates from Different Groups of Voters, October 21, 1969 (in Percentages)	20
4	Proportion of the Vote Received From Different Groups of Voters by Massell on October 7 and 21 and by M. Jackson on October 7 (in Percentages).	39
5	Proportion of the Vote Received from Different Groups of Voters by Arrington, Dodson, I. Jackson, and Massell on October 21 and M. Jackson on October 7 (in Percentages).	45

I. THE ATLANTA ELECTIONS OF 1969:

INTRODUCTION

Significant changes occurred in Atlanta politics in 1969. The elections of that year may prove to be a turning point in the city's political history. What happened in 1969 was a major alteration in voting patterns and the emergence of a new "coalition" of voters. The mayor, the vice-mayor, and several members of the aldermanic and school boards were elected by a different group of voters from that which previously controlled city politics. The composition of this new group was predominantly black. Whether this new "coalition" stays together and extends its influence or whether different alliances are forged in the future, the events of 1969 signal the end of an era in Atlanta politics.

Since 1953, at least, Atlanta's mayors had been chosen by a coalition composed of virtually all black voters, most of the middle and upper-middle class whites who live on the northside of the city, and a minority of whites elsewhere. Aligned against this group of voters were most of the city's working-class whites, located mainly in the center and southside of the city, and a minority of other whites.*

---

*See the article by Jack Walker entitled, "Negro Voting in Atlanta: 1953-61" in the Winter, 1963, issue of Phylon.

Although black support was necessary for victory, the black voter was the junior partner when it came to selecting candidates. The dominant influence in the alliance was northside whites. These whites have been described as a group interested in "good government" and "civic progress" who generally follow the political cues of the city's business leaders.

The previously successful coalition of blacks and northside whites was shattered in 1969. Most whites, from all parts of the city, supported the losing mayoralty candidate. Almost all blacks, plus a minority of whites from all areas, supported the winner. Thus, upper-middle class whites and the city's traditional "power structure" lost their former position of influence in deciding city elections, while blacks greatly enhanced their influence. Working-class whites continued in their position on the losing side.

These changes in the relative importance of different groups of voters in the 1969 election resulted from a combination of factors. One was the break-up of the black-white coalition over the question of which candidate to support. This year black voters were not willing to support the choice of the white business elite. Rather than having only the usual choice between the favorite of northside whites and another candidate whose racial views made him anathema, black voters in 1969 had additional alternatives. For the first time there was a black candidate, and also there was a white candidate whose reputation was more liberal than other white candidates, past or present. Both of these candidates were more attractive to blacks than the candidate supported by their former northside allies.

A second factor, which made it possible for this break-up to produce the consequences which occurred, was the continuous growth of black voting strength in Atlanta. The proportion of blacks among the city's registered voters increased from about 29 per cent in 1961 to almost 41 per cent in 1969. This growth of black voting strength was due both to the increase in the proportion of Negroes in the total population, which rose from 38 per cent in 1960 to 49 per cent in 1969, and to an increase in the proportion of eligible blacks who are registered to vote.* Another factor, which will be examined later, is that black registrants in Atlanta tend to have a higher voter turnout than whites in mayoralty elections.

The variety of candidates available in 1969 gave Atlanta the opportunity to follow one of several trends exhibited in recent elections in other American cities. The seven names on the ballot included Sam Massell, a liberal Democrat; Horace Tate, a black educator; Rodney Cook, a moderate Republican; and Everett Millican, a conser-

---

*In 1962, approximately 44 per cent of eligible whites and 31 per cent of eligible blacks were registered in Fulton County. In 1968, the proportion of eligible voters registered was 71 per cent among whites and 63 per cent among blacks. Atlanta constitutes about four-fifths of the population of Fulton County.

vative Democrat whose campaign created for him the image of a "law and order" candidate. The eventual choice of a majority of the voters was Massell, who associated himself with the interests of blacks and attacked the city's "power structure." Moreover, the city elected Maynard Jackson, a young black, as vice-mayor over a well regarded white alderman, Milton Farris. The number of blacks on the Board of Aldermen was increased from one to five, and the number on the Board of Education rose from two to three.

This study is an effort to analyze this important election. It is designed to show how various groups of citizens voted and how the support of each candidate was composed. In order for the results of this examination to be properly understood, it is necessary at the outset to explain briefly how the study was done. Unless otherwise specified, all of the data was derived from Fulton County precincts in which 90 per cent or more of the registered voters were either black or white. The seven precincts in DeKalb County are not included, except in city-wide totals, because the racial composition of these precincts individually was not available. Thus, for example, the "white vote" was determined by examining all the precincts in Fulton County which are 90 per cent or more white in composition. There is, of course, a slight error built into this calculation, since an entire precinct is labelled black or white even though it may include a few voters of the opposite race, but this does not have a serious effect on the findings. In fact, the composition of over two-thirds of the precincts being used is between 98.5 and 100 per cent black or white.

Subcategories of black or white voters will be explained as they are introduced, but they will always be derived from the type of precincts just described. Because of the residential patterns in Atlanta and the demarcation of precinct boundaries, most of the city's voters are included by this mode of analysis -- 116 of 149 precincts are covered, and these precincts included 174,612 of the 215,026 registered voters.

II. THE MAYORALTY ELECTION

OCTOBER 7

The introductory statements about the 1969 vote in Atlanta refer to the results of the run-off election held October 21. A more complex pattern of voting was exhibited in the initial election October 7. With four major candidates competing, all voting groups were more divided in their candidate support in the first election.

The Black Vote

Although they demonstrated near unanimity in their vote in the run-off, black voters were far from united in their choice of candidates October 7. The black vote was closely split between Tate, the only black candidate, and Massell, a liberal white. Tate was supported by 49 per cent of the blacks, and Massell by 44.2 per cent. Most of the remaining votes went to Cook. It is estimated that between 44,000 and 45,000 blacks voted in this election.

There was some variation in the voting among black precincts, as Table 1 indicates. Although Tate was the front-runner in most individual precincts, just as in the overall black vote, there were a number of precincts in which Massell was the leading candidate. In precincts that were 90 per cent or more black, Tate led in 31, with a majority in 22 of these, and Massell in 14, with a majority in 7 of them.*

TABLE 1

COMPARISON OF VOTE RECEIVED IN BLACK PRECINCTS
BY MASSELL AND TATE, OCTOBER 7, 1969

	Percentage From All Blacks Combined	Number of Precincts at Different Levels of Support
		Under 35 %	35-39.9 %	40-44.9 %	45-49.9 %	50-54.9 %	55-59.9 %	60% and Over
Massell	44.2	4	10	11	13	3	4	-
Tate	49.0	1	7	6	9	12	8	2

There may be some underlying factors which explain this variation, but there is no apparent pattern to it. For example, when precincts of high and low socio-economic status within the black community are compared, as in Table 2, there is little difference in their voting behavior.*

*Atlanta's precincts vary considerably in size. Nevertheless, references will be made to the results in individual precincts for two major reasons. First, this will provide some indication of the range of behavior that is lumped together into an overall average for a large number of precincts. Second, this procedure may suggest the presence of voting patterns that require further explanation. For example, some of the variation among voters might be accounted for by differences in socio-economic status. The precinct analysis will be presented, however, even when the variation cannot be explained by the present study. It is hoped that this might be helpful to those who are making further investigations.

TABLE 2

PROPORTION OF THE VOTE RECEIVED BY LEADING MAYORALTY CANDIDATES IN BLACK PRECINCTS OF HIGHEST AND LOWEST SOCIO-ECONOMIC RANK, OCTOBER 7, 1969 (IN PERCENTAGES)

High Status Precincts	Massell	Tate	Cook	Millican	Turnout
7N	47.4	48.1	3.5	0.3	58.5
3J	44.6	49.9	4.9	0.1	64.5
3R	33.1	61.1	5.0	0.2	54.7
7D	56.4	37.9	4.9	0.3	59.8
3B	55.6	39.4	4.2	0.4	60.7
TOTAL	47.1	47.5	4.5	0.2	60.2
Low Status Precincts
1K	38.6	53.6	7.2	0.3	33.1
3M	34.8	55.6	7.6	0.4	47.4
6L	49.5	39.9	8.7	0.6	42.6
6J	55.0	36.9	5.9	0.7	50.0
9K	42.9	52.0	3.7	0.6	42.1
TOTAL	45.7	45.9	6.6	0.6	43.6

The percentages for each precinct do not total 100 because there were 3 other candidates who received a small proportion of the vote.

*To make this comparison, census tracts which were 90 per cent or more black both in 1960 and 1969 were rank ordered on each of the following measurements: family income, years of schooling completed, and nature of male employment. Five precincts which were located in tracts nearest the top and five precincts in tracts nearest the bottom on all three measurements were selected. Because some tracts ranked differently on each measurement and because census tract boundaries and precinct boundaries did not always adequately coincide, this selection of precincts cannot be taken absolutely as the five highest-ranking and the five lowest-ranking black precincts. Such a designation would be very near correct, however. It should also be noted that this is a ranking of black census tracts, and a precinct given high status rank in this comparison would not occupy a high ranking if white tracts were included in the scale.

The combined vote in five of the highest-ranking black precincts was: Tate, 47.5 per cent; Massell, 47.1 per cent; and Cook, 4.5 per cent. The distribution in five of the lowest-ranking precincts averaged together was: Tate, 45.9 per cent; Massell, 45.7 per cent; and Cook, 6.6 per cent. Moreover, the precincts within each category exhibited a wide variation in the amount of support given to the leading candidates.

The White Vote

It is estimated that between 55,000 and 56,000 whites voted October 7. Among these voters, the leading candidate was Cook, who received 44.8 per cent of their votes at that time. Millican ran second with 31.1 per cent, and Massell polled 21.6 per cent. Tate received almost no white support, picking up less than 2.0 per cent of their votes.

When white voters are separated into different groups and examined, significant variations in the white support of candidates are visible. For this study, white voters were divided into three categories: "Northside" whites, "Southside" whites, and "Other" whites. This classification is based primarily on income, education, and occupational characteristics although, as some of the names suggest, there is much coincidence between socio-economic status and geographical locations in the city.* Figure 1 shows the location of these precincts in the city.

---

*Census tracts that were 90 per cent or more white, both in 1960 and 1969, were rank-ordered in the same way as described earlier for the black census tracts. The rank of the precincts within each category is described in the text.

Northside whites are those in precincts in the northern parts of the city. All of these precincts rank in the top quarter of the city's white precincts in each of the following measurements: family income, years of education and "high level" employment, e.g., professional, managerial, technical, and proprietary occupations.

Southside whites are those in precincts located mainly in the southeastern and central sections of the city. These precincts rank in the lower half of the city's white precincts in white collar employment and education, and most of them are in the lower half in terms of family income.

Other whites are those in the remaining white precincts, which are largely located in the southwestern and near northeastern parts of the city. They rank between the other two categories in socio-economic terms; most of them are in the upper half of the city's white precincts in terms of education and white collar employment, but not so high as the Northside group in years of education and proportion of high-level employment.

In very rough terms, these three categories might be labelled upper-middle-class, middle-class, and working-class groups.* Ob-

---

*A more precise and extensive classification of voters was not attempted since the author doubted the validity of an exact ranking of all precincts on the basis of data that was fully available only in a nine-year-old census report. Although precincts near the top and bottom of the socio-economic scale can be identified with some confidence, the great bulk of precincts which fall between these two groups can only be roughly categorized. The construction of a classification on the basis of a few sample precincts which are alleged to be of a particular status was rejected, because such precincts could not be tested to see if in fact they truly represented what they were supposed to.

Figure 1:
Precinct Map of Atlanta, Showing Different Categories of Voters (DeKalb County Omitted)

viously, every voter within a precinct will not match the general socio-economic status of the entire precinct, but presumably most voters will fit the classification into which his precinct falls.

As Figure 2 indicates, among Northside whites, Cook ran far ahead of the other candidates. He was supported by 52.2 per cent of these voters, while Millican and Massell each received slightly less than half this number of votes. Southside whites, on the other hand, favored Millican, giving him 41.4 per cent of their votes. Among these voters, Cook's support dropped to about 37.4 per cent and Massell's to 17.8 per cent. In the Other category, Cook had a slight lead over Millican, 38.5 per cent to 35.3 per cent, and Massell received about the same amount of support as in the Northside.

Cook, then, ran well among all white groups, but he did considerably better among the upper-middle-class voters of the Northside than among the working-class voters of the Southside. In contrast, Millican's heaviest support was concentrated more in the Southside, and he did not fare so well in the Northside. Massell ran third among all white groups, doing somewhat worse in the Southside than elsewhere.

While it is instructive to combine the votes from a large number of precincts into overall averages, as was done above for the three categories of white voters, this procedure may also conceal certain information about the pattern of voting. For example, there may be instances where a candidate's support was

Figure 2: Proportion of the Vote Received by Leading Mayoralty Candidates from Different Groups of Voters, October 7, 1969 (in Percentages).

The percentages do not total 100, because there were three other candidates who received a small proportion of the vote. This classification includes only precincts in which the registration is 90 per cent or more black or white. Therefore, the number of voters in each category in this chart may not accurately reflect the total number of voters who would fit this classification, because some of them are located in precincts which are too racially mixed to be included here.

much higher or lower than his overall average, but these high and low points may be balanced out in the averaging. Table 3, therefore, is designed to give some indication of the range of support each candidate received. It is based on the 71 precincts which are 90 per cent or more white.

There were no precincts in which Cook's support dropped very low; he received less than 30 per cent in only 1 precinct, and there it was 29.6 per cent. He received over 50 per cent in 17 precincts. In the Northside, his support fell below 40 per cent only once, and all but 2 of his strongest precincts, in which he polled a majority, were in this area, including 4 which gave him over 60 per cent of their ballots.

Millican's support exhibited greater variation. In 2 precincts, both on the Southside, he received a majority of the vote, while in 9 precincts, all on the Northside, he received less than 20 per cent. There were only 3 Northside precincts which gave him as much as 30 per cent of their vote. On the other hand, only 2 precincts on the Southside and only 3 in the Other category dropped below 30 per cent in their support for Millican.

Massell's white support exceeded 30 per cent in only 6 precincts. In 2 of these, however, he received over 40 per cent of the votes; these 2 precincts, 6C and 8C, both have relatively large numbers of Jewish voters.* On the Southside, he polled less

---

*No precise data on the number of Jewish residents in the city's various precincts are available, but informed observers say that these two precincts have the heaviest concentrations. It should be noted, however, that the proportion of Jewish voters in these precincts is not high enough to say that the election results in these precincts is the same as "the Jewish vote."

than 20 per cent of the votes in 21 of 27 precincts.

TABLE 3

COMPARISON OF VOTE RECEIVED IN DIFFERENT GROUPS OF WHITE PRECINCTS BY COOK, MILLICAN, AND MASSELL OCTOBER 7, 1969

	Percentage From All Precincts in Category Combined	Number of Precincts at Different Levels of Support
		Under 20%	20-29.9%	30-39.9%	40-49.9%	Over 50%
Northside
Cook	52.2	-	-	1	10	15
Millican	23.3	9	14	3	-	-
Massell	22.8	8	15	1	2	-
Southside
Cook	37.4	-	-	21	5	1
Millican	41.4	-	2	8	15	2
Massell	17.8	21	5	1	-	-
Other
Cook	38.5	-	1	11	5	1
Millican	35.3	-	3	11	4	-
Massell	22.8	7	9	2	-	-
Total White
Cook	44.8	-	1	33	20	17
Millican	31.1	9	19	22	19	2
Massell	21.6	36	29	4	2	-

Although it was suggested above that the voting in the Northside and Southside might serve as rough indicators of the behavior of voters of high and low socio-economic status, respectively, a somewhat more refined comparison of such voters can be found in Table 4. This table lists five precincts at the top, and five at the bottom of the socio-economic scale of white precincts.*

TABLE 4

PROPORTION OF THE VOTE RECEIVED BY LEADING MAYORALTY CANDIDATES IN WHITE PRECINCTS OF HIGHEST AND LOWEST SOCIO-ECONOMIC RANK, OCTOBER 7, 1969 (IN PERCENTAGES)

High Status Precincts	Massell	Tate	Cook	Millican	Turnout
8G	25.0	0.5	57.2	16.9	58.3
8L	12.5	0.4	63.1	24.0	59.2
8I	20.3	1.1	59.0	19.5	61.1
8M	26.4	1.1	52.6	19.5	58.5
8N	14.6	0.1	62.4	22.6	60.2
TOTAL	19.7	0.7	58.9	20.5	59.7
Low Status Precincts
1D	18.6	1.4	37.5	40.0	32.4
6D	22.3	-	31.3	42.5	36.6
7S	19.7	3.1	36.7	39.1	36.5
9D	27.6	1.8	30.0	38.9	38.4
4B	19.5	1.9	30.4	44.9	42.1
TOTAL	21.7	1.8	33.3	40.8	37.1

The percentages for each precinct do not total 100, because there were three other candidates who received a small proportion of the vote.

In effect, this selection represents the highest ranking precincts of the Northside and the lowest ranking precincts of the Southside. Voters in the precincts with the highest socio-economic status were even stronger in their support for Cook than were Northside whites generally. Among these voters, Cook received 59 per cent of the vote, and Millican and Massell maintained approximately the same relationship to one another, although, of course, at a lower level.

*These precincts were selected by the same method described in the footnote on page 8 and thus are subject to the same qualifications.

Voters in the precincts with lowest status, however, did not display an amplification of the general Southside trends. Millican's percentage averaged about the same in these precincts and in the Southside as a whole. Massell's support rose and Cook's support dropped, each by about four percentage points, among these low ranking precincts. Thus, in comparison with working-class whites in general, the poorest white voters tended to favor Massell slightly more, Cook slightly less, and Millican about the same.

The City-Wide Vote

Turning once again to the city-wide results, it can be seen that each candidate had a somewhat different base of support. Massell, who was not the front-runner in any of the "communities" examined above, was the only candidate who received a substantial degree of support from all groups, black and white, although most of his support came from black voters. This combination gave him the largest vote in the city October 7. His total of 31,096 was composed of approximately 19,000 black votes, and 12,000 white votes. Cook, who finished second in the balloting with 26,891 votes, was quite strong among all whites, but he received little support in the black community. His support was composed of close to 25,000 white votes and slightly over 2,000 black votes. Tate placed third in the outcome with 22,869 votes. He drew virtually all his support from black voters, receiving only around 1,000 of his votes from white precincts. In fourth place with 18,290 votes was Millican, who ran strong among middle and working-class whites and made a fair showing among upper-middle-class whites. He drew almost no support -- less than 1,000 votes -- from blacks, however.*

One significant factor in the October 7 election which has not been discussed is the turnout rate among the various groups of voters. This problem will be examined below in connection with the turnout in the run-off election.

---

*The actual number of black and white votes each candidate received is, of course, an estimate.

III. THE MAYORALTY ELECTION

OCTOBER 21 RUN-OFF

In the run-off election between Massell and Cook October 21, Massell won with 55 per cent of the 113,921 votes cast that day. His victory was based on the support of almost all black voters and about one-fourth of the white voters. Of Massell's total of 62,632 votes, it is estimated that slightly more than 45,000 came from the black community and about 17,500 from the white community. Cook's total of 51,289 was composed of almost 47,500 white votes and about 3,800 black votes.

The Black Vote

In the black community, most of those who had supported Tate on October 7 apparently switched to Massell in the run-off. Massell's percentage of the black vote jumped from 44.2 per cent to 92.2 per cent in the two elections, while Cook's percentage of this vote increased from 5.5 per cent to 7.9 per cent. In only 7 of the 45 black precincts did Massell receive less than 90 per cent of the vote, the lowest being 87.6 per cent. His highest precinct gave him 95.4 per cent. Voters in the sample of black precincts with high socio-economic rank supported Massell slightly more than voters in the precincts at the bottom of this scale, 93.6 per cent to 91.6 per cent, respectively.

Figure 3: Proportion of the Vote Received by Leading Mayoralty Candidates from Different Groups of Voters, October 21, 1969 (in Percentages).

The White Vote

In white areas, most of Millican's backers shifted their support to Cook, although Massell apparently picked up the votes of some of them in the run-off. Cook's percentage of the overall white vote rose from 44.8 per cent to 73 per cent and Massell's increased from 21.6 per cent to 27 per cent.

According to Figure 3, there appears to be very little variation in the voting behavior of the different categories of whites. Cook polled 74.2 per cent of the Northside vote, 73.5 per cent of the Southside vote, and 70.5 per cent of the vote of Other whites. In fact, however, there was more variation than these figures would indicate.

Voters in the sample of high status precincts gave Cook 78.1 per cent, a higher proportion than in the Northside as a whole. And in the sample of low status precincts, Cook's support was only 68.5 per cent, which was lower than his proportion of the overall Southside vote. Thus, there was a difference of almost ten percentage points in the support Massell received from voters at the opposite ends of the socio-economic ladder, 21.9 per cent from those at the top, and 31.5 per cent from those at the bottom.

The differences in white voting for mayor are also shown by an examination of individual precincts. As Table 5 reveals, there was somewhat more consistency in the level of support Massell received in Southside precincts than elsewhere.

TABLE 5

VOTING SUPPORT RECEIVED BY MASSELL IN WHITE PRECINCTS
OCTOBER 21, 1970

	Percentage From all Precincts in Category Combined	Number of Precincts at Different Levels of Support
		Under 20 %	20-24.9 %	25-29.9 %	30-34.9 %	35-39.9 %	40-44.9 %	45% and Over
Northside	25.8	5	9	6	4	-	-	2
Southside	26.5	-	8	12	5	-	1	1
Other	29.5	3	2	4	6	2	1	-
Total White	27.0	8	19	22	15	2	2	3

In the precincts of the Northside and Other categories, there was greater variation in his proportion of the vote. In these latter categories, a few precincts with rather strong Massell votes partially offest in the overall average a number of precincts where the level of support was much lower. For example, in the Northside there were five precincts in which Massell received less than 20 per cent of the vote, but in two precincts (6C and 8C) he received 47.7 per cent and 49.9 per cent. The only other precinct in which Massell obtained over 45 per cent was a very small Southside precinct with a very low turnout, which did not have much effect on the average for that category.

Massell's proportion of the vote was higher October 21 than on October 7 in every precinct but two. But this improvement was notably greater in some areas than in others. In the Northside, his percentage rose by only 3 points in the run-off, whereas in the Southside, it jumped by 8.5 points, almost 3 times the increase in the Northside. Among Other whites, the increase was 6.7 points, more than twice that of the Northside. Massell's increase among the voters in the 5 precincts with the lowest socio-economic status was even greater than the Southside as a whole. His proportion of the votes in these precincts October 21 was 9.8 percentage points higher than in the first election. In contrast, the sample of precincts with the highest socio-economic rank showed an increase for Massell of only 2.2 percentage points. His average increase for all white precincts was 5.4 points.

There were 14 precincts in which Massell increased his proportion of the vote in the run-off by 9 points or more. Of these 14, 11 were in the Southside and none in the Northside. He showed an improvement of 12 points in 8 of these precincts, all but 1 in the Southside. Massell's increase was 3 points or less in 18 precincts. Of these 18, 15 were in the Northside, including 2 where his proportion decreased slightly below his October 7 level, and none in the Southside.

As indicated earlier, Massell's overall proportion of the October 21 vote was about the same among Northside, Southside, and Other whites. The above-average increase in his support among Southside whites in the run-off was necessary to bring him up to the Northside level, which was considerably higher than the Southside on October 7.

The relatively large increase in Massell's October 21 support in the Southside was also associated with an above-average increase in the turnout in most precincts in that area. This will be discussed in the next section.

IV. VOTER TURNOUT IN MAYORALTY ELECTIONS OCTOBER 7 AND OCTOBER 21

Thus far, this report has been mainly concerned with how various groups in the city distributed their support between mayoralty candidates. The turnout rate, or the percentage of eligible members of a group who actually voted, has been mentioned only briefly. Obviously, the turnout rate is a crucial factor in determining the amount of influence a group will have on the outcome of an election. A group's potential influence, based on its proportion of the electorate, may be enhanced or diminished by how heavily its members vote relative to other groups. And previous indications of the percentage of a group's support received by one candidate or another gain their full significance only when related to the total number of votes cast by that group. This total, of course, reflects the turnout rate.

On October 7, 100,030, or 46.5 per cent of the city's registered voters, cast ballots in the mayor's election. On October 21, this figure rose to 113,921, or 53 per cent of the total registration.* Between these two dates, the question of voter turnout had become a public issue. Mayor Ivan Allen called the low October 7 turnout a "disgrace" and made a strong appeal on television for a much higher number of voters in the run-off. Various business and civic groups volunteered their services to "Operation Vote," and an active campaign was mounted to increase the turnout. In addition to public appeals, a telephone campaign was conducted, and transportation to the polls was offered.

---

*In the heated election of 1961 when Ivan Allen defeated Lester Maddox, the turnout was about 70 per cent, but in 1965 when Allen was re-elected, it was around 42 per cent.

A number of Massell's supporters interpreted the pleas for a higher turnout to mean in fact a call for a higher turnout among certain white voters.* They charged that the campaign, led by the Chamber of Commerce, was being used to aid Cook through its selective application to particular segments of the city.

It is not the intent of this report to question the sincerity or fairness of the efforts to promote a larger turnout, and nothing presented here will resolve the controversy that developed over this issue. What this section will do, however, is show the rate of turnout among each group of voters in the two elections and reveal where and by how much the turnout increased in the run-off.

Table 6 shows the proportion of different groups which voted on the two dates. It should be remembered that this table is based on only those precincts in which one race or the other constitutes 90 per cent or more of the registration. Because the turnout in more racially heterogeneous precincts

---

*See, for example, the article in the October 16 issue of the Atlanta Journal on the statements of three labor leaders.

tends to be lower than in the precincts listed here*, the percentage of all blacks and all whites who voted was somewhat lower than the figures in Table 6. It is estimated that about 51 per cent of the registered blacks and 43 per cent of the registered whites voted October 7. The estimates for October 21 are 56 per cent of the blacks and 51 per cent of the whites.

TABLE 6

PERCENTAGE OF REGISTERED VOTERS CASTING BALLOTS IN MAYORALTY ELECTIONS, 1969

	October 7 %	October 21 %	Increase in Turnout Rate on October 21 (In Percentage Points)
All Voters	46.5	53.0	6.5
Blacks	51.5	56.3	4.8
Whites	46.4	54.1	7.7
Northside	52.4	60.1	7.7
Southside	40.4	48.8	8.4
Other	43.5	50.7	7.2

Considering now only those precincts that are included in Table 6, it can be seen that the black turnout exceeded the white turnout in both elections. The difference between whites and blacks was considerably less in the run-off, however, dropping from

*See Appendix B for the turnout in the other precincts.

Walker, in the article cited above, indicates that in previous mayoralty elections, blacks turned out at a higher rate than whites.

5.1 to 2.2 percentage points. In other words, in the run-off the increase in turnout over the first election among whites was almost twice that of blacks. The black turnout increased by 4.8 points to 56.3 per cent, while the white turnout jumped by 7.7 points to 54.1 per cent. The comparison of black and white turnout increases can also be made another way. Among black precincts, 12 exhibited an increase which equalled or exceeded the city-wide average increase of 6.5 points, and 33 were below this average. Among white precincts, 56 had an increase at or above the city average, and only 15 were below.

Since most white voters supported Cook and most black voters supported Massell in the run-off, the greater improvement in white turnout relative to black turnout benefitted Cook. If the turnout rate had remained the same as on October 7, Massell's margin of victory would have been even greater than it was.

As usual, there were significant differences in the behavior of the various white groups. In both elections, a considerably larger proportion of whites in the Northside than elsewhere turned out to vote. As Table 6 shows, their turnout rate was 11 to 12 points higher than in the Southside, and 9 to 10 points above Other whites. The Northside turnout was also higher than the black turnout on each date.

There was even greater disparity between the turnout in the sample of precincts with the highest socio-economic status and the sample of lowest ranking precincts. As Table 7 shows, the proportion of white voters in the top-ranking precincts was about 23 percentage points higher in both elections than the proportion in the low status precincts.

TABLE 7

VOTER TURNOUT IN PRECINCTS OF HIGHEST AND LOWEST SOCIO-ECONOMIC STATUS IN 1969 MAYORALTY ELECTION

	Percentage of Registered Voters Who Cast Ballots			Difference in Turnout Between High & Low Status Precincts (In Percentage Points)
	All Precincts	High Status Precincts	Low Status Precincts
White Precincts
October 7	46.4	59.7	37.1	22.6
October 21	54.9	67.7	44.8	22.9
Increase*	8.5	8.0	7.7
Black Precincts
October 7	51.5	60.2	43.6	16.6
October 21	56.3	65.6	50.1	15.5
Increase*	4.8	5.4	6.5

*Increase in turnout on October 21 (in percentage points).

Southside whites demonstrated the most improvement in turnout. The percentage of registrants there who voted in the run-off was 8.4 points higher than the percentage casting ballots two weeks earlier. All but 2 of the 27 precincts in this category had increases above the city average. Comparable figures for the other white areas were: Northside, 18 of 26 with above-average increases; and Other, 12 of 18 above. The precincts with very large increases were concentrated more in the Southside than elsewhere.

In comparison with other white areas, the Southside exhibited in the run-off both a larger increase in turnout and a greater increase in the proportion of the vote given to Massell. It must be emphasized that the result of these increases still left the turnout rate in the Southside considerably below that of other white areas and brought Massell's proportion of the vote in that area only slightly above his level in the Northside and below that he received from Other whites.

In the Southside, as among whites generally, Cook polled almost three votes for every one Massell received. The increase in turnout thus worked to Cook's advantage. But the benefit received by Cook was slightly moderated by the improvement in Massell's proportion of the vote in the run-off. In the October 7 election, Massell polled less than one out of five votes cast by Southside whites. If Massell had not obtained a larger proportion of the October 21 vote, the increased turnout would have helped Cook even more.

Unfortunately, since the matter has stimulated a great deal of speculation, a study of this kind cannot answer the question of why the increase in Massell's proportion of the vote was larger in the Southside than among other white groups. It is theoretically possible that the additional votes Massell received October 21 came solely from people who voted in the run-off but not in the first election. The increase in turnout produced more than enough new voters to account for the enlargement of Massell's support. However, it is more likely that those who voted for the first time October 21 would split their votes in a similar fashion to those who voted on both occasions, and thus some of Massell's votes probably came from people who had voted for other candidates, mainly Millican, on October 7.

There were also significant differences in turnout among black precincts. Table 8 shows the range of voting levels in the black community and indicates that in some black areas the percentage of registrants who voted was quite low, even though the overall black average was higher than the white average. Whereas socio-economic ranking appeared not to affect the direction of black votes in the mayor's election, the opposite is true in terms of the turnout rate.

In both elections the turnout in the sample of high status black precincts was more than 15 points higher than in the sample of low status black precincts, as indicated in Table 7. Blacks in low ranking precincts voted more heavily than low status whites, the difference being about six percentage points in each election. The turnout rates in the high status black sample and the high status white sample were about the same.

Although the increased white turnout in the run-off worked to Massell's disadvantage, this was not a serious threat to Massell's success because of his strong support from black voters. The black vote determined the outcome of the election, and this decisive influence was due to the greater solidarity of their vote and their higher rate of participation.

TABLE 8

LEVELS OF TURNOUT AMONG DIFFERENT GROUPS OF VOTERS: NUMBER OF PRECINCTS IN WHICH DIFFERENT PERCENTAGES OF THE REGISTERED VOTERS CAST BALLOTS IN MAYORALTY ELECTIONS, 1969

	Percentage of Registered Voters Who Cast Ballots
	30-34%	35-39%	40-44%	45-59%	50-54%	55-59%	60%
	Number of Precincts
City
Oct. 7	17	24	25	33	16	15	12
Oct. 21	3	6	24	23	26	29	31
Black
Oct. 7	4	2	4	11	10	7	7
Oct. 21	-	2	3	3	12	10	15
White
Oct. 7	5	17	11	20	5	8	5
Oct. 21	-	-	15	13	11	17	15
Northside Whites
Oct. 7	-	1	-	10	3	7	5
Oct. 21	-	-	1	-	3	9	13
Southside Whites
Oct. 7	4	10	7	6	-	-	-
Oct. 21	-	-	9	8	6	4	-
Other Whites
Oct. 7	1	6	4	4	2	1	-
Oct. 21	-	-	5	5	2	4	2

After the October 7 election, a controversy arose between some of Tate's supporters and some of Massell's supporters over what the results would have been if those blacks who had voted for Massell had instead given their support to Tate. It is clear that Tate would not have won the election on the first ballot even if he had received all the votes cast by blacks, since these amounted to only about 43 to 44 per cent of the total city vote. He certainly would have been in the run-off, however, if he could have added to his own vote the approximately 21,000 votes received by Massell and Cook in the black community. Whether he could have then gone on to defeat Cook in a run-off would have depended upon the size of the black and white turnout and the way whites voted in the second election. Assuming the October 21 turnout would have remained the same under these conditions and that Tate continued to receive all black votes, a victory by Tate would have required about 8,000 white votes. Tate received little more than 1,000 white votes on October 7. Whether or not he could have picked up the necessary amount of white support to win under the circumstances outlined here obviously cannot be answered, except by those who wish to engage in pure conjecture.

V. THE VICE MAYORALTY ELECTION
OCTOBER 7

The new coalition of voters produced by the change in Atlanta voting patterns in 1969 not only elected the new mayor, but essentially this same group of voters determined the outcome of the vice-mayoralty election. The man they elected was Maynard Jackson, a young attorney, who was the city's first black candidate for this office. He won a decisive victory on the first ballot over a highly respected white alderman, Milton Farris.

Jackson received 58.2 per cent of the votes. Farris was supported by 39.1 per cent of the voters, and two other candidates together polled 2.7 per cent of the ballots. Jackson's total of 56,369 was composed of approximately 41,000 black votes and about 15,000 white votes.

In the black community, Jackson received almost total support, with 97.8 per cent of the vote. In no precinct where the registration was 90 per cent or more black did Jackson receive less than 94.3 per cent of the ballots. A majority of the white community voted for Farris (68.3 per cent), but Jackson obtained substantial support among whites, receiving the votes of 27.7 per cent of them.

There were significant differences among whites in the support given to Jackson, however. In the Southside, he obtained only 17.5 per cent of the vote, while in the Northside, he received almost double that percentage, 33.2, and and Other whites gave him 26.3 per cent. Table 9 reveals the range of support given to Jackson within each of these categories. In 4 precincts, 3 of which were in the Northside, Jackson polled over 40 per cent of the vote. He received less than 15 per cent in 11 precincts, all but 1 in the Southside. The sample of white voters with the highest socio-economic status gave Jackson 30.9 per cent of their vote, which was less than he received in the Northside in general. The sample of low status whites gave him 17.2 per cent of their support, which was about the same as the overall Southside vote.

TABLE 9

VOTING SUPPORT RECEIVED BY MAYNARD JACKSON FROM DIFFERENT GROUPS OF WHITE VOTERS OCTOBER 7, 1969

	Percentage From All Precincts in Category Combined	Number of Precincts at Different Levels of Support
		Under 10	10-14.9	15-19.9	20-24.9	25-29.9	30-34.9	35 39.9	40-44.9
Northside	33.2	-	-	-	1	5	12	5	3
Southside	17.5	1	9	8	6	3	-	-	-
Other	26.3	-	1	3	6	2	3	2	1
TOTAL WHITE	27.7	1	10	11	13	10	15	7	4

The number of people voting in the vice-mayor's race was almost the same as that in the mayor's election October 7. In the city as a whole, 45.1 per cent of the electorate voted for vice-mayor compared to 46.5 per cent for mayor. The drop-off in the percentage of registered voters casting ballots in the vice-mayor's election, as compared to the initial mayor's election, was approximately the same for all the various categories of voters examined in this report, the difference ranging from 1.2 to 2.1 percentage points. Thus, based on precincts that are 90 per cent or more black or white, the turnout for vice mayor was: Northside whites, 51.3 per cent; blacks, 50.3 per cent; whites (all categories), 44.8 per cent; Other whites, 41.9 per cent; Southside whites, 38.3 per cent.

Jackson's performance in relation to mayoralty candidates can be seen by comparing Table 9 with Figures 2 and 3. Tate received slightly over half of the percentage obtained by Jackson in the black community. Among the various groups of white voters, Jackson polled from 9 to 30 times as many votes as Tate.

In relation to Millican's performance, Jackson ran strongest where Millican was weakest, and he was weakest where Millican was strongest. In the Northside, Jackson's support was almost 10 points above Millican's. But in the Southside, Millican was almost 24 points above Jackson. The support Other whites gave Jackson was 9 points lower than that given to Millican.

The relationship between the support of these two candidates is demonstrated in another fashion in Table 10. When precincts are rank-ordered from the highest to the lowest percentage of vote received by each candidate, it can be seen that, with one exception, the precincts composing the top quarter of Jackson's support all ranked in the bottom half of the scale according to the support given to Millican. And the precincts in the lowest quarter of Jackson's support are, with one exception, in the top half in terms of their vote for Millican.

TABLE 10

INVERSE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN AREAS OF STRONG SUPPORT FOR MAYNARD JACKSON AND AREAS OF STRONG SUPPORT FOR MILLICAN: DISTRIBUTION OF PRECINCTS IN MAYNARD JACKSON'S HIGHEST AND LOWEST QUARTILES FOR MILLICAN AND DISTRIBUTION OF PRECINCTS IN MILLICAN'S HIGHEST AND LOWEST QUARTILES FOR MAYNARD JACKSON

	Number of Precincts in Each Quartile of Millican Support
	High	Second	Third	Low
Highest Jackson Quartile	-	1	7	10
Lowest Jackson Quartile	11	6	1	-

	Number of Precincts in Each Quartile of Jackson Support
	High	Second	Third	Low
Highest Millican Quartile	-	-	7	11
Lowest Millican Quartile	10	7	1	-

Jackson's vote in the white community generally followed the same direction as Cook's, although there was a large difference in the proportion each received. The area of strongest support for both was the Northside and the area of least strength was the Southside. Jackson's drop-off in the Southside was proportionately worse than Cook's, however.

The relationship between Massell's vote and Jackson's vote is shown in Figure 4. In the Northside, Jackson ran better than Massell did in either the October 7 or October 21 elections. Jackson's vote of 33.2 per cent was 10.4 points higher than Massell's proportion in the first race and 7.4 points above Massell's vote in the run-off. In only two precincts did Massell surpass Jackson. In both 8C and 6C, the two precincts with relatively heavy concentrations of Jewish voters, which were Massell's strongest white precincts, Jackson received 37.9 per cent of the vote. Massell's support in these precincts was 40.2 per cent and 42.9 per cent October 7, and 47.7 per cent and 49.9 per cent October 21.

In the Southside Jackson and Massell ran about evenly October 7, but Massell's performance in this area was much better October 21. Massell's proportion of the vote in the run-off was about 9 points higher than the 17.5 per cent Jackson obtained October 7.

Among Other whites, Jackson ran ahead of Massell October 7, but Massell's support in the run-off exceeded Jackson's performance on the earlier date. Jackson's vote of 26.3 per cent was 3.5 points above Massell's initial vote, but 3.2

Figure 4: Proportion of the Vote Received from Different Groups of Voters by Massell on October 7 and 21 and by M. Jackson on October 7 (in Percentages).

points below Massell's subsequent vote.

The above paragraphs provide some qualification to the introductory statement of this section that essentially the same voters elected Massell and Maynard Jackson. Figure 4 which puts in graphic form the data of the preceding paragraphs, shows that there was great similarity, but not exact duplication, in the support each candidate received. The greatest variation is in the Northside where Jackson ran several percentage points ahead of Massell and in the Southside where the opposite relationship was exhibited. Without the benefit of personal interviews with voters, there is of course no certain way to determine whether the votes for the two candidates were cast by the same persons. It is assumed, however, that this overlap existed to a large extent.

VI. THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN ELECTIONS

The 1969 elections brought important changes in the composition of the board of aldermen. Only 12 of 18 incumbents sought to retain their seats, but one of these was defeated, resulting in 7 new aldermen. Black representation on the board jumped from 1 to 5, as a consequence of the reelection of the single black incumbent and the victories of 4 new black candidates.

This section will examine some of the general features of the voting in the aldermanic elections and the specific features of a few contests of particular significance. The results of all elections are in Appendix A, along with an indication of the kind of support each candidate received from the various groups of voters. In Atlanta, the board of aldermen is made up of two members from each of the nine wards. Although a member must reside in the ward from which he runs, election is based on a city-wide vote.

There were 8 elections in which all the candidates were white. In these elections the white and black communities generally tended to support the same candidate. Only in the election won by Wade T. Mitchell did blacks and whites exhibit strong opposition to one another in their choice of candidates. In that contest, most whites voted for Mitchell, while a large majority of black voters supported an opposition candidate. Except for the two elections won by Hugh Pierce and Wyche Fowler, the remaining winners polled a majority from whites and blacks. Pierce and Fowler were the leading candidates in the black community, but they received only a narrow plurality from black voters. Although George T. Cotsakis, Richard G. Freeman, Cecil Turner, and W. T. Knight were supported by a majority of blacks and whites, in 3 of these contests the support of blacks was not as heavy as that of whites. Turner, on the other hand, received a substantially larger majority from blacks than from whites.

The different groups of white voters exhibited some variation in their voting in these elections. In all the elections just described, each group gave the winner a majority, but there were sometimes considerable differences in the size of the majority. In 2 contests, Southside whites gave the winner more support than voters in the Northside, while in 5 contests, the Northside support was heavier. The differences in the level of support ranged from 6 to 26 percentage points.

Two aldermanic elections had only black candidates, and in these contests, like the all-white elections, both blacks and whites tended to support the same candidate. Q. V. Williamson polled a substantial majority among every group of voters except Southside whites, and there he missed 50 per cent by only a fraction of a point. Joel C. Stokes, the other winner, barely avoided a run-off with 50.5 per cent of the total vote. He was the front-runner among every group of voters, but he received a majority only from Northside whites. In both contests, the proportion of Northside votes received by the winner was higher than that received from black voters. Stokes also received heavier support from Other whites than from blacks. Although both candidates were the front-runners among Southside whites, their support among these voters was almost 30 percentage points below that received in the Northside. The support from Other whites ranged between the levels of the Northside and Southside.

The 8 remaining aldermanic elections involved both white and black candidates. Five of these were won by whites and 3 by blacks. In these elections, there were substantial differences between black and white voters in their support of candidates.

It was stated at the beginning of this report that some members of the board of aldermen were elected by essentially the same group of voters who brought victory to the mayor and vice-mayor. This statement referred to the 3 black candidates -- Marvin Arrington, H. D. Dodson, and Ira Jackson -- who defeated white opponents. The vote they received was not identical to that of Massell or Maynard Jackson, nor was it the same among themselves. Nevertheless, there was considerable similarity in the composition of the support each of these candidates received. The victories of all 5 of them were based on almost solid support from the black community and between 21 per cent and 32 per cent of the white vote.

All 3 of these aldermen were elected in run-off elections, and the discussion here will refer to these votes. (The results of the first ballot can be seen in Appendix A.) The support they received in the run-offs, along with Massell's October 21 and Maynard Jackson's October 7 performances, is shown in Figure 5. A comparison of the support received by these several candidates must be made with caution, of course. Since the number of voters in each election was not the same, the percentages being used in Figure 5 do not all have the same base. Thus, identical percentages do not represent the same number of votes when a larger number of people voted in one election than in another. For example, Massell and Arrington received almost the same percentage in the Southside, but Massell received more votes from this group because the turnout in his election was almost 49 per cent compared to a turnout of about 36 per cent in Arrington's contest. It is theoretically possible, of course, that the people voting for one of these candidates were not the same as those who voted for another of the candidates, but this is not thought to be likely.

Arrington was the only one of this group who received less than 90 per cent of the black vote, but he was not far below this level. Both Arrington and Ira Jackson received the support of almost one-third of the white community. Dodson, who ran against an incumbent, obtained a lower level of white support, but this still amounted to slightly over one-fifth of the white votes. Dodson's lower proportion of the white vote was due mainly to the relatively light support he obtained in the Northside. Unlike the other black candidates being considered here, he did no better in this area than among other groups of white voters. Ira Jackson's support in the Northside was particularly strong, amounting to over 40 per cent, but his proportion of the votes of Other whites was rather low, only 17 per cent. Arrington ran well among all white groups and the support he received from Southside whites, 27 per cent, and from Other whites, over 31 per cent, was higher than that of any other black aldermanic candidate who had white opposition.

Figure 5: Proportion of the Vote Received from Different Groups of Voters by Arrington, Dodson, I. Jackson, and Massell on October 21 and M. Jackson on October 7 (in Percentages).

In the other 5 aldermanic elections, white candidates defeated black candidates. In 4 of these contests, the winner was an incumbent and won on the first ballot. There was no incumbent in the remaining contest, and a run-off was required. The voting pattern in this run-off election, which was won by R. A. Petree, was similar to that in the aldermanic elections described above. The significant difference was that white support for the black candidate was not as high as it was for the successful black candidates. The losing black candidate here received over 90 per cent of the black vote, but only 18.6 per cent of the white vote. Petree thus received 81.4 per cent of the white votes and 8.9 per cent of the black votes.

In the other four elections, the black candidates received a smaller proportion of both the black and white vote than did the black candidates who were discussed above. Black support for the black candidates in these contests ranged from 68 to 80 per cent, and white support for them ranged from 5 to 16 per cent. The successful white candidates received the following support: E. Gregory Griggs, 76.5 per cent from whites and 14.1 per cent from blacks; John M. Flanigen, 89.1 per cent from whites and 26.5 per cent from blacks; Charles Leftwich, 77.6 per cent from whites and 16.3 per cent from blacks; and Jack Summers, 73.5 per cent from whites and 29.6 per cent from blacks. All of these candidates except Summers received heavier support in the Northside than in the Southside.

Turnout*

Not as many people voted in the aldermanic elections as in the mayoralty and vice-mayoralty elections. The drop-off was greater among blacks than among whites. Whereas blacks had a higher turnout rate in voting for mayor and vice-mayor, whites participated more heavily in most cases in the balloting for aldermen.

As Table 11 shows, if the turnout for all October 7 aldermanic races are averaged together, the percentage of

---

*The term "turnout" will be used to refer to the percentage of registered voters who cast ballots in each particular election. Because some voters cast ballots in some elections and not in others, the "turnout" will vary.

blacks voting in these elections was only 28.4 per cent*, a reduction of 23.1 points from their rate of participation in the October 7 mayoralty election. The corresponding figure for whites is 34.3 per cent turnout for aldermen, a reduction of 12.1 points from the percentage voting in the first mayoralty election. In the October 21 run-offs for positions on the board of aldermen, the turnout rates were considerably higher among both blacks and whites and closer to one another.

TABLE 11

LEVELS OF TURNOUT AMONG DIFFERENT GROUPS OF VOTERS IN ALDERMANIC ELECTIONS: PERCENTAGES OF REGISTERED VOTERS IN EACH GROUP WHO CAST BALLOTS IN DIFFERENT TYPES OF ALDERMANIC ELECTIONS ON OCTOBER 7 AND 21

	Percentage of Registered Voters Casting Ballots in:
	All Elections Combined		Elections With Black & White Candidates		Elections With Only Black Candidates	Elections With Only White Candidates
	Oct.7 (N=17)	Oct.21 (N=4)	Oct.7 (N=8)	Oct.21 (N=4)	Oct. 7 (N=2)	Oct. 7 (N=7)
City-wide	29.7	39.8	29.9	39.8	31.4	29.1
Black	28.4	41.4	28.8	41.4	36.4	25.7
White	34.3	43.0	34.0	43.0	32.2	35.3
Northside	39.2	45.8	38.1	45.8	37.2	40.5
Southside	27.3	37.4	27.9	37.4	24.5	27.6
Other	31.8	41.6	31.9	41.6	29.5	32.4

*These turnout figures refer only to those voters who were in precincts that are 90 per cent or more black or white. The turnout rate for all blacks or for all whites was probably somewhat lower than these figures. See the discussion on turnout in the section on the mayor's election.

The proportion of blacks voting rose to 41.4 per cent and that of whites to 43 per cent. Compared to the turnout for mayor on October 21, this was a reduction of 14.9 percentage points for blacks and 11.1 points for whites.

Only in the aldermanic contests in which all the candidates were black was the turnout of blacks higher than whites. This was not so much the result of a decline in the number of whites voting, although there was a slight drop-off, as it was the result of a substantial increase in the number of blacks casting ballots in these elections. In contests where all the candidates were white, white participation was slightly above that in other elections, while the black turnout dropped to its lowest point, just slightly more than one-fourth of the registered voters.

For those elections where both black and white candidates were involved, the average turnout for black and white voters was between the levels for all-black and all-white contests. Whites voted more heavily in the mixed contests than in all-black elections, while more blacks participated in mixed contests than in all-white ones. There was considerable variation in the black turnout for mixed elections; the percentage of voters participating ranged from 24.5 to 35.7.

Just as in the elections examined in earlier sections, the turnout rate varied among the different groups of white voters. On October 7, participation by Northside whites continued to be highest at 39.2 per cent, with Other whites second at 31.8 per cent, and Southside whites lowest at 27.3 per cent. The reduction from the percentage voting for mayor on October 7 was about the same for all these groups, just over 13 points in the Northside and Southside and just under 12 points among Other whites. On October 21 the turnout rates of these groups remained in the same order, but the differences between them were narrowed considerably. This resulted from a larger increase in the percentage of Southside and Other whites voting. All three groups followed approximately the same pattern in their participation in different types of contests; slightly fewer voted in all-black contests and slightly more in all-white contests.

In the sample of white precincts with the highest socio-economic status, the turnout in aldermanic elections was 45.5 per cent on October 7 and 53.4 per cent on October 21. This was several points higher than the turnout in the Northside as a whole on both occasions. In the sample of low status white precincts, the turnout was 23.5 per cent on the first date and 33.1 per cent on the second date. These figures are below the turnout rate for the entire Southside.

There was a similar disparity between the participation rates of black precincts of high and low socio-economic rank. On October 7, 35.8 per cent of the registration in the sample of high status black precincts voted, compared to only 18.9 per cent in the sample of low-ranking black precincts. There was a substantial increase in the rate of participation in the run-off elections, a rise to 51.4 per cent in the top-ranking black precincts and to 31.3 per cent in the low status ones. Thus, in the second election, there was little difference between the turnout in the high-ranking white precincts and the high-ranking black precincts or between low status white precincts and low status black ones, although on October 7 the black precincts were considerably below their white counterparts.

VII. THE BOARD OF EDUCATION ELECTIONS

The voting patterns in each individual board of education election can be seen in Appendix A. The board of education is composed of one member from each of the 9 wards plus 1 at-large member. The entire city votes for all positions, although candidates for the ward seats must live in the ward from which they run.

The 1969 election brought 5 new members to the 10-man board of education. Seven incumbents ran for re-election, but 2 of them were defeated. As was true for the board of aldermen, the election resulted in more black members than before, the number increasing from 2 to 3. One black incumbent did not seek to retain his seat; thus 2 of the 3 blacks elected were new members.

While none of these elections exhibited the same pattern of voting that elected the mayor, vice-mayor, and 3 of the black aldermen, there were 3 contests that had some similarities. Victory in these 3 elections was based on a substantial majority in the black community combined with a sizable minority of the white votes. In these elections, the black support for the winner was somewhat lower and the white support somewhat higher than in the "coalition" of voters which elected Massell, M. Jackson, Arrington, I. Jackson, and Dodson.

All of the candidates in these 3 board of education elections were white. Two of them won in run-offs. Howard E. Klein, who won on the first ballot on October 7, received the largest percentage of black votes (79.4 per cent) and the smallest proportion of the white vote (36.8 per cent). June Cofer's black support in the run-off amounted to 78.6 per cent and her white support was 42.3 per cent. On October 21 Jerry Luxemburger's proportion of the black vote was the lowest of the three at 64.9 per cent, but his percentage of the white votes was highest at 44.7 per cent. With the exception of Luxemburger, these candidates received approximately the same level of support from each group of white voters. Luxemburger's support from Southside and Other whites was similar to Cofer's and Klein's, but Luxemburger was backed by a majority of the voters in the Northside.

There were two other contests in which all the candidates were white. Both of these were two-man races and were decided on October 7. In one of these, W. Tom Beebe won almost identical majorities from both black and white voters, 64 per cent of the blacks and 65.4 per cent from the whites. In the other election, Fred M. Shell received a majority from both blacks and whites, but there was a substantial difference in the proportions. Blacks gave him 52.1 per cent of their votes, compared to 79.7 per cent from whites. Both of these candidates were supported by majorities from all white groups, although Beebe's were at a lower level. In both cases, the proportion of Northside votes given to the winner was around 13 percentage points higher than Southside support.

In only one election were all the candidates black. Asa C. Yancey won this race on the first ballot over two opponents. He received majorities from all groups, and his proportion of the white vote (74 per cent) was slightly higher than the percentage he received from blacks (72.9 per cent). Although all white groups gave him a majority of their votes, Southside support was almost 30 percentage points below Northside support.

Four elections included both black and white candidates. In 2 of these contests, which were won by blacks, victory was based on a majority among both black and white voters. Benjamin E. Mays, running against 1 white and 1 black opponent, polled 82.9 per cent of the black vote and 56.4 per cent of the white vote to win on the first ballot. The second successful black candidate was J. A. Middleton, who defeated two white opponents on October 7. His support was 90.8 per cent in the black community and 51.5 per cent in the white community. Both men received majorities from Northside whites and very close to majorities from Other whites, but both of them ran second to white opponents in the Southside.

In the two elections in which whites defeated blacks, the winner's base of support consisted of a strong majority from white voters and about one-fourth of the black voters. Ann Woodward, whose victory came on the first ballot, received 71.4 per cent of the votes in the white community and 25.5 per cent of the votes in the black community. A run-off was required in the other election, won by Bill C. Wainwright. His support from whites in the run-off amounted to 85.6 per cent and his support among blacks came to 25.7 per cent. All the white groups gave him about the same level of support. Woodward's support was higher in the Northside than elsewhere.

Turnout

The number of people who voted in the board of education elections on October 7 was not quite as high as for the aldermanic elections, but the difference was slight. The same was true for October 21, except for Northside whites, who voted more heavily for school board members than for aldermen on this date. The turnout rate of the different categories of voters on October 7 followed the same pattern as in the aldermanic elections; the largest turnout was among Northside whites, followed in descending order by Other whites, blacks, and Southside whites, as Table 12 shows.

The number of blacks who voted varied considerably with different elections. The turnout was highest, 39.5 per cent for the election in which Mays won over a white and a black opponent. The next largest number, 36.3 per cent, voted in the all-black contest won by Yancey. In the other election in which a black, Middleton, defeated white opponents, the turnout was 31.6 per cent. In the two contests in which white candidates, Wainwright and Woodward, successfully ran against blacks, the respective percentages of eligible black voters who cast ballots were 26.4 and 22. Under 25 per cent of the blacks voted in any of the elections which had only white candidates.

TABLE 12

LEVELS OF TURNOUT AMONG DIFFERENT GROUPS OF VOTERS IN BOARD OF EDUCATION ELECTIONS: PERCENTAGES OF REGISTERED VOTERS IN EACH GROUP WHO CAST BALLOTS IN DIFFERENT TYPES OF BOARD OF EDUCATION ELECTIONS ON OCTOBER 7 and 21

	Percentage of Registered Voters Casting Ballots in:
	All Elections Combined		Elections With Black & White Candidates		Elections With Only Black Candidates	Elections With Only White Candidates
	Oct. 7 (N=10)	Oct. 21 (N=3)	Oct. 7 (N=4)	Oct. 21 (N=1)	Oct.7 (N=1)	Oct.7 (N=5)	Oct.21 (N=2)
City-wide	28.0	38.0	29.2	37.3	30.4	26.7	38.4
Black	27.3	34.7	29.5	32.0	36.3	23.5	36.1
White	32.3	44.6	32.4	44.0	30.4	32.5	44.9
Northside	37.1	50.4	37.2	50.2	35.3	37.3	50.5
Southside	24.7	37.2	24.7	37.8	22.6	25.1	36.9
Other	29.5	41.6	29.8	42.0	27.8	29.6	41.4

There was not so much variation in the number of whites who voted in these elections. The turnout ranged only from 30.4 per cent to 35.4 per cent. The nature of the candidates involved seemed to have little effect on the turnout. A slight exception was that the turnout of each group of white voters for the all-black contest was at or near the bottom of the range.

On October 7, the sample of black precincts with high socio-economic status exhibited an average turnout of 35 per cent compared to an average turnout of 17.5 per cent in the low status black precincts. These figures rose to 43.9 per cent and 24.8 per cent on October 21. In the samples of white precincts, an average of 43.7 per cent of the high status whites and 21.6 per cent of the low status whites cast ballots on October 7. In the run-offs these averages were 57.9 per cent and 32.9 per cent. Whereas the differences in turnout in aldermanic races between the corresponding black and white samples was almost removed in the run-offs, in the board of education elections the differences exhibited on October 7 were not overcome on October 21.

VIII. BLOC VOTING AND RACIAL POLARIZATION

Throughout this study, comparisons have been made between the voting of blacks and whites, and comments have been made about the influence of one group or the other on the outcome of an election. In this section, the overall results of the 1969 elections will be examined, so that the voting behavior of blacks and whites in relation to one another can be placed in better perspective. How often were most whites and most blacks on opposite sides of these electoral contests? How cohesive were these groups in their candidate support? To what extent was one racial group willing to vote against a candidate of their own race for a candidate of the opposite race?

There were 30 offices to be filled in the 1969 city elections: mayor, vice-mayor, 18 positions on the board of aldermen, and 10 positions on the board of education. Since 1 incumbent was unopposed, there were only 29 contests on October 7.

In 10 of the 29 elections, the black and white communities voted similarly, each giving a majority of their support to the same candidate. In 3 more contests, the winner received a plurality from black voters and a majority from white voters. Of course, as earlier sections have described, there were sometimes considerable differences in the size of the majority given by blacks and whites in a particular election. These 13 contests included 2 with both black and white candidates, 8 with white candidates only, and 3 with all black candidates.

Thus there were 16 other elections in which black and white voters exhibited substantial opposition to one another. In these elections, a majority of one racial group supported the winner, and the other racial group gave either a majority or a plurality to an opposition candidate. Half of these contests were settled on October 7, and the other half on October 21.

In the 8 contests decided on the first ballot, white voters were on the winning side 6 times. On October 21, the black-supported candidates were successful in 6 of the 8 elections. With the exception of Massell, the candidate receiving the majority of a group's support in a run-off election was also the leading vote-getter among that group on the first ballot. Massell ran second to Tate among blacks on October 7 but in the run-off against Cook, Massell received an overwhelming majority of the black vote. (Exact comparisons of a candidate's support on the two dates can be made by consulting Table 13).

An examination of the final outcome of all 16 elections in which most white and most black voters were on opposite sides in their support of candidates shows that the white voters' choice was victorious in 8 elections and the candidate with black support won in 8 elections. All 8 of the candidates successfully supported by whites were white, but only 4 of the candidates who won with black support were black.

In terms of offices, the black vote was primarily responsible either on October 7 or October 21 for the election of mayor, vice-mayor, 3 aldermen, and 3 members of the school board. In these elections, a majority of black voters supported the winner and a majority of white voters backed the loser. White voters were likewise decisive in the election of 6 aldermen and 2 school board members. Black and white voters jointly elected 9 members of the board of aldermen and 5 members of the board of education.

While it was true that most whites were on the losing side in 8 elections, a somewhat different picture emerges when whites are divided into groups. Northside whites gave a majority of their vote to a losing candidate in only 7 elections. Southside whites, however, supported a losing candidate 10 times, and in 3 other elections, they gave only a plurality to the winner. There were 8 instances when Other whites supported a loser, and 3 other times when they gave the winner only a plurality.

The next question is concerned with how much solidarity blacks and whites displayed in their voting. This discussion will not deal with the question of why a group voted as a bloc, although, of course, this would be a crucial consideration if one were going to pass judgment on such behavior. The examination here will simply measure the degree of cohesion each racial group exhibited in their voting and indicate something about the nature and outcome of the elections in which such cohesion was shown.

Table 13 shows in descending order the percentage of the vote received by the leading candidate among blacks and whites in each election. This table also indicates how the opposite racial group voted in each election, as well as the race of each candidate and which candidate was victorious. Since the turnout varied in these elections, these percentages can only be used as a measure of the solidarity among those in a group who actually cast ballots in each particular contest.

Any attempt to talk about a "bloc vote" immediately encounters the problem of how one is to define this phenomenon. One must specify what degree of solidarity is to be described as a "bloc vote," and by choosing different levels, quite different conclusions can be reached about the tendencies of blacks and whites to vote in this manner.

If the level is set at 70 per cent, then blacks and whites each "bloc voted" 12 times October 7. Whites were far more successful in this voting than blacks. Eleven of the white-supported candidates won outright victories and the remaining candidate obtained a place in the run-off. Only 6 of the candidates supported by blacks won on the first ballot, and 1 other candidate gained a position in the run-off.

On October 21, black support for a candidate exceeded 70 per cent in all 8 of the contests. The white vote was above this level in 5 of the elections. On this date blacks were more successful. Six of the 8 candidates with black support won, compared to only 2 of the candidates who received over 70 per cent of the white votes.

TABLE 13

VOTER COHESION AMONG BLACKS AND WHITES: PERCENTAGE OF VOTE RECEIVED BY CANDIDATE WHO WAS THE LEADING VOTE-GETTER AMONG BLACK AND WHITE VOTERS IN EACH ELECTION

Column 1 = Percentage of voters who supported listed candidate.
" 2 = * indicates victory; - indicates place in run-off.
" 3 = Name of the candidate.
" 4 = Race of candidate: B=Black, W=White.
" 5 = Percentage of vote received by candidate who led among opposite racial group. "Same" indicates that same candidate led among both groups.
" 6 = Race of candidate who led among opposite racial group.

October 7

Black Voters					White Voters
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5) (6)	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5) (6)
97.8	*	M. Jackson	B	(68.3-W)	89.1	*	Flanigen	W	(73.5-B)
90.8	*	Middleton	B	(same-51.5)	89.1	*	Freeman	W	(same-54.0)
88.0	-	Dodson	B	(76.9-W)	79.7	*	Shell	W	(same-52.1)
85.4	*	Turner	W	(same-65.1)	77.6	*	Leftwich	W	(69.0-B)
82.9	*	Mays	B	(same-56.4)	76.9	-	Dennis	W	(88.0-B)
80.1		Reed	W	(74.7-W)	76.5	*	Griggs	W	(44.5-B)
80.1	-	Finley	B	(48.2-W)	74.7	*	Mitchell	W	(80.1-W)
79.4	*	Klein	W	(50.8-W)	74.5	*	Fowler	W	(same-47.4)
74.6	-	Arrington	B	(43.3-W)	74.0	*	Yancey	B	(same-72.9)
74.5		D. Jackson	B	(71.4-W)	73.5	*	Summers	W	(68.4-B)
73.5		Doe	B	(89.1-W)	72.6	*	Cotsakis	W	(same-58.1)
72.9	*	Yancey	B	(same-74.0)	71.4	*	Woodward	W	(74.5-B)
69.6	-	Cofer	W	(54.9-W)	68.6	*	Williamson	B	(same-62.6)
69.0		Watley	B	(77.6-W)	68.3		Farris	W	(97.8-B)
68.4		Canty	B	(73.5-W)	65.4	*	Beebe	W	(same-64.0)
64.9	-	Luxemburger	W	(44.8-W)	65.3	*	Pierce	W	(same-39.0)
64.0	*	Beebe	W	(same-65.4)	65.1	*	Turner	W	(same-85.4)
62.6	*	Williamson	B	(same-68.6)	60.4	-	Wainwright	W	(59.5-B)
59.5	-	Hunter	B	(60.4-W)	60.0	*	Knight	W	(same-55.9)
58.1	*	Cotsakis	W	(same-72.6)	58.3	*	Stokes	B	(same-44.8)
55.9	*	Knight	W	(same-60.0)	56.4	*	Mays	B	(same-82.9)

TABLE 13 - Continued

October 7
(continued)

Black Voters					White Voters
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5) (6)	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5) (6)
54.0	*	Freeman	W	(same-60.0)	54.9	-	Cox	W	(69.6-W)
52.1	*	Shell	W	(same-79.7)	51.5	*	Middleton	B	(same-90.8)
49.0		Tate	B	(44.8-W)	50.8		Schilling	W	(79.4-W)
48.6	-	I. Jackson	B	(35.0-W)	48.2	-	Petree	W	(80.1-B)
47.4	*	Fowler	W	(same-74.5)	44.8	-	Cook	W	(49.0-B)
44.8	*	Stokes	B	(same-58.3)	44.8		Allen	W	(64.9-W)
44.5		Matthews	B	(76.5-W)	43.3	-	Irwin	W	(74.6-B)
39.0	*	Pierce	W	(same-65.3)	35.0	-	Mundy	W	(48.6-B)
October 21
95.5	*	I. Jackson	B	(70.6-W)	85.6	*	Wainwright	W	(74.3-B)
93.5	*	Dodson	B	(78.5-W)	81.4	*	Petree	W	(91.1-B)
92.2	*	Massell	W	(73.0-W)	78.5		Dennis	W	(93.5-B)
91.1		Finley	B	(81.4-W)	73.0		Cook	W	(92.2-W)
87.8	*	Arrington	B	(67.9-W)	70.6		Mundy	W	(95.5-B)
78.6	*	Cofer	W	(57.7-W)	67.9		Irvin	W	(87.8-B)
74.3		Hunter	B	(85.6-W)	57.7		Cox	W	(78.6-W)
73.9	*	Luxemburger	W	(51.9-W)	51.9		Allen	W	(73.9-W)

All these percentages are based on the results in precincts in which 90 per cent or more of the registered voters are either white or black.

As suggested earlier, black voters were more likely to give heavy support to white candidates than vice versa. With one exception, all the candidates who received 70 per cent or more of the white vote were white. Black voters gave this level of support on either October 7 or 21 to 6 white candidates.

If the level is moved up to 80 per cent, then blacks showed a much greater tendency than whites to "bloc vote." In the first election, black voters displayed this degree of solidarity 7 times and whites only twice. In the run-offs, 5 candidates received 80 per cent or more of the black vote, and only 2 candidates received this level of support from whites.

There were 5 instances on either October 7 or 21 when the black support for a candidate exceeded 90 per cent. The greatest solidarity whites exhibited was 89.1 per cent, and this occurred only twice.

In some elections, one racial group would vote with great unity, while in the same contest, the other group would exhibit a much lower degree of cohesiveness. But in a number of contests, both groups voted heavily for opposing candidates. On October 7, there were 4 elections in which blacks gave 70 per cent or more of their votes to 1 candidate, and whites gave 70 per cent or more of their votes to an opposition candidate. (If the measure is dropped to 68 per cent or more, then there were 7 elections on October 7 in which the 2 groups of voters opposed one another with this degree of solidarity.) In 1 election, the same candidate obtained over 70 per cent from both groups. On October 21, in 5 of the 8 elections, whites and blacks gave over 70 per cent of their respective support to opposing candidates.

As a final consideration, a look will be taken at some of the situations which revealed the opposite tendency from racial polarization. In some elections which involved a contest between black and white candidates, one can see a willingness among some black and white voters to support a candidate of the opposite race. There were 14 elections on October 7 in which black and white candidates competed with one another. As Table 14 shows, whites gave over 10 per cent of their votes to 1 or more black candidates in 11 of these contests. Black voters supported white candidates in this manner in 10 of the elections. The support given to candidates of the opposite race exceeded 25 per cent 6 times among each group of voters. In 2 instances among white voters and once among blacks this support was over 50 per cent.

On October 21, there were 5 elections which pitted black candidates against white opponents. The support the 5 black candidates received from white voters ranged from 14.4 per cent to 32.1 per cent. Only 2 white candidates received over 10 per cent of the black vote, 25.7 per cent in 1 instance, and 12.1 per cent in the other.

As the preceding discussion indicates, the 1969 elections displayed a variety of voting behavior. There was "bloc voting" in some contests, and in others, the various groups of voters revealed deep divisions of opinion among themselves. There were instances of polarization of blacks and whites in their choice of candidates, but there were also instances in which both groups were in substantial agreement with one another. And there were still other situations where black and white voters chose not to support a candidate of their own race, but instead showed their preference for a candidate of the opposite race.

TABLE 14

PERCENTAGE OF VOTE GIVEN BY VOTERS OF ONE RACIAL GROUP TO CANDIDATES OF THE OTHER RACIAL GROUP

October 7

Black Voters-White Candidates	White Voters-Black Candidates
Per Cent	Per Cent
51.0 - Massell, 44.2; Cook, 5.5; Millican, .4.	62.1 - Mays, 56.4; C. Jackson, 5.7.
40.5 - Wainwright, 16.5; Conrad, 12.6; Hicks, 7.5; Keys, 3.9.	51.5 - Middleton
31.6 - Summers, 29.6; Belluso, 2.0.	35.7 - I. Jackson, 24.5; Patrick, 5.3; Smith, 2.4; Ware, 1.2; Daniels, 2.3.
26.5 - Flanigen
25.5 - Woodward	28.6 - D. Jackson
25.3 - Pierce, 10.2; Irvin, 9.5; Coppeak, 3.1; Swetlitz, 2.5.	27.7 - M. Jackson
21.0 - Leftwich, 16.3; Jones, 10.4; Flournoy, 4.3.	27.3 - Arrington
	18.3 - Dodson
19.9 - Monti, 10.0; Petree, 9.9.	16.2 - Canty
19.4 - Griggs, 14.1; Kennebrew, 5.3.	15.8 - Matthews, 8.5; Curington, 7.3.
12.0 - Dennis, 8.9; Beeks, 3.1.	13.9 - Finley
	10.9 - Doe

October 21

25.7 - Wainwright	32.1 - Arrington
12.1 - Irvin	29.4 - I. Jackson
	21.5 - Dodson
	18.6 - Finley
	14.4 - Hunter

(Only those contests where the percentage was over 10 per cent are included.)

IX. CONCLUSION

Further elections will reveal which features of the 1969 elections represented new trends, which were remnants of a past era, and which were transitional steps toward a new politics, the character of which is not yet determined. Nevertheless, it is clear that 1969 was a turning point in Atlanta politics. The traditional form of politics was disrupted and new patterns of voting emerged. Even if in future elections there should be another alliance between blacks and upper-middle class whites superficially resembling that which existed prior to 1969, the black influence in deciding the course of action for such an alliance would almost certainly be far greater than in the past. This arrangement, of course, is only one of several possibilities for future politics in Atlanta.

Because of the significance of the 1969 elections, it is important to understand as well as possible what actually happened in this year, and perhaps it is equally important to understand what did not happen. It is hoped that the exposition in the preceding sections and the data presented in the appendixes will provide an adequate basis for such understanding. There are a few points, however, which merit further attention in this final section. The matters to be discussed here are by no means the only ones of importance in these elections, but they have been the subject of considerable confusion, judging from some of the comments heard in Atlanta after the election.

The most significant developments of the 1969 elections were: (1) the break-up of the traditional alliance between blacks and northside whites; (2) the success of blacks along with a minority of whites in determining the outcome of a number of elections, including those of mayor and vice-mayor; and (3) the increase in the number of black candidates who were elected. These events should not, however, be interpreted to mean that blacks took control of the city government, or that they displayed a narrow racist orientation in their voting behavior.

Without even considering the question of how much any official is "controlled" by those who voted him into office, the contention that blacks gained control of the city is clearly fallacious. In some elections, the black vote was decisive in electing their preferred candidate over the opposition of most white voters, but this was not true in most elections. Fifteen of 18 aldermanic and 7 of 10 school board elections were not decided in this fashion. In a number of instances, candidates with heavy black support lost, and in other elections, the winner was the leading candidate among both blacks and whites.

Altogether there were 9 blacks among the 30 officials selected in these elections. Blacks, therefore, now occupy 30 per cent of the elective offices in a city in which their proportion of the population is 49 per cent. In addition to this, 4 white candidates were elected by a majority of the black vote over the opposition of a majority of white voters. There is no question that the influence of blacks on these elections, and presumably thereby on the future operation of city government, was greater than in the past. But the results of the 1969 elections could hardly be labelled a black take-over.

Although there was a three-fold increase in the number of blacks elected to office in 1969, this was not the result of black voters displaying a single-minded determination to elect black candidates whenever possible. It is true that in several elections, black voters gave almost all their support to a black candidate running against a white candidate. But it is also true that in other instances a considerable number of blacks gave their support to the white opponent of a black candidate. The same thing was true of white voters. Sometimes they gave almost all their support to a white candidate who had black opposition, and at other times a signficant proportion of the white voters bypassed the candidate of their own race and supported a black candidate. Although there are some differences in the number of times white and black voters behaved in these ways, the differences are not great. One cannot credit or blame one group of voters for this kind of voting behavior without extending basically the same judgment to the other group.

In the mayor's election alone, the voting behavior of blacks provided considerable evidence to discredit any allegation of racism in their support of candidates. If blacks were mainly interested in electing black candidates, surely they would have demonstrated this in the election of the single most important official in the city government. But instead of voting solidly October 7 for the black candidate for mayor, slightly over half of the black voters gave their support to white candidates.

Another concern expressed by some people was over the question of bloc voting by blacks. In fact, whites also bloc voted on occasion. But there were many other instances when each group exhibited considerable division among its members over whom to support. While blacks showed a somewhat greater tendency than whites to bloc vote, blacks also demonstrated a greater tendency than whites to give such a vote to a candidate of the opposite race. Furthermore, bloc voting is sometimes a rational form of political behavior, especially when the choice of candidates involves an issue of overriding importance to all members of a group. Thus a concern about bloc voting in Atlanta should carry with that concern an awareness that all groups of voters sometimes vote in this manner, as well as the reasons why a group acts this way.

In none of the foregoing discussion was there an intention to imply judgments about the wisdom of any of the actions described. It is not the purpose of this study to suggest that one candidate was more deserving than another, nor to suggest that the behavior of one group of voters was more rational or praiseworthy than any other group. Instead, it is hoped that this study will provide the basis for making more accurate interpretations of the 1969 elections and will thereby help to avoid the formation of attitudes based on erroneous impressions of what happened in these elections.

: - :

APPENDIX A

RESULTS OF BOARD OF ALDERMEN AND BOARD OF EDUCATION ELECTIONS ON OCTOBER 7 AND OCTOBER 21

-- The figures in parentheses represent the percentage of registered voters who cast ballots.
-- Except for the city-wide total votes column, all other figures are percentages.
-- Race of candidate: B=black; W=white.
-- *=candidate was incumbent.

Board of Aldermen

Ward 1, Position 1	City-wide Pct.-Total	Black	White	N'side White	S'side White	Other White
October 21	(40.2)	(43.1)	(42.4)	(44.0)	(37.7)	(41.5)
Dodson (B)	51.3-44,294	93.5	21.5	22.0	21.2	22.1
Dennis*(W)	48.7-42,084	6.5	78.5	88.0	88.8	87.9
October 7	(31.7)	(33.0)	(34.4)
Dodson (B)	46.3-31,604	88.0	18.3
Dennis*(W)	49.2-33,614	8.9	76.9
Beeks (W)	4.5- 3,048	3.1	4.8
Ward 1, Position 2
October 7	(30.8)	(30.2)	(34.3)	(38.5)	(27.9)	(32.0)
Griggs* (W)	51.7-34,199	14.1	76.5	79.8	71.0	73.8
Kennebrew (W)	7.1- 4,663	5.3	7.7	6.6	10.4	8.4
Curington (B)	18.8-12,433	36.1	7.3	6.2	10.0	7.7
Mathews (B)	22.4-14,837	44.5	8.5	7.4	8.6	10.1
Ward 2, Position 1
October 21	(38.3)	(38.1)	(42.6)	(46.3)	(37.3)	(40.5)
Petree (W)	52.8-43,530	8.9	81.4	82.9	76.8	81.3
Finley (B)	47.2-38,923	91.1	18.6	17.1	23.2	18.7
October 7	(28.4)	(26.7)	(32.8)
Petree (W)	34.6-21,140	9.9	48.2
Finley (B)	38.4-23,510	80.1	13.9
Monti (W)	27.0-16,499	10.0	37.9

Appendix A - continued.

Ward 2, Position 2	City-wide Pct.-Total	Black	White	N'side White	S'side White	Other White
October 7	(27.1)	(24.5)	(32.0)	(36.5)	(25.1)	(29.6)
Flanigen* (W)	66.6-38,836	26.5	89.1	90.2	87.3	87.9
Doe (B)	33.4-19,510	73.5	10.9	9.8	12.7	12.1
Ward 3, Position 1
October 7	(33.1)	(38.9)	(33.3)	(38.5)	(25.4)	(30.4)
Williamson* (B)	64.0-45,519	62.6	68.6	77.8	49.4	60.8
Hunter (B)	20.2-14,388	34.3	8.0	6.8	10.6	9.0
Follette (B)	15.8-11,212	3.1	23.4	15.4	40.0	30.2
Ward 3, Position 2
October 7	(29.8)	(33.9)	(31.1)	(35.9)	(23.6)	(28.4)
Stokes (B)	50.5-32,320	44.8	58.3	68.1	38.6	49.6
McKinney (B)	25.0-16,038	37.3	14.2	10.0	24.5	16.9
Amos (B)	12.3- 7,848	11.6	12.4	9.8	15.6	15.6
Dobbs (B)	12.2- 7,840	6.3	15.1	12.1	21.3	17.9
Ward 4, Position 1
October 7	(29.1)	(26.3)	(34.3)	(37.7)	(30.2)	(31.6)
Pierce* (W)	54.5-34,111	39.0	65.3	71.9	55.2	59.4
Tumlin (W)	14.1- 8,859	31.4	5.2	4.3	7.4	5.4
Barnes (W)	12.6- 7,884	6.3	14.4	10.9	19.4	17.8
Others (W)	18.8-11,766	23.3	15.1	12.9	18.0	17.4
Ward 4, Position 2
October 7	(30.1)	(25.5)	(36.6)	(40.4)	(32.3)	(33.4)
Leftwich* (W)	56.6-36,588	16.3	77.6	81.6	69.5	75.2
Watley (B)	26.2-16,915	69.0	5.5	5.5	3.7	6.6
Jones (W)	11.0- 7,117	10.4	10.2	-	-	-
Flournoy (W)	6.2- 4,052	4.3	6.7	-	-	-

Appendix A - continued.

Ward 5, Position 1	City-wide Pct.-Total	Black	White	N'side White	S'side White	Other White
October 7	(30.2)	(26.4)	(37.2)	(43.0)	(27.5)	(34.4)
Cotsakis* (W)	66.4-43,132	58.1	72.6	75.6	63.1	71.7
Wester-gaard (W)	27.3-17,723	33.4	23.5	22.3	27.5	23.5
Lipps (W)	6.3- 4,072	8.5	4.0	2.1	9.4	4.8
Ward 5, Position 2
October 7	(28.4)	(24.8)	(34.8)	(40.5)	(26.0)	(31.5)
Fowler (W)	63.1-38,528	47.4	74.5	82.9	57.3	66.8
Walters (W)	22.3-13,619	43.1	10.6	7.3	18.4	13.0
Ecker (W)	10.5- 6,453	5.5	11.4	7.6	18.7	15.0
Pulverenti (W)	4.1- 2,494	4.0	3.5	2.2	5.6	5.2
Ward 6, Position 1
October 7	(28.4)	(23.9)	(35.6)	(40.9)	(26.5)	(33.2)
Freeman* (W)	77.3-47,129	54.0	89.1	91.1	85.3	87.2
Davis (W)	22.7-13,853	46.0	10.9	8.9	14.7	12.8
Ward 6, Position 2
October 7	(30.1)	(28.4)	(35.3)	(39.7)	(27.9)	(33.3)
Turner* (W)	73.9-47,913	85.4	65.1	59.4	78.2	68.4
Clements (W)	26.1-16,890	14.6	34.9	40.6	21.8	31.6
Ward 7, Position 1
October 7	(30.6)	(29.5)	(34.9)	(38.8)	(27.3)	(33.8)
Summers* (W)	57.5-37,867	29.6	73.5	71.7	78.9	73.8
Canty (B)	34.9-23,004	68.4	16.2	19.6	9.4	13.8
Belluso (W)	7.6- 4,971	2.0	10.3	8.7	11.7	12.4

Appendix A - continued.

Ward 7, Position 2	City-wide Pct.-Total	Black	White	N'side White	S'side White	Other White
October 21	(42.6)	(45.2)	(44.2)	(48.1)	(42.9)	(39.7)
Jackson (B)	56.5-51,750	95.5	29.4	40.3	22.9	17.0
Mundy (W)	43.5-39,875	4.5	70.6	59.7	77.1	83.0
October 7	(32.9)	(35.7)	(34.8)
Jackson (B)	32.4-22,945	48.6	24.5
Mundy (W)	22.4-15,838	1.7	35.0
Patrick (B)	13.4- 9,519	24.3	5.3
Wood (W)	10.9- 7,725	0.9	17.3
Smith (B)	9.4- 6,668	18.8	2.4
Blanton (W)	7.3- 5,189	0.5	12.0
Ware (B)	2.2- 1,588	3.8	1.2
Daniels (B)	1.9- 1,353	1.4	2.3
Ward 8, Position 1
October 7	(31.2)	(29.0)	(37.2)	(44.2)	(29.3)	(32.9)
Mitchell (W)	51.8-34,728	16.1	74.7	81.5	56.0	68.1
Reed (W)	39.9-26,740	80.1	16.5	13.6	18.3	20.8
Bryant (W)	8.3- 5,520	3.8	8.8	4.9	25.7	11.1
Ward 8, Position 2	(No opposition to incumbent Fowlkes.)
Ward 9, Position 1
October 7	(26.0)	(21.2)	(32.5)	(37.2)	(25.6)	(29.8)
Knight* (W)	60.3-33,757	55.9	60.0	55.0	68.0	65.1
Griffin (W)	39.7-22,192	44.1	40.0	45.0	32.0	34.9
Ward 9, Position 2
October 21	(38.2)	(39.2)	(42.4)	(44.9)	(36.4)	(40.8)
Arrington (B)	52.9-43,439	87.8	32.1	34.3	27.0	31.5
Irvin (W)	47.1-38,657	12.1	67.9	65.7	73.0	68.5

Appendix A - continued.

Ward 9, Position 2	City-wide Pct.-Total	Black	White	N'side White	S'side White	Other White
October 7	(27.3)	(25.4)	(32.3)
Arrington (B)	41.9-24,680	74.6	27.3
Irvin (W)	30.4-17,849	9.5	43.3
Pierce (W)	19.4-11,414	10.2	20.9
Coppeak (W)	4.6- 2,685	3.1	4.5
Swetlitz (W)	3.7- 2,177	2.5	4.0

RESULTS OF BOARD OF EDUCATION ELECTIONS ON OCTOBER 7 AND OCTOBER 21

Ward 1	City-wide Pct.-Total	Black	White	N'side White	S'side White	Other White
October 21	(38.3)	(36.9)	(43.8)	(48.6)	(36.8)	(40.9)
Cofer (W)	55.1-45,437	78.6	42.3	44.4	39.3	40.0
Cox (W)	44.9-36,990	21.4	57.7	55.6	60.7	60.0
October 7	(26.8)	(24.7)	(31.5)
Cofer (W)	46.0-26,471	69.6	34.8
Cox (W)	45.2-25,979	25.9	54.9
Pressley (W)	8.8- 5,074	4.5	10.3
Ward 2
October 7	(25.6)	(22.0)	(31.1)	(35.7)	(23.9)	(28.7)
D. Jackson (B)	45.1-24,865	74.5	28.6	24.2	37.4	32.3
Woodward* (W)	54.9-30,231	25.5	71.4	75.8	62.6	67.7
Ward 3
October 7	(30.4)	(36.3)	(30.4)	(35.3)	(22.6)	(27.8)
Embry (B)	6.1- 3,989	4.1	6.9	5.0	11.2	8.2
Quinn (B)	22.4-14,640	23.0	19.1	12.8	34.2	23.6
Yancey* (B)	71.5-46,769	72.9	74.0	82.2	54.6	68.2
Ward 4
October 7	(25.7)	(22.2)	(31.0)	(34.4)	(27.0)	(77.8)
Shell* (W)	69.8-38,535	52.1	79.7	83.6	71.1	77.8
Waller (W)	30.2-16,647	47.9	20.3	16.4	28.9	22.2

Appendix A - continued.

Ward 5	City-wide Pct.-Total	Black	White	N'side White	S'side White	Other White
October 21	(38.5)	(35.2)	(45.9)	(52.3)	(37.0)	(41.8)
Allen* (W)	45.4-37,533	26.1	51.9	43.5	66.7	59.8
Luxemburger (W)	54.6-45,149	73.9	48.1	56.5	33.3	40.2
October 7	(28.5)	(24.5)	(35.4)
Allen* (W)	41.4-25,388	28.3	44.8
Luxemburger (W)	48.6-29,799	64.9	44.7
Nicholson (W)	10.0- 6,111	6.8	10.5
Ward 6
October 7	(27.0)	(23.8)	(32.9)	(37.6)	(24.4)	(31.0)
Hines (W)	13.2- 7,686	12.9	12.4	10.3	16.9	13.9
Klein* (W)	51.1-29,671	79.4	36.8	38.3	34.5	35.3
Schilling (W)	35.7-20,697	7.7	50.8	51.4	48.6	50.8
Ward 7
October 7	(32.9)	(39.5)	(32.6)	(37.6)	(23.9)	(30.4)
Jackson (B)	10.8- 7,665	16.0	5.7	5.0	6.9	6.3
Mays (B)	66.9-47,364	82.9	56.4	65.0	38.2	49.2
Pierce (W)	22.3-15,789	1.1	37.9	30.0	54.9	44.5
Ward 8
October 7	(25.5)	(22.2)	(31.9)	(36.7)	(23.2)	(28.4)
Beebe* (W)	63.1-34,567	64.0	65.4	69.9	56.4	61.2
Hopkins (W)	36.9-20,253	36.0	34.6	30.1	43.6	38.8
Ward 9
October 7	(29.0)	(31.6)	(30.9)	(35.4)	(24.0)	(28.3)
Barrett (W)	25.1-15,631	5.5	37.7	35.9	41.4	39.2
Middleton (B)	66.1-41,196	90.8	51.5	57.0	38.7	47.8
Well (W)	8.8- 5,489	3.7	10.8	7.1	19.9	13.0

Appendix A - continued.

At-Large		City-wide Pct.-Total	Black	White	N'side White	S'side White	Other White
October 21		(37.3)	(32.0)	(44.0)	(50.2)	(37.8)	(42.0)
Hunter	(B)	34.6-27,754	74.3	14.4	13.1	14.8	14.8
Wain-wright*	(W)	65.4-52,448	25.7	85.6	86.9	85.2	85.2
October 7		(29.1)	(26.4)	(34.8)
Conrad	(W)	11.9- 7,434	12.6	11.1
Hicks	(W)	16.5-10,331	7.5	21.3
Hunter	(B)	23.7-14,801	59.5	4.2
Keys	(W)	3.5- 2,201	3.9	3.0
Wain-wright*	(W)	44.4-27,753	16.5	60.4

APPENDIX B

VOTING IN RACIALLY HETEROGENEOUS PRECINCTS: PERCENTAGE OF REGISTRANTS VOTING AND PERCENTAGE OF VOTE RECEIVED BY SELECTED CANDIDATES IN PRECINCTS WHICH ARE LESS THAN NINETY PER CENT WHITE OR BLACK

		Mayor - October 7 (In Percentages)					Mayor-October 21 (In Percentages)		Vice-Mayor-October 7
Precinct	% White	Massell	Cook	Tate	Millican	Turnout	Massell	Turnout	M. Jackson	Turnout
9J	87.5	15.9	28.4	8.3	46.2	40.4	33.2	43.3	24.8	38.1
4C	85.8	20.4	29.2	3.2	45.9	39.6	31.3	44.7	25.6	37.0
1M	84.5	14.9	25.9	14.1	42.5	42.1	37.4	48.5	29.4	39.4
9F	84.5	11.2	35.1	8.8	44.2	28.2	32.5	32.4	21.8	25.2
9M	82.0	23.6	41.2	13.5	21.4	43.2	38.8	50.9	46.3	40.4
7G	81.3	23.6	31.8	13.7	30.1	35.9	43.8	41.8	36.9	34.7
7V	79.3	21.7	30.0	20.2	27.5	36.2	38.8	41.6	42.6	35.3
7M	77.8	24.5	23.5	25.1	26.2	35.7	52.5	39.7	49.5	34.4
4AB	77.5	18.8	27.0	18.8	34.0	30.9	45.6	39.9	40.7	30.1
9G	75.1	16.2	31.8	17.3	34.1	40.9	37.3	48.3	39.8	38.1
4K	65.8	18.0	18.5	34.9	28.6	23.1	47.9	26.1	52.9	21.3
7P	64.7	26.3	21.5	36.2	15.1	47.5	61.3	50.5	66.7	46.7
1I	63.0	39.3	24.7	20.8	12.9	29.8	59.5	38.0	60.0	25.9
1F	61.5	38.4	27.8	14.7	18.2	41.1	55.0	45.1	55.8	39.1
7E	56.5	37.2	15.4	32.6	13.9	40.7	71.4	45.8	67.2	39.1
1B	53.3	31.6	17.4	22.3	26.7	32.9	65.1	40.3	54.2	31.8
7R	52.2	37.0	15.8	30.1	17.1	38.1	65.2	41.2	30.6	32.3
	% Black
1N	86.9	44.0	6.9	44.2	4.0	43.7	85.2	51.8	90.7	41.5
3I	85.8	36.5	5.4	53.3	3.3	41.9	85.8	49.4	88.4	40.7
3Q	83.7	46.8	7.0	43.3	2.9	49.1	89.8	55.2	92.9	48.0
1H	71.7	39.2	12.3	34.8	12.3	31.9	81.6	38.7	76.7	31.1
3H	70.7	38.4	9.6	44.5	5.3	44.2	82.2	48.7	85.5	42.3
9P	63.9	25.0	25.0	50.0	0.0	11.1	83.3	16.6	80.0	13.8
4N	57.3	33.3	7.9	55.4	2.9	33.7	78.5	35.4	91.4	30.8
7Q	55.1	30.7	14.6	37.8	16.1	42.1	71.7	46.3	72.5	40.5
7W	50.4	36.0	18.1	34.0	11.9	53.3	73.2	56.8	77.2	52.6

These precincts were not included in the calculations in the foregoing study. Atlanta precincts in DeKalb County are not included in this table.

F-VEP

VOTER REGISTRATION IN THE SOUTH

Spring-Summer, 1970

STATE	WHITE VAP	BLACK VAP	WHITES REGISTERED	BLACKS REGISTERED	PERCENT WHITE VAP REGISTERED	PERCENT BLACK VAP REGISTERED
ALABAMA	1,353,058	481,320	1,300,000	308,000	96.1	64.0
ARKANSAS	850,643	192,626	683,000	138,000	80.3	71.6
FLORIDA	2,617,438	470,261	2,465,000	315,000	94.2	67.0
GEORGIA	1,797,062	612,910	1,610,000	390,000	89.6	63.6
LOUISIANA	1,289,216	514,589	1,137,000	318,000	88.2	61.8
MISSISSIPPI	748,266	422,256	650,000	285,000	86.9	67.5
N. CAROLINA	2,005,955	550,929	1,598,000	302,000	79.6	54.8
S. CAROLINA	895,147	371,873	656,000	213,000	73.3	57.3
TENNESSEE	1,779,018	313,873	1,570,000*	240,000*	88.3	76.5
TEXAS	4,884,765	649,512	3,599,000	550,000	73.7	84.7
VIRGINIA	1,876,167	436,720	1,472,000	265,000	78.4	60.7
TOTALS	20,096,735	5,016,100	16,740,000	3,324,000	83.3	66.3

VAP = Voting Age Population,
1960 Census.

*Corrects overestimate in 1969 summer-fall table.

Voter Education Project, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

August, 1970

[ca. 1967??]

DEAR VEP:

Emory consulted with VJ and VJ said that Thad could pull together for EV the names, organizations, and addresses of voter registration leaders in Va., S.C., N.C., La., and Florida.

If EV could have this at 2:00 p.m. today it would be most useful.

LABOR PROGRAM

VEP

Voter Education Project

A PROGRAM OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

ROOM 206 / 5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. / ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA / TELEPHONE 525-0595

Wiley A. Branton, Project Director

Mr. Richard Miles
South Carolina Voter Education Project
1719 Taylor Street
Columbia, South Carolina

Mrs. Phyllis C. Kirkland
Florence County Voter Education Project
1017 Sopkin Avenue
Florence, South Carolina

The Reverend J. A. James
Post Office Box 466
Summerton, South Carolina

Mr. Hope Williams
President
Calhoun County Voters' League
Route 1 Box 117
Fort Motte, South Carolina

Mr. R. J. Palmer
304 South Main Street
Sumter, South Carolina

The Reverend A. W. Holman
Post Office Box 1992
Aiken, South Carolina

The Reverend I. D. Newman
2022 Taylor Street
Columbia, South Carolina

Dr. Charles H. Thomas, Jr.
Box 1778
South Carolina State College
Orangeborg, South Carolina

Mr. Ernest A. Finney, Jr.
16½ West Liberty Street
Sumter, South Carolina

Mr. E. D. Lawrence
Williamsburg County Voters League
Box 33
Kingstree, South Carolina

Voter Education Project

A PROGRAM OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

ROOM 206 / 5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. / ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA / TELEPHONE 525-0595

Wiley A. Branton, Project Director

The Reverend C. J. Whitaker
Richland County Voters' League
1514 Pine Street
Columbia, South Carolina

Mr. Esau Jenkins
Citizens Committee of Charleston County
41 Cannon Street
Charleston, South Carolina

Mr. E. L. Slade, Jr.
420 North First Street
Richmond, Virginia

Mr. David E. Brooks
423 Queen Street
Alexandria, Virginia

Mrs. Virginia Hughes
Lynchburg Voters' League
909 Fifth Street
Lynchburg, Virginia

Mr. M. W. Thornhill, Jr.
525 Smyth Street
Lynchburg, Virginia

Mr. Robert Robertson
1217 Church Street
Norfolk, Virginia

Mr. Curtis W. Langford
107 Winthrop Terrace
Hampton Virginia

Mr. James E. Dugan
423 Queen Street
Alexandria, Virginia

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tieger
Post Office Box 35
Powerville, North Carolina

Mr. Bill Bowser
Post Office Box 132
Fayetteville, North Carolina

Voter Education Project

A PROGRAM OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

ROOM 206 / 5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. / ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA / TELEPHONE 525-0595

Wiley A. Branton, Project Director

Mr. C. Elwood Boulware
Post Office Box 321
Durham, North Carolina

Mr. George P. Simkins
Post Office Box 1995
Greensboro, North Carolina

Mr. Richard Haley
2209 Dryades Street
New Orleans, Louisiana

The Reverend F. D. Kirkpatrick
Post Office Box 687
Grambling, La.

Dr. James H. Henderson
Post Office Box 866
New Iberia, La.

Mrs. George M. Brunt
2555 N. W. 159th Street
Opa-Locka, Fla.

The Reverend H. C. Calloway
6514 Hampton Road
Pensacola, Fla.

Mr. Delano S. Steward
1610 Albany Street
Tampa, Fla.

JUN 14, 1967

A STATEMENT ON THE VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

OF THE

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.

* * * * *

The Southern Regional Council launched the first Voter Education Project in 1962. A major purpose of the new undertaking was to be research into the causes of low political participation, particularly among blacks, in the South. And a major method of this research was to be the direct funding of voter registration drives in the South as a means of determining the types of difficulties encountered.

While the SRC Executive Committee felt this project to be of the first importance, it stipulated that the Council could not sponsor this effort without review and assurance from the Internal Revenue Service that this program would be in accordance with tax-exempt activity as interpreted by IRS. The Council received that assurance from IRS on March 22, 1962. In addition, of course, the Southern Regional Council has filed annual reports with IRS on this as well as all of its programs and expenditures.

SRC's first Voter Education Project began in March of 1962 and ended in the fall of 1964. As a result of these efforts, an increase in Negro registration of nearly 700,000 was recorded in 11 Southern states.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965, suspending literacy tests in six states and otherwise providing new protection for prospective black voters, substantially changed the circumstances of civic participation in the South. Accordingly, the Southern Regional Council decided to launch a second Voter Education Project.

This second VEP began work in early 1966 and remains in operation today. Research into the causes of low political participation remains a major function. Support of voter registration activities continues to be a method of determining the causes of low political participation. However, the second Voter Education Project has placed an increasing amount of emphasis on non-partisian citizenship education and leadership training programs, particularly the latter.

As Congress recognized in the adoption of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, the recent history of the South is darkly stained by the systematic exclusion of Negroes from the political process. A summary of the repressive statutes and practices which enforced this exclusion can be found in "Political Participation," published in May of 1968 by the Civil Rights Commission, and in "Climbing Jacob's Ladder," by Pat Watters and Reese Cleghorn, published by Harcourt, Brace and World in November of 1967. The latter book is largely a description of the work of the Voter Education Project. A feeling for the importance of the research activities of VEP may be gained by noting the number of citations of VEP material in the Civil Rights Commission's report.

The activities of the Voter Education Project have unquestionably brought more Negroes into the political process in the South. With the passage of the Voting Rights Act a contributing factor, the second Voter Education Project---like the first---estimates that its programs have added 700,000 blacks to the registration rolls in the South. Year-by-year progress can be seen in the following table:

INCREASES IN BLACK REGISTRATION - 11 STATES

Year	Black Registration	White Registration
1960	1,463,333	12,276,127
1962	1,480,720	12,109,680
1964	2,164,200	12,263,820
1966	2,689,000	14,309,704
1968 (Summer)	3,112,000	15,702,000

It should be noted that although black registration has risen to 62 per cent of the black voting-age population in the region, white registration stands at 78 per cent of the white voting-age population. Much remains to be done before it can be said that Negroes in the South are full partners in the regional and national political process.

The amount of money allocated for each project hardly can be described as large (although it must seem large to an organization with no other source of support). An average grant for voter registration runs between $1,000 and $2,000. The allocation generally covers a period running from one to two months.

A grant letter is sent to the local organization (see attached sample) which sets out in unequivocal terms that the money is to be used only for non-partisan voter education and voter registration and may not be put to any partisan or other use, and specifically not to serve any political campaign. The grant letter is followed by a research letter which sets our reporting requirements. Organizations receiving funds are required to submit both financial and status reports weekly. These reports are reviewed in the VEP office in Atlanta. All money spent must be accounted for precisely.

Money is supplied on a cash-draw basis. No lump-sum grants are given. This furnishes VEP with a means of cutting off support instantly when a report indicates partisan activities or any other irregularity.

In addition to all this, VEP employs a full-time field director. The field director makes both announced and unannounced visits to all projects receiving VEP support. The field director also visits projects prior to funding to determine that they qualify for support. Non-partisanship is a major item checked by the field director in these on-the-spot inspections.

It should be pointed out that VEP does not endeavor to pay the entire cost of voter registration activities in the South. Local organizations, to the extent possible, are expected to raise funds of their own, particularly in urban areas. Candidates and others directly connected with political campaigns are not permitted to hold positions of responsibility in VEP-supported registration activities or in any way utilize VEP-supported projects, funds or facilities in aid of their own campaigns. While VEP has never found instances of partisan activity to warrant terminating a grant, several grants have been discontinued on other grounds.

Registration activities are not limited to blacks. Several projects have involved registration of Indians and Mexican-Americans. A few projects have reported registering some white Southerners. Relevant to the last point, however, is the fact that white registration in most of the South already is quite high.

The weekly reports are the backbone of VEP research. It is through these reports that VEP learns of difficulties Negroes continue to encounter in their attempts to register and vote in the South. Directors of voter registration projects supply the research department with a wide variety of facts and figures relating to Negro political participation in the South. VEP is the central point of such information by government, the press, scholars and universities, publications, research organizations, authors, and foreign visitors.

As already mentioned, the registration drives provide tremendous amounts of information and knowledge that otherwise would not be available. For many years, the Southern Regional Council has been the main source of information about black registration and voting in the South. Because several states have discontinued publication of registration figures by race, these local registration drives have become increasingly important in arriving at registration figures by race. The Voter Education Project continues to be the main source of this information.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

During the last three years, VEP has held a number of seminars, workshops and conferences for candidates and officeholders.

We have felt that black candidates and black officeholders, like black voters, have been so long denied a part in the political process that these special educational programs were warranted and, indeed, necessary.

The seminars and conferences are restricted to discussions of the duties and responsibilities of candidates and/or officeholders. Discussion of campaign techniques and strategy, of how to get elected, etc. is not permitted. Incidentally, VEP has consistently rejected requests for funds for get-out-the-vote activities and has cautioned grant recipients against using VEP funds for this purpose. Similarly, we have felt that the new voters should be informed about the government they now are helping elect, and that is the basis for the programs in the field of citizenship education.

As the number of black elected officeholders in the South climbed rapidly toward 400 last year, VEP scheduled the first South-wide Conference of Black Elected Officials. The conference was held in Atlanta last December with approximately 200 black elected officials attending. With the total number of black elected officials now standing at about 460, VEP has set up service centers for elected officials at five predominantly black colleges in the South. Although these centers now serve mostly black officials, we look forward to the day when they will be serving officials of any race who need technical and research advice. The centers may be compared, in terms of techniques and approach to the problems of government, with the Institutes of Government of the Universities of North Carolina and Georgia.

FINANCES

The Voter Education Project is but one of the many programs conducted by the Southern Regional Council, but it is the largest. Although VEP continues to receive small gifts from individuals, the bulk of funds comes from foundations.

Between 1966 and 1968 VEP received $1,163,446. Foundations which gave $2,500 or more each during this period include Aaron Norman, Abelard, Field, Ford, Irwin-Sweeney-Miller, Mary Reynolds Babcock, New World, New York, Rockefeller Brothers, Robert E. Moton Memorial and Taconic.

Grants for 403 programs, most of which involved voter registration totaled $736,956.70, for an average of approximately $1,830 per grant. The rest of the expenditures went for publications research and consultants, scholarships, student interns, meetings and seminars (including the Southwide Conference), and salaries and administration.

The first Voter Education Project (1962-64) received $870,371. Principal supporters were Taconic Foundation, Field Foundation, and the Edgar Stern Family Fund.

CONCLUSION

The Voter Education Project was formed as a result of widespread urgings from many concerned persons and groups, including high government officials, particularly in the Justice Department, that the energies of the sit-ins and freedom rides of the early '60s be channeled also into voter registration and citizenship education. It should be noted that there was some resistance within youthful civil rights circles to this development, the objection being that the idea sounded like an "Establishment" effort to blunt the thrust of activist undertakings.

It is true that the voter registration, citizenship education and leadership training programs have sought to bring black Southerners into the political process as a means of correcting the injustices that black people have historically suffered. The registration of thousands and the election of scores of black people have given many blacks in the South some hope of improving their lives through the existing political structure.

The Voter Education Project is the only organization conducting such programs on a region-wide basis. VEP could not have undertaken its task without foundation support. Without foundation support, VEP could not have existed. And without VEP, the black registration in the South would be substantially less than it is today.

Yet, as already pointed out, much remains to be done. Some two million voting-age Negroes in the South have not been registered to vote. Gradually, there are signs that white officeholders are responding to the needs of black voters. There are encouraging signs, here and there across the South, that blacks and whites can work together in the councils of government.

In large part these gains were made possible through voter registration, which in turn was made possible in large part through foundation support. To continue and sustain these gains will require a continuing effort, which in turn hinges upon continued foundation support. Gradually white Southerners are becoming accustomed to Negroes as a part of the political process. To roll back that trend now would be tragic. Discontinuance of foundation funds for voter registration, coupled with the prospective expiration of the Voting Rights Act, would surely halt and reverse the trend toward full political participation in the South.

Sustained registration campaigns are needed to test the willingness of Southern registrars to follow non-discriminatory procedures (especially if the Voting Rights Act is not extended). However, most black people in the South are poor and can scarcely meet their daily needs. A few communities would be able to raise local funds to finance a voter registration campaign, but most would not. For all practical purposes, voter registration in the South would grind to a halt without foundation support.

In the years after Reconstruction came a dark period called Redemption. During this period, white Southerners turned back the clock and reasserted their control over the lives of black people. Tragic and bloody years followed, and the nation is still undoing the damage. Total exclusion of blacks from the political process was a major factor in that Redemption period.

A second Redemption is unthinkable if the region---and the nation---is to survive as a multi-racial society.

Approved by the Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council, Inc.
in Executive Session, June 14, 1969
Atlanta, Georgia

(List of members appended)

A STATEMENT BY THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE RE. HR 13270

(A SUMMARY OF CONTENTS)

I. INTRODUCTION

(A) Agreement with Proper Restrictions on Tax-exempt Funds

(B) Agreement with Correction of Abuses

II. CONCERN WITH 7½% TAX ON FOUNDATION INCOME

III. CONCERN WITH AFFECT OF "ANY ATTEMPT TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION THROUGH AN ATTEMPT TO AFFECT THE OPINIONS OF THE GENERAL PUBLIC OR ANY SEGMENT THEREOF."

(A) Ruling on Supreme Court of Georgia on this Point as Regards the Southern Regional Council

IV. CONCERN WITH THE LIMITATION OF NO MORE THAN 25% SUPPORT FROM ONE FOUNDATION

V. CONCERN WITH THE AFFECT OF GRANTEES FROM FOUNDATION EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY

(A) Inability Under the Bill for Small Foundations to Provide Support

(B) Disastrous Results of Excessive Supervision of Grantees from Large Foundations

CONCLUSION

Sep 11, 1969

A STATEMENT BY THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE RE. HR 13270

-o-

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Committee:

Thank you for this opportunity to be heard. As Executive Director, I represent the Southern Regional Council an organization formed in 1944 for the purpose of contributing generally to the development of the region and more specifically to race relations within the region and the nation. Our five incorporators were Bishop Arthur Moore of Georgia; the late Dr. Howard Odum of the University of North Carolina; the late Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University; the late Dr. Charles Johnson, president of Fisk University; and the late Mr. Ralph McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution. The Council consists of one hundred distinguished Southerners, black and white, Protestant, Catholic and Jew. There is maintained in Atlanta an office and a staff of approximately forty persons. As indicative of our interests we have on that staff, or use as consultants, specialists in urban planning, manpower resources, health and nutrition, community organization, and related areas. We emphasize in our work research and publication on those matters which we feel most pertinent to the region. We also sponsor special projects such as the Voter Education Project, which has been the subject of some interest to the Congress in the formation of this bill.

Our concern about HR 13270 arises from our belief that the bill before you jeopardizes a valuable and unique operation by which our society is served. That operation is the partnership which has been created between private tax-exempt foundations and private tax-exempt agencies. We are confident this partnership has been to the public good. And, it is important that a significant part of the needs and the stimulation of the private sector are served by private funds, under private control, apart from the undue involvement of government.

Before we cite those particulars of the bill which most concern us, we should like to make two general observations:

(1) For twenty-five years the Southern Regional Council has recognized that we enjoyed the benefit of tax-exempt funds in proper exchange for certain restrictions on the use of those funds. For instance, our implementation of the requirement that no substantial portion of our efforts be partisan has been to attempt to see that no portion of our activity is political. We have attempted to operate within the spirit of the law as well as the letter of the law. We are confident this is true of many other agencies. We do not appear before you to request that the existing regulations and laws which have created this method of operation and our reasoning be altered.

(2) It may be that the present tax laws have allowed individuals and groups to abuse those laws by creating so-called "foundations" for personal gain rather than to serve the public interest. We believe the Congress is justified in seeking to stop those abuses. Our concern is that honorably conceived and legally operated foundations -- and those whom they support -- not be punished and unduly restricted because of activities of others.

Our particular concerns with HR 13270 are as follows:

(1) Sec. 306 - Tax on Private Foundation Investment Income.

While the precedent may be ominous, the proposed 7½% tax probably would neither significantly alter foundation operations nor add substantially to the public treasury. The true effect would be to reduce by 7½% those funds available to the private agencies. These private tax-exempt groups are, therefore, those really being taxed. This must be recognized by those who believe that there are limitations on the capability of the public sector and that there is, therefore, an important role for private agencies.

(2) Sec. 4945(c)(1) - Taxes on Taxable Expenditures.

It is extremely important to note that this section of the bill removes from the current Internal Revenue Service regulations the requirements that no substantial part of a tax-exempt organization's resources be used in partisan political activity or in support of a candidate for office. Rather, there is substituted excessive stipulations to preclude any political activity.

We have been told this has been done because some tax-exempt agencies have abused the present regulations by engaging in substantial partisan political activity. These abuses may have occurred. But, if they have it has not been because of the inadequacy of current laws and regulations, but rather because of the failure of adequate enforcement of those laws and regulations.

* * *

While we subscribe completely to the concept that tax-exempt funds should not be used for partisan purposes, we are gravely concerned, for instance, by the wording in the proposed legislation, "any attempt to influence legislation through an attempt to affect the opinion of the general public or any segment thereof,..."

Literally interpreted, we believe this provision would prevent responsible agencies now engaged in serious research and publishing from making any meaningful comments on the society in which we operate. We assume, for instance, that at best the Council could publish statistics on migration from the region, but not offer opinions on the causes or impact of that migration. We assume that, at best, we could publish a medical report on hunger and malnutrition, but not offer remedial proposals. We assume we could publish statistics on black-white registration, but not offer any analysis of processes which affected that registration. We would not expect, and do not request, that we be allowed to propose specific legislation nor to support or oppose legislation being considered. However, under the provisions of this bill we assume that regardless of the effort and integrity we invest in forming them, we could not share our opinions with "the general public or any segment thereof."

It is in the public interest that agencies such as the Southern Regional Council be allowed not only to collect information but analyze and comment on that information. Our publications have been used extensively by the media, by scholars and others, and they have figured in the deliberations of the Congress. This contribution to public consideration and to public debate is, we believe, not only valuable, but non-partisan.

We have been upheld by the courts of Georgia in that opinion. In 1963 the Georgia Department of Labor informed the Council that we had been held taxable by virtue of their interpretation that we had a point of view, shared it with the public, and, thereby, engaged in "propaganda" and influenced legislation.

In Court, the State readily accepted the fact that the Council did not lobby, did not support or oppose any specific legislation, nor any candidate for public office. Rather, the State introduced as evidence a collection of Council publications and rested its case on the statement of the executive director that these publications were circulated to the general public.

The Superior Court found in favor of the Council and that decision was appealed to the Supreme Court of the State of Georgia. That Court unanimously upheld the decision of the lower court. We would like to quote the following statement from the Court's decision, Williamson vs SRC, Inc., 223 Ga. 179:

> "If the word 'propaganda' is given the broad meaning that it is any dissemination of ideas, then no religious or educational institution could qualify under Code Anno. 54-657(h)(7)(H), since a substantial part of the activities of such institutions is the dissemination of ideas and beliefs. Under the constitutionally protected right of freedom of speech, an organization cannot be penalized for disseminating ideas and beliefs which are not opposed to our system of government, even though such ideas may not meet with the approval of all of the people in the area in which they are advanced."

* * *

We submit that the process of public dialogue and the dissemination of ideas is essential in a democracy. We submit, further, that such dialogue should be especially encouraged, not prohibited, by organizations that have established themselves in that society.

(3) Sec. 4945(d)

We are grateful that the report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives specifically recognized the Council as an agency which could -- subject to the information they had available -- engage in programs in support of voter registration.

Within this section of the bill, however, and perhaps more importantly elsewhere in the bill, there are requirements that certain programs can receive no more than 25% of their support from any one source. There are implications to this stiuplation which may not be readily apparent.

The most important of these are:

(a) There are still relatively few foundations which are willing to support programs of social reform. These foundations and the programs they have supported should be commended, not discouraged, for venturing substantially into new areas since frequently these programs -- like the Council's Voter Education Project which could not have come into existence under this provision -- have made an important contribution to the public welfare.

(b) Occasionally an unusually imaginative foundation has had the courage and foresight to support exclusively, or almost exclusively, a new group which has promise and a sound idea. We know of a number of now established agencies -- many of which now enjoy the financial support of federal, state, or local governments -- which would not be in existence had one foundation been limited to providing no more than 25% of a beginning budget.

Subject to other proper considerations, there is no more rationale to restricting a foundation to a maximum of 25% support for a deserving effort than restricting an agency of the federal government to the same limitation on any publicly funded program.

(4) Sec. 4945(f) - Expenditure Responsibility

This section would require that foundations be "fully responsible" for the use of grants made. While the three requirements under this section would, on the surface, seem to be reasonable, there are serious consequences to these requirements if they are literally enforced. We believe the enforcement of the three requirements of this section of the bill would be severely damaging to foundations and cause recipients to loose a substantial degree of their independence and autonomy. It would also probably mean that the smaller foundations would have to cease giving to those affected by this provision, since they have neither the staff nor the resources to meet these requirements.

Please do not misunderstand us. We are for the full and complete reporting on the use of tax-exempt funds. During the 25 years of our existence the great majority of our support has come from foundations. During the current year the Council will receive support from at least fourteen foundations totalling more than a million dollars. During all this time and dealing with foundations, large and small, we have never known an instance where a foundation staff did not satisfy itself beforehand as to the pertinence of our request and our competence to administer any funds granted. Nor, have we known of an instance where this process was not further reviewed by the foundation board. Further, we always at least annually issue a full audit of our expenditures and a complete report on our activities for the foundations and other interested parties.

However, the current situation is that the Internal Revenue Service is charged with determining whether or not an agency is tax-exempt and this serves as a guide to foundations. Earlier, we made a request to the IRS regarding our own process of granting funds to other agencies and in a letter dated March 22, 1960 the IRS stated:

(1) "If you make a distribution of your funds to an organization which presently has exemption as a charitable or educational organization described in Section 501(c)(3) of the Code, there is no further obligation on your part to satisfy yourself as to the use of the funds distributed.

(2) "Contributions made by you to organizations, which have not established an exempt status for Federal income tax purposes, will not jeopardize your exempt status if the contributions are made and used only for one or more of the exempt purposes specified in Section 501(c)(3) of the Code. In such an event you should use reasonable care in ascertaining that the contributions will be used only for an exempt purpose and you will be able to substantiate that fact if called upon to do so by the Internal Revenue Service."

We submit this is a workable and efficient method. The burden of requiring foundations to be "fully responsible," as interpreted in the bill, would be harmful to all concerned.

Small foundations, with small staff, do not now generally give to non-tax-exempt agencies because they do not have the resources for the necessary supervision, and few large foundations make such grants because the requirements are too burdensome. Under this bill, small foundations would likely have to treat currently exempt organizations as they have non-tax-exempt ones in the past; simply removing them from their list of potential recipients of funds.

Equally disastrous, from the standpoint of all concerned, large foundations would probably have to be so vigorous in complying with these provisions,including their own on-the-spot staff supervision and auditing of their funds being spent, that they would in effect become the supervising grantee as well as the grantor. It is not an exaggeration to state that under these conditions, the independent tax-exempt agency staffs become employees of the donating foundations and the boards of those tax-exempt agencies become bystanders. We urge you to give the most serious consideration to the implications of this situation.

In conclusion, we believe it most important to stress that this bill, as it relates to foundations and those whom foundations support, is widely regarded to be punitive against those agencies and those foundations dealing with social reform, poverty, and minority affairs.

There are those agencies, of which the Southern Regional Council is one, that have attempted not only to contribute to the general welfare but to bring into reality the potential and the promise of this nation for all of our people. In a sense, it could be said we occupy the middle ground; recognizing need, tragedy and aspirations on the one hand, and holding on the other hand a deep faith in the ability of this society and this government to be the means by which wrongs can be corrected and the wholesome society created.

In this critical time of crisis, polarization and misunderstanding we urge you, do not cripple -- as this bill would -- those agencies which, with increasing difficulty, are attempting to occupy that middle ground where the faith remains that the capabilities and intent of our government and our society can be equal to our promises.

Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council

September 11, 1969

ATTACHMENTS:

1. Members of the Council
2. A Statement of Purpose
3. A Statement on the Voter Education Project

Oral Summary Testimony Before the Senate Finance Committee, October 8, 1969

by: Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council
Atlanta, Georgia

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Committee:

Thank you for this opportunity to be heard.

As Executive Director, I represent the Southern Regional Council, a body of 100 distinguished Southerners. With me are Mr. Joseph Haas, our legal counsel and Mr. Vernon Jordan, director of the Council's Voter Education Project.

Recognizing the demands made on you I shall be very brief. However, since our funds are supplied almost exclusively by foundations, we are very concerned about the bill before you.

Before citing our specific concerns I should like to make two observations:

(1) For twenty-five years the Southern Regional Council has recognized that we enjoyed the benefit of tax-exempt funds in proper exchange for certain restrictions on the use of those funds. We have attempted to operate within the spirit as well as the letter of the law. We do not appear before you to request that the existing regulations and laws which have created this method of operation and our reasoning be altered.

(2) It may be that the present tax laws have allowed individuals to abuse those laws by creating so-called "foundations" for personal gain. We believe the Congress is justified in seeking to stop those abuses. Our concern is that honorably conceived and legally operated foundations -- and those whom they support -- not be punished and unduly restricted because of activities of others.

Among our specific concerns are:

Sec. 4945(c)1

The wording that prohibits an agency from engaging "in any attempt to influence legislation through an attempt to affect the opinion of the general public or any segment thereof," disturbs us greatly. That our own publications are properly a part of the dissemination of ideas in a free society and are not an attempt to directly influence legislation has been upheld by the Georgia courts. We feel that this bill is drawn too broadly. Literally interpreted, the provision in the proposed legislation would prevent responsible agencies now engaged in serious research and publishing from making meaningful comments on the society. This is incompatible with a democratic society.

Sec. 4945(d)

This section includes the provision that under certain circumstances a foundation could provide no more than 25% of an agency's support. We know of a number of outstanding and worthy institutions that would not be in existence had this been the law. We believe the sole criteria for grant-making should be the program's legality and merit, and the ability of those connected with it to properly administer the funds.

Sec. 4945(f)

This section requires foundations to be "fully responsible" for grants made. While the three requirements would seem to be reasonable on the surface, there are serious consequences here. It is conceivable that the enforcement of this provision would require such stringent supervision of grants made that private agency staff would in effect become employees of the foundations and their policy leaders merely onlookers. We urge you to give serious consideration to these implications.

In conclusion, we believe it most important to stress that this bill, as it relates to foundations and those whom foundations support, is widely regarded to be punitive against those agencies and those foundations dealing with social reform, poverty, and minority affairs.

There are those agencies, of which the Southern Regional Council is one, that have attempted not only to contribute to the general welfare but to bring into reality the potential and the promise of this nation for all of our people. In a sense, it could be said we occupy the middle ground; recognizing need, tragedy, and aspirations on the one hand, and holding on the other hand a deep faith in the ability of this society and this government to be the means by which wrongs can be corrected and the wholesome society created.

In this critical time of crisis, polarization and misunderstanding we urge you, do not cripple -- as this bill would -- those agencies which, with increasing difficulty, are attempting to occupy that middle ground where the faith remains that the capabilities and intent of our government and our society can be equal to our promises.

STATEMENT OF:
VERNON E. JORDAN, JR.
DIRECTOR, VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

NOT FOR RELEASE PRIOR
TO 3:00 P. M. THURSDAY
OCTOBER 30, 1969

==========

The Southern Regional Council has had a Voter Education Project since 1962. The primary purpose of this project is to give those vast numbers of black people who have been denied the ballot an opportunity to become a part of the political process in the South. During all of this time we have looked to Washington as a friend. Many times we have reported our difficulties to the federal government and called upon it for help. As Director of the Voter Education Project, I am here with several black elected officials from the South to protest the grave threat to black political participation raised by an action of the Senate Finance Committee.

Today we see the friend turning upon us and becoming an ally of the racists we confront daily in the South.

Earlier this week the Senate Finance Committee placed in its version of the tax reform bill a prohibition against tax-exempt funds being used for voter registration. This is not a tax reform action. It neither adds to nor reduces the public treasury. Nor is it a measure that will prevent partisan political activity. Black people, like all other citizens, vote self-interest and frequently Southern blacks have to vote survival. This action of the Senate Finance Committee is a punitive measure. It favors those who profit from a restricted electorate and who fear the judgement which might come from truly democratic processes.

Statement - 2

We maintain that encouraging the largest number of citizens to participate in and thereby strengthen the democratic process is as beneficial and is as essential to American society as medical research, libraries, or any recognized charity. For Senators of the United States to go on record as denying this fact is a national tragedy.

It is distressing that many congressmen appear not to have thought the issue through. Willingly or unwillingly, those who support this measure without thinking of its implications align themselves with those backward forces in the South who, from racist motives or inhuman callousness, have long opposed the black vote.

Why is foundation money being singled out in this prohibition against the financing of voter registration drives? It is because blacks and members of certain other minorities must depend upon foundation funds to overcome the weight of centuries during which public monies and public offices were used in open efforts to deny them the ballot.

The rich and those of the middle-class do not need foundation money to help them. This legislation is directed accurately and in deadly fashion against those who need help.

Make no mistake about it: Black people in the South cannot continue to make the sort of registration gains they need to make without organized registration programs. And make no mistake about it: These organized registration drives would not have existed, and cannot exist, without generous foundation support. Black people in the South, being for the most part extremely poor, cannot raise among themselves the sort of money it takes to conduct registration programs for the poor and disadvantaged who must overcome decades of oppression. Make no mistake about it: If this action of the Senate Finance Committee is allowed to stand, registration work among black people in the South will come to a virtual standstill.

There are many people in the nation today--young whites as well as blacks--who feel that the American political system is not really open to their aspirations. There are many who will see in this action of the Senate Finance Committee a determination to slam shut the door to political participation which only in the last few years has been opened to black people in the South. There is much political alienation in the land today, and this Committee action would enormously increase that alienation. If that occurs, no amount of tax revenue raised by this bill or any other bill would offset the political and social damage to America.

With a deep sense of indignity, with a deep commitment to democracy, and with a determination that black people will find freedom through an open political system, we come to Washington today to oppose the action of the Senate Finance Committee. We are here to denounce that action and to appeal to the Committee to reconsider this incredible decision.

Check the class of service desired; otherwise this message will be sent as a fast telegram

TELEGRAM
DAY LETTER
NIGHT LETTER

S

E

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

1206 (4-55)

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

Check the class of service desired; otherwise the message will be sent at the full rate

FULL RATE
LETTER TELEGRAM
SHORE-SHIP

NO. WDS.-CL. OF SVC.	PD. OR COLL.	CASH NO.	CHARGE TO THE ACCOUNT OF	TIME FILED
			SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.

Send the following message, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W.

THE EDITOR
c/o LETTERS TO THE EDITOR DEPARTMENT
THE WASHINGTON POST
1515 "L" STREET, N. W.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

NOVEMBER 3, 1969

WE ARE DISTURBED BY YOUR EDITORIAL OF SUNDAY ABOUT THE TAX REFORM BILL,WHICH SEEMED TO GIVE BLANKET APPROVAL TO THOSE PORTIONS OF THE BILL WHICH NOW HAVE EMERGED FROM THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

ON MAY 18, YOU DEPLORED A PROVISION IN THE TAX REFORM BILL WHICH WOULD PROHIBIT FOUNDATIONS FROM "ENGAGING IN ACTIVITIES DIRECTLY AFFECTING POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS." THEN YOU NOTED THAT THE LANGUAGE CONTAINED MORE THAN MET THE EYE, AND ADDED: "STRIPPED OF ITS FINERY, IT IS DISCLOSED AS AN ATTEMPT TO FORBID THE VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVES WHICH PRODUCED SUCH STUNNING POLITICAL UPSETS IN CLEVELAND AND A FEW OTHERER PLACES UP NORTH AND ALL OVER THE SOUTH, WHERE ONLY WHITE FOLKS USED TO GO TO THE POLLS.... VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVES ARE DIRECTED MAINLY AT THE POOR AND THE UNEDUCATED -- AND

MOST OF ALL, OBVIOUSLY, AT HITHERTO DISFRANCHISED NEGROES. THE PURPOSE OF THESE DRIVES IS TO ENLARGE PARTICIPATION IN THE DEMOCRATIC PROCESS."

AMONG THE PORTIONS OF THE BILL WHICH WERE FINALLY APPROVED LAST WEEK BY THE FINANCE COMMITTEE WAS ONE WHICH DOES NOT EVEN HAVE TO BE "STRIPPED OF ITS FINERY" IN ORDER THAT ITS IMPORT MAY BE KNOWN. IT SPECIFICALLY PROHIBITS THE USE OF FOUNDATION MONEY FOR VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVES.

THIS BEING THE CASE, WE DO NOT UNDERSTAND HOW THE POST CAN NOW GIVE BLANKET APPROVAL OF THE TAX REFORM PROPOSALS WHICH NOW HAVE EMERGED FROM THE FINANCE COMMITTEE. YOUR EDITORIAL SUNDAY DEALT ENTIRELY WITH THE TRUE TAX REFORM ASPECTS OF THE TAX BILL. WHAT WE ARE CONCERNED ABOUT IS NOT TAX REFORM, BUT A MATTER WHICH IN REALITY HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH TAX REFORM BUT WHICH IS IN THE TAX

REFORM BILL. WE HEARTILY APPROVE OF TAX REFORM EFFORTS. WE STRONGLY DEPLORE YOUR APPROVAL, AT LEAST BY IMPLICATION, OF ASPECTS OF THE BILL WHICH YOU EARLIER HAD CALLED "QUITE DISCRIMINATORY" AND HAD RIGHTLY CALLED NOT A REFORM EFFORT BUT A REVENGE EFFORT. WE WISH THAT IN SOME SUBSEQUENT EDITORIAL YOU WOULD CLARIFY WHETHER YOUR POSITION ON THAT PART OF THE BILL HAS INDEED CHANGED. WE ASSUME IT HAS NOT, BUT THE EDITORIAL OF SUNDAY LEAVES THE IMPRESSION THAT IT HAS.

PAUL ANTHONY
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Kirkland on Panel For Foundations

Lane Kirkland, executive assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, has been named to a commission of leaders in various areas of national life who will take part in a study of private foundations.

The commission, composed of 14 members with more to be named later, will try to determine how increasing government involvement in social welfare programs will affect the foundations. It also will consider their tax-exempt status.

Peter G. Peterson, board chairman of Bell & Howell Co., set up the commission at the urging of John D. Rockefeller III and other philantrophists.

AFL-CIO News

5/3/69

EV

THE FIELD FOUNDATION
100 EAST 85TH STREET • NEW YORK, N.Y. 10028
212/535-9915

June 9, 1969

Dear Paul:

I thought you might like to have a copy of the enclosed letter from the Foundation to Congressman Mills. We would be interested in any comments you may have on these matters.

With very best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Leslie W. Dunbar

Enc.

Mr. Paul Anthony, Executive Director
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

THE FIELD FOUNDATION
100 EAST 85TH STREET • NEW YORK, N.Y. 10028
212/535-9915

June 9, 1969

Representative Wilbur D. Mills
Chairman
Ways and Means Committee
United States House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Mills:

The Field Foundation has had a keen interest in the consideration being given this year to the tax status and program regulation of foundations. We have studied the "tentative decisions" released by the Committee on May 27. These complement the Administration's views, as expressed by Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Cohen in his presentation of April 25, 1969. Both convey a strong sense of the need for a closer scrutiny of the structures and practices of foundations.

We concur in that general view and, for example, endorse completely that proposal set forth in detail under the heading "Disclosure and Publicity Requirements."

On the other hand, we disagree strongly with the direction apparently being taken by the Committee and the Administration in two areas.* First, we think taxation of foundations would be unwise and inappropriate; and second, that restriction on voter registration and activity intended "to influence the decision of any governmental body" would harm the country's democratic processes and violate a long tradition of private, voluntary, initiative in the social and economic fields.

We would like to explain briefly why we hope that Congress will not adopt these proposals, and we shall do so by reference to beliefs that we have learned from the experience of this Foundation over a period of more than 25 years. A recent meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors (June 4, 1969) gave us an opportunity to review these beliefs, and this letter is, accordingly, sent to you to express the convictions of that meeting.

---

* We have also reservations about the proposals for requiring intermediaries between foundations and individual grantees, and may at a later date wish to comment on these.

Let us state at the outset our acknowledgment that Congress has full power to establish the conditions under which foundations may exist and act. Foundations are subject to the will of legislative bodies, and in particular of Congress. We believe this fact emphasizes the necessity of Congress regulating foundations only in ways that are consistent with the pruposes for which foundations do exist.

American society is characterized by a profusion of institutions. Many of them are non-governmental and voluntary, and do not in similar form exist in other societies, where far more social activity is directed and monopolized by governments. Private, voluntary, activity can not only supplement government's role in this country, but is frequently innovative and serves for a pilot in measured programs which government can adopt or reject without itself making big and costly trials.

We believe that Congress should distinguish between useful regulations and those which would end or severely hamper the basic purposes of foundations. Specifically, we suggest that the tax and the program regulations mentioned above would end or curtail accustomed social practices and would thereby in appreciable measure increase the dependence of citizens on the national government.

As we see it, very nearly all of the purposes of foundations can be included under two headings:

- the support of objectives that serve the public welfare and those which government has not chosen to pre-empt,

- the support of responsible criticism and evaluation of governmental programs and offices.

The "tentative decisions" announced on May 27 would prohibit voter registration by grantees of foundations.* Surely Congress must believe that voter registration work by responsible groups is publicly valuable. Surely Congress could undertake the task itself, through the instrumentalities of the executive branch. Is Congress prepared to do so? If not, why would it choose to prohibit foundations from supporting this effort to make our democracy work better? Is it not unseemly for this, of all the many foundation program activities, to be singled out for specific prohibition, when this activity has meant so much to the previously unregistered citizens whose participation as voters is an agreed national goal?

---

* By foundations acting directly also. So far as we know, however, no foundation is directly engaging in voter registration or voter education work, nor wants to be. If Congress thinks this a possible development, we would not oppose its prohibition.

Starting in early 1962 and continuing, with the omission of but one year, to the present, the Field Foundation has made annual grants to the Southern Regional Council for its Voter Education Project. Altogether, these grants have totalled $1 million. In our most recent action (November 1968) we indicated to the Southern Regional Council that we would be prepared to consider three further annual renewals. The Council uses our grants and those of other contributors to the Voter Education Project to sustain the work of many, many groups of citizens throughout the South, people in their home communities groping their way after centuries of oppression and discrimination into fulfillment of their constitutional rights and obligations. Through the educational programs of the Voter Education Project, hundreds of thousands of citizens have registered and have undertaken the duties that inhere in a democracy. If there are abuses in present or future work, they can be adequately guarded against now by enforcement of existing prohibitions of Sec. 501 (c) (3).

We find little comfort in the May 27 statement qualifying the prohibition by limiting it (apparently) to "activities intended to influence the outcome of any election." It would be all too easy for unsympathetic administrators to link up any voter registration work to an intent to influence an election, or at least to put on the private group the burden of proving the opposite. We find it hard to see why any voter registration, at any time, in any place, for any motive, is not in the public interest, and we would exclude foundation support from only those voter registration drives which make an overt appeal to partisan interests.

The further statement of this section that, "no private foundation is to be permitted to directly or indirectly engage in any activities intended... to influence the decision of any governmental body (whether or not such activity is substantial)," is, if anything, of even more concern to us.

We cannot believe that the Committee intends this. Such a prohibition would (to mention only some of this Foundation's concerns) stop litigation in behalf of constitutional and statutory rights carried on by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund; would have prevented the exposure of the inadequacies of the National School Lunch Program made by the National Council of Catholic Women and several other women groups; would cripple or end the experimental law enforcement programs of the Vera Institute of Justice; would even have questioned the carefully prepared recommendations made in the early 1960s by the Child Welfare League on day care services; and would likewise cloud many other activities including studies directly sponsored in 1961-62 by this Foundation, at the request of former Secretary Ribicoff, of child care practices and public welfare. For Congress to choose to go down this road is for it to choose that responsible criticism is to be drastically limited and that resort to the courts for settlement of disputes between governmental bodies and individuals is to be impeded.

We can only conclude that these were indeed "tentative" reactions, growing from the Committee's deep concern over the power and influence which relatively autonomous bodies of wealth - in many cases large and in some cases huge wealth - can have on the polity. We think that this is a legitimate concern and, as said above, we find much of the Committee's program to be meritorious. Some of its measures can go far to remove any capacity for harm which foundations may now have.

Nevertheless, we would go even farther here than has the Committee or the Administration, and farther, in fact, than all members of this Foundation were before a few years past prepared to go, until led to it by continuous reflection on the experiences of a quarter century. Foundations are self-perpetuating and frequently continuing bodies, and thereby the preferences of founders can outlast their usefulness or relevance to social needs. Precisely because the largest purpose of foundations is to share with government in the task of serving the public welfare, this structure poses fundamental issues. We would resolve those issues by saying that foundations should have a finite life, perhaps lasting at the most no more than two or three generations. Congress might well consider applying to foundations the common law Rule Against Perpetuities. There is ample Anglo-American legal tradition against the dead hand of the past influencing the indefinite future.

It is within this context that we urge that the Committee's and the Administration's proposal to tax the income of foundations be not enacted. Foundations do not exist as a source of revenue, but of philanthropy. In our own view, the problem is not that foundations contribute nothing to the public treasury - which they were never intended to do - but that they contribute insufficiently to present day social and educational causes.

The Foundation Center estimates that at the end of 1968 foundations had combined assets of $20.5 billion and were making annual grants of $1.5 billion, or about 7% of assets. If only those foundations were considered whose assets consisted primarily of endowments, the percentage would have been much less. We think this is not enough, and that foundations - notwithstanding the terms of charters or of donors' wills - should be granting (over and above administrative costs) much more - not less, perhaps, than 10% of the market value of their assets each year.

To implement our view that foundations should not exist in perpetuity, we suggest that Congress might require that grants be of such magnitude as to make probable that every foundation, not adding to its corpus, would decrease in size, year by year, until finally extinguished.

We are especially led to this conviction by our concern over the gigantic social problems besetting this country. If philanthropy ever should be active, now is the time. We have enough confidence in the economy of this country to believe that new foundations will continually arise, and that therefore old endowments do not need to be perpetually protected.

A required outflow as high as we have suggested would probably double (at least) the dollars annually distributed. That could be a vital stimulus to the public welfare at this time of social transition. It would tend also to keep any and all foundations from becoming socially unhealthy accumulations of money, and of the influence that can go with money. The other route - that of taxation - will less surely accomplish this latter end, and will at the same time increase dependence on government by reducing the capabilities of foundations for serving public interest causes.

We appreciate the opportunity of placing these views in the record of your committee. Because of the public attention that has been aroused in these matters, we are sending copies of this letter to other interested parties.

With very best regards,

Sincerely yours,

Ruth P. Field, Chairman

Morris B. Abram, President

Leslie W. Dunbar, Executive Director

Board Members:

Morris B. Abram
Barbara F. Benziger
Ralph J. Bunche
Robert Coles
Ruth P. Field
Lloyd K. Garrison
Maxwell Hahn
M. Carl Holman
Alfred W. Jones
Robert Phipps
Justine W. Polier
Helen Ross
Fiona Rust
Milton J E. Senn
Harry L. Shapiro

Special Folder Wash Trip — Tax Bill

ABM, TAX REFORM CAP BUSIEST WEEK SO FAR IN 1969

In the most climactic week since the start of the 91st Congress, the Senate and House took action on emotion-packed and symbolic measures.

After one of the longest debates in recent history, the Senate Aug. 6 narrowly defeated proposals to curb development and deployment of the Safeguard antiballistic missile (ABM) system.

The House Aug. 7 approved, by a wide margin, a comprehensive tax-reform bill calculated to save U.S. taxpayers $2.4 billion the first year.

Four days earlier, the House accepted a Senate amendment to extend the 10 percent surtax until Dec. 31, 1969.

The House Aug. 5 passed the fiscal 1970 authorization bill for Defense Department military construction.

For details, see p. 1432 for the ABM showdown; p. 1424 for tax reform; p. 1438 for the surtax extension; and p. 1436 for the military construction authorization.

Safeguard ABM

The two critical ABM votes were Aug. 6 on amendments proposed by the Senate's only woman Member, Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine), and Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) and John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.).

Mrs. Smith, who became a leading figure in the Safeguard controversy during the last days of the debate, offered a proposal to limit research to other antimissile systems. Her amendment failed on a breathtaking 50-51 roll-call vote that ended the suspense that had been building during the 29-day debate. (A 50-50 tie vote defeated the amendment, but Vice President Spiro T. Agnew added his vote of opposition.)

The Hart-Cooper amendment, which would have permitted only research on, not deployment of, the Safeguard system, then lost on a 49-51 roll-call vote after Mrs. Smith joined opponents of the amendment.

Thomas J. McIntyre (D N.H.) offered another compromise Aug. 7 to allow work on the system's initial stages but bar acquisition of operational missiles. The amendment failed, 27-70.

Later the same day, three Republican ABM opponents won support for an amendment to drastically tighten auditing of major defense contracts. The roll-call vote was 47-46.

The angry controversy over the ABM has symbolized growing congressional dissatisfaction over the increasingly costly military superstructure as it competes for funds with other national priorities.

Tax Reform

The tax reform bill (HR 13270) eventually would save individual taxpayers about $9 billion a year while eliminating some $7 billion in preferential treatment of others. It passed on a roll-call vote of 394-30 after two days of debate on the floor, preceded by six months of Ways and Means Committee hearings.

The broad and complex measure, the most sweeping revision in the 56-year history of the U.S. income tax, contained reforms in 27 major areas.

"Your Committee is not aware of any prior tax reform bill of equal substantiative scope," said the Committee report (H Rept 413) on the 368-page bill.

Among the changes, besides individual tax reductions, were taxes on previously tax-free foundations, lower depletion allowances on oil and minerals and higher taxes on upper-income taxpayers.

The House-passed bill also contained an extension of the surtax from Jan. 1 to June 30, 1970, at 5 percent.

Senate action on the measure was promised after Oct. 31, 1969, when the Finance Committee was expected to be through with hearings. But strong opposition to many of the proposed reforms was anticipated in the Senate.

The reform bill sought to meet a seeming yearning for an end to rising taxes that had loosed a flood of mail to Congress in recent months.

Surtax Extension

The House Aug. 4, on a 237-170 roll-call vote, concurred with a Senate amendment to a bill previously passed by the House (HR 9951), extending the surtax for six months, and sent the bill to the President. The Senate approved the extension, 70-30, July 31. (Weekly Report, p. 1361)

Estimated revenue from the surtax extension would be about $5.6 billion in fiscal 1970.

The bill also provided for quarterly, rather than annual, payment of federal unemployment taxes and for several other changes in their collection.

Military Construction

House approval of the military construction authorization bill (HR 13018) came on a 377-30 roll-call vote. The measure authorized spending of $1.5 billion during fiscal 1970.

Included in the bill was $2.5 million for floor space at headquarters of the Air Force's North American Air Defense Command (NORAD) at Colorado Springs, Colo., for a tie-in with the Safeguard ABM system. The NORAD funds were the first authorized by either house for operation—as opposed to research and development—of the ABM.

Among the amendments defeated was one offered by Robert L. Leggett (D Calif.), a Committee member, to remove from the bill language prohibiting picketing or demonstrations at the Pentagon. The amendment lost, 43-145, on a teller vote.

After seven months of relative inactivity, decisions were made this week that indicated a change in the tide of events. Despite the ABM opponents' failure to block deployment of Safeguard, they demonstrated their unmistakable strength as foes of the military complex.

At the same time, the much-promised equity in federal tax laws actually seemed within reach.

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.
Reproduction prohibited in whole or in part except by editorial clients

HOUSE VOTES OVERWHELMINGLY FOR LANDMARK TAX REFORM

The House Aug. 8 passed what virtually all agreed was the most comprehensive tax reform bill in history. The Tax Reform Act of 1969 (HR 13270) was approved by a 394-30 roll-call vote. It climaxed seven months of work which began Feb. 18 when the Ways and Means Committee opened hearings on tax revision. The measure went to the Senate where the leaders have promised a vote by Oct. 31.

The bill would close alleged loopholes to the tune of $4.1 billion in 1969 and reduce taxes in the amount of $1.7 billion. By 1979, the elimination of tax benefits would raise an additional $6.9 billion but tax relief at all levels of income would reduce revenues by $9.3 billion.

Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) of the House Ways and Means Committee said the difference would be made up through increased tax collections because of normal growth of the economy.

Despite the wide-ranging provisions of the bill, it did nothing about estate and gift taxes and left many aspects of the law it did deal with for future consideration. Mills said the Committee would continue to study tax reform and hoped to have proposals on estate and gift taxes ready by the end of the 91st Congress.

Passage of the bill fulfilled Mills' promise during debate over the extension of the 10-percent surtax for comprehensive tax reform before the summer recess, scheduled to begin Aug. 13.

House and Senate liberals battled President Nixon's request for extension of the surtax unless there were credible promises of major tax revision. The surtax was extended by Congress through Dec. 31 and the tax reform bill would continue it through June 30, 1970, in line with President Nixon's request. (For surtax story, see p. 1438.)

Reaction. Mills, asked if it were his greatest legislative accomplishment in his 30 years in Congress, said, "It's one of the big ones, that's for sure." John W. Byrnes (R Wis.), ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, agreed that "it has to be one of the big ones."

Mills said there were some things he would like the Senate to tighten up, among them inclusion in the limitation on tax preferences of certain oil depletion benefits and elimination of a provision benefiting the Kellogg Foundation, a tax-exempt organization set up by the food processing family. The bill exempted the foundation from certain aspects of the foundation provisions.

Mills said timing was crucial. If the Senate acts by the end of the first session of the 91st Congress, the Senate version could be at least as strong as the House bill, he explained. But if the bill is held over until 1970, he said, the lobbysits against various provisions would have time to unite and they could organize a powerful block against the bill.

Loopholes. Though the bill went far in curbing tax benefits most agreed had outlived their usefullness, some charged that it included loopholes itself.

The exemption of the excess of percentage over cost depletion from the limit on tax preferences, the Kellogg Foundation benefit and the elimination of coal and iron royalties from stricter capital gains treatment were among the alleged loopholes. In addition, a complex formula on mineral production payments gave coal producers a preferential effective date in relation to producers of other minerals, some experts contended.

Vote Analysis. The main opponents of the bill and supporters of recommittal were Members from oil-producing states. Of the 23 Members from Texas, 13 voted for recommittal and 12 voted against the bill. Of eight Representatives from Louisiana, seven were against the bill and in favor of recommittal. Of the six Members from Oklahoma, four voted against the bill and for recommital.

For background on tax reform, see fact sheets, Weekly Report p. 1327, 313; for earlier Ways and Means Committee announcements of proposals, see p. 1416, 1379, 1316, 1288, 866; for President Nixon's tax reform proposals, see p. 578; for earlier Treasury Department proposals, see p. 314; for Ways and Means Committee hearings, see p. 576, 537, 471, 434, 400, 306; for fact sheet on depletion allowance votes by Committee members, see p. 14466.

Revenue Effects of Tax Reform Bill

(in billions of dollars)

Calendar	1970	1971	1972	1974	1979
Tax reform program	1.64	2.05	2.18	2.60	3.56
Repeal of investment credit	2.50	3.00	3.00	3.10	3.30
Total	4.14	5.05	5.18	5.70	6.86
Income Tax Relief	—1.70	—6.79	—9.27	—9.27	—9.27
Net effect	2.44	—1.74	—4.09	—3.57	—2.41

NOTE: The surcharge extension would add $3.1 billion and the postponement of the excise tax reductions would add about $540 million to current revenue estimates for fiscal 1970.

Committee Action

COMMITTEE—House Ways and Means; Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), chairman.

ACTION—Aug. 2 reported the Tax Reform Act of 1969, (HR 13270—H Rept 91-413) to make major changes in the nation's tax system. The Committee Aug. 5 amended the bill to include tax reductions for all taxpayers.

As reported originally by the Committee, the bill balanced $6.81 billion of tax relief with $6.86 billion of tax increases. The Aug. 5 amendment, however, added $2.44 billion of tax relief to the bill.

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.

Major Provisions

Personal Income Taxes

TAX REDUCTIONS

Rate Reductions. The Committee approved individual income tax cuts totaling $4.44 billion. The reductions, averaging 5 percent for all taxpayers, would become effective in calendar 1971 and 1972. The Committee's original bill authorized cuts worth $2.04 billion, beginning at the point where the present 22-percent tax rate applies—for married persons whose joint taxable income is between $8,000 and $12,000.

A later amendment extended the reductions to the five lowest tax brackets, which would result in a further federal revenue loss of $2.4 billion.

Almost all individuals with taxable income of less than $100,000 received at least a 5-percent reduction. The present top tax rate of 70 percent, applying to individuals with taxable incomes of $100,000 or more, would be cut to 62 percent for individuals in the $100,000-$120,000 bracket, to 63 percent for the $120,000-$150,000 bracket, to 64 percent for the $150,000-$200,000 bracket and to 65 percent for the $200,000 and over bracket. The present 14-percent rate for the lowest income bracket would be cut to 13 percent. The reductions would be phased in over a three-year period, with the full reductions becoming effective in calendar 1972.

Revenue loss: $4.44 billion annually by 1972.

Low Income Allowance. The bill removed 5.2 million taxpayers from federal rolls and eased tax burdens on another 7 million by raising a family's deductible income almost to the poverty level. This increase was produced by a raise in the minimum standard deduction and the number of $600 regular personal exemptions.

A family's minimum standard deduction would be increased by an amount which would raise tax-exempt income to $1,100. The proposal would apply to families with eight or fewer exemptions.

Revenue estimate: $2 billion annually when the provision becomes fully effective in calendar 1971.

General Standard Deduction. The bill raised the standard deduction, generally filed by individuals with no home-mortgage interest payments to deduct, to 15 percent of adjusted gross income, with a $2,000 maximum, from the present 10 percent with $1,000 maximum.

The increase is expected to facilitate tax collection by prompting more individuals to use the standard deduction.

Revenue loss: $1.3 billion annually when the provision takes full effect in 1972.

Single Persons. Rates for single persons 35 years or over and persons whose spouse has died were set halfway between those available to married couples and those for single persons. Widows and widowers with dependent children under 20 or attending school would be allowed to file joint returns.

Revenue loss: $650 million annually.

Income Averaging. The Committee simplified present income-averaging provisions, which allow a taxpayer with unusually large income in one year to spread the income over several years for tax purposes.

The bill allowed a taxpayer to average income if his earnings were more than 120 percent of the average of the prior four years. Present law requires the income to be more than 133-1/3 percent to be eligible for averaging.

Revenue loss: $300 million annually.

Moving Expenses. Present deductions for moving expenses in job-connected transfers were broadened to include house-hunting trips and temporary living expenses, with an overall limit of $2,500. Temporary living expenses could constitute no more than $1,000 of that limit.

Deductions would not be allowed unless the distance between the taxpayer's new job is at least 50 miles farther from his former residence than was his old job.

Revenue loss: $100 million annually.

Maximum Tax. The bill limited the tax on earned income of individuals to a maximum of 50 percent.

Revenue loss: About $200 million annually.

Heads of Household. Single individuals who are heads of household and over the age of 35 were given "intermediate tax rates" between those for single and married persons.

Revenue loss: About $650 million annually.

TAX INCREASES

Municipal Bonds. The present exemption on interest from state and municipal bonds was retained, but the federal government would offer a subsidy to encourage local governments to issue taxable bonds. The subsidy would be equal to the average cost of the additional interest payable (over the interest on tax-exempt bonds) plus some additional amount.

The amount of the subsidy was to be determined by the Treasury Secretary within a range of 25 percent to 40 percent of the interest yield of the bond. However, for the first five years the subsidies are granted, the range was to be 30 percent to 40 percent.

Individuals receiving tax-exempt bond interest over $5,000 would have to allocate their itemized deductions, such as charitable contributions and medical expenses, between their taxable income and their tax-free bond interest. This rule would apply only to new issues of bonds and would be imposed under a 10-year transition arrangement.

Banks and other financial institutions having deposits or policy-holder accounts would be required to allocate interest-expense deductions between taxable income and tax-exempt bond interest. This requirement, too, would apply only on new issues and would include a 10-year transition rule.

Revenue loss: No loss is expected because revenue from taxed bonds is expected to more than offset federal subsidies given to local governments.

Capital Gains. The Committee extended from six months to one year the holding period required before the sale of an asset is eligible for capital gains tax treatment. The change applied to transactions made after July 25, 1969.

The alternative maximum capital-gains tax rate of 25 percent would be eliminated for individuals, and the corporate tax rate on long-term captial gains would be raised from 25 percent to 30 percent.

Only 50 percent of an individual's net long-term capital losses could be deducted from the tax base. Mar-

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.
Reproduction prohibited in whole or in part except by editorial clients

ried persons filing separate returns would be limited to $500 deductions for capital losses instead of the present $1,000 each.

Revenue gain: $935 million annually.

Capital Losses. Only 50 percent—instead of the current 100 percent—of net long-term capital gains could be deducted from ordinary income. The $1,000 limitation was reduced to $500 for married persons filing separate returns.

Revenue gain: $50 million in 1970, rising to $65 million by 1979.

Pension Fund Distributions. The extent to which lump-sum pension distributions would receive capital gains treatment would be tightened. Tax treatment of amounts of distribution represented by employer contributions made to purchase employer securities for a pension plan also would be stiffened.

Revenue gain: $50 million annually.

Other Deferred Compensation. Though deferred compensation, usually given key executives to reduce ordinary income and thus the effective tax rate in a given year, will continue to be taxed when received, a minimum income tax was levied on the compensation to the extent it exceeds $10,000 in any given year.

Revenue gain: The change would be effective with respect to taxable years ending after June 30, 1969. The revenue gain would be negligible until it reached $5 million in 1972 and would reach $25 million in 1979.

Charitable Contributions. The general limit on charitable contributions was raised to 50 percent from 30 percent of adjusted gross income, minus any nonbusiness expenses claimed in excess of $5,000.

Unlimited Deduction—The unlimited charitable deduction possible on contributions to some types of charities was repealed. The repeal would be fully effective in 1975.

Appreciated Property. The Committee moved to remove some of the existing tax advantages of gifts of appreciated property over gifts of cash.

The bill required a taxpayer who made gifts of appreciated property, his option, either to reduce his charitable contribution deduction to the amount of the gift's cost or to take a deduction based on the market value of the gift and include in his tax base the gift's untaxed appreciation.

This provision applied only to private foundation recipients, ordinary income property, tangible personal property, future property interest and bargain sales.

Charitable Trust—The two-year charitable trust was repealed. This type of trust allowed an individual to exclude from his income the income of a trust established by him to make payments to a charity for a period of at least two years.

Non-exempt Trusts—The deduction allowed non-exempt trusts for amounts set aside for charity would be limited to current value of the gift.

Right to Use—Charitable deductions for property to which the donor retained a right to use were disallowed.

Split-Interest Trusts—In trusts under which part of the income was paid to private persons and part to charity, the "charitable" income would be taxed if the investment policies of the charity were not consistent with the purpose for which the exemption was granted.

Revenue gain: $20 million annually when the provisions become fully effective in 1972.

Allocation of Deductions. The Committee expanded the Administration proposal to include capital gains and tax-exempt bond income. A taxpayer would be required to allocate his nonbusiness deductions proportionately between his ordinary taxable income and that part of his income affected by tax preferences.

Revenue gain: $500 million annually.

Restricted Stock Plans. Current regulations allow top corporation executives and certain other employees to receive stocks as compensation for salary because of lower tax rates. Under the Committee's proposal, an employee would be taxed on nonforfeitable restricted stock. The tax would be based on the fair-market value at the time of transfer.

Revenue gain: Negligible.

Stock Dividends. Existing tax laws provide that stocks distributed by a corporation to its shareholders instead of cash dividend are not taxable.

The committee established two exceptions to the rule.

Under the first exception, the Committee required that if stock or stock rights are distributed in conjunction with a taxable dividend distribution based on other shares, the stock distribution would be taxable. But this would apply only if the distribution increased the recipient's proportionate interest in the corporation.

Under the second exception, preferred stock or preferred stock rights distributions would be treated as taxable dividends even if they were not related to a cash dividend on other stock.

Revenue gain: No immediate gain is expected, but the changes are expected to forestall substantial future revenue losses.

Other Deferred Compensation. A minimum tax on deferred compensation was levied on the amount by which the compensation exceeds $10,000. The minimum tax would be the lower of two alternate amounts computed by complex formulas.

Revenue gain: By 1979 an estimated $25 million annually would be produced by the new tax rule.

Interest Deductions. An individual's tax deduction on interest on funds borrowed to acquire or carry investment assets was limited to net investment income (including capital gains). Interest expenses could be offset against other income up to $25,000.

Interest deductions which could not be used in any single year because of the limitation could be carried forward. The limitation did not apply to money borrowed for business purposes.

Revenue gain: $20 million annually.

Farm Losses. Tax provisions covering farm losses were tightened somewhat, chiefly to curb large tax breaks to individuals with "hobby farms."

The "hobby loss" provision of the existing law was replaced by a measure prohibiting deduction of losses resulting from a business that had no "reasonable expectation" of making a profit. This would be presumed if the business operated at a loss in excess of $25,000 annually in three of five years.

To prevent taxpayers from utilizing certain farm losses to convert ordinary income into capital gains, the Committee provided for recapture of farm losses previously used by a taxpayer to offset non-farm income to the extent such losses are required to be added to an

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.
Reproduction prohibited in whole or in part except by editorial clients

"excess deductions account." The recapture would occur upon the sale or other disposition of farm property but would not affect the deductibility of losses in the year in which they occurred. Generally it would not apply to taxpayers who use an accrual method of accounting and who capitalize farm expenses rather than deducting them entirely.

A taxpayer who incurred farm losses in excess of farm income was required to keep an excess deductions account to which would be added yearly losses of more than $25,000 and from which would be subtracted any farm gains. When there was a sale of farm assets that would otherwise qualify for capital gains treatment, the gain would be treated as ordinary income up to the amount in the excess deductions account. The account would be reduced accordingly. It would not apply to taxpayers with adjusted gross income of $50,000 or less.

Revenue gain: $20 million annually when fully effective in 1979; less than $2.5 million in calendar 1970.

Accumulation Trusts. Beneficiaries of trusts would be taxed on distributions received from the trusts at about the same rate as if the income had been distributed on a current basis rather than accumulated.

Revenue gain: $50 million in 1970, $70 million in succeeding years.

Real Estate. Currently, owners of a new real estate property may depreciate their property at twice the ordinary rate and a later owner can depreciate at one-and-one-half times the ordinary rate.

The Committee proposal kept the double-depreciation rate for residential real estate but reduced all other new real estate to the 150-percent level. All used property currently eligible for 150 percent was cut back to ordinary straight-line depreciation.

Real estate corporations were required to use straight-line depreciation for computing dividends. Some companies had been able to make non-taxable distributions to stockholders under the present law.

The costs of rehabilitating existing buildings could be amortized over a five-year period.

Revenue gain: $150 million annually initially but perhaps $1 billion a year in the long run.

Limit on Tax Preferences. Under present law there is no limit on how large a part of his income an individual may exclude from tax as a result of tax exemptions. The Committee required an individual to include in his tax base half of this preferential income, when it exceeds his ordinary taxable income by at least $10,000.

Revenue gain: $85 million annually when fully effective.

Tax-Exempt Organizations

The Committee approved a set of restrictive regulatory measures and a scale of sanctions that range up to the loss of tax-exempt status and the repayment (with interest) to the government of all the tax benefits the foundations have received since 1913.

The changes in treatment of foundations would produce an estimated $100 million a year when fully effective in 1979. In addition, the new taxes on unrelated business income would produce $5 million in calendar 1970 and rise to $20 million annually by 1979.

The measures are the following:

Self-dealing. Transactions between foundations and certain "disqualified persons" involving the transfer of the foundation's assets were strictly prohibited. "Disqualified persons" are individuals who are either donors and other such related individuals, or government officials (including civil servants above the level of GS-15).

Distribution of Assets. The bill provided that to avoid tax, private foundations must distribute all income currently (but not less than 5 percent of total investment assets).

Business Involvement. The bill limited to 20 percent the combined ownership of a corporation's voting stock which may be held by a foundation and all its disqualified persons. If someone else can be shown to have control of the business, the 20-percent limit is raised to 35 percent. Existing excess holdings must be disposed of within 10 years; excess holdings acquired by gift or bequest in the future must be disposed of within 5 years.

Tax on Investment Income. A tax of 7½ percent was imposed upon a private foundation's net investment income.

Use of Assets. The bill imposed a 100-percent tax on a private foundation which invests any amount "in such a manner as to jeopardize the carrying out of any of its exempt purposes." A 50-percent tax was imposed on the foundation manager who knowingly invests the money in such an improper manner.

Political Activity. The bill provided that private foundations would be forbidden to spend money for lobbying, electioneering (including voter registration drives), grants to individuals (unless there are assurances that the grants are to be made on an objective basis), and grants to other organizations (unless the foundation accepts certain responsibilities concerning the use of the funds by the donee organization).

Change of Tax-Exempt Status. If for any reason, voluntary or not, an organization loses its tax-exempt status, the bill required that it pay back (with interest) all of the tax benefits that it and its substantial contributors had received since 1913.

Unrelated Business Income. Taxes were required on the unrelated business income of churches, social welfare clubs, civic leagues, social clubs, and fraternal beneficial associations. Churches would have to dispose of unrelated businesses within a specified period of time.

Debt Financing of Unrelated Business Acquisitions. A tax-exempt organization would be taxed on income from a business unrelated to its purposes and financed with borrowed funds.

Corporate Income Taxes

Depletion Allowances. The Committee reduced the 27½-percent oil-depletion allowance to 20 percent. Comparable reductions were made with most other minerals, but the present 15-percent rate for gold, silver, oil shale, copper and iron ore was retained.

Other minerals currently receiving a 15-percent allowance were trimmed to 11 percent. Those at 23 percent were cut to 17 percent, those at 10 to 7, those at 7½ to 5 and those at 5 to 4.

The depletion allowance was discontinued for oil operations abroad. However, the allowance was continued for drilling on the continental shelf.

Revenue gain: $425 million in 1970 and $410 in 1971. $400 million annually after that.

Production Payments. The bill provided that mineral production payments were to be treated as loans

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.
Reproduction prohibited in whole or in part except by editorial clients for tax purposes. A carved-out production payment was to be treated as a mortgage loan on the mineral property, rather than as an economic interest in the property. Thus, the proceeds received by a seller of a payment would not be taxable to him. However, income derived from the property after the payment was taxable to the owner, subject to the depletion allowance.

In the case of retained production payments, that income derived from the property and used as the production payment was taxed to the property's owner, subject to the depletion allowance.

Revenue gain: $100 million in 1970, $200 million a year by 1979.

Corporate Securities. The Committee tightened general tax treatment of securities relating to mergers. No deductions were permitted on interest paid on certain bonds and debentures issued in exchange for at least two-thirds of another company's stock.

An exception permitting an annual $5-million deduction in interest payments for acquisitions was included in the bill.

Restrictions on deductions were not applicable to securities issued in certain acquisitions of foreign corporations.

Revenue gain: $10 million in 1970, $40 million by 1973.

Foreign Tax Credit. The bill tightened the application of a provision which allowed U.S. companies to subtract taxes paid foreign governments from taxes owed the U.S. Government.

Among the changes was one which allowed the United States to recapture, against the foreign tax credit of a later year, the benefit a company gained by offsetting on domestic income an operating loss in a foreign branch.

Revenue gain: $5 million annually in 1971 and $20 million annually by 1979.

Real Estate Depreciation. Real estate corporations were required to use straight-line depreciation for computing dividends. Some companies had been able to make nontaxable distributions to stockholders under existing law.

Costs of rehabilitating existing buildings could be amortized over a five-year period.

On future real estate depreciation, write-offs in excess of straight-line were recaptured as ordinary income, eliminating a provision for a percentage reduction in the recapture.

Revenue gain: As much as $1 billion a year by 1979 for both corporate and individual changes.

Utilities Depreciation. In general, the Committee froze the present situation regarding depreciation methods used by gas and oil pipelines and telephone, electric and water companies.

Companies using straight-line depreciation were barred from switching to faster rates. Companies employing accelerated depreciation rates and normalizing their deferred taxes were required to switch to straight-line depreciation unless normalization continued. Utilities using accelerated depreciation and giving benefits of deferred taxes to their customers were required to continue doing so.

Revenue gain: $60 million in 1970 and $260 million annually by 1974. Without the changes, federal revenue losses of up to $2 billion annually had been predicted as a result of industry trends under current laws.

Tax-Free Dividends. Companies were required to compute earnings on straight-line depreciation in the determination of distributions to shareholders. The measure was designed to discourage issuance of non-taxable distributions.

Revenue gain: $80 million annually by 1973.

Bad Debt Reserves. Commercial banks were permitted to add to their bad debt reserves an amount based on each bank's experience with bad loans during the last six years. New banks were allowed to use the industry-wide average for the same period.

Banks were permitted to carry back net operating losses for 10 years instead of the present three years to provide an extra margin of safety against large bad-debt losses.

In the case of mutual savings banks, the bill eliminated the so-called 3-percent method of computing tax-free reserves in favor of a method using the tax-free reserves of 60 percent of annual taxable income. However, the 60-percent method itself was reduced to 30 percent after a 10-year period.

Other technical changes regarding mutual savings banks also were included in the bill.

Revenue gain: $460 million annually by 1979.

Multiple Surtax Limitations. The bill limited a chain of corporations controlled by a parent firm to a single surtax exemption after an eight-year adjustment period.

Revenue gain: $235 million by 1979.

Small Corporations. The Committee made two changes. One limited amounts set aside for pensions for shareholders to 10 percent of the shareholder's income or $2,500 if less. The other change empowered the corporation itself to determine its income or loss, rather than leaving this determination to separate proceedings for each shareholder.

Revenue gain: Negligible.

Cooperatives. Patronage dividends were to be distributed over 15 years or less. The required cash pay out in any year was required to equal at least 50 percent of the amount of the current year's patronage.

No revenue estimate was made.

Surtax Extension

The Committee also added on to the tax reform bill the rest of the surtax extension package.

Surtax. The bill extended the surtax beyond the Dec. 31 expiration date to June 30, 1970. The rate for that period would be 5 percent.

Revenue gain: $3.1 billion.

Investment Credit. Repealed the 7-percent tax credit for business investment retroactive to April 18, 1969.

Revenue gain: $2.5 billion in 1970, rising to $3.3 billion a year by 1979.

Excise Taxes. Postponed until Dec. 31, 1970, the scheduled reduction in telephone and automobile excise taxes. The 10-percent excise tax on telephone service and the 7-percent excise tax on automobiles had been scheduled to drop to 5 percent after Dec. 31, 1969, 3 percent after Dec. 31, 1970, and 1 percent after Dec. 31, 1971. They had been scheduled to expire entirely Jan. 1, 1973.

Revenue gain: $540 million in fiscal 1970.

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.
Reproduction prohibited in whole or in part except by editorial clients

Effective Dates

Following are the dates at which provisions of the House Ways and Means Committee tax reform act will become effective:

- Jan. 10, 1969—stock dividends.
- April 18, 1969—investment credit repeal.
- April 22, 1969—multiple trusts, mineral production payments.
- May 27, 1969—corporate securities.
- June 30, 1969—other deferred compensation.
- July 11, 1969—bad debt reserves, municipal bonds.
- July 22, 1969—accelerated depreciation of utilities, mineral depletion allowance reduction.
- July 25, 1969—capital gains and losses, real estate depreciation.
- July 31, 1969—alternative capital gain rate for corporations.
- Aug. 4, 1969—restricted property.
- Jan. 1, 1970—private foundations, other exempt organizations, charitable contributions (except for repeal of two-year charitable trust rule and certain technical provisions which became effective April 22, 1969), farm losses, limitation on deduction of interest, moving expenses, limit on tax preferences, allocation of deductions, income averaging, foreign tax credit, cooperatives, small corporations, standard deduction increase, low income allowance, maximum income tax, single persons tax.
- Jan. 1, 1971—rate reduction (one-half).
- Jan. 1, 1972—rate reduction (full).
- Jan. 1, 1976—multiple surtax limitation (end of gradual reduction of surtax exemptions to one).

In certain cases revenue changes increased from year to year as a result of a phase-in period. For example, the multiple surtax limitation provision was to become fully effective Dec. 31, 1975, after an eight-year phase-in.

Committee Views. "Your Committee is not aware of any prior tax reform bill of equal substantive scope," the Committee said.

Though the bill was truly comprehensive, the Committee added, "more remains to be done."

The time available did not permit consideration of estate and gift taxation, the report noted, and the Committee pledged to study the area "as soon as possible with the expectation of reporting out a bill...in this Congress."

"Under your Committee's bill," the report continued, "virtually no individual with significant amounts of income will be able to escape payment of tax. The first line of defense is to reduce specific tax benefit provisions. The second line of defense is to group remaining tax preference items and impose a minimum tax or a limit on tax preferences."

The reforms in the bill not only tightened up benefits, the Committee said. "Virtually all of the revenue gains provided by the corrective measures have, in turn, been devoted to the removal of general hardships under the tax laws or in providing tax reductions of general application," the report said. "Care has been taken in this regard not to absorb most of the fiscal restraint provided by the surchage and other measures included in this bill for 1970."

The preferences in the present law have accumulated since the income tax was first levied in 1913, the Committee noted. Though many preferences have been removed, others have been added, the report said. "...Although the tax preferences may have been justified at the time of their inception, it is not clear that they are needed or desirable in today's economy," the Committee said.

The Committee said tax reform is necessary to make sure those with substantially the same incomes are paying substantially the same tax and also to make sure that the graduated tax structure is working fairly.

In addition, tax reform is necessary to make general tax reductions possible, the Committee said. Finally, tax reform is necessary because the present defects in the tax structure "impede the proper functioning of the economic system," the Committee added.

Separate Views. Five statements of separate views were filed by Committee members, two of them signed by two members each. Two Democrats and five Republicans signed the statements.

Vanik Views—Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio), prime mover in the partially successful attempt to link the surtax with tax reform, criticized the haste with which the bill was considered. He said it was not until July 28 that the Committee first was able to look over the 368-page bill.

Vanik also said he opposed the use of the tax reform bill as a vehicle for the rest of the surtax package. "It is a cruel and harsh thing to charge the taxpayers of America over $3.5 billion for the 1970 extension of the surcharge as a downpayment for the reform bill," Vanik said.

Gibbons Views—Sam M. Gibbons (D Fla.) also was critical of the Committee's haste. "Even if this bill becomes law...the Internal Revenue Code will still be riddled with unjustifiable tax preferences and tax subsidies and it may take another generation for this matter to be considered again," Gibbons said. "I would like to vote against this bill but at this time it appears to me that there will be little other chance to obtain anything any better."

Utt Views—James B. Utt (R Calif.), second-ranking minority member of the Committee, criticized a wide range of proposed changes in the bill. The bill, said Utt, may introduce "greater complexity and inequity into our tax laws." He questioned the provisions affecting farm losses, depletion allowances, tax-exempt bonds, charitable gifts and capital gains.

He charged that the Committee bill was "fiscally irresponsible" for using the increased revenue to finance "politically expedient reductions" instead of reducing the national debt.

Schneebeli and Chamberlain Views—Herman T. Schneebeli (R Pa.) and Charles E. Chamberlain (R Mich.) said the change in treatment of tax-exempt bonds "was not designed to correct a serious inequity and cannot masquerade as a reform." They said that it "must be represented for what it is: a restructuring of important fiscal relationships within our federal system."

Bush and Morton Views—George Bush (R Texas) and Rogers C.B. Morton (R Md.), Republican National

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.
Reproduction prohibited in whole or in part except by editorial clients

Chairman, agreed with Utt on the need for simplification of the tax system. They recommended a closer look at Committee changes in real estate, depletion allowances, tax-exempt bonds, foundations, charitable contributions and capital gains.

Rules Committee

The House Rules Committee Aug. 5 after about eight hours of hearings and debate reported out a resolution (H Res 513—H Rept 91-427) granting a closed rule to the tax reform bill. The closed rule, normal for major tax bills, prohibited floor amendments to the bill except by the Ways and Means Committee majority.

In an unusual move, the Ways and Means Committee met during the lunch-hour recess of the Rules Committee to amend the reform bill by adding about $2.4 billion more of tax relief for individuals.

Chairman William M. Colmer (D Miss.) of the Rules Committee said he favored postponing a vote on the bill until after the Aug. 13-Sept. 3 Congressional recess. But Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) of the Ways and Means Committee said the bill should be passed quickly to avoid "a breakdown in taxpayer morale."

Mills said, "If we don't make these corrections (contained in the reform bill) I think the whole of our tax system can break down. You can't keep this kind of momentum for tax reform going on and on indefinitely."

Colmer said he favored the idea of a tax reform bill but wanted to postpone a vote until Members could study the 368-page bill and the accompanying two-part report. "I'm going to support the legislation," Colmer said, "but I want to know what I'm supporting."

Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio), a member of the Ways and Means Committee and a leader in the partially successful attempt to tie the surtax extension to tax reform, argued for a rule which would permit an amendment to strike the surtax sections of the reform bill.

The Vanik motion was defeated by an 11-4 vote. Colmer said his own motion for a delay was beaten by about the same margin.

Ways and Means Vote. During the Rules session, Mills was challenged by Richard Bolling (D Mo.) about the gap in tax relief contained in the reform bill. The bill gave tax relief to low-income persons and to most individuals who paid taxes at rates above the point in the tax tables which applied to married persons with taxable incomes of more than $8,000. Left out, according to the House Democratic Study Group, were taxpayers with incomes between $7,500 and $13,000 a year and who itemize their deductions.

Mills said it was due to a misunderstanding between him and the staffs of the Ways and Means and Joint Internal Revenue Taxation committees. He called his Committee into session at noon to amend the reform bill to include relief for the additional taxpayers.

"That was a very remarkable misunderstanding," said Bolling, a member of the Rules Committee and the Democratic Study Group.

"I'd say so myself," Mills replied.

Though the amendment added $2.4 billion in tax relief to the bill which previously had been balanced in revenue losses and gains, Mills said this was no cause for concern. He said the deficit could be made up by the higher tax collections which would come from normal growth of the economy.

Mills said the Administration probably will not meet its previously announced Nov. 30 deadline for additional tax reform recommendations. The Ways and Means Committee, however, will continue to work on reform, he said. First it would consider estate and gift taxation and then make an analysis of the effects of the current bill to see if it reached those wealthy individuals who had been able to avoid taxation by pyramiding tax benefits, Mills added.

Treasury Position

At a Treasury news conference Aug. 1, Undersecretary Charls E. Walker and Assistant Secretary Edwin S. Cohen generally praised the tax-reform bill but cautioned that they still had some "reservations."

Walker termed the bill "highly constructive legislation that may well be viewed as a milestone in tax reform." He said, however, "We do not agree with all of the provisions, but we will be prepared in the Senate (Finance Committee) with a comprehensive statement on every aspect of the bill."

Key trouble spots foreseen by the Treasury were oil-depletion allowance reduction—"that has become much of a symbol," Walker said—and exclusion of depletion allowances and intangible drilling costs in computing a minimum tax base.

Walker and Cohen also indicated that they were not fully satisfied with provisions related to municipal securities, tax increases on banks and other financial institutions, limited deductions on farm losses, and multiple corporation surtax exemptions for subsidiaries.

They also said the proposed 7.5 percent tax on foundations that are now tax exempt was "somewhat high."

Oil Taxes. The Treasury Department, meanwhile, was preparing to present to the Senate Finance Committee a proposal which it hoped would ensure that the nation would get its money's worth out of tax benefits to producers of oil and other minerals.

President Nixon had pledged during his election campaign that he was in favor of the 27½-percent depletion allowance for oil. The House cut the allowance to 20 percent but the Treasury plan, while keeping the rate at 27½ percent, would make other tax changes that could bring in even more than the estimated $360 million annually from the lower allowance for percentage depletion.

The Treasury plan, which was rejected almost out-of-hand by the House Ways and Means Committee, would restrict percentage depletion and the immediate deduction of intangible drilling costs to domestic operations.

President Nixon, however, has not yet approved the plan.

Floor Action

The House Aug. 7 by a 394-30 roll-call vote passed and sent to the Senate the Tax Reform Act of 1969. A recommital motion was defeated by a 78-345 roll-call vote. (See votes 72, 73, p. 1474.)

Aug. 6 debate:

The tax-reform bill cleared another major obstacle as Members approved a resolution (H Res 513) which prohibited most floor amendments to the bill. Debate over the closed rule had consumed eight hours of testimony and debate in the House Rules Committee the previous day.

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.

Approval of the resolution—which barred all but Ways and Means amendments—came on a voice vote after a motion to take up the resolution was approved by a 265-145 roll-call vote. (See vote 71, p. 1474.)

Rules Committee Chairman William M. Colmer (D Miss.) was among those arguing against the rule. He had favored postponing a vote on this bill until after the three-week Congressional recess scheduled to start Aug. 13. Colmer had wanted more time to study the 368-page bill.

Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio), a member of the Ways and Means Committee, also opposed the closed rule. He had wanted to offer an amendment striking the portion of the reform bill which extended the surtax through June 30, 1970.

Near the end of the debate over the rule, Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.), stepped down from his chair to tell the members that in his opinion—based on 10 years as a member of the Ways and Means Committee—the thoroughness of the package and the complicated provisions it contained, justified the no-amendment rule.

Watching the proceedings was former Treasury Secretary Henry H. Fowler.

Mills credited Fowler with helping to bring the tax reform question into the public eye by revealing shortly before he left office in the Johnson Administration, that 154 wealthy Americans had escaped paying income tax due to loopholes in the tax code. (Weekly Report p. 147)

Mills told the Members that if they were concerned over the provisions of the bill they could "go back to their constituents," and tell them that if they have been getting preferential treatment "this legislation will help put them on a level with the less fortunate citizens in the community."

He said that they could also tell the "less fortunate taxpayers that they are going to get tax relief."

The ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, John W. Byrnes (R Wis.) praised the tax bill but said it was not a panacea.

"Certainly we'll find loopholes that we'll have to caulk up as soon as we find them," he said, "but they won't be the same ones we have now."

George Bush (R Texas) said "I hope that the Senate, when it gets this legislation, which I'm going to vote for," strips out the oil depletion reductions. "I support this legislation because in the long run we will provide meaningful tax relief when these tax cuts are phased in at all levels," he said. The next day he voted against the bill.

Bush said that depletion allowances were "not a gimmick," and "not a loophole."

"I think that any Member of the Congress willing to look at the facts and willing to concede that depletion has ever had meaning, would agree that it is more meaningful now than ever in the past," he said in adding to a statement that in this area "the committee has gone way too far."

Aug. 7 Debate:

The second day of debate saw Members discussing how various special interests would be effected by the bill. But on the roll call, oil appeared to be the single special interest to gain votes against the package.

The bill cut the controversial oil depletion allowances from 27½ percent to 20 percent.

But when the roll call was in, 394 Members voted for the package—covering 27 areas—and 30 recorded voted no.

Among those voting no were Rep. Henry B. Gonzales (D Texas), generally considered to be a liberal, and Montana Democrat John Melcher, elected to Congress June 24 on a liberal platform.

Melcher, from an oil-producing section of Montana, issued a statement saying that while he is in favor of tax reform, he voted against the bill because it would raise the taxes of farmers and small businessmen. This was the result of investment-tax credit repeal, he said, without a $25,000 exemption. He also said he was against the bill which would give him five dollars tax relief for every one dollar of relief given a family of four with a $7,500 income.

A motion by Bush to recommit the bill to the Ways and Means Committee, just prior to the final roll call, failed on a 78 to 345 roll-call. Joining the oil interests in the attempt were conservatives from both parties and a few liberals who opposed the rest of the President's surtax package being tacked on to a reform bill.

Interests Defended. During debate, Andrew Jacobs Jr. (D Ind.) termed the 20-percent oil depletion allowance "a giveaway sanction in this reform bill," and said the practice should be ended.

Joe D. Waggonner Jr. (D La.) accused Jacobs of having a sectional interest and said that the oil depletion allowance was not enough incentive to the industry. He added that Jacobs did not mention depletion allowances for iron ore—untouched by the bill's changes in depletion allowances—which plays a vital role in Indiana's economy.

Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.), broadened the depletion debate to the rest of the extractive industry. He said that he was giving a "reluctant vote" to the reform package.

Aspinall said he believed "that the extractive industries will be weakened by greater economic burden" due to cuts in mineral depletion allowances, and added that hardest hit will be the small producers.

Peter H.B. Frelinghuysen (D N.J.), who noted that he is a member of the board of directors of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, protested that the bill would reduce the incentive to contribute works of art to museums.

Ways and Means Committee Member Barber B. Conable Jr. (R N.Y.), pointed out that in approaching tax reform "loopholes can be closed," but when they are it is at a "cost to the public."

"We will assess the cost of this bill in years to come," he said, "in terms of the adjustments that are necessary.

"I think that if we are going to be mature about tax reform, we have to be aware that there is a cost involved."

Conable termed the Committee's bill a "highwater mark of tax reform" but predicted that when it comes back to the House from the Senate, "it will be watered down to some degree."

Before voting on the bill, the House accepted two Ways and Means Committee amendments. The first provided for rate reductions totaling $2.4 billion for taxpayers in lower middle-income brackets. The second amendment applied the same base for computing percentage depletion or oil extracted from oil shale as already applies for oil produced from an oil well.

COPYRIGHT 1969 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC.
Reproduction prohibited in whole or in part except by editorial clients

Wash. Trip.

Reprinted From

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

Friday, September 12, 1969

Tax Bill Impact

Foundations, Colleges Say Proposed Changes In Law Threaten Them

They Say Funds Would Drop, Programs Would Suffer; Donors' Benefits Affected

Critics See Tax-Dodging Now

By FREDERICK ANDREWS
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

Tax changes proposed by the House of Representatives would drastically alter philanthropy in America. Among other things, they would very likely reduce the flow of dollars to organizations that depend heavily on charitable giving.

This, at least, is the conclusion that emerges from interviews with tax lawyers, col-

The tax revision bill passed last month by the House of Representatives and now before a Senate committee would have far-reaching effects on individuals, corporations and some other organizations. This is the third of several articles discussing the potential impact.

lege administrators, churchmen, foundation executives and others involved in one way or another in philanthropic endeavors. Without exception, they claim the House-passed tax bill, now under consideration in the Senate Finance Committee, would have a massive impact if enacted into law. Just how massive can be suggested by a few specifics.

—National Educational Television says its programing would be restricted so severely that the system's future would be in jeopardy.

—Brookings Institution, the Population Council Resources for the Future, the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton and dozens of other nonprofit reservoirs of research talent say their operations could be severely curtailed.

—An official of St. Lawrence University, Canton, N.Y., estimates that "our income could be cut in half—easily."

—Interchurch Medical Assistance Inc., which ships supplies to hundreds of missionary-run hospitals abroad, wonders whether it could continue to function.

—Research Corp., a foundation that for half a century has promoted various forms of scientific research, reckons it would be rendered "ineffective" within 15 years.

"It's hard to think of an area of philanthropy that wouldn't be significantly affected by this bill," remarks an official of one large charitable foundation. Says another foundation man: "This is an antiphilanthropic bill." (Such sentiments have apparently proved at least partly persuasive to the Administration. It recently gave the Finance Committee its own more moderate alternatives to the House plan.)

Proponents of the legislation staunchly deny they are "anti" anything—except tax-dodging and the abuse of a privileged tax-exempt status granted solely to encourage good works. They say at present it's easy for wealthy individuals to manipulate the tax laws and make generous gifts at little cost to themselves—and sometimes at an after-tax "profit."

Personal Gain

Other proponents say many individuals exploit private foundations for personal gain, in particular for favorable business deals or to perpetuate control of a family firm. Still others fear that some foundations have grown too powerful and are not adequately regulated. They are disturbed by what they see as foundation intervention in heated public controversy and even in political campaigns.

Foundations take a different view. They say a proposed ban on their "propagandizing" or trying to "influence legislation" would in practice censor their involvement with vital issues of the day. National Educational Television is most disturbed by a provision that would bar influencing legislation even by influencing public opinion.

The provision "would effectively wipe out our public affairs broadcasting," says James Day, president of the National Educational Television and Radio Center, which produces programs for stations affiliated with the NET network. Programs that could easily be deemed improper, Mr. Day says, include the weekly "NET Journal," a recent drama on student unrest titled "Confrontation," and "Black Journal," a monthly program focusing on the racial problem.

Problems With Pete Seeger

"The penalties are so severe, I'm afraid caution would prevail," Mr. Day declares. "If you were McGeorge Bundy (president of the Ford Foundation, NET's major supporter), would you give us money, knowing that you could be fined if it were spent" on programs that could be seen as propaganda or attempts to influence legislation? "Perhaps even our folksingers" could cause a problem, the executive adds. "Have you ever listened to Pete Seeger?" (Mr. Seeger, a folksinger, often injects large doses of politics into his songs.)

Under the House bill, if a foundation spent money to propagandize, affect legislation or influence a political campaign, it would have to pay a penalty tax equal to the expenditure in question. If a foundation official agreed to the expenditure, knowing it was improper, he would personally be taxed half the sum. Neither penalty tax would have any ceiling.

The bill explicitly bars foundations from financing voter registration drives. Foundation officials say this provision could hobble such efforts because they have often relied on foundation grants. The House bill, however, would still permit grants to voter drives that operate in at least five states and have widely diversified support. The exemption is meant to apply to groups like the League of Women Voters and the Southern Regional Council.

Such research institutions as Brookings believe they would also be hurt by the ban on spending to influence legislation. Besides its main activity of publishing research on public policy topics, Brookings staff members are frequently asked for advice on particular problems. "Hardly a day goes by that some member of Congress—of either party—or his staff doesn't call or write a specialist at Brookings on a matter affecting pending legislation," Kermit Gordon, Brookings president, declares. "Does the bill mean all this must stop?"

The House bill would bar foundations, and presumably institutions like Brookings, from affecting legislation through private communications with anyone who may take part in or influence the formulation of law. There's an exemption for "nonpartisan analysis or research," but according to Mr. Gordon, "it's not nearly as clear as it ought to be. It leaves us in a state of apprehension."

He asks, for example, "Could a Brookings staff member write a letter to The Wall Street Journal advocating a proposal? Are the activities of Brookings' staff activities of Brookings?" The House measure is filled with "ambiguities beneath the surface," Mr. Gordon believes.

Limiting Grants

Another provision of the bill would tend to cut the funds available to many research organizations. In effect, it may force many such groups to choose between limiting their support from any single tax-exempt source to 25% of their budget, or becoming for all practical purposes ineligible to receive foundation grants. The Ford Foundation alone has contributed more than 25% of the funds of such noted research or scholarly groups as Resources for the Future, the Social Science Research Council, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation and the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavorial Sciences at Palo Alto, Calif. The Population Council, heavily dependent on Rockefeller money and government grants, would be affected by a similar provision.

"We are supported practically 100% by Ford," says John E. Herbert, secretary-treasurer of Resources for the Future, which was set up 15 years ago to study matters affecting America's natural resources. If the Ford money had to be cut to 25%, "this would knock us out," Mr. Herbert declares.

Politicians would also find foundation purse-strings much tighter if the House bill becomes law. Under a ban on business transactions between a foundation and persons close to it, the legislation would also rule out many payments by foundations to a wide variety of Federal, state and local officials, including Congressmen.

The Ford Foundation has provided money for various payments to several hundred Federal, state and local officials in the last two years alone. Many would be permitted under the House bill, which would allow reimbursement of domestic travel expenses. In addition, the "overwhelming majority" of the payments were actually made by groups to which Ford makes grants, and there's considerable perplexity over how such indirect actions would be treated. But the foundation says the following are typical of many that "most probably" would no longer be possible:

A $250 honorarium to Elmer B. Staats, Comptroller General of the U.S., for taking part in a Council of State Governments program; $100 for Edward Logue, president of New York State Urban Development Corp., for a talk at Columbia Journalism School; and $100 received by Stanley Cain, then an Interior Department official, for taking part in a conservation panel.

Impact on Colleges

Colleges and hospitals are among the institutions whose receipts would probably be cut significantly. The House bill, for instance, stiffens the tax treatment of gifts of property whose value has increased over the years. Present law entitles a donor to a tax deduction of the gift's fair market value, rather than what it cost him, and neither donor nor recipient pays any tax on the appreciation.

Under the House bill, in certain cases, a donor would have to choose between including the appreciation in his income and limiting his tax deduction to his cost. Proponents of the change argue that present law gives donors a double benefit. They may not only exclude the gain from their taxable income but may also use the deduction to shelter other income from tax.

This tighter treatment would apply to "deferred gifts," where a donor gives away assets but keeps the income they produce for a specified period, usually his lifetime. Still another provision would require taxpayers who receive substantial income from tax-sheltered sources to disregard part of their normal charitable deductions.

Such regulations would have a severe impact on colleges, officials claim. "I know several institutions that couldn't take it," declares Leonard Buchlin, director of development at St. Lawrence University. "I don't think they would close their doors, but they would have to become public institutions."

Big Gifts

Colleges can't predict precisely how severely each of the House provisions would hurt them. But it's possible to make some estimates. The impact of the provision regarding gifts of appreciated property is indicated by a survey of 28 private colleges in Massachusetts. In a recent year, the survey found, 56% of all gifts given the institutions by individuals consisted of securities or other property, rather than cash.

Gifts of stock and other property are apparently just as important to hospitals. A profes-

Tax Bill Impact: Foundatio
For Changes in Law Pose S

sional fund raising firm reviewed the 320 campaigns it conducted for hospitals in the last 25 years and found that 45% of the $148 million raised from individuals was given in appreciated securities.

The richer the donor and the larger the gift, the more likely it will be made in appreciated securities or other property, professional fund raisers say. They regard very large gifts as vitally important. One estimates that for an institution to raise $20 million in capital funds, its campaign typically must garner at least one $5 million gift, two of $2 million, and three of $1 million. That's more than half the goal in six gifts.

Many institutions believe, in addition, that the tax changes would almost wipe out their "deferred gift" plans. "These are funds we can count on," says John Callahan, director of development at Amherst College, Amherst, Mass. College officials say these plans make it possible for moderately well-off persons to make large gifts during their lifetime. "The plans have created a whole new class of philanthropists," a tax lawyer says.

Some small colleges fear that the loss of deferred gifts would be especially hard on them. "The ability of a school of our type to get gifts outright is decreasing rapidly," says Roland C. Matthies, vice president of Wittenberg University, a church-affiliated school in Springfield, Ohio. "Our benefactors aren't wealthy enough to surrender income." He says the school currently has 134 deferred gift contracts on its books. They total some $4 million, or roughly one-third of the school's endowment.

Holding Up an Agreement

To show how deferred gifts are affected by the House bill, Mr. Callahan recalls a deferred gift plan that Amherst recently drew up for a 74-year-old retired schoolteacher. "'He came right in out of the blue," according to Mr. Callahan, "and said, 'Look, I'd like to do something for Amherst, but I need to provide income for my wife. What can we work out?' "

It turned out that the teacher owned stock now worth about $40,100 but which originally cost only $7,000. Amherst prepared an agree-

ions, Colleges Say Proposals Serious Threats to Them

ment called a "life income contract" that would give the teacher and his wife, 57, the income from the stock for as long as they lived. The stock would go into an investment pool of such gifts, which Amherst manages like a mutual fund, with each beneficiary getting his share of the pool's income. But when the House bill came along, the college felt bound to advise the teacher to hold up on the agreement.

The reason is readily apparent. Under present law, the teacher may deduct from his taxable income about $21,675, or 54% of his $40,100 of stock. That fraction is derived by a complex formula based on the stock's present value and the couple's life expectancy. Under the House bill, he could deduct only an even smaller fraction of his $7,000 cost—or less than $3,500. (Tax lawyers can't agree precisely what the bill would require.)

In addition, the House bill would make administering such an investment pool entirely impractical, college officials say. There would remain only separate trust arrangements that segregate each donor's assets. Even these would be under tighter restrictions than at present.

Like Amherst, many institutions are already feeling the impact of the House bill. "Everything has ground to a halt," says one college fund raiser. "We've virtually given up raising money. We can't do a thing until the Senate acts." Another college official says he has written several would-be donors to hold their gifts in abeyance.

Humanitarian groups, many of them church-affiliated, fear they would also find support scarcer under the House proposal because they receive many of their donations in kind.

Drug Donations Affected

Interchurch Medical Assistance, a Protestant organization, is among those disturbed by rules applying stricter tax treatment to gifts of inventories to charities. At present, corporations may make deductions from their taxable income based on the wholesale value of what they give to charity. The House bill would limit such deductions to what the goods cost the company to produce, rather than what they normally bring at wholesale. It's estimated that this could double the out-of-pocket cost to firms of such charitable gifts.

The impact could be substantial. "We're receiving over $1 million a month in wholesale value of pharmaceuticals and hospital supplies," says the Rev. F. Floyd Freeston, an official of Interchurch until recently. He adds that some companies now say they must "rethink" their contributions in light of the House bill.

If "rethinking" means retrenchment—and it probably does—it "would really just cut the feet from under us," Rev. Freeston says. He terms the present arrangement "a real stroke of genius—the companies get the tax break and the hospitals get badly needed supplies."

The concern of colleges, church groups and other such beneficiaries over the House measure is fully matched by the concern of foundations. Probably the most publicized matter of concern to them is the plan to create an income tax on foundations, at the rate of 7½% of net investment income.

The foundations say the measure would simply mean that much less cash available for grants. "A tax on (foundations) is in effect a tax on their beneficiaries," comments J. George Harrar, president of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Many other provisions affecting foundations also cause considerable concern. One would generally require a foundation to give away its current income within two years at the most. In any case, its annual grants would have to amount to at least 5% of the value of its investment assets. (The 5% rate would apply next year; thereafter, the Treasury Department could adjust the rate in line with prevailing investment yields.)

Eating Into Assets

The provision is clearly designed to prevent foundations from letting their money pile up, rather than putting it to use in good works. But many foundations say that the 5% figure is unrealistically high and that maintaining it could force them to eat heavily into their assets. This, in turn, could eventually lead to the decline of many foundations, some observers say.

It should be noted, moreover, that not all grants would count toward the 5% quota. Gifts to other foundations, the most important example, wouldn't count unless the recipient classifies as a "private operating foundation," a new category proposed by the House bill.

To qualify as such, a foundation would have to spend substantially all its income directly on its charitable ends. Beyond that, it would either have to devote 65% of its assets "directly" to its charitable purpose or have widely diversified sources of support. No one appears entirely sure what devoting assets "directly" to charity means, but it's generally interpreted to refer to physical assets actually used in a foundation's program, such as the colonial buildings at Williamsburg, Va. Few philanthropic causes have such assets.

Failing this, to qualify as a private operating foundation a foundation would have to get at least 85% of its support from not less than five tax-exempt sources or the general public. Further, no more than 25% could come from any single tax-exempt source. Foundation officials predict that many worthy causes would be hard pressed to meet these requirements. And with grant-making foundations under pressure to make their quota, failure to qualify as a private operating foundation could be fatal for a charitable cause.

"If you don't qualify, you're dead," one foundation executive says flatly. "Who's going to dip into their corpus to give you money?"

What Is a Foundation?

The restriction has even greater bite because the House bill would apparently define as foundations hundreds of organizations that have never considered themselves as foundations. For example, groups like Brookings, the Institute for Advanced Study and the Carnegie Institute have traditionally seen themselves as post-doctoral educational institutions, not foundations. As educational institutions they would not be compelled to qualify as private operating foundations to attract foundation grants. But as foundations, they would. (As educational institutions, they would also escape the other restrictions the bill would impose on foundations.)

The House measure would also bar almost all business transactions between a foundation and its benefactors. Present law generally requires "arm's-length standards" in such dealings, but critics say the requirement is vague and impossible to enforce. The contend, for example, that if a businessman can borrow from a foundation of which he is a benefactor whenever he wishes, he has an unfair advantage—even if the loan terms are the same as those that prevail elsewhere.

This new provision would probably fall mainly on thousands of small family foundations, many of which are closely linked to their founder's business interests. The bill creates a class of "disqualified person" that includes any donor who gives the foundation $5,000 or more in one year; the largest single donor in any year; foundation officials; anyone who owns more than 20% of a corporation that is a substantial donor; many goverment officials; and members of families of such persons.

The ban on transactions by such persons would be backed up by stiff penalty taxes. Initially, a violator would have to pay an amount equal to 5% of the money involved in any such "self-dealing" transaction. A foundation official knowingly involved would be taxed 2½%, up to $10,000. But if the transaction weren't promptly undone, the penalties would jump to 200% and 50%, respectively.

Disposing of Stock

Another provision would also have a heavy impact on many foundations and businesses, some nationally known. It would bar a foundation and its "disqualified persons" from owning more than 20% of a corporation's voting stock among them. Foundations would have 10 years to dispose of present holdings in excess of 20% and would have to start the process within two years.

Critics of the present law say many businessmen use foundations to keep control of their companies. It's not uncommon for an entrepreneur to give his business to a foundation to avoid estate taxes, which could otherwise force the sale of the business, critics say. They also maintain that such businesses often are run to benefit their former owners, rather than the foundation's charitable ends.

A Treasury Department survey of 175 foundations with assets exceeding $10 million each found that 26% owned 20% or more of a corporation. At the end of 1966, foundations owned at least 20% of the voting stock of such major concerns as Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Hughes Aircraft Co., Kellogg Co., Duke Power Co., Eli Lilly & Co. and Sun Oil Co.

There seems little doubt that forced divestiture of such holdings would, among other things, tend to depress their prices considerably. The John A. Hartford Foundation, which owns 8,360,850 shares, or about 33% of A&P, would be put "in a very bad negotiating position," says Robert H. Mulreany, a trustee and counsel of Hartford. Unless granted special relief, "we would have to dispose of (the A&P stock) in a secondary offering at a discount."

In the future, if a foundation were given more than 20% of a firm's stock, it would have to dispose of the stock in excess of 20% within five years. Many foundation officials fear that the provision would shut off the creation of new foundations of appreciable size.

William Benton, for one, says the 20% limit would completely disrupt his announced intention to leave his Encyclopaedia Britannica holdings to the Benton Foundation because the foundation would then have to sell the gift. Mr. Benton says he doesn't want to leave the Britannica company to his four children because "they are too goddam rich already. The are worth millions and millions." Nor would he have the company publicly owned. He fears that would make it too profit-oriented and less interested in disseminating knowledge for its own sake.

THE URBAN COALITION

JOHN W. GARDNER, Chairman
1815 H Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

New Folder Washington Trips

Duplicate

WASHINGTON REPORT

printed every Friday in Washington, D. C.
by UAW Citizenship-Legislative Department

Vol. 9, No. 38 October 6, 1969

United Automobile, Aerospace, and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, UAW

WEEKEND WRAPUP

Honeymoon gone . . . It's Harrington . . . "Fearless Five" . . . Jet set's SST . . . Sacred cows . . . TV licenses . . . Military debate . . . Railroads . . . Taxes . . . Green Berets.

If there was ever a Nixon honeymoon, it's now long gone. The sharp attacks and counterattacks on Nixon last week was a sign that Nixon can expect nothing but bitter criticism on his war policy. Sen. Church, a longtime dove, said "It isn't Nixon's war yet." But the feeling that we've gone over that same road again and again, is making many people inside Congress feel that President Nixon needs some harsh kibitizing. Witness Sen. Goodell—an upstate New York GOP conservative, now a dashing downstate liberal. He wears the longest sideburns in the Senate and he's for pulling out all U.S. combat troops by December 1970. Or witness the new Republican Senator from Illinois, Ralph Smith. He's against confirming Judge Haynsworth to the Supreme Court. And witness, that wisest man of all in the Senate, gentle Mike Mansfield, a former professor of Far Eastern history at the University of Montana, who knows more about Asia than anybody else in Congress. Mansfield thinks we ought to stop all shooting, shoot only when shot at, forget about killing and get out of that quagmire. Sen. McGovern thinks any American who thinks otherwise, ought to shoulder a musket and go over to Vietnam and do his own shooting, not ask any more American draftees to die in that sorry land. . . . Of course, the biggest political news last week was the election of Mike Harrington, a Democratic war critic, to a congressional seat which hadn't been occupied by a Democrat since the turn of the century; and he won against the vaunted Massachusetts Republican name of Saltonstall. That's three special congressional elections within a year which switched from Republican to Democrat: first Dave Obey's big upset win in Wisconsin, Melcher took Battin's seat in eastern Montana, now Harrington in Massachusetts. . . . The House of Representatives debate on the $20 billion defense military hardware and research budget was the likes of which Washington hasn't seen for a long time. Senate critics of the war and military spending have been more free-wheeling. In the House, there's been more hunkering down and giving the military the benefit of the doubt. Not anymore—"the fearless five" on the Armed Services Committee marched up the hill repeatedly all last week, and while they were easy targets, they won a lot of olive branches for their willingness to take on the military establishment. "The fearless five" are Congressmen Leggett of California, Congressman Pike of New York, Congressman Nedzi of Michigan, Congressman Whalen of Ohio, and Congressman Stafford of Vermont. They actually mustered 105 votes against the ABM on a teller vote. That's not much, but it was some kind of landmark for sanity in the House, where waving the bloody shirt often goes unchallenged. . . . Millions and millions for the jet set, but not one red cent for medical research, for schools, for libraries, for anti-pollution, and for ground transportation. That's what liberal members of Congress are saying about Nixon's decision to plunk down $600 million for the super-sonic transport (SST) at a time when many programs are starving for money. The SST will help a small fraction of the American people get back and forth to Europe faster—but it won't do a single thing for the people on the ground. . . . Two of Washington's sacred cows who are considered over the hill by most impartial observers are J. Edgar Hoover and Gen. Lewis Hershey. Rumors were flying last week

(Continued on page 8)

Fearless Five

Leggett

Pike

Whalen

Nedzi

Stafford

Is President Nixon working too hard?

Rep. Wayne Hays, D-Ohio, a well-known needler, suggested that President Nixon may be working too hard and should slow down.

Hays rose during a day-long House session on a multi-billion dollar military procurement bill to say he understood President Nixon has been deploring lack of action by the 91st Congress.

He then read to the House the President's officially-announced schedule of appointments.

9:00 A.M.—Group of at least six Republican senators.

12:15 P.M.—Harold Lee, an old friend who owns the Mandarin Hotel in Hong Kong.

12:30 P.M.—Aubrey M. Meyers, Pomona, Calif., Classmate at Whittier High School.

5:30 P.M.—Departs for weekend in Florida with Mrs. Nixon and White House staff members.

"I think when we adjourn late tonight we should pass a resolution asking the president to slow down," Hays said, to laughter that was generally among Democrats and scattered among Republicans. "No man can stand a pace like this very long."

". . . RAISE YOUR RIGHT HAND . . . !"

Nixon's appointee to the Supreme Court, notes Massachusetts Sen. Ed Brooke, "is not the distinguished jurist whom the country expected to be nominated." Brooke asked that Nixon withdraw his name. One of the damaging things against Judge Haynsworth, was his dabbling in stock transactions while sensitive cases were before his court. The Brunswick case is described below.

The latest conflict-of-interest revelation involving Nixon's nominee to the U.S. Supreme Court, Judge Clement Haynsworth, concerned the Brunswick Corporation. On Sept. 17 Senator Birch Bayh (D-Ind.) noted—during the Senate Judiciary Committee's hearings on Haynsworth's nomination—that the Judge listed 1,000 shares of stock in Brunswick Corporation.

Bayh questioned whether Haynsworth owned that stock in 1968 when he had voted on a case involving the corporation before the Court of Appeals. On Sept. 20 the Justice Department—in what seemed to be an attempt to soften any charges of injudicious conduct—issued a statement saying that Haynsworth, between the time of the actual decision in a case involving Brunswick Corporation and of the announcement of that decision, did indeed purchase 1,000 shares of Brunswick Corporation stock.

The implication in the statement was that since the decision had already been made, the Judge's actions were above reproach. However, as has been pointed out by various astute columnists and lawyers, an unannounced decision can always be amended or changed.

Haynsworth's answer when queried about the timing of this acquisition was that "it never entered my mind" that the Brunswick case was before him when he bought the stock.

This sort of indifference to judicial propriety we can do without on the top court of the land!

Millions for jet set, peanuts for people

'What's th' deadline for putting a low income family of six into a decent house?'

It is quite revealing of President Nixon's priorities for America that he has given the go-ahead for development of the Supersonic Transport (SST) and is determined to pour another $662 million into the program.

The SST will have absorbed about $1.3 billion—or perhaps more—before the test vehicles ever fly. That is to be the U.S. contribution. The manufacturers will provide about 10% and federal funds will be about 90%.

As the British and French have found out in their development of the Concorde airliner, final costs were far and away above projections and the Boeing SST project may follow that pattern.

In approving more government funding for the SST, Mr. Nixon said, "I want the U.S. to continue to lead the world in air transport." That is a view most share since the SST's will come, whether the U.S. builds them for the world's airlines or not.

The most pressing issue is not whether the SST's should be built, but who should pay for the building of them. And this is a philosophical point in which the Nixon administration has now come down on the side of federal subsidy.

During the campaign, Mr. Nixon said the "greatest failure" of the Johnson administration was "its disinclination, or inability to take on the hardest job in government"—the setting of priorities. He went on to assert that the budget needed exhaustive review and that some programs such as public works and the SST would have to be content with much less than maximum funding.

At this point, the SST seemed to be low on his list of priorities. Once in office, Mr. Nixon ordered cuts in school aid, in library money, in housing and other areas. He scuttled the urban mass transport trust fund and has ordered cutbacks in federal construction in the states. But he is now prepared to supply the funding so that private enterprise can continue with the project.

When the SST plan was first brought up, the government agreed to help underwrite the planning. But at that time the Vietnam war was not in full swing and making such a heavy drain on federal funds.

So there is a difference in demands on the budget, and the supposition had been that Mr. Nixon was planning to reduce the SST on his scale of priorities.

The administration had under discussion for a while a plan by which alternative financing might be had, and the SST be continued on funds derived from shareholdings or pool financing.

The aircraft, airline industries and Wall Street could easily provide the necessary funds for the SST development. And the question is: Why do they not do so if prospects for the super-sonic plane are so good?

It has long been a tenet of Republicanism that for government to do what private enterprise can do is a near socialistic heresy; that government should act only when private enterprise cannot do the job. Even so, President Eisenhower once referred to TVA as "creeping socialism." One might wonder what the general would have called subsidizing the SST—supersonic socialism?

—from The Nashville Tennessean, Sept. 27, 1969

PAGINATION INCORRECT

WEEKEND WRAPUP

(Continued from page 1)

that Hoover was looking for a replacement, but there was no sign that Hershey was going to step aside. . . . That bill to give TV stations a license to operate in perpetuity is a bad bill. Many station owners who get a license from the Federal Communications Commissions go high-hat and act like they personally invented TV and pocket all the money they can without the slightest regard for the viewing public. One of the few checks the public has on such aloof behavior is the ability of a challenger to invoke what the industry calls "the comparative hearing process" to call a station to account for failing to do its level best. Sen. Pastore is author of a bill which would lock up these licenses, and the bill ought to be opposed as a dangerous threat to the right of free speech. Nicholas Johnson, the FCC's great dissenter, is a constant target of big broadcasters who can't stand criticism. Much of the FCC work is done in a legal jargon which only broadcasting lawyers understand. Johnson has fired away in language which anybody can understand. If he left the FCC, the American people would have nobody who would ask tough questions of this fantastically rich $2.5 billion industry. . . . The military spending bill debate in the House last week was a farce. Only 3 hours were permitted to discuss the pros and cons of spending over $20 billion. The Senate spent 8 weeks debating the same bill. Such ramrodding tricks make a mockery out of the democratic process. The fault lies with magnolia-sniffing Armed Services Chairman Mendel Rivers of South Carolina. It is said if another military installation is put in Charleston, South Carolina, the whole city will sink into the Atlantic Ocean—such is Rivers power to collect pork for his constituents. The rest of the country pays and pays dearly for Rivers. But the 3 hour debate last week incensed such fair conservatives as John Anderson of Illinois and such party stalwarts as Tip O'Neill of Massachusetts. . . . The railroad retirement bill mentioned last week went sailing through Congress, with the railroad brotherhoods deeply divided. Railroad workers negotiate their contracts then try to get them approved by Congress. We'll have a special report soon on rail profits, rail failures, and rail prospects. . . Nixon's tax proposals took $1.7 billion from middle income families, according to Utah's Sen. Ted Moss, and gave $1.6 billion to big corporations. In the most partisan attack on the Nixon tax plans yet heard in Congress, the mild-mannered Moss said "Mr. Nixon's forgotten millionaires will appreciate and probably remember his efforts to emasculate the minimum income tax provision. The President has remembered those who financed his campaign rather than his rhetoric about the forgotten man." . . . The military has been taking a beating on many fronts these days. The Green Berets case is still a big mystery, a sergeant major stands accused of bilking his fellow soldiers, and the search-and-destroy missions in Vietnam (a replay of World War II and Korea tactics) have mired down in the jungle mud. It's been a rough decade for professional soldiers, and somebody someday will look for some scapegoats to explain these setbacks. Art Buchwald's counsel about an army made up of draftees is worth remembering. Buchwald warns that a military caste will arise from strictly volunteer soldiers. Better to have an army made up of guys who hate the army.

THE QUESTION BOX

Q: For years I have been buying products marked with seals of approval from magazines such as Good Housekeeping and Parents' Magazine, believing I was spending my money wisely by investing in these recommended items. I was therefore somewhat shocked to read somewhere recently that these seals do not guarantee the safety of a product. Can you give any further information on this to a very disgruntled housewife?

—Mrs. L. K., Cleveland, Ohio

A: It has only been within the past year that public attention has been drawn to the fact that these so-called "seals of approval" are not what everyone has thought they were. The man primarily responsible for bringing this to the forefront is Rep. Rosenthal (D-N.Y.)—known for his crusades on behalf of consumers—who has charged that these seals are given to the products of those companies because they advertise in those magazines. Rosenthal has said, "The seals have no public interest value and are of little value or no benefit to anyone except advertisers." He noted that 12 products advertised in Good Housekeeping have been or are currently under investigation by the Federal Trade Comstatutes." Also, Mrs. Bess Myerson Grant, New York's Commissioner of Consumer Affairs, recently accused both magazines of trying to double-cross consumers with these seals since they imply product safety yet do not have the backing of any independent or government standards of safety. More will be heard on the subject when the National Commission on Product Safety completes its hearings and submits its report to the Congress next year.

(Readers of UAW Washington Report are invited to write in questions about legislative and political matters which may have been obscured or overlooked in the commercial media).

UAW WASHINGTON REPORT
printed every Friday in Washington, D. C. by UAW Citizenship-Legislative Department Walter P. Reuther, Chairman
William H. Dodds, Director
Frank Wallick, Managing Editor
United Automobile, Aerospace, and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, UAW
UAW Washington Office, 1126 16th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036

THIS WEEK

Letters from home will decide how much tax reform we get.

NEWSPAPER

SECOND CLASS POSTAGE
PAID AT WASHINGTON, D.C.

W K 30303 WR0CC633 03
LABOR PROGRAM WR
SOTHN REG COUNCIL ##
5 FORSYTH ST N W
ATLANTA GA 30303

Tax Reform Bill: Exchanging Old Inequities for New?

By RAYMOND J. SAULNIER

This proposed legislation is so long (368 pages), so complex (26 major sections with 63 subsections) and so deeply affected by loophole emotionalism that there is a danger of it being enacted without an adequate evaluation of its potential overall effects. Yet it should be clear even to a casual reader of press summaries that, as it is found in H.R.13270, the Tax Reform Act of 1969 would be seriously counterproductive.

Specifically, the bill would impair the nation's capability for achieving vigorous economic growth by a number of provisions that would reduce incentives to save and invest, including the proposed treatment of capital gains and the reduction of incentives to invest in real estate and in minerals resources. It would further inhibit growth by reducing—in some cases eliminating altogether—ways in which business concerns reward management achievement under present tax law. And the balance of its revenue effect, which would become increasingly negative between 1970 and 1972, would favor consumption at the expense of investment, thereby weakening Government efforts to overcome inflation as well as impeding economic growth.

Dr. Saulnier, professor of economics at Columbia University's Barnard College, headed the Council of Economic Advisers during the Eisenhower Administration. This article is condensed from a memorandum prepared for presentation to the Senate Finance Committee.

In addition, H.R.13270 would have a number of unfortunate effects on the structure of American institutions. It would impair the ability of state and local governments to finance public facilities independently and, in so doing, weaken their position in our present governmental structure. It would seriously impair the ability of private nonprofit institutions—colleges and universities, museums, hospitals, etc.—to obtain the private gifts on which they rely heavily.

In doing all this, and more, some of the bill's major provisions offend one's sensibility by:

- being in a number of instances seriously, unnecessarily and punitively retroactive;
- violating the long-respected distinction between capital and income in their treatment by the tax laws;
- deviating from the established principle of taxing income when it is actually received;
- deleting a whole series of still valid and justifiable incentives on the ground, apparently, that yesterday's incentive is today's loophole.

The justification for this wholesale rewriting of the tax code is that a small group of individuals in the $200,000-and-over income bracket — 154 in number — had no Federal tax liability in 1966. Whatever the merits of the case against these individuals, it must be recognized that they represent only one percent of the taxpayers in this income class. Yet in order to reach 154 individuals H.R. 13270 would adversely affect the tax status of hundreds of thousands of taxpayers, corporate as well as individual.

lower level than the tax on current income; and (v) that a capital gains tax is levied, in any case, against an increase in principal value which, the world being what it is, is typically a result largely of inflation.

No tax code can deal severely with investment gains without discouraging the investment process itself, either by lowering potential return or limiting liquidity, or both—and to discourage investment is to inhibit growth and everything that growth means for the creation of jobs and the enhancement of well-being for everyone. Yet H.R.13270 would make present taxation of capital gains more severe by:

a) extending the holding period required to distinguish between capital gain and income from ordinary transactions from six months to one year;

b) eliminating the alternative tax rate for long-term capital gains, thus raising the upper limit of the effective tax on such gains for taxpayers with a marginal tax rate above 50% from the present 27% (including surtax) to 38½% or by 40%;

c) raising the alternative rate for corporate taxpayers to 33% (including surtax) from the present 27½%; and

d) permitting only 50% of an individual's net long-term capital losses to be offset against ordinary income, up to the $1,000 limitation, in place of the full deductibility presently allowed.

Minerals Industries

One of the most capital-intensive and risk-affected industries in the United States—oil, gas and other mineral resources—would be dealt with especially severely by H.R.13270. Apart from the adverse effect on these industries from repeal of the investment tax credit and the heavier taxation of capital gains, the proposed legislation—in the case of oil and gas—would (i) reduce percentage depletion allowances from 27½% to 20% on domestic properties; (ii) eliminate depletion allowances altogether on overseas properties; and (iii) treat production payments as loans.

Among the likely effects of these proposals are the following:

a) the cost to U.S. companies of oil development would be increased substantially and, if there is anything at all to the shifting of taxes (and there must be in this case, since the profitability of oil companies in 1968 was only about the same as that of manufacturing concerns generally), the cost of gasoline at the local gas pump would be increased;

b) The cost to U.S. companies of oil development conducted overseas would be increased: (i) in all probability without increasing U.S. tax revenues; (ii) with predictably adverse effects on the strategical position of the United States in world affairs; and (iii) with adverse effects, certainly in any longterm perspective, on the U.S. balance of international payments; and

c) with a lower after-tax cash flow, oil producing companies would need to depend more heavily on external financing for oil development, a necessity that would be felt most severely by individual developers and small companies.

Management Incentives

The opportunity to reward a business executive for making a success of a company's affairs cannot possibly be anything but constructive in promoting economic growth. In this respect, the proposed 50% upper limit on taxation of earned income moves in the right direction; on the other hand, those provisions of H.R. 13270 that would limit opportunities to provide rewards other than by current income would be an obstacle to growth. Specifically, this criticism applies to:

a) the bill's treatment of deferred compensation payments, a type of forward income-averaging which, under these proposals, would be taxed not at the rate applicable to the taxpayer in the year the income was actually received but at a rate calculated, ex post, as what would have been applicable in the years in which the income was earned;

b) allowing the deduction of interest only to the extent of investment income and long-term capital gain (plus $25,000) for the acquisition of stock (for example) under a stock option program, even though the interest is a cost incurred to make an investment, the income and capital gain from which (if there is any) will be taxable in due course;

c) taxing as compensation the value of stock received in lieu of salary under restricted stock plans (except where the employe's interest is subject to substantial risk of forfeiture) despite the fact that in many instances the stock continues under restriction which prevents its sale to raise funds to pay the tax.

Municipal Securities

H.R.13270 would reduce the tax exemption accorded interest paid on state and local government securities (municipals), an exemption going back to the introduction in 1913 of the Federal income tax and grounded in Constitutional considerations, by:

a) allowing an individual to count as tax preference income (in the limited tax preference rule) an amount not to exceed 50% of total income (adjusted gross income plus tax preference income) regardless of the actual proportion of taxable to nontaxable income, thus treating some tax-exempt income as taxable;

b) requiring that deductions be allocated to nontaxable income (in the allocation of deductions rule) in the proportion of nontaxable income to total income, thus making some part of the deductions ineffective in the role for which they were originally granted.

Also, the bill would further restrict the availability and raise the cost of municipal debt financing by:

c) making capital gains on debt securities held by financial institutions taxable at the income tax rate rather than (as now) at the capital gains rate.

Having thus taken away with one hand at least part of the tax exemption explicitly offered with the other, and having reduced the incentive for financial institutions to continue investing in municipals (commercial banks hold nearly 40% of the outstanding supply), the bill then says that if a state or local government chooses to finance on a taxable basis the Federal Treasury will provide a subsidy calculated to offset the higher cost of borrowing without benefit of tax exemption.

To the extent that an erosion of the tax-exemption privilege induces the state and local governments to elect the alternative of issuing taxable securities, the proposed legislation will require the Federal Government to undertake a new and conceivably large and growing function in administering interest rate subventions.

Charitable Contributions

Finally, there are the provisions of H.R.13270 that would significantly alter the balance of private vs. government effort in various sectors of our society. It would do this by hampering the gift-raising capability of private nonprofit institutions on which every community in the nation, in one way or another, depends heavily for educational, cultural, medical and other facilities. It is especially serious that this would be done at a time when these which they rely heavily.

In doing all this, and more, some of the bill's major provisions offend one's sensibility by:

- being in a number of instances seriously, unnecessarily and punitively retroactive;
- violating the long-respected distinction between capital and income in their treatment by the tax laws;
- deviating from the established principle of taxing income when it is actually received;
- deleting a whole series of still valid and justifiable incentives on the ground, apparently, that yesterday's incentive is today's loophole.

The justification for this wholesale rewriting of the tax code is that a small group of individuals in the $200,000-and-over income bracket — 154 in number — had no Federal tax liability in 1966. Whatever the merits of the case against these individuals, it must be recognized that they represent only one percent of the taxpayers in this income class. Yet in order to reach 154 individuals H.R. 13270 would adversely affect the tax status of hundreds of thousands of taxpayers, corporate as well as individual.

As for the 154, how much Federal tax they paid in other years is typically overlooked, as is the taxes they paid over the years to state and local government. Typically, no account is taken of the income these individuals chose to forgo in achieving tax exemption, nor the amount of capital or income they gave away.

The fact that many provisions are not commented on here is not to be construed as meaning anything, one way or the other, pro or con, with respect to their specific merits. Limitations of space, time and energy have required concentration on only a few of the bill's major provisions.

Investment Credit

Permanent repeal of the investment tax credit, as H.R.13270 proposes, would remove an incentive to capital expansion and improvement that from its inception has been a constructive provision of the tax code. There may be abuses here and, if so, they should be corrected, but not by the wildest stretch of the imagination can the investment credit be regarded as a loophole in any meaningful sense. Its permanent repeal would have to be regarded as a blow at the ordinary, everyday business of improving the nation's productive plant.

Certainly, if this provision is enacted the Congress should find some means—presumably through depreciation liberalization—to make the volume of investible funds generated internally by businesses more nearly consistent with what is required for capital investment. Otherwise, the productivity and international competitiveness of American industry will suffer a damaging setback.

Real Estate

Despite the well-known tendency for investment in new construction (notably, new residential construction) to lag behind other types of investment, and despite the widely recognized and increasingly critical shortage of residential facilities, H.R.13270 would reduce certain incentives which Congress on earlier occasions deliberately incorporated into the tax law to encourage construction and rehabilitation of real property.

The proposals—which treat accelerated depreciation as if it were a device for nonpayment of taxes rather than a deliberate, Congressionally designated arrangement for the deferral of taxes—are almost certainly destined to result in (i) a smaller increase in total housing supply than would be produced by wider availability of faster depreciation; (ii) a reduced availability of housing for low-and middle-income families; (iii) inadequate nonresidential facilities needed for a balanced total neighborhood environment; (iv) less rehabilitation of existing housing, further limiting total supply; and (v) increased rents. There must be a way to prevent the tax-shelter uses of real estate—by what must be a very limited number of individuals—without these adverse and untimely effects on the whole construction and real estate industry.

Capital Gains

It is a long established feature of tax law everywhere to tax capital gains less heavily than current income. In so doing, legislators have had in mind that if there is a gain from capital in terms of appreciation of principal value, it is (i) a gain from investment of income already taxed to the individual before it could be saved and invested; (ii) that it often reflects, in whole or in part, the plowback of undistributed profits already taxed to the corporation; (iii) that the income from capital is also fully taxed as received; (iv) that capital gains are built up over time—frequently over a long time—and, with tax rates typically rising, an equitable and proper averaging process should put the capital gains tax at a ances altogether on overseas properties; and (iii) treat production payments as loans.

Among the likely effects of these proposals are the following:

a) the cost to U.S. companies of oil develop-

b) allowing the deduction of interest only to the extent of investment income and long-term capital gain (plus $25,000) for the acquisition of stock (for example) under a stock option program, even though the in-

[redacted]

fered with the other, and having reduced the incentive for financial institutions to continue investing in municipals (commercial banks hold nearly 40% of the outstanding supply), the bill then says that if a state or local government chooses to finance on a taxable basis the Federal Treasury will provide a subsidy calculated to offset the higher cost of borrowing without benefit of tax exemption.

To the extent that an erosion of the tax-exemption privilege induces the state and local governments to elect the alternative of issuing taxable securities, the proposed legislation will require the Federal Government to undertake a new and conceivably large and growing function in administering interest rate subventions.

Charitable Contributions

Finally, there are the provisions of H.R.13270 that would significantly alter the balance of private vs. government effort in various sectors of our society. It would do this by hampering the gift-raising capability of private nonprofit institutions on which every community in the nation, in one way or another, depends heavily for educational, cultural, medical and other facilities. It is especially serious that this would be done at a time when these institutions, with few exceptions, are operating under increasingly serious financial difficulties and when demands on them by the community are heavier than ever before.

The proposed increase from 30% to 50% in the general limitation on an individual's charitable contribution deduction would be a constructive and important change, but in a number of other provisions H.R.13270 would be so technically complicated and so severe in its treatment of acts of charity and philanthropy that prospective donors would likely withdraw in bafflement if not in anguish as fund-raising personnel attempt to explain the tax implications of prospective gifts. Features of the proposed legislation that would make life more difficult for gift-supported institutions include:

a) eliminating the unlimited charitable contribution deduction now available to donors, thus making it more difficult to obtain the large gifts that frequently are the events that make a success of ambitious fund-raising programs;

b) treating as taxable the appreciation (unrealized, at that) of charitable contributions of appreciated property;

c) placing what appear to be severe limitations on the deduction available to donors in charitable remainder trusts, and charitable income trusts the remainder of which goes to a beneficiary other than a charity.

Nothing said above is meant to disparage in the least the importance of efforts to check genuine abuses of the present tax code. No one can make a case for retreating from that task. The point is we must be sure that in the cleaning-up process there is no exchange of new inequities for old ones.

We need a tax code that is fair and equitable. But we also need a code that bolsters incentive to work, to save, to invest, to take risks (and heavy risks at that) and a code that will have the kind of effect on the institutional structure of our country—the place of private enterprise in the production process, the balance of state and local vs. Federal power, and the role of private nonprofit, gift-supported institutions—that will strengthen not weaken the democratic qualities in American life.

Wash Trip.

Capitol Hill

Senate shapes tax bill under threat of veto

Within the week, the Senate Finance Committee will have finished its alterations of the House-passed tax reform bill. But ahead will be the hurdles of the Senate floor and the inevitable bartering of a conference committee. And hovering over all is the threat of a Presidential veto.

President Nixon raised the possibility of a veto several weeks ago when he told a press conference he would oppose "a revenue shortfall that is more than I believe the nation can stand." Now Administration spokesmen have picked up the warning, and have privately set the limits at around the $2.4-billion revenue loss the House-passed version of tax reform would cost.

The crucial decisions for the Senate Finance Committee will come in the next seven days. Chairman Russell Long (D-La.) will carefully postpone discussion of rate relief for low- and middle-income taxpayers until the committee has acted on areas singled out by the House to produce big chunks of new revenue: utilities depreciation, foundations, and—the matter uppermost in Long's mind—oil depletion allowances.

A challenge. But Long has already answered the President's warning with what amounts to a challenge. He predicts that even at this point it looks as if his panel will report out a bill that "will lose more money than the House bill." Long added: "But in my judgment, it will not be a bill that the President will veto. It will be the sort of share-the-wealth thing that I like. It will relieve business of several billions of dollars and redistribute it to the poor and to labor."

Russell Long has already answered Nixon's warning with what amounts to a challenge

So far, Long's committee has clamped down on multiple corporation tax breaks, tightened real estate depreciation, restored the 70% maximum income tax that the House cut to 50%, liberalized moving expense deductions, and tightened medicare reporting rules to curb excessive physicians' fees.

But the bulk of the committee's effort has taken on a distinctly pro-business coloration. This has included: deleting the House plans to tax state and local government bonds, watering down House tax increases and restrictions on hobby farms and farm cooperatives, restoring to six months the House's one-year holding period for capital gains tax breaks, amending the investment credit repeal to exclude railroad rolling stock and some aircraft builders, and reducing commercial bank tax rates.

The contest. Even with the Republican members of the committee off on separate crusades for their own tax pets, Long is firmly in control. He is expected by most observers to shape the bill so as to be in a strong bargaining position on the still potent oil-tax question. Nixon knows this, and his veto threat is seen as an attempt to have a voice when the conference committee meets to hammer out the final version.

Even so, skeptics on Capitol Hill point to a number of factors that make a Nixon veto—or the threat of one—a risky undertaking. One factor is Nixon's motive for the veto warning itself. The President is clearly worried that without at least some modest oil depletion reform, any bill passed by the Senate would be open to public criticism. He also worries that Long is well on his way to altering and adding so much to the bill that it could sink, carrying oil depletion cuts and a choice plank of the Nixon campaign record along with it. The warning is clear to Long: The President wants a bill reported out of the Finance Committee that can be repaired and shaped to Nixon standards—or else.

There is also a tactical twist to go with the warning—the White House has chosen to make its grab for control of the bill in the joint conference committee rather than on the Senate floor. Political power is a factor here, since Senate Republicans have shown no active interest in pushing the White House tax reform line in floor debate. The conference committee would bring together again the combination of House Ways & Means chairman Wilbur Mills, Representative John Byrnes (R-Wis.) and his faithful sidekick Representative James Utt (R-Calif.). This triumvirate swayed much of the house bill to their tastes. These three plus Representative John Watts (D-Ky.), who will also be in the House delegation, voted repeatedly for less stringent oil depletion cuts, and they will be in a firm position to bargain with Long and to listen to the White House at the same time.

But Nixon could stub his toe badly by both stalling for time and by raising the veto threat. It could give Long an escape route. He could overload the bill's taxpayer relief sections with the assurance that Nixon would have to take the blame of vetoing the measure if it gets out of hand.

Mansfield's role. What happens to tax reform after it leaves the Senate panel will depend on two other imponderables—Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.), and the nation's economy, which could change its course dramatically in the next few months. Mansfield has been holding as hostage—until Long reports out a tax reform bill—such Nixon "must" legislation as the extension of the 5% surtax through June, and the repeal of the 7% investment tax credit.

Mansfield said last week that the debate over tax reform "could take several weeks." The debate could be interrupted by the squabble over Supreme Court nominee Clement Haynsworth, and a number of pressing appropriations bills. Meanwhile, Senate Democrats are paying close attention to the economic weathervane to decide whether or not they should approve the unpopular income and excise tax extensions.

But Mansfield may well wind up with a hostage no one wants to ransom. If the Senate should reject or even postpone the tax extensions, two things would happen: The Nixon anti-inflation drive would be blunted, and the extra revenues which were to have financed a major part of early tax relief measures would be gone. Here again the threat of Presidential veto would boomerang, and the White House rather than Mansfield would be under pressure for risking the package.

How the Senate Finance Committee is reforming the House tax reform bill

	Annual impact on revenues Millions of dollars
Real estate: tighter rules on depreciation	+$1,300
Maximum income tax: retaining present 70% rate, instead of 50%	+200
Medicare: requiring hospitals to report payments to physicians	+1,000
Tax-exempt bonds: continuing exemption for state and local government issues	−1,800
Deferred compensation: eliminating House-proposed tax	−150
Capital gains: retaining present holding period, instead of lengthening it	−15
7% investment credit: exempting railroads, aircraft makers, and shipbuilders from repeal	−100

Weekly Trip — ~~VA~~ PA

AFL-CIO News 11/1/69

The Plague

Senate Panel Reopens Loopholes in Tax Bill

The Senate Finance Committee has restored what a House tax bill proposed eliminating—hundreds of millions of dollars in tax loopholes for businesses, banks and millionaires.

Having completed its work on the loophole-closing sections of the House bill, the committee turned its attention to the measure's tax relief sections.

Although no exact figures were immediately available, one calculation showed the committee stripped more than $500 million in proposed annual new revenue from the House bill.

More important than the amount, however, was the fact that the reduced revenue was the result of the committee's weakening of sections dealing with capital gains, the oil industry, banks and stock market investors.

The AFL-CIO had called for strengthening the House bill. But the Senate committee's actions reflected the influence of what AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller termed "an army of special interest lobbyists."

The Wall Street Journal reported that "some committee sources contend that these lobbyists have, in effect, written the main sections of the bill applying to them."

Most of the loss of revenue from the House bill comes from the Senate panel's watering down of a stiffer capital gains tax, restoration of tax-exempt interest on municipal bonds, a smaller cut in the tax-free oil depletion allowance, and continuation of a padded "bad debt" tax-free reserve for banks.

On the plus side, the committee kept the maximum tax rate where it now is instead of reducing it to 50 percent as the House proposed.

The committee also rejected a House provision that would have extended present "income-averaging" to capital gains, wagering and gift income; and it improved a minimum tax provision in the House bill. Both committee actions will increase revenue and are similar to recommendations made previously by the AFL-CIO.

The committee also made changes in House provisions covering foundations. It substituted a one-fifth of 1 percent tax on a foundation's assets for a House-proposed 7.5 percent tax on investment income. It placed a 40-year limit on the life of foundations which pass out money grants rather than operate specific charitable or health programs.

Washington Trip

Public Response Needed:

Special Interest Lobbies Attack Tax Reform Measure in Senate

MANY KEY REFORMS of the House-passed tax measure now before the Senate Finance Committee are being wrecked or weakened by special interest lobbyists, labor economist Nat Goldfinger charged.

"The oil people, the Wall Street investment houses and others are on Capitol Hill in droves these days, working to preserve their own special loopholes," declared Goldfinger, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

"The members of the U.S. Senate have to hear from not only trade union members, but from the general public back home, too," he stressed.

Questioned by reporters on the network radio interview, Labor News Conference, Goldfinger said that tax-free state and municipal bonds, oil depletion allowances and the capital gains loophole are among the areas where major reform is needed to head off loss of public confidence in the federal tax structure.

Goldfinger agreed with the revelation made on the broadcast that the oft-cited figure of 155 "zero taxpayers with adjusted gross income of over $200,000 is grossly understated." He pointed out that since much of the exempt income is not even listed on tax returns, "$20 billion . . . or maybe quite a bit more . . . is not reported at all."

EXEMPTION OF INTEREST payments on state and local bonds is "a key loophole of special privilege for wealthy families and the banks," he asserted. He labeled as "shameful," the Senate committee's restoration of the tax-free status that the House-passed bill would end.

"The oil industry," Goldfinger declared, "should be treated like any other, in terms of the right to depreciate their property—it should not be given the special privilege of depletion allowances." He said that the AFL-CIO is "willing to support, as the first step" toward eventual elimination of the loophole, reduction of the present 27 percent allowance to 20 percent.

AFL-CIO News 11-7-69

SPECIAL INTEREST LOBBYISTS are sinking or weakening many of the key reforms in the House-passed tax bill now before the Senate Finance Committee, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nat Goldfinger, center, warned on Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on Mutual radio. Questioning him were Eileen Shanahan of the New York Times and Lee Cohn of the Washington Evening Star.

Wash Trip

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W., ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Black

Clear copy Onion Skin

November 10, 1969

FLUORESCENT

Mr. Lane Kirkland
Secretary-Treasurer
AFL-CIO News
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Lane:

I have just finished reading the November 8 issue of AFL-CIO News, which included an article by David L. Perlman on the final action of the Senate Finance Committee on the Tax Reform Bill. I was appalled to find that there was absolutely no reference to the Committee's vote by 13 to 4 to prohibit foundations from making grants for voter registration drives. The effect of this racist and punitive legislation will be disastrous to black participation in the political process, especially in the South where most of the foundation funds for voter registration have been spent. Indeed the involvement of blacks in the Northern political process is also seriously affected.

AFL-CIO has for many years been our friend and partner in trying to involve black people in the political process, which makes it all the more regrettable that in the reporting of the Finance Committee's actions, AFL-CIO News failed to mention this drastic action.

In our efforts to defeat the prohibition against foundation funds for voter registration drives it is our hope that we would have your wholehearted support and cooperation as in the past. And, also hopefully, a line or two in the AFL-CIO News apprising your membership of the seriousness of the problem. To that end, I am enclosing a statement released in Washington last week.

Sincerely,

Vernon E. Jordan, Jr.
Director
Voter Education Project

VEJ:nm
Enclosure

cc: Messrs. Al Kehrer
Don Slaiman
Emory Via
D. L. Perlman
A. B. Miller

Wash Trip
p 3 esp.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS

ROY WILKINS, Chairman
ARNOLD ARONSON, Secretary
JOSEPH L. RAUH, JR., Counsel
BAYARD RUSTIN, Executive Committee Chairman
CLARENCE M. MITCHELL, Legislative Chairman
JAMES HAMILTON, Compliance & Enforcement Chairman
MARVIN CAPLAN, Director Washington Office
J. FRANCIS POHLHAUS, Special Consultant
YVONNE PRICE, Executive Assistant

2027 Mass. Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036 phone 667-1780 • New York address: 55 West 42nd St., New York 10036, phone 564-3450

MEMO: No. 18-69
November 13, 1969

TO: Participating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

A CALL TO ACTION ON ANTI-POVERTY, VOTING RIGHTS AND EQUAL EMPLOYMENT

Congress has begun to move in three areas of vital concern to the Leadership Conference - the Anti-Poverty Bill has cleared committee; the Voting Rights Act needs support in an attempt to bring it to the House floor; the bill to strengthen the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is under closed-door consideration on the Senate side. This MEMO tells where these three bills are and what can be done to support them.

House Anti-Poverty Bill A Good One, Too

In a swift and surprising move, the House Education and Labor Committee last week voted out the Anti-Poverty Bill (H.R. 12321). The Committee's report on the bill may be filed early next week and the bill may come before the House Rules Committee soon after.

On the whole, the Committee measure, like the bill (S.3016) the full Senate approved on October 14, is a reasonably good one. It improves on the Senate bill in one very important respect: it does not contain the "Murphy Amendment" - the provision added on the Senate floor by Senator George Murphy (R., Calif.) that gives a state governor veto power over all or part of a Legal Services Program (see MEMO: 17-69, Nov. 5, 1969).

Less Money Than The Senate

The authorizations in the House Committee bill exceed the Administration's request by $295 million. The Senate authorized $584.2 million more than the Administration asked for.

Of the extra money in the House bill, $40 million would go for Job Corps and work and training programs, and $225 million for Community Action Programs -- Head Start, Legal Services, Health and Food programs and the like.

Both bills would extend the life of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) another two years.

PARTICIPATING ORGANIZATIONS

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH
ALPHA KAPPA ALPHA SORORITY, INC.
ALPHA PHI ALPHA FRATERNITY, INC.
AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA
AMALGAMATED MEAT CUTTERS & BUTCHER WORKMEN
AMERICAN BAPTIST CONVENTION — DIVISION OF SOCIAL CONCERN
AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION
AMERICAN ETHICAL UNION
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR — CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE COUNTY & MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF TEACHERS
AMERICAN GI FORUM
AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS
AMERICAN NEWSPAPER GUILD
AMERICAN VETERANS COMMITTEE
AMERICANS FOR DEMOCRATIC ACTION
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH INSTITUTE
B'NAI B'RITH WOMEN
BROTHERHOOD OF SLEEPING CAR PORTERS
CHRISTIAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN - BRETHREN SERVICE COMMISSION CHURCH WOMEN UNITED CITIZENS LOBBY FOR FREEDOM & FAIR PLAY
COLLEGE YCS NATIONAL STAFF
COMMITTEE FOR COMMUNITY AFFAIRS
CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY
DELTA SIGMA THETA SORORITY
EPISCOPAL CHURCH—DIVISION OF CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP
EPISCOPAL SOCIETY FOR CULTURAL AND RACIAL UNITY
FRANCISCAN SOCIAL ACTION TEAM
FRIENDS COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL LEGISLATION
FRONTIERS INTERNATIONAL
HADASSAH
HOTEL AND RESTAURANT EMPLOYEES AND BARTENDERS INTERNATIONAL UNION
IMPROVED BENEVOLENT & PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS OF THE WORLD
INDUSTRIAL UNION DEPARTMENT — AFL-CIO
INTERNATIONAL LADIES GARMENT WORKERS' UNION OF AMERICA
INTERNATIONAL UNION OF ELECTRICAL RADIO & MACHINE WORKERS
IOTA PHI LAMBDA SORORITY, INC.
JAPANESE AMERICAN CITIZENS LEAGUE
JEWISH LABOR COMMITTEE
JEWISH WAR VETERANS
LEAGUE FOR INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY
LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF THE UNITED STATES
LUTHERAN CHURCH IN AMERICA — BOARD OF SOCIAL MINISTRY
LUTHERAN HUMAN RELATIONS ASSOCIATION
MEDICAL COMMITTEE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS
NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF POSTAL & FEDERAL EMPLOYEES
NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF POSTAL & FEDERAL EMPLOYEES — NATIONAL WOMEN'S AUXILIARY
NATIONAL ASSEMBLY FOR SOCIAL POLICY & DEVELOPMENT, INC.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGE WOMEN
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLORED WOMEN'S CLUBS, INC.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MARKET DEVELOPERS
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NEGRO BUSINESS & PROFESSIONAL WOMEN'S CLUBS, INC.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REAL ESTATE BROKERS, INC.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SOCIAL WORKERS
NATIONAL BAPTIST CONVENTION, U. S. A.
NATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL BEAUTY CULTURISTS' LEAGUE, INC.
NATIONAL CATHOLIC CONFERENCE FOR INTERRACIAL JUSTICE
NATIONAL CATHOLIC SOCIAL ACTION CONFERENCE
NATIONAL COMMUNITY RELATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CATHOLIC MEN
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CATHOLIC WOMEN
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES—DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL JUSTICE
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF NEGRO WOMEN
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF PUERTO RICAN VOLUNTEERS, INC.
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF SENIOR CITIZENS, INC.
NATIONAL DENTAL ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL FARMERS UNION
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF SETTLEMENTS & NEIGHBORHOOD CENTERS
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF TEMPLE SISTERHOODS
NATIONAL JEWISH WELFARE BOARD
NATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR MEXICAN-AMERICAN SERVICES
NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN
NATIONAL SHARECROPPERS FUND
NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
NEGRO AMERICAN LABOR COUNCIL
OIL, CHEMICAL & ATOMIC WORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION
OMEGA PSI PHI FRATERNITY, INC.
PHI BETA SIGMA FRATERNITY, INC.
PHI DELTA KAPPA SORORITY
PIONEER WOMEN, AMERICAN AFFAIRS
POALE ZION
PRESBYTERIAN INTERRACIAL COUNCIL
RETAIL WHOLESALE & DEPARTMENT STORE UNION
SCHOLARSHIP, EDUCATION & DEFENSE FUND FOR RACIAL EQUALITY, INC.
SOUTHERN BEAUTY CONGRESS, INC.
SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE
TEXTILE WORKERS UNION OF AMERICA
TRANSPORT WORKERS UNION OF AMERICA
UNION OF AMERICAN HEBREW CONGREGATIONS
UNITARIAN UNIVERSALIST ASSOCIATION — COMMISSION ON RELIGION & RACE
UNITARIAN UNIVERSALIST WOMEN'S FEDERATION
UNITED AUTOMOBILE WORKERS OF AMERICA
UNITED CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY
UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST — COMMITTEE FOR RACIAL JUSTICE NOW
UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST — COUNCIL FOR CHRISTIAN SOCIAL ACTION
UNITED FARM WORKERS ORGANIZING COMMITTEE
UNITED HEBREW TRADES
UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH — COMMISSION ON RELIGION & RACE
UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH — OFFICE OF CHURCH & SOCIETY
UNITED RUBBER WORKERS
U. S. CATHOLIC CONFERENCE — DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT
UNITED STATES NATIONAL STUDENT ASSOCIATION
UNITED STATES YOUTH COUNCIL
UNITED STEELWORKERS OF AMERICA
UNITED SYNAGOGUE OF AMERICA
WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE & FREEDOM
WORKERS DEFENSE LEAGUE
WORKMEN'S CIRCLE
YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, NATIONAL BOARD
YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF THE USA, NATIONAL BOARD
ZETA PHI BETA SORORITY

The Dangers Ahead

Liberals in the House Education and Labor Committee, led by the Chairman Carl Perkins (D., Ky.) were able to hold the anti-poverty bill against crippling and weakening amendments. That will be harder to do once the bill hits the floor. It is almost certain that attempts will be made to add the Murphy restraint on Legal Services; to cut back on the extra funds; and to weaken OEO by giving more power over its programsto the states. There may also be the usual attempts to shift some of OEO's best programs to other Federal agencies.

What We Can Do

The Committee bill is as good a measure as we can get in the House. We must try and hold it against all attempts to weaken it.

You and your organizations can help by:

1. Writing those House members you feel you can reach, urging them to be present when the bill comes up, and

2. Urging them to vote against all weakening amendments, particularly those that would cripple the Legal Services program and strip OEO of power and funds.

VOTING RIGHTS BILL READY FOR RULES COMMITTEE ACTION

The bill (H.R. 4249) to extend the protections of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 for another five years beyond their expiration date of August 6, 1970, is now stuck in the House Rules Committee. Its chairman, William M. Colmer (D., Miss.) true to an old Southern tradition, is trying to keep it bottled up.

On Tuesday, November 18, the Committee will meet and an attempt will be made to dislodge the bill and get it reported to the floor. You can help by visiting friendly committee members, wiring and writing them, urging them to be present on the 18th and join the move to move the bill.

Here are the Committee members, other than Mr. Colmer:

Democrats: Ray J. Madden (Ind.), James J. Delaney (N.Y.), Richard Bolling (Mo.), Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. (Mass.), B. F. Sisk (Calif), John Young (Tex.), Claude Pepper (Fla.), Spark M. Matsunaga (Hawaii), William R. Anderson (Tenn.).

Republicans: H. Allen Smith (Calif.), John B. Anderson (Ill.), Dave Martin (Neb.) James H. Quillen (Tenn.), and Delbert L. Latta (Ohio)

Letters can be sent, c/o U. S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C. 20515.

A SENATE MOVE TO STRENGTHEN EEOC

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee is expected to meet in closed session within a week or so to consider marking up S. 2453, a bill to strengthen the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission principally by giving it the power to issue cease and desist orders against violators.

At the last meeting of the Washington representatives to the Leadership Conference, it was agreed to reaffirm our support of the bill without any changes.

Clarence Mitchell, Chairman of the Conference's Legislative Committee, reported that attempts are being made to strip from the bill provisions that would transfer the Office of Federal Contract Compliance to the EEOC and would give EEOC jurisdiction over discrimination in Federal employment.

Mr. Mitchell sent the following telegram to all members of the Committee: LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS REPRESENTATIVES, MEETING FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, WERE GREATLY CONCERNED AT REPORTS OF EFFORTS TO DELETE FROM S. 2453, THE EEOC BILL, THOSE PROVISIONS THAT WOULD TRANSFER OFCC FUNCTIONS TO EEOC AND GIVE THE COMMISSION JURISDICTION OVER DISCRIMINATION IN FEDERAL AGENCIES. ACCORDINGLY, WE UNANIMOUSLY REAFFIRM THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE'S POSITION THAT EEOC SHOULD HAVE JURISDICTION OVER OFCC FUNCTIONS AND PROBLEMS OF DISCRIMINATION IN FEDERAL AGENCIES. WE URGE YOU TO SUPPORT S. 2453 IN ITS PRESENT FORM AND TO INSIST UPON THE INCLUSION OF THE OFCC COVERAGE AND FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT PROVISIONS.

Conference groups can help by sending their own wires. Committee members are:

Democrats: Harrison Williams, Jr. (N.J.), Jennings Randolph (W. Va.), Claiborne Pell (R.I.), Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.), Gaylord Nelson (Minn.), Walter F. Mondale (Wisc.), Thomas F. Eagleton (Mo.), and Alan Cranston (Calif.)

Republicans: Jacob K. Javits (N. Y.), Winston L. Prouty (Vt.), Richard S. Schweiker (Pa.), William B. Saxbe (O.), and Ralph Smith (Ill.)

A BLOW TO VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVES

In the name of tax reform, the Senate Finance Committee has dealt a devastating blow to private foundation support of voter education and registration drives.

The House-passed bill (H.R. 13270) was hard enough on voting. It would restrict foundation grants to voter registration and education programs which cover five or more states and whose support comes from five or more tax exempt organizations, with not more than 25 per cent coming from any one organization. The programs of the Southern Regional Council and the League of Women Voters were specifically mentioned in the House report as the kind that would still be eligible for grants. Worthwhile programs that do not encompass five states would be excluded from such assistance.

The Senate Finance Committee has deleted from the bill that portion that would allow any private foundation funds to be used for voter registration drives. Even a group like the Southern Regional Council would no longer qualify for aid. Programs that helped add hundreds of new Negro voters to the rolls will no longer be supported.

In a telegram of protest to members of the Senate Finance Committee, the National Board of the YWCA put the issue squarely: "This action discriminates against black and other minority people who need assistance in assuming the obligation of citizenship. By nullifying broad-based citizen efforts in voter education we are strongly convinced this provision will further erode confidence that our democratic system works for the benefit of all."

What You Can Do

There are many provisions in this complex bill that are of particular concern to Leadership Conference organizations. We hope all organizations will write their Senators to change this flat prohibition on support for campaigns to extend the right to vote. The Tax Reform Bill is expected to be taken up when the Senate finishes with the debate on the Haynsworth nomination.

A MILLION MORE FOR FAIR HOUSING ENFORCEMENT

The Senate Appropriations Committee on November 6 reported out an appropriations bill for the Department of Housing and Urban Development that includes $6 million for enforcement of the fair housing law in Fiscal Year 1970. That is one million more than the House approved. The Administration asked for $8 million. Any attempt to increase the appropriation further will have to be made on the Senate floor.

****

Top D.C. Folder

The New York Times

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1969

Group Says Tax Bill Perils Black Vote

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Nov. 18—An organization instrumental in registering more than a million Negro voters is fighting for its life against legislative attempts to end its seven-year existence.

The Voter Education Project, largest group of its kind in the nation, would be penniless and impotent if a proposed ban on foundation support of its activities becomes law as part of a Senate tax reform bill.

The ban, which was inserted in the House version of the bill by the Senate Finance Committee, was described by the organization's spokesmen as a "blatantly defensive maneuver by Southern Senators who are disturbed and frightened by the growing black vote."

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the organization, has called the committee's provision "punitive" and "racist in its effect."

'Black Voter Depletion'

Marvin Wall, research director for the organization, described the provision yesterday as "a black voter depletion allowance," an apparent jibe at the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator Russel B. Long, Democrat of Louisiana, who has actively opposed the reduction of oil depletion allowances.

"This is an emasculation of the V.E.P. and the token progress made in the past few years," John Morris, an executive of the group complained yesterday. "If this provision becomes law, it will not make any difference what action is taken on the Voting Rights Act," he added.

Mr. Morris was referring to the voting Rights Act of 1965, which suspended literacy tests in six states and provided protection for prospective Negro voters.

The act, which expires next summer, had been the premise for the organization's activities in the last five years.

In Capital Today

The logic adopted by members of the organization's staff, as expressed by Mr. Morris, is that, regardless of whether the act is extended, the ban on foundation funds for voter registration would cripple all progress in this area.

Mr. Jordan was in Washington today to confer with members of the United States Commission on Civil Rights. Other staff members are attempting to marshal liberal forces against the bill's provision.

Spokesmen for the organization disclosed yesterday that the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a coalition of civil rights organizations, has started to lobby against the proposed ban. Officials of the Voter Education Project are to meet Friday in New York City with representatives of several church social action departments to map strategy against the bill.

The Senate Finance Committee announced Oct. 27 that it had deleted that portion of the House-approved tax reform measure that would allow private foundation funds to be used for voter registration drives.

Under provisions of the House bill, the organization would have been able to continue serving as a conduit for foundation funds to smaller groups involved in voter registration activities in dozens of Southern communities. The bill passed by the House limits the use of foundation funds to support such activity but does not categorically prohibit such support.

The organization opposes both the House and the Senate measures but "could live with the less restrictive" bill passed last August by the House, according to one spokesman.

If the Senate approves the tax reform bill, conference committee action will be required to iron out differences in the two measures.

THE WASHINGTON POST

Tuesday, Nov. 18, 1969

Voter Unit Hits Curb on Foundations

By a Washington Post Staff Writer

ATLANTA, Nov. 17—Senate committee efforts to bar tax-exempt foundation support for Negro voter registration drives were condemned today as a "devious trick to emasculate the voting rights act."

The broadside against the Senate Finance Committee proposal was leveled by officials of the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project, which funds virtually all voter registration drives in the South.

The project in turn is supported almost entirely by foundation grants. Without foundation support, special assistant John Morris declared, the project's $600,000-a-year program would be out of business.

A consortium of 11 tax-exempt foundations has settled upon the voter project as the vehicle for all voter registration support in the South. The project allocates the money to such organizations as the NAACP and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference for individual drives.

House-passed tax-reform legislation specifically would have permitted the project to carry on the work it has conducted since 1962. But the version approved by the Senate Finance Committee last week would ban all foundation support for voter drives.

"It's a 'black voter depletion allowance'," the project's research director Marvin Wall, added.

Reg Murphy - Editor
11-19-69 Atlanta Constitution

Knives Sharpened For Registration

The long knives, sharpened by seven years of grinding, have cut savagely into Negro voter registration efforts in the South. Recovery will come within the next few weeks or not at all.

The Senate Finance Committee wielded the knives. The committee voted 13-4 to forbid future tax-exempt foundation grants to voter registration projects. That action, if it stands in the Senate and in the conference committee with the House, would stop the work of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council.

Vernon Jordan, the intelligent and articulate director of the VEP, believes the full Senate will reverse the committee action. But he may be too much of an optimist.

For the Senate will take up the tax reform bill, which includes the funds cutoff to voter registration units, shortly after it finishes debate on the confirmation of Judge Clement Haynsworth to the United States Supreme Court. Political passions are likely to run high then. They may not be helpful to the VEP cause.

•

In an oblique way, the Finance Committee action is a compliment. It is a way of saying that Negro voter registration has been rising at a dismaying rate in the eyes of the Southern segregationists—and those who would fashion Southern strategies.

Overall Negro voter registration has gone up dramatically in the 11 Southern states involved. From 1,480,000 registered black voters in 1962, the total has increased to over 3,112,000. For blacks of voting age, only 29.6 per cent registered in 1962. Now over 62 per cent are registered.

Obviously, those increases have had impact. There were 78 black elected officials in the region in 1965. There are more than 500 now.

Some Southern counties have begun to share power between the races (Hancock County in Middle Georgia is an example) and other counties have elected black officials (Greene County in Alabama is one instance). That is dramatic evidence th the system can be made to work.

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT
5 FORSYTH ST. N.W.
ATLANTA, GA. 30303
522-7495

•

Jordan insists, however, that the Senate action "is directed accurately and in deadly fashion against those who need help . . . Black people in the South cannot continue to make the sort of registration gains they need to make without organized registration programs. These organized registration drives would not have existed, and cannot exist, without generous foundation support."

He has begun to fight back. He thinks the Senate may reject the action of the Finance Committee. He has spent much of his time in Washington trying to rescue the program.

"There are many people in the nation today—young whites as well as blacks—who feel that the American political system is not really open to their aspirations," Jordan said. "There are many who will see in this action of the Senate Finance Committee a determination to slam shut the door to political participation which only in the last few years has been opened to black people in the South."

The reasonable response is to reverse the Senate Finance Committee action. The knife should be aimed at tax loopholes, not political participation.

EV - Wash Trib

Senate Prepares to Act

Major Tax-Reform Legislation Recovers Momentum, Could Be Ready for President's Signature by Year-End

By FRED L. ZIMMERMAN
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

WASHINGTON — After a near-stall in the Senate Finance Committee, major tax-reform legislation has regained momentum and could be through Congress by year-end.

Although weaker in many ways than its House counterpart, the massive reform and relief bill that cleared the Finance Committee on schedule Friday is strikingly similar, in broad outline, to the historic measure that passed the House last August.

Committee Chairman Long (D., La.) said in an interview that he believes this structural similarity will minimize the number of big conflicts between the House and Senate versions and thus help produce fairly quick compromise and final passage.

That assumes, of course, that the area of disagreement between the two bills isn't widened further by adoption of weakening amendments to the committee's measure on the Senate floor. The full Senate seems likely to toughen rather than weaken the bill, however, bringing it even more into line with the House version.

The bill could go to the Senate floor in a couple of weeks, and some Congressional leaders believe it may be ready for President Nixon's signature by the end of the year. Treasury Secretary Kennedy, in a statement, urged the Senate to consider the bill "at the earliest possible date."

Impact of Panel's Version

Ignoring several of the Administration's most basic requests, the committee wrote a bill that ultimately would raise $6.5 billion a year through higher taxes on the wealthy and on various industries. This added revenue would help make possible about $9 billion of rate reductions and other tax breaks, mainly for low and middle-income persons.

When fully effective in 1979, the committee's bill would raise $365 million less than the House measure through loophole-closing provisions and would grant $305 million less in tax relief.

Like the House bill, the committee's measure would produce a long-term net revenue loss of about $3.4 billion a year and [illegible]

Comparison of the Impact Of Both of the Tax Bills

By a WALL STREET JOURNAL Staff Reporter

WASHINGTON—Here is a comparison of the overall impact of the Senate Finance Committee's tax bill with that passed by the House, for calendar years 1970, 1971 and 1979.

The "reforms" include a variety of loophole-closing items, as well as repeal of the 7% investment tax credit, which ultimately will bring in more than $3 billion. The "relief" provisions include rate reductions, increases in both the regular and the minimum standard deductions, and lower tax rates for single persons. The figures are in millions of dollars.

	1970	1971	1979
Finance Committee
Reforms	+3,895	+4,580	+6,490
Relief	−1,492	−5,363	−8,968
Revenue effect	+2,403	− 783	−2,478
House
Reforms	+4,140	+5,050	+6,855
Relief	−1,692	−6,787	−9,273
Revenue effect	+2,448	−1,737	−2,418

earned income, and it sharply limited the House bill's proposed liberalization of the income-averaging provision in current law, which allows a taxpayer with unusually large earnings in a single year to spread the income over several years for tax purposes.

To reform advocates, the committee bill's biggest defect may be its failure to touch the tax-exemption of interest on state and local bonds.

The House bill would establish a Federal subsidy arrangement to encourage state and local governments to issue taxable, rather than tax-exempt, bonds. It also would provide for an indirect tax on interest from currently tax-exempt bonds in certain cases. Under a barrage of lobbying, the Senate committee junked both these features in its first day of drafting.

The committee went much easier than did the House on the oil industry, banks, savings and loan associations, stock-market investors, and conglomerates engaged in mergers

sion that isn't in the House bill. Foundations would be taxed, for the first time, at the rate of 0.2% of assets; the House bill's tax, based on investment income, would bring in about twice as much revenue. Existing foundations and related persons couldn't own more than 50% of a corporation's voting stock, compared with 20% in the House bill. A foundation would be required to distribute every 12 months all of its income, or an amount equal to 50% of its assets, whichever is greater. Foundations would be totally prohibited from participating in voter-registration drives.

—A newly popular method of avoiding some taxation would be curbed through a tightening of the tax treatment of pension-plan contributions made by doctors and lawyers who establish so-called "professional service corporations." Such a corporation would be allowed to deduct up to 10% of each employe's earned income, or $2,500, whichever is less, as a contribution to a pension plan.

Extension of Surcharge

Additionally, the bill includes several items that were part of a measure that passed the House last June 30 to continue the income-tax surcharge for 12 months. These items were sidetracked when the Senate decided to continue the surtax for only six months.

Among them are proposed repeal of the 7% credit for business equipment purchases, retroactive to last April 18, and a one-year postponement in the phased reductions scheduled to begin next Jan. 1 in telephone and automobile excise taxes.

The reform bill also includes the sidetracked portion of the surtax, which would be extended under the bill for the first half of 1970 at 5%. This feature may lend impetus to the effort to achieve enactment of the reform bill by Dec. 31, the date when the current 10% surtax is scheduled to expire.

The Finance Committee is widely regarded as friendly territory for lobbyists, and early last month it looked as if they would succeed in gutting the bill.

Some Republican members had suggested it might be wise to slow down consideration of the bill and forget about trying to meet the scheduled reporting date of last Friday. Advocates of delay succeeded in persuading the committee to send to the Senate floor as a separate measure the proposed repeal of the investment tax credit, thinking that its approval would lessen pressure for tax reform. But Senate Democratic leader Mansfield of Montana refused to let it come to a vote.

Liberal Democrats on the committee, who had been calling loudly for tax reform in speeches all year, were absent from the initial drafting sessions, which consisted mainly of decisions to junk key provisions of the House bill. Committee sources reported that an anti-reform bloc led by five Republican Senators was controlling the bill's fate.

In the final few days of drafting, the situation suddenly changed. The liberals began attending the meetings, and the committee's bill took on a tougher tone. Some sources said the change reflected the committee's concern about criticism it was receiving in the press

Please Turn to Page 16, Column 5

Tax Reform Legislation Moves Ahead, Could Be Effective by Year-End

That assumes, of course, that the area of disagreement between the two bills isn't widened further by adoption of weakening amendments to the committee's measure on the Senate floor. The full Senate seems likely to toughen rather than weaken the bill, however, bringing it even more into line with the House version.

The bill could go to the Senate floor in a couple of weeks, and some Congressional leaders believe it may be ready for President Nixon's signature by the end of the year. Treasury Secretary Kennedy, in a statement, urged the Senate to consider the bill "at the earliest possible date."

Impact of Panel's Version

Ignoring several of the Administration's most basic requests, the committee wrote a bill that ultimately would raise $6.5 billion a year through higher taxes on the wealthy and on various industries. This added revenue would help make possible about $9 billion of rate reductions and other tax breaks, mainly for low and middle-income persons.

When fully effective in 1979, the committee's bill would raise $365 million less than the House measure through loophole-closing provisions and would grant $305 million less in tax relief.

Like the House bill, the committee's measure would produce a long-term net revenue loss of about $2.4 billion a year and an eventual increase in corporate taxes of about $4.8 billion. The Administration, wanting to avoid these two results, had asked the committee to trim the House bill's revenue loss to no more than $1.3 billion and its corporate tax increase to no more than $3.5 billion.

To accomplish the latter goal and to correct what it termed the House bill's "bias against investment in favor of consumption," the Treasury had proposed to the committee a reduction in the regular corporate income-tax rate to 46% from 48% over a two-year period, starting in 1971. This was to have been accompanied by a cutback in the proposed tax relief for individuals.

Many Congressional Republicans viewed the proposal as a political monstrosity, and it reportedly was never even brought up for formal discussion during the committee's 16 days of closed drafting sessions.

Tax-Relief Benefits

Instead, the committee adopted a package of tax-relief provisions nearly identical to those in the House Bill. Benefits in the committee's measure include:

—Rate reductions of 5% or more for all individual taxpayers. The cuts would take effect in 1971 and 1972. The bulk of the reduction would come in the second year instead of being spread evenly as it is in the House bill. The rate cuts would cost the Treasury $4.5 billion a year, when fully effective.

—A gradual increase in the regular standard deduction that is used by taxpayers who have insufficient deductions for itemized returns. Currently 10% of adjusted gross income with a $1,000 maximum, the standard deduction would rise—as in the House bill—to a 1972 level of 15%, with a $2,000 maximum. This would cost the Treasury $1.4 billion a year, but would simplify the tax-collection process appreciably by increasing to nearly 70% from the current 58% the number of taxpayers using the standard deduction.

—A "low-income allowance" of $1,100 to replace the minimum standard deduction of $200, plus $100 for each personal exemption up to $1,000. This means taxation would begin at the point where an individual's adjusted gross income exceeded the $1,100 allowance plus the total of his $600 personal exemptions. When fully effective in 1972 (rather than in 1971, as in the House bill), the allowance would remove 5.2 million returns from the tax rolls and would reduce taxes due on another seven million returns, all at a cost to the Treasury of about $2.6 billion.

—A new, reduced rate schedule for single persons, designed to assure that a single person having the same taxable income as a married couple wouldn't pay taxes more than 20% higher. This provision, identical to a Treasury recommendation, would cost $445 million a year, compared with the $600 million cost of its more generous House counterpart.

The committee deleted the House bill's proposed maximum tax of 50% on an individual's

Finance Committee

	1970	1971	1979
Reforms	+3,895	+4,580	+6,490
Relief	−1,492	−5,363	−8,968
Revenue effect	+2,403	− 783	−2,478
House
Reforms	+4,140	+5,050	+6,855
Relief	−1,692	−6,787	−9,273
Revenue effect	+2,448	−1,737	−2,418

earned income, and it sharply limited the House bill's proposed liberalization of the income-averaging provision in current law, which allows a taxpayer with unusually large earnings in a single year to spread the income over several years for tax purposes.

To reform advocates, the committee bill's biggest defect may be its failure to touch the tax-exemption of interest on state and local bonds.

The House bill would establish a Federal subsidy arrangement to encourage state and local governments to issue taxable, rather than tax-exempt, bonds. It also would provide for an indirect tax on interest from currently tax-exempt bonds in certain cases. Under a barrage of lobbying, the Senate committee junked both these features in its first day of drafting.

The committee went much easier than did the House on the oil industry, banks, savings and loan associations, stock-market investors, and conglomerates engaged in mergers.

As in the House bill, two industries are singled out for special treatment. Through masterful lobbying that focused on the need to alleviate a boxcar shortage, railroads are to get a depreciation bonanza estimated to cost the Treasury nearly $1 billion in the next five years alone; the railroad industry apparently is the only one that will come out ahead from passage of the legislation.

Real-Estate Industry Hit

Conversely, the real-estate industry appears due to get hit the hardest, as both versions of the bill seek to close down a widely used tax shelter. Taxes on real-estate investors would be increased about $1 billion a year under the stiffer depreciation rules contained in both measures.

Here are some of the bill's other major provisions:

—A "minimum income tax" of 5% would be imposed on all income over $30,000 that an individual or corporation received through 12 specific arrangements that currently have preferred tax status. The plan is broader and simpler than its House counterpart and would raise $700 million of revenue a year. Among the items covered are ones related to long-term capital gains, oil depletion and intangible drilling expenses, bank bad-debt reserves, stock options and several types of fast depreciation.

—Use of the 25% maximum alternative tax rate on long-term capital gains would be permitted only on gains of less than $85,000 for single persons or $140,000 for married persons; the House bill would completely eliminate the alternative rate for individuals. The committee agreed with the House decision to raise to 30% from 25% the alternative corporate rate on capital gains, but the committee rejected the House provision lengthening to one year the current six-month holding period that's required before an asset's sale is eligible for capital-gains treatment.

—The 27½% oil-depletion allowance would be reduced to 23%, rather than 20% as in the House bill. The committee left untouched all other mineral depletion allowances, which the House bill would reduce by about one-fourth. The committee junked the House bill's limitations on use of the foreign-tax credit, which mainly is applicable to the oil industry. It concurred in the House bill's elimination of the tax advantages inherent in mineral production payments, a frequent financing method of the oil and gas industry.

—The relatively mild tax treatment of commercial banks and other financial institutions would be tightened, but not by as much as in the House bill. For example, commercial banks, currently taxed at about 23% of income, would be taxed at a 25% rate under the committee bill instead of the 30% rate in the House measure. The tighter taxation mainly would come through a restriction on deductions for bad-debt reserves.

—Most big tax-exempt foundations would be limited to a 40-year life from now on, a provi-tions." Such a corporation would be allowed to deduct up to 10% of each employe's earned income, or $2,500, whichever is less, as a contribution to a pension plan.

Extension of Surcharge

Additionally, the bill includes several items that were part of a measure that passed the House last June 30 to continue the income-tax surcharge for 12 months. These items were sidetracked when the Senate decided to continue the surtax for only six months.

Among them are proposed repeal of the 7% credit for business equipment purchases, retroactive to last April 18, and a one-year postponement in the phased reductions scheduled to begin next Jan. 1 in telephone and automobile excise taxes.

The reform bill also includes the sidetracked portion of the surtax, which would be extended under the bill for the first half of 1970 at 5%. This feature may lend impetus to the effort to achieve enactment of the reform bill by Dec. 31, the date when the current 10% surtax is scheduled to expire.

The Finance Committee is widely regarded about criticism it was receiving in the press

Please Turn to Page 16, Column 5

Continued From Page 3

and in Congress. Others said it resulted from an awareness that the bill would have to raise considerable revenue through higher taxes to make possible the tax relief that taxpayers were expecting.

On Friday, the committee added several provisions that aren't in the House bill. One would eliminate the requirement for filing tax returns by about 10 million persons who don't owe taxes. Another would allow an employe, such as a student working part-time, to certify that he doesn't expect to owe any taxes and thereby to be free from having his wages withheld.

The committee also adopted an amendment offered by Sen. Long to establish a small claims division in the Tax Court, and to give Tax Court judges the same powers, such as issuing subpoenas and contempt citations, as district court judges.

The committee voted to allow two exceptions to repeal of the investment tax credit, although each had been voted down in earlier sessions. One decision, on a motion by Sen. Harris (D., Okla.), would make the tax credit available to a Uniroyal Inc., tire plant at Ardmore, Okla. The other would benefit a Mobil Oil Corp. plant at Joliet, Ill.

A committee aide said the Mobil amendment, offered by Sen. Bennett (R., Utah), "is one that Sen. Dirksen would have offered if he had been here." The late Mr. Dirksen, an Illinois Republican, was a Finance Committee member.

Tax reform in Washington depends entirely on how much you care about it

Congress is working on tax reform right now—and this is something which hits your pocketbook, indeed every paycheck.

Washington is full of special interest lobbyists looking out for the tax loopholers. The oil industry has lobbyists swarming in Washington these days to save the oil depletion allowance (which costs the U.S. Treasury some $1.5 billion a year).

What are you as a hardworking taxpayer going to do about all this? If you sit back and don't worry—the tax loopholes will stay and your taxes will change very little.

But if you demand action in Washington, watch the fur fly.

Below are the 100 U.S. Senators who must soon vote on the Senate floor on a series of tax reform roll calls which will decide how many loopholes are going to be plugged, how much more or less the rich will pay in federal taxes, and what precisely will happen to your own tax bill in the years ahead. If you really care about unfair taxes, you ought to write each one. If thousands upon thousands of American taxpayers rise up and tell Congress what's on their mind—you can be sure Congress will get the message and act accordingly.

Aiken, George D. (Vt.)
ALLEN, JAMES B. (Ala.)
Allott, Gordon (Colo.)
ANDERSON, CLINTON P. (N.M.)
Baker, Howard H., Jr. (Tenn.)
BAYH, BIRCH E. (Ind.)
Bellmon, Henry (Okla.)
Bennett, Wallace F. (Utah)
BIBLE, ALAN (Nev.)
Boggs, J. Caleb (Del.)
Brooke, Edward W. (Mass.)
BURDICK, QUENTIN N. (N. Dak.)
BYRD, HARRY F., JR. (Va.)
BYRD, ROBERT C. (W. Va.)
CANNON, HOWARD W. (Nev.)
Case, Clifford (N.J.)
CHURCH, FRANK (Idaho)
Cook, Marlowe W. (Ky.)
Cooper, John Sherman (Ky.)
Cotton, Norris (N.H.)
CRANSTON, ALAN (Calif.)
Curtis, Carl T. (Nebr.)
DODD, THOMAS J. (Conn.)
Dole, Robert (Kans.)
Dominick, Peter H. (Colo.)
EAGLETON, THOMAS F. (Mo.)
EASTLAND, JAMES O. (Miss.)
ELLENDER, ALLEN J. (La.)
ERVIN, SAM J., JR. (N.C.)
Fannin, Paul J. (Ariz.)
Fong, Hiram (Hawaii)
FULBRIGHT, J. WILLIAM (Ark.)
Goodell, Charles E. (N.Y.)
Goldwater, Barry (Ariz.)
GORE, ALBERT (Tenn.)
GRAVEL, MIKE (Alaska)
Griffin, Robert P. (Mich.)
Gurney, Edward J. (Fla.)
Hansen, Clifford P. (Wyo.)
HARRIS, FRED R. (Okla.)
HART, PHILIP A. (Mich.)
HARTKE, R. VANCE (Ind.)
Hatfield, Mark (Oreg.)
HOLLAND, SPESSARD L. (Fla.)
HOLLINGS, ERNEST F. (S.C.)
Hruska, Roman L. (Nebr.)
HUGHES, HAROLD E. (Iowa)
INOUYE, DANIEL K. (Hawaii)
JACKSON, HENRY M. (Wash.)
Javits, Jacob K. (N.Y.)
JORDAN, B. EVERETT (N.C.)
Jordan, Len B. (Idaho)
KENNEDY, EDWARD M. (Mass.)
LONG, RUSSELL B. (La.)
McCARTHY, EUGENE J. (Minn.)
McCLELLAN, JOHN L. (Ark.)
McGEE, GALE W. (Wyo.)
McGOVERN, GEORGE (S. Dak.)
McINTYRE, THOMAS J. (N.H.)
MAGNUSON, WARREN G. (Wash.)
MANSFIELD, MIKE (Mont.)
Mathias, Charles McC. (Md.)
METCALF, LEE (Mont.)
Miller, Jack (Iowa)
MONDALE, WALTER F. (Minn.)
MONTOYA, JOSEPH M. (N.M.)
MOSS, FRANK E. (Utah)
Mundt, Karl E. (S. Dak.)
Murphy, George (Calif.)
MUSKIE, EDMUND S. (Maine)
NELSON, GAYLORD (Wis.)
Packwood, Robert W. (Oreg.)
PASTORE, JOHN O. (R.I.)
Pearson, James B. (Kans.)
PELL, CLAIBORNE (R.I.)
Percy, Charles H. (Ill.)
Prouty, Winston L. (Vt.)
PROXMIRE, WILLIAM E. (Wis.)
RANDOLPH, JENNINGS (W. Va.)
RIBICOFF, ABRAHAM A. (Conn.)
RUSSELL, RICHARD B. (Ga.)
Saxbe, William B. (Ohio)
Schweiker, Richard S. (Pa.)
Scott, Hugh (Pa.)
Smith, Margaret Chase (Maine)
Smith, Ralph (Ill.)
SPARKMAN, JOHN J. (Ala.)
SPONG, WILLIAM B., JR. (Va.)
STENNIS, JOHN (Miss.)
Stevens, Ted (Alaska)
SYMINGTON, STUART (Mo.)
TALMADGE, HERMAN E. (Ga.)
Thurmond, Strom (S.C.)
Tower, John G. (Tex.)
TYDINGS, JOSEPH D. (Md.)
WILLIAM, HARRISON, A., JR. (N.J.)
Williams, John J. (Del.)
YARBOROUGH, RALPH (Tex.)
Young, Milton R. (N. Dak.)
YOUNG, STEPHEN M. (Ohio)

(Democrats are capitalized, Republicans are in upper and lower case)

PAGINATION INCORRECT

National Committee on Tax Justice proposals for tax reform would eliminate or severely limit the "tax favors" represented by the major loopholes listed above as a means of equalizing the federal income tax burden.

If you punch a time clock, your tax is taken out of every paycheck. Yet there are people in this country who take advantage of big tax loopholes and do not pay a single cent of tax until the following April.

The tax reform bills which are before Congress will correct some of these injustices. Sen. Paul Douglas and UAW President Walter Reuther are heading a national committee to make the wealthy people of the United States pay their fair share.

But more mail must come from back home. Every U.S. Senator must hear from you—all 100 of them.

Only in this way will the Senate know that Americans want a tax system which is based on equity and fairness.

Sen. Robert Griffin
Senate Office Building
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sen. Griffin:

Congratulations on your election as Republican whip in the Senate.

I am angry about tax loopholes and am writing to ask your help. Former Sen. Paul Douglas says there are $12.4 billion worth of tax loopholes which can be plugged. Yet the House bill plugs only $1.6 billion. Can't you and the rest of the Republicans do something about this?

Every cent I make is taxed every time I get a paycheck -- yet very rich people pay less tax or no tax and they don't even sweat for their money.

I ask you very sincerely -- what are you and the rest of the Republicans going to do to plug the tax loopholes so that people like me get a tax break and the rich pay their fair share?

Sincerely,

A UAW Worker

How to write a letter to Congress:

It's very easy to write a letter. Write simply and to the point. Don't threaten. A short, sincere letter is best. If you can cite a personal experience, so much the better. Address your letters as follows:

Congressman or Senator So-and-So
House or Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C.

A SAMPLE LETTER tells simply and politely what you want. Letters like this make a favorable impression on the most conservative lawmaker. A groundswell of support for tax reform will swing over many middle-of-the-roaders

"So, the Common People Say You're Pussyfooting on Tax Reform! And What, Indeed, Is Wrong With That?"

The men and women who make up the Congress of the United States will listen to the people back home, if the people at home make their views known. That means—letters, phone calls, meetings, telegrams, and visits. Let your Congressman and Senators hear from you.

The Senate Finance Committee is listening to testimony on tax reform right now. The House has passed a bill (better than most expected). The House bill can be made better, or it can become worse. It depends a lot on what you do back home.

If you're really mad about tax loopholes, the Senate can improve the tax reform bill. So get out a pen or pencil and write to Congress this evening without delay. It's just that simple. If a cascade of mail comes from home, tax reform will emerge from the 91st Congress as a real accomplishment.

How Nixon's tax bill hurts you

Here's how the Nixon rich man's tax bill compares with the tax reform bill which passed the House earlier this year, showing how much tax relief you get and how much more the Nixon tax bill would cost you:

Your adjusted gross income	Your tax bill now	Your tax under the House bill	Your tax Nixon tax bill	How much more money you'd have House bill	How much more money you'd have Nixon bill	Why House bill is better—the difference
$ 4,000	$ 140	$ 65	$ 81	$ 75	$ 59	$ 16
$ 4,500	$ 290	$ 200	$ 253	$ 90	$ 37	$ 53
$ 7,500	$ 687	$ 576	$ 616	$111	$ 71	$ 40
$10,000	$1,114	$ 858	$1,012	$256	$102	$154
$12,500	$1,567	$1,347	$1,447	$220	$120	$100
$15,000	$2,062	$1,846	$1,951	$216	$111	$105

Sent also to: State Councils
Selected Interagency
Foundations

Tax Reform 27.1

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
522-8764

PAUL ANTHONY
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

MEMORANDUM

August 29, 1969

To: Members of the Southern Regional Council

From: Paul Anthony

Attached is a draft of our statement of concern about the tax reform bill now being considered by the Senate Finance Committee. I would welcome your reactions to this document and any suggestions you can offer.

-o-

enclosure - 1.

DRAFT - Not for Distribution

A STATEMENT BY THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE RE. HR 13270

-o-

The Southern Regional Council is an organization formed in 1944 for the purpose of contributing generally to the development of the region and more specifically to race relations within the region and the nation. Our five incorporators were Bishop Arthur Moore of Georgia; the late Dr. Howard Odum of the University of North Carolina; the late Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University; the late Dr. Charles Johnson, president of Fisk University; and the late Mr. Ralph McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution. The Council consists of one hundred distinguished Southerners, black and white, Protestant, Catholic and Jew. There is maintained in Atlanta an office and a staff of approximately forty persons. As indicative of our interests we have on that staff, or use as consultants, specialists in urban planning, manpower resources, health and nutrition, community organization, and related areas. We emphasize in our work research and publication on those matters which we feel most pertinent to the region. We also sponsor special projects such as the Voter Education Project, which has been the subject of some interest to the Congress in the formation of this bill.

PAGINATION INCORRECT

Our concern about HR 13270 arises from our belief that the bill before you jeopardizes a valuable and unique operation by which our society is served. That operation is the partnership which has been created between private tax-exempt foundations and private tax-exempt agencies. We are confident this partnership has been to the public good. And, it is important that a significant part of the needs and the stimulation of the private sector are served by private funds, under private control, apart from the undue involvement of government.

Before we cite those particulars of the bill which most concern us, we should like to make two general observations:

(1) For twenty-five years the Southern Regional Council has recognized that we enjoyed the benefit of tax-exempt funds in proper exchange for certain restrictions on the use of those funds. For instance, our implementation of the requirement that no substantial portion of our efforts be partisan has been to attempt to see that no portion of our activity is political. We have attempted to operate within the spirit of the law as well as the letter of the law. We are confident this is true of many other agencies. We do not appear before you to request that the existing regulations and laws which have created this method of operation and our reasoning be altered.

(2) It may be that the present tax laws have allowed individuals and groups to abuse those laws by creating so-called "foundations" for personal gain rather than to serve the public interest. We believe the Congress is justified in seeking to stop those abuses. Our concern is that honorably conceived and legally operated foundations -- and those whom they support -- not be punished and unduly restricted because of activities of others.

Our particular concerns with HR 13270 are as follows:

(1) Sec. 306 - Tax on Private Foundation Investment Income.

While the precedent may be ominous, the proposed 7½% tax probably would neither significantly alter foundation operations nor add substantially to the public treasury. The true effect would be to reduce by 7½% those funds available to the private agencies. These private tax-exempt groups are, therefore, those really being taxed. This must be recognized by those who believe that there are limitations on the capability of the public sector and that there is, therefore, an important role for private agencies.

(2) Sec. 4945(c)(1) - Taxes on Taxable Expenditures.

It is extremely important to note that this section of the bill removes from the current Internal Revenue Service regulations the requirements that no substantial part of a tax-exempt organization's resources be used in partisan political activity or in support of a candidate for office. Rather, there is substituted excessive stipulations to preclude any political activity.

We have been told this has been done because some tax-exempt agencies have abused the present regulations by engaging in substantial partisan political activity. These abuses may have occurred. But, if they have it has not been because of the inadequacy of current laws and regulations, but rather because of the failure of adequate enforcement of those laws and regulations.

* * *

While we subscribe completely to the concept that tax-exempt funds should not be used for partisan purposes, we are gravely concerned, for instance, by the wording in the proposed legislation, "any attempt to influence legislation through an attempt to affect the opinion of the general public or any segment thereof,..."

Literally interpreted, we believe this provision would prevent responsible agencies now engaged in serious research and publishing from making any meaningful comments on the society in which we operate. We assume, for instance, that at best the Council could publish statistics on migration from the region, but not offer opinions on the causes or impact of that migration. We assume that, at best, we could publish a medical report on hunger and malnutrition, but not offer remedial proposals. We assume we could publish statistics on black-white registration, but not offer any analysis of processes which affected that registration. We would not expect, and do not request, that we be allowed to propose specific legislation nor to support or oppose legislation being considered. However, under the provisions of this bill we assume that regardless of the effort and integrity we invest in forming them, we could not share our opinions with "the general public or any segment thereof."

It is in the public interest that agencies such as the Southern Regional Council be allowed not only to collect information but analyze and comment on that information. Our publications have been used extensively by the media, by scholars and others, and they have figured in the deliberations of the Congress. This contribution to public consideration and to public debate is, we believe, not only valuable, but non-partisan.

We have been upheld by the courts of Georgia in that opinion. In 1963 the Georgia Department of Labor informed the Council that we had been held taxable by virtue of their interpretation that we had a point of view, shared it with the public, and, thereby, engaged in "propaganda" and influenced legislation.

In Court, the State readily accepted the fact that the Council did not lobby, did not support or oppose any specific legislation, nor any candidate for public office. Rather, the State introduced as evidence a collection of Council publications and rested its case on the statement of the executive director that these publications were circulated to the general public.

The Superior Court found in favor of the Council and that decision was appealed to the Supreme Court of the State of Georgia. That Court unanimously upheld the decision of the lower court. We would like to quote the following statement from the Court's decision, Williamson vs SRC, Inc., 223 Ga. 179:

> "If the word 'propaganda' is given the broad meaning that it is any dissemination of ideas, then no religious or educational institution could qualify under Code Anno. 54-657(h)(7)(H), since a substantial part of the activities of such institutions is the dissemination of ideas and beliefs. Under the constitutionally protected right of freedom of speech, an organization cannot be penalized for disseminating ideas and beliefs which are not opposed to our system of government, even though such ideas may not meet with the approval of all of the people in the area in which they are advanced."

* * *

We submit that the process of public dialogue and the dissemination of ideas is essential in a democracy. We submit, further, that such dialogue should be especially encouraged, not prohibited, by organizations that have established themselves in that society.

(3) Sec. 4945(d)

We are grateful that the report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives specifically recognized the Council as an agency which could -- subject to the information they had available -- engage in programs in support of voter registration.

Within this section of the bill, however, and perhaps more importantly elsewhere in the bill, there are requirements that certain programs can receive no more than 25% of their support from any one source. There are implications to this stiuplation which may not be readily apparent.

The most important of these are:

(a) There are still relatively few foundations which are willing to support programs of social reform. These foundations and the programs they have supported should be commended, not discouraged, for venturing substantially into new areas since frequently these programs -- like the Council's Voter Education Project which could not have come into existence under this provision -- have made an important contribution to the public welfare.

(b) Occasionally an unusually imaginative foundation has had the courage and foresight to support exclusively, or almost exclusively, a new group which has promise and a sound idea. We know of a number of now established agencies -- many of which now enjoy the financial support of federal, state, or local governments -- which would not be in existence had one foundation been limited to providing no more than 25% of a beginning budget.

Subject to other proper considerations, there is no more rationale to restricting a foundation to a maximum of 25% support for a deserving effort than restricting an agency of the federal government to the same limitation on any publicly funded program.

(4) Sec. 4945(f) - Expenditure Responsibility

This section would require that foundations be "fully responsible" for the use of grants made. While the three requirements under this section would, on the surface, seem to be reasonable, there are serious consequences to these requirements if they are literally enforced. We believe the enforcement of the three requirements of this section of the bill would be severely damaging to foundations and cause recipients to loose a substantial degree of their independence and autonomy. It would also probably mean that the smaller foundations would have to cease giving to those affected by this provision, since they have neither the staff nor the resources to meet these requirements.

Please do not misunderstand us. We are for the full and complete reporting on the use of tax-exempt funds. During the 25 years of our existence the great majority of our support has come from foundations. During the current year the Council will receive support from at least fourteen foundations totalling more than a million dollars. During all this time and dealing with foundations, large and small, we have never known an instance where a foundation staff did not satisfy itself beforehand as to the pertinence of our request and our competence to administer any funds granted. Nor, have we known of an instance where this process was not further reviewed by the foundation board. Further, we always at least annually issue a full audit of our expenditures and a complete report on our activities for the foundations and other interested parties.

However, the current situation is that the Internal Revenue Service is charged with determining whether or not an agency is tax-exempt and this serves as a guide to foundations. Earlier, we made a request to the IRS regarding our own process of granting funds to other agencies and in a letter dated March 22, 1960 the IRS stated:

(1) "If you make a distribution of your funds to an organization which presently has exemption as a charitable or educational organization described in Section 501(c)(3) of the Code, there is no further obligation on your part to satisfy yourself as to the use of the funds distributed.

(2) "Contributions made by you to organizations, which have not established an exempt status for Federal income tax purposes, will not jeopardize your exempt status if the contributions are made and used only for one or more of the exempt purposes specified in Section 501(c)(3) of the Code. In such an event you should use reasonable care in ascertaining that the contributions will be used only for an exempt purpose and you will be able to substantiate that fact if called upon to do so by the Internal Revenue Service."

We submit this is a workable and efficient method. The burden of requiring foundations to be "fully responsible," as interpreted in the bill, would be harmful to all concerned.

Small foundations, with small staff, do not now generally give to non-tax-exempt agencies because they do not have the resources for the necessary supervision, and few large foundations make such grants because the requirements are too burdensome. Under this bill, small foundations would likely have to treat currently exempt organizations as they have non-tax-exempt ones in the past; simply removing them from their list of potential recipients of funds.

Equally disastrous, from the standpoint of all concerned, large foundations would probably have to be so vigorous in complying with these provisions,including their own on-the-spot staff supervision and auditing of their funds being spent, that they would in effect become the supervising grantee as well as the grantor. It is not an exaggeration to state that under these conditions, the independent tax-exempt agency staffs become employees of the donating foundations and the boards of those tax-exempt agencies become bystanders. We urge you to give the most serious consideration to the implications of this situation.

In conclusion, we believe it most important to stress that this bill, as it relates to foundations and those whom foundations support, is widely regarded to be punitive against those agencies and those foundations dealing with social reform, poverty, and minority affairs.

There are those agencies, of which the Southern Regional Council is one, that have attempted not only to contribute to the general welfare but to bring into reality the potential and the promise of this nation for all of our people. In a sense, it could be said we occupy the middle ground; recognizing need, tragedy and aspirations on the one hand, and holding on the other hand a deep faith in the ability of this society and this government to be the means by which wrongs can be corrected and the wholesome society created.

In this critical time of crisis, polarization and misunderstanding we urge you, do not cripple -- as this bill would do -- those agencies which, with increasing difficulty, are attempting to occupy that middle ground where the faith remains that the capabilities and intent of our government and our society can be equal to our promises.

-END-

August, 1969

Tax Reform 27.1

DOMESTIC SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise this message will be sent as a fast telegram
TELEGRAM
DAY LETTER
NIGHT LETTER

$ S E

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

1206 (4-55)

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise the message will be sent at the full rate
FULL RATE
LETTER TELEGRAM
SHORE-SHIP

NO. WDS.-CL. OF SVC.	PD. OR COLL.	CASH NO.	CHARGE TO THE ACCOUNT OF	TIME FILED
			SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.

Send the following message, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W.

THE EDITOR
c/o LETTERS TO THE EDITOR DEPARTMENT
THE WASHINGTON POST
1515 "L" STREET, N. W.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

NOVEMBER 3, 1969

WE ARE DISTURBED BY YOUR EDITORIAL OF SUNDAY ABOUT THE TAX REFORM BILL,WHICH SEEMED TO GIVE BLANKET APPROVAL TO THOSE PORTIONS OF THE BILL WHICH NOW HAVE EMERGED FROM THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

ON MAY 18, YOU DEPLORED A PROVISION IN THE TAX REFORM BILL WHICH WOULD PROHIBIT FOUNDATIONS FROM "ENGAGING IN ACTIVITIES DIRECTLY AFFECTING POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS." THEN YOU NOTED THAT THE LANGUAGE CONTAINED MORE THAN MET THE EYE, AND ADDED: "STRIPPED OF ITS FINERY, IT IS DISCLOSED AS AN ATTEMPT TO FORBID THE VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVES WHICH PRODUCED SUCH STUNNING POLITICAL UPSETS IN CLEVELAND AND A FEW OTHER PLACES UP NORTH AND ALL OVER THE SOUTH, WHERE ONLY WHITE FOLKS USED TO GO TO THE POLLS.... VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVES ARE DIRECTED MAINLY AT THE POOR AND THE UNEDUCATED -- AND

ALL MESSAGES TAKEN BY THIS COMPANY ARE SUBJECT TO THE FOLLOWING TERMS:

To guard against mistakes or delays, the sender of a message should order it repeated, that is, telegraphed back to the originating office for comparison. For this, one-half the unrepeated message rate is charged in addition. Unless otherwise indicated on its face, this is an unrepeated message and paid for as such, in consideration whereof it is agreed between the sender of the message and the Telegraph Company as follows:

1. The Telegraph Company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message received for transmission at the unrepeated-message rate beyond the sum of five hundred dollars; nor for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message received for transmission at the repeated-message rate beyond the sum of five thousand dollars, unless specially valued; nor in any case for delays arising from unavoidable interruption in the working of its lines.

2. In any event the Telegraph Company shall not be liable for damages for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for the non-delivery, of any message, whether caused by the negligence of its servants or otherwise, beyond the actual loss, not exceeding in any event the sum of five thousand dollars, at which amount the sender of each message represents that the message is valued, unless a greater value is stated in writing by the sender thereof at the time the message is tendered for transmission, and unless the repeated-message rate is paid or agreed to be paid and an additional charge equal to one-tenth of one per cent of the amount by which such valuation shall exceed five thousand dollars.

3. The Telegraph Company is hereby made the agent of the sender, without liability, to forward this message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination.

4. The applicable tariff charges on a message destined to any point in the continental United States listed in the Telegraph Company's Directory of Stations cover its delivery within the established city or community limits of the destination point. Beyond such limits and to points not listed in the Telegraph Company's Directory of Stations, the Telegraph Company does not undertake to make delivery but will endeavor to arrange for delivery by any available means as the agent of the sender, with the understanding that the sender authorizes the collection of any additional charge from the addressee and agrees to pay such additional charge if it is not collected from the addressee.

5. No responsibility attaches to the Telegraph Company concerning messages until the same are accepted at one of its transmitting offices; and if a message is sent to such office by one of the Telegraph Company's messengers, he acts for that purpose as the agent of the sender; except that when the Telegraph Company sends a messenger to pick up a message, the messenger in that instance acts as the agent of the Telegraph Company in accepting the message, the Telegraph Company assuming responsibility from the time of such acceptance.

6. The Telegraph Company will not be liable for damages or statutory penalties when the claim is not presented in writing to the Telegraph Company, (a) within ninety days after the message is filed with the Telegraph Company for transmission in the case of a message between points within the United States (except in the case of an intrastate message in Texas) or between a point in the United States on the one hand and a point in Alaska, Canada, Mexico, or St. Pierre-Miquelon Islands on the other hand, or between a point in the United States and a ship at sea or in the air, (b) within 95 days after the cause of action, if any, shall have accrued in the case of an intrastate message in Texas, and (c) within 180 days after the message is filed with the Telegraph Company for transmission in the case of a message between a point in the United States and a foreign or overseas point other than the points specified above in this paragraph; provided, however, that this condition shall not apply to claims for damages or overcharges within the purview of Section 415 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

7. It is agreed that in any action by the Telegraph Company to recover the tolls for any message or messages the prompt and correct transmission and delivery thereof shall be presumed, subject to rebuttal by competent evidence.

8. Special terms governing the transmission of messages according to their classes, as enumerated below, shall apply to messages in each of such respective classes in addition to all the foregoing terms.

9. No employee of the Telegraph Company is authorized to vary the foregoing.

4-54

CLASSES OF SERVICE

DOMESTIC SERVICES

TELEGRAM

The fastest domestic service.

DAY LETTER (DL)

A deferred same-day service, at low rates.

NIGHT LETTER (NL)

Economical overnight service. Accepted up to 2 A. M. for delivery the following morning, at rates lower than the Telegram or Day Letter rates.

INTERNATIONAL SERVICES

FULL RATE (FR)

The fastest overseas service. May be written in code, cipher, or in any language expressed in Roman letters.

LETTER TELEGRAM (LT)

For overnight plain language messages, at half-rate. Minimum charge for 22 words applies.

SHIP RADIOGRAM

For messages to and from ships at sea.

DOMESTIC SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise this message will be sent as a fast telegram
TELEGRAM
DAY LETTER
NIGHT LETTER

$ S E

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1206 (4-55)

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise the message will be sent at the full rate
FULL RATE
LETTER TELEGRAM
SHORE-SHIP

NO. WDS.-CL. OF SVC.	PD. OR COLL.	CASH NO.	CHARGE TO THE ACCOUNT OF	TIME FILED
			SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

Send the following message, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

MOST OF ALL, OBVIOUSLY, AT HITHERTO DISFRANCHISED NEGROES. THE PURPOSE OF THESE DRIVES IS TO ENLARGE PARTICIPATION IN THE DEMOCRATIC&RR& PROCESS."

AMONG THE PORTIONS OF THE BILL WHICH WERE FINALLY APPROVED LAST WEEK BY THE FINANCE COMMITTEE WAS ONE WHICH DOES NOT EVEN HAVE TO BE "STRIPPED OF ITS FINERY" IN ORDER THAT ITS IMPORT MAY BE KNOWN. IT SPECIFICALLY PROHIBITS THE USE OF FOUNDATION MONEY FOR VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVES.

THIS BEING THE CASE, WE DO NOT UNDERSTAND HOW THE POST CAN NOW GIVE BLANKET APPROVAL OF THE TAX REFORM PROPOSALS WHICH NOW HAVE EMERGED FROM THE FINANCE COMMITTEE. YOUR EDITORIAL SUNDAY DEALT ENTIRELY WITH THE TRUE TAX REFORM ASPECTS OF THE TAX BILL. WHAT WE ARE CONCERNED ABOUT IS NOT TAX REFORM, BUT A MATTER WHICH IN REALITY HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH TAX REFORM BUT WHICH IS IN THE TAX

ALL MESSAGES TAKEN BY THIS COMPANY ARE SUBJECT TO THE FOLLOWING TERMS:

To guard against mistakes or delays, the sender of a message should order it repeated, that is, telegraphed back to the originating office for comparison. For this, one-half the unrepeated message rate is charged in addition. Unless otherwise indicated on its face, this is an unrepeated message and paid for as such, in consideration whereof it is agreed between the sender of the message and the Telegraph Company as follows:

1. The Telegraph Company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message received for transmission at the unrepeated-message rate beyond the sum of five hundred dollars; nor for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message received for transmission at the repeated-message rate beyond the sum of five thousand dollars, unless specially valued; nor in any case for delays arising from unavoidable interruption in the working of its lines.

2. In any event the Telegraph Company shall not be liable for damages for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for the non-delivery, of any message, whether caused by the negligence of its servants or otherwise, beyond the actual loss, not exceeding in any event the sum of five thousand dollars, at which amount the sender of each message represents that the message is valued, unless a greater value is stated in writing by the sender thereof at the time the message is tendered for transmission, and unless the repeated-message rate is paid or agreed to be paid and an additional charge equal to one-tenth of one per cent of the amount by which such valuation shall exceed five thousand dollars.

3. The Telegraph Company is hereby made the agent of the sender, without liability, to forward this message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination.

4. The applicable tariff charges on a message destined to any point in the continental United States listed in the Telegraph Company's Directory of Stations cover its delivery within the established city or community limits of the destination point. Beyond such limits and to points not listed in the Telegraph Company's Directory of Stations, the Telegraph Company does not undertake to make delivery but will endeavor to arrange for delivery by any available means as the agent of the sender, with the understanding that the sender authorizes the collection of any additional charge from the addressee and agrees to pay such additional charge if it is not collected from the addressee.

5. No responsibility attaches to the Telegraph Company concerning messages until the same are accepted at one of its transmitting offices; and if a message is sent to such office by one of the Telegraph Company's messengers, he acts for that purpose as the agent of the sender; except that when the Telegraph Company sends a messenger to pick up a message, the messenger in that instance acts as the agent of the Telegraph Company in accepting the message, the Telegraph Company assuming responsibility from the time of such acceptance.

6. The Telegraph Company will not be liable for damages or statutory penalties when the claim is not presented in writing to the Telegraph Company, (a) within ninety days after the message is filed with the Telegraph Company for transmission in the case of a message between points within the United States (except in the case of an intrastate message in Texas) or between a point in the United States on the one hand and a point in Alaska, Canada, Mexico, or St. Pierre-Miquelon Islands on the other hand, or between a point in the United States and a ship at sea or in the air, (b) within 95 days after the cause of action, if any, shall have accrued in the case of an intrastate message in Texas, and (c) within 180 days after the message is filed with the Telegraph Company for transmission in the case of a message between a point in the United States and a foreign or overseas point other than the points specified above in this paragraph; provided, however, that this condition shall not apply to claims for damages or overcharges within the purview of Section 415 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

7. It is agreed that in any action by the Telegraph Company to recover the tolls for any message or messages the prompt and correct transmission and delivery thereof shall be presumed, subject to rebuttal by competent evidence.

8. Special terms governing the transmission of messages according to their classes, as enumerated below, shall apply to messages in each of such respective classes in addition to all the foregoing terms.

9. No employee of the Telegraph Company is authorized to vary the foregoing.

4-54

CLASSES OF SERVICE

DOMESTIC SERVICES

TELEGRAM

The fastest domestic service.

DAY LETTER (DL)

A deferred same-day service, at low rates.

NIGHT LETTER (NL)

Economical overnight service. Accepted up to 2 A. M. for delivery the following morning; at rates lower than the Telegram or Day Letter rates.

INTERNATIONAL SERVICES

FULL RATE (FR)

The fastest overseas service. May be written in code, cipher, or in any language expressed in Roman letters.

LETTER TELEGRAM (LT)

For overnight plain language messages, at half-rate. Minimum charge for 22 words applies.

SHIP RADIOGRAM

For messages to and from ships at sea.

DOMESTIC SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise this message will be sent as a fast telegram
TELEGRAM
DAY LETTER
NIGHT LETTER

$ S E

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1206 (4-55)

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise the message will be sent at the full rate
FULL RATE
LETTER TELEGRAM
SHORE-SHIP

NO. WDS.-CL. OF SVC.	PD. OR COLL.	CASH NO.	CHARGE TO THE ACCOUNT OF	TIME FILED
			SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

Send the following message, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

REFORM BILL. WE HEARTILY APPROVE OF TAX REFORM EFFORTS. WE STRONGLY DEPLORE YOUR APPROVAL, AT LEAST BY IMPLICATION, OF ASPECTS OF THE BILL WHICH YOU EARLIER HAD CALLED "QUITE DISCRIMINATORY" AND HAD RIGHTLY CALLED NOT A REFORM EFFORT BUT A REVENGE EFFORT. WE WISH THAT IN SOME SUBSEQUENT EDITORIAL YOU WOULD CLARIFY WHETHER YOUR POSITION ON THAT PART OF THE BILL HAS INDEED CHANGED. WE ASSUME IT HAS NOT, BUT THE EDITORIAL OF SUNDAY LEAVES THE IMPRESSION THAT IT HAS.

PAUL ANTHONY
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

ALL MESSAGES TAKEN BY THIS COMPANY ARE SUBJECT TO THE FOLLOWING TERMS:

To guard against mistakes or delays, the sender of a message should order it repeated, that is, telegraphed back to the originating office for comparison. For this, one-half the unrepeated message rate is charged in addition. Unless otherwise indicated on its face, this is an unrepeated message and paid for as such, in consideration whereof it is agreed between the sender of the message and the Telegraph Company as follows:

1. The Telegraph Company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message received for transmission at the unrepeated-message rate beyond the sum of five hundred dollars; nor for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message received for transmission at the repeated-message rate beyond the sum of five thousand dollars, unless specially valued; nor in any case for delays arising from unavoidable interruption in the working of its lines.

2. In any event the Telegraph Company shall not be liable for damages for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for the non-delivery, of any message, whether caused by the negligence of its servants or otherwise, beyond the actual loss, not exceeding in any event the sum of five thousand dollars, at which amount the sender of each message represents that the message is valued, unless a greater value is stated in writing by the sender thereof at the time the message is tendered for transmission, and unless the repeated-message rate is paid or agreed to be paid and an additional charge equal to one-tenth of one per cent of the amount by which such valuation shall exceed five thousand dollars.

3. The Telegraph Company is hereby made the agent of the sender, without liability, to forward this message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination.

4. The applicable tariff charges on a message destined to any point in the continental United States listed in the Telegraph Company's Directory of Stations cover its delivery within the established city or community limits of the destination point. Beyond such limits and to points not listed in the Telegraph Company's Directory of Stations, the Telegraph Company does not undertake to make delivery but will endeavor to arrange for delivery by any available means as the agent of the sender, with the understanding that the sender authorizes the collection of any additional charge from the addressee and agrees to pay such additional charge if it is not collected from the addressee.

5. No responsibility attaches to the Telegraph Company concerning messages until the same are accepted at one of its transmitting offices; and if a message is sent to such office by one of the Telegraph Company's messengers, he acts for that purpose as the agent of the sender; except that when the Telegraph Company sends a messenger to pick up a message, the messenger in that instance acts as the agent of the Telegraph Company in accepting the message, the Telegraph Company assuming responsibility from the time of such acceptance.

6. The Telegraph Company will not be liable for damages or statutory penalties when the claim is not presented in writing to the Telegraph Company, (a) within ninety days after the message is filed with the Telegraph Company for transmission in the case of a message between points within the United States (except in the case of an intrastate message in Texas) or between a point in the United States on the one hand and a point in Alaska, Canada, Mexico, or St. Pierre-Miquelon Islands on the other hand, or between a point in the United States and a ship at sea or in the air, (b) within 95 days after the cause of action, if any, shall have accrued in the case of an intrastate message in Texas, and (c) within 180 days after the message is filed with the Telegraph Company for transmission in the case of a message between a point in the United States and a foreign or overseas point other than the points specified above in this paragraph; provided, however, that this condition shall not apply to claims for damages or overcharges within the purview of Section 415 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

7. It is agreed that in any action by the Telegraph Company to recover the tolls for any message or messages the prompt and correct transmission and delivery thereof shall be presumed, subject to rebuttal by competent evidence.

8. Special terms governing the transmission of messages according to their classes, as enumerated below, shall apply to messages in each of such respective classes in addition to all the foregoing terms.

9. No employee of the Telegraph Company is authorized to vary the foregoing.

4-54

CLASSES OF SERVICE

DOMESTIC SERVICES

TELEGRAM

The fastest domestic service.

DAY LETTER (DL)

A deferred same-day service, at low rates.

NIGHT LETTER (NL)

Economical overnight service. Accepted up to 2 A. M. for delivery the following morning; at rates lower than the Telegram or Day Letter rates.

INTERNATIONAL SERVICES

FULL RATE (FR)

The fastest overseas service. May be written in code, cipher, or in any language expressed in Roman letters.

LETTER TELEGRAM (LT)

For overnight plain language messages, at half-rate. Minimum charge for 22 words applies.

SHIP RADIOGRAM

For messages to and from ships at sea.

THE TAX STRUCTURE OF THE SOUTHERN STATES:

Tax Structure

27.2

An Analysis

By Dr. Eva Galambos

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dr. Galambos is a research consultant specializing in fiscal problems. She resides in Atlanta, Georgia.

Resources Development Center Publication No. 1 — November, 1969

Price .50 cents each; bulk rate .40 cents each.

THE TAX STRUCTURE OF THE SOUTHERN STATES:

AN ANALYSIS

By Dr. Eva Galambos

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Introduction 3

Major State and Local Taxes 4

The Regressive Sales Tax 4

State and Local Income Taxes 5

The Burden of the Sales Tax in the South 5

Selective Sales Tax 7

Income Taxes in the South 8

State Personal Income Tax 8

Local Personal Income Tax 10

Corporate Income Tax 10

Death Taxes 11

Taxes on Business 12

The Property Tax 14

Charges and Fees for Services 18

Conclusions 18

LIST OF TABLES

Page

Table I Sales Taxes, Southern States, 1967 6

Table II General Sales Tax Rates in Southern States, April, 1969 7

Table III Major Selective Sales Tax Rates, April, 1969 8

Table IV State Personal Income Tax Collections, 1967 8

Table V Top Bracket Income Tax Rates, April, 1969 9

Table VI Ability-to-Pay Taxes in the Southern States, 1967 10

Table VII State Corporate Income Tax Rates, April, 1969 11

Table VIII Business Taxes as Percentages of State Taxes, 1967 12

Table IX State and Local Taxes on Business as a Per Cent of Total Taxes, 1957-1962 13

Table X The Property Tax in the Southern States, 1967 14

Table XI Effective Property Tax Rates in Southern Cities, 1966 15

Table XII Assessment Ratios by Types of Property, 1967 17

Table XIII The Role of Charges and Miscellaneous Revenue in State and Local Governments, 1966-67 . 18

This study was prepared under the editorial direction of SRC's Information and Research Department in collaboration with SRC's Resources Development Center.

INTRODUCTION

The Southern Regional Council has for many years concerned itself with economic problems in the region. In vivid, often eloquent prose, writers have described the hunger of children, the demoralizing effects of unemployment and poverty on adults. We have examined restrictive welfare regulations in the southern states and documented efforts of the poor to solve their problems through self-help programs. Special projects have been created to assist in manpower development, community organization.

The study which follows grew out of a conviction that state and local governments in the South were not adequately equipped because of outmoded tax structures to deal with a host of unmet public needs in a multitude of areas. Public officials, including governors and mayors, tacitly concede this, it seems to us, when they plead insufficient funds to put major reform measures into operation. Oftentimes, of course, such a response is used as a convenient excuse for inaction, but there likely is, as the study here illustrates, considerable truth in it. This should give no one satisfaction, for the question remains one of commitment to the public welfare, not just as it relates to the implementation of state and local programs, but to the more basic problem of tax reform as well.

Dr. Galambos's study illustrates that the southern states are bound to a regressive system of taxation, which is to say a system that puts a disproportionate share of the tax burden on middle and lower income citizens. Moreover, the study illustrates that the same states do not take full advantage of more progressive tax sources (such as, for example, personal and corporate income taxes). Why this should be is beyond the scope of the present study. However, one would be remiss not to observe that regressive taxation and inadequate states services seem directly to coincide. It is in the South, for instance, that public education suffers the most from insufficient financing. It is in the South that public assistance to welfare recipients is the least. It is in the South that living conditions in mental and penal institutions are the most wretched.

A study such as this, suggesting generally how a more equitable tax system might be achieved, has two basic concerns—equity for the sake of simple justice and, finally, a means to make the South a more livable region for all.

Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council

Major State and Local Taxes

1

At the outset, a definition of terms is in order. The most widely accepted standard of equity in taxation is ability to pay. This is the criterion upon which the federal income tax system is based. In the language of the tax experts, it is a progressive system of taxation, which means simply that tax rates increase as income increases. Sales taxes, on the other hand, are typical of regressive taxation which means that the impact of the tax decreases as income rises.

Although various states and local governments place different emphasis on available tax measures, the important revenue sources are common to most of them. These include: (1) general and specific sales taxes; (2) income taxes (personal and corporate); (3) licenses; and (4) property taxes. The latter has become almost entirely a source for local governments. Both levels of governments use the other major sources of revenue.*

The Regressive Sales Tax

The general sales tax increasingly is the single most important source of state revenue. In 1950, the general sales tax raised 15.1 per cent of total state taxes nationally. In 1967, this proportion was 27.9 per cent. The general sales tax, it must be emphasized, is a retail tax on the consumer, with the hardest impact on the poorest groups. Its regressive nature is clearly evident: A large family with a low income may spend all it earns, and perhaps more by borrowing. A three per cent sales tax, therefore, hits all of this family's income which is spent on actual goods. A wealthy family, on the other hand, may save a considerable part of its income. There is no sales tax on savings. Thus a three per cent tax on the spending by the latter family represents less than a three per cent tax on its income. A little arithmetic illustrates the heavier burden on the lower income family when the tax is measured against income, instead of just consumption:

	Family A	Family B
Family Income	$3,000	$30,000
*Family Expenditures	3,600	20,000
Three Per Cent Sales Tax on Expenditures	108	600
Per Cent Sales Tax is of Total Income	3.6%	2%

*State laws and statistics relating to the various tax categories represent the latest available information through June, 1969.
For illustrative purposes, rents (which are not subject to sales tax) are not considered in this example.

This is not an unrealistic outcome. When expenditures were checked against income levels in Georgia, the Georgia sales tax was found to vary from 4.7 per cent burden on families with less than $1,000 income to 1.8 per cent for incomes of $15,000 and over.

Not only are lower income families penalized by paying a higher percentage of their income in sales taxes, but larger families are also hit harder. The more children, obviously, the higher will be food, clothing, and every other bill. The income tax gives consideration for larger families by allowing commensurate personal exemptions. The sales tax works just the opposite.

In recent years local governments have also gone to the general sales tax as a revenue source. Sixteen states (eight of them southern) now permit local governments to use the sales tax and by 1969, 2,756 cities and over 400 counties levied such taxes. In some areas, the local and state sales tax together exceed five per cent.

Selective sales taxes are another important source of state revenue. These are sales taxes on specific products such as gasoline, cigarettes, and alcohol. The gasoline tax (there are both state and federal taxes on every gallon of gas) is the most important selective sales tax. Selective sales taxes are also regressive. A family with $20,000 income is not likely to buy ten times as much gas as the $2,000 income family, so that the gasoline tax represents a lower percentage of the higher income.

For both state and local governments, regressive sales taxes represent a greater proportion of total taxes than taxes that are based on ability to pay (income and death taxes. In 1967, general and selective sales taxes represented 58 per cent of total state taxes. Individual and corporate income and death taxes together represented only 25 per cent.

The growing importance of the regressive sales tax at the local government level is revealed by its growth from only one per cent of all local taxes in 1940, to the seven per cent level in 1962. In the same period, the "local income" or payroll tax went from a paltry one-half per cent in 1940 to only one per cent in 1962.

The general tendency in state and local governments has been to lay an excessive burden on poor people by favoring regressive taxes, and to spare the higher income families by going easy on progressive taxes. This tendency as we shall now see has been particularly conspicuous in the southern states.

Robert Cannon and Donald Escarraz, "Sales Tax Equity: Selective Sales Taxes," University of Georgia, 1968 (mimeographed).

State and Local Income Taxes

Income taxes, on individuals and corporations, and estate and inheritance taxes, accounted for roughly one-fourth of all state taxes in 1967. Together these taxes, which in varying levels of progression are based on ability to pay, account for less than half the revenue states obtained from the regressive general and selective sales taxes. Most state income tax laws are mildly progressive. Slightly higher tax rates apply to the higher income brackets, but the increase in rates is not nearly so steep as in the federal income tax structure. State corporation income tax laws usually provide a flat percentage rate, although a few levy mildly graduated rates. The most common maximum rate is five per cent, well below the present 48 per cent federal rates on taxable corporate income in excess of $25,000 (not counting the surtax).

Some form of levy on income has been adopted by local governments in eight states. Such taxes are used extensively in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky. Twelve of the 43 largest cities use them (New York, Detroit, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Baltimore, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo, Louisville, and Washington, D. C.). Local taxes are usually levied at a flat percentage rate, and therefore are proportional and not progressive. Often they do not allow personal exemptions, as is true in federal and state income tax laws. Although New York, Maryland, and Michigan do permit personal and dependent exemptions, a graduated (or progressive) rate is applied only in New York City, and in Baltimore, where the tax is "piggy-backed" to the existing state progressive income tax law, and administered at the state level.

Some refer to such taxes as "income taxes." This is misleading. "Payroll tax" is a more adequate description. Under a typical municipal payroll tax, the wages and salaries of employed individuals and the net profits of unincorporated businesses are taxed at a flat rate (often one per cent). This covers all earnings of the typical wage earner, who usually has no income other than his salary. The payroll tax does not touch interest, rent, or dividends, which comprise considerable portions of higher level family incomes. Thus a payroll tax, which often masquerades as an ability-to-pay tax, may end up to be as regressive as a sales tax.

To illustrate, a one per cent payroll tax on a worker's wages could actually cost him more than a one per cent sales tax. Typically he will spend one-fourth of his salary on rent. There is usually no sales tax on rents. Thus while the one per cent sales tax may apply to three-fourths of this income, the one per cent payroll tax would apply to his total salary. If food and medicine are exempted from the sales tax, the burden of the payroll tax in comparison to the same per cent sales tax becomes even heavier on wage earners in the lower brackets.

2 The Burden of The Sales Tax In The South

It is ironic that the lowest income states make the greatest use of those taxes which weigh most heavily on the poor. While the average state raises 27.9 per cent of its taxes through the general sales tax, Mississippi, with the lowest per capita income in the nation, manages to raise 41.8 per cent of its taxes through a state and local five per cent sales tax. Out of a 1967 per capita average annual $1,777 income in Mississippi, the annual sales tax expenditure was $54.83 per capita. This compares to $45.28 in the United States (as a whole), from a national per capita average $2,959 income in the same year.

Looking at the sales tax burden in relation to income, in Mississippi, $31.00 goes for sales tax for every $1,000 of personal income received in the state, in comparison with $15.46 for every $1,000 personal income throughout the United States.

The sales tax burden in the southern states is shown in Table I. Five southern states had a higher per capita sales tax bill in 1967 than the United States average of $45.28. It might be expected that per capita sales taxes in the South would be lower, since incomes are generally lower than in the rest of the country. But the contrary is true. The burden of the sales tax is fully revealed when each state's sales tax bill is compared with the total personal income in that state. Column 2, Table I, shows each state's sales tax bill per $1,000 of personal income in that state. Nine of the eleven southern states had a higher share of income going to sales tax than the United States average. Only Texas and Virginia showed a lower sales tax bill per $1,000 personal income. These two states ranked among the top three southern states in personal income. Regressive taxation removes a higher percentage of spending power in the poorer southern states, and is a contributing factor in the cycle which keeps the income level depressed.

TABLE I

Sales Taxes, Southern States, 1967

	General Sales Tax			Selective Sales Taxes			General-Selective Sales Taxes Combined
	Per Cap.	Per $1000 Income	As % of State Taxes	Per Cap.	Per $1000 Income	As % of State Taxes	Per Cap.	Per $1000 Income	As % of State Taxes
	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
U. S. (all states avg.)	$45.28	$15.46	27.9	$48.97	$16.62	$30.2	$94.25	$32.08	58.1
Alabama	48.25	23.55	35.4	47.42	23.14	34.7	95.67	46.69	70.1
Arkansas	45.02	22.55	31.2	49.17	24.63	34.1	94.19	47.18	65.3
Florida*	50.18	19.52	34.3	59.56	23.17	40.7	109.74	42.69	75.0
Georgia	53.60	22.86	36.2	48.19	20.55	32.55	101.79	43.41	68.8
Louisiana	39.89	17.73	21.2	49.58	22.03	26.28	89.47	39.76	47.1
Mississippi*	54.83	31.00	41.8	47.26	26.72	36.04	102.09	57.72	77.9
North Carolina	40.71	17.81	24.0	47.21	20.96	28.22	87.32	38.77	57.2
South Carolina	43.72	21.43	28.8	55.04	26.98	36.20	98.76	48.41	64.9
Tennessee	48.47	21.88	36.6	46.01	20.77	34.76	94.48	46.25	71.4
Texas*	23.86	9.50	19.4	51.52	20.50	41.93	75.38	30.00	61.4
Virginia*	19.21	7.48	13.7	46.34	18.05	33.08	65.55	25.53	46.8

*Increase in sales tax went into effect after 1967.
Source: U. S. Department of Commerce, State Government Finances in 1967.

Sales tax rates in effect in southern states are shown in Table II. The highest rate is five per cent in Mississippi, where one per cent of the tax is rebated to cities. Many areas in Alabama also pay five per cent, where the four per cent state rate is augmented by local option sales taxes of one per cent. Some Alabama municipalities even levy a two per cent sales tax on top of the state four per cent rate. Fourteen states in the United States and the District of Columbia exempt food and 23 plus the Capital exempt medicines. Such exemptions reduce the burden of the sales tax on lower income families for whom necessities represent the major budget item. In the South, only Texas and Florida exempt both food and medicine. North Carolina and Virginia exempt medicine. Thus among southern states, the ones with generally higher per capita incomes are more generous in exempting necessities from the sales tax. The states with more poor people make fewer allowances.

The recognized regressiveness of the sales tax has prompted a number of non-southern states to allow compensating credits under income taxes, and rebates to families whose income is so low that no income tax is paid. For instance, Colorado permits each person a $7.00 credit against family state income tax, and a $7.00 rebate per person where no income tax is owed. The $7.00 represents the sales tax which would have been paid at three per cent on $235 worth of groceries.

In Iowa, the credit and rebate are progressively higher as family income is lower. These credits and rebates compensate, in some measure, for regressive comprehensive sales taxes, even where food is not exempt. The mathematical example on page 7 clarifies its operation.

Under the Iowa plan, the "progressive" rebate has transformed a regressive sales tax into a proportional burden on income. The use of these credits and rebates

TABLE II

General Sales Tax Rates in Southern States, April, 1969

	State Rate	Local Government Rate	Exempts Food	Exempts Medicine
Alabama	4%	½-2%
Arkansas	3%	1%*
Florida	4%	none authorized	x	x
Georgia	3%	none authorized
Louisiana	2%	½-2%
Mississippi	5%	cities are rebated 1%
North Carolina	3%	1%		x
South Carolina	4%	none authorized
Tennessee	3%	1%
Texas	3.25	1%	x	x
Virginia	3%	1%		x

*Only one city levies the local sales tax.
Source: Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, State and Local Finances, Significant Features, 1966 to 1969, Nov., 1968, p. 69.
Increased from 3% to 4% in 1969 session of state legislature.
Increased from 3% to 3.25% in 1969 session of state legislature.

	Family A (Four Persons)	Family B (Four Persons)
Income	$3,000	$30,000
Expenditures	3,600	20,000
Three Per Cent Sales Tax on Expenditures	108	600
Less Credit or Rebate ($12 x 4)	48	None where taxable income exceeds $7,000
Net Sales Tax	60	600
Net Sales Tax as Per Cent of Income	2%	2%

is a recent development and relatively unknown in southern legislative halls. Two southern governors proposed tax packages in 1969 which included such measures: Governors Maddox and Rockefeller in Georgia and Arkansas. In the absence of familiarity with this idea, and without strong support by union, civil rights, and consumer groups, the innovative concept was dealt instant death by the legislators in Georgia.

No discussion of sales taxes is complete without considering special interest exemptions. Proponents of such exemptions often can point to no broad equity principle to justify their request. However, where equipment and materials are ingredients in the production of final consumer goods, the mechanics of the economic system probably make exemption of such items desirable, from the consumer's viewpoint. For instance, the sales tax requires the consumer to pay three per cent on the price of a dozen eggs.* If the poultryman were required to pay three per cent on the feed for his hens, he would likely pass this extra cost to the consumer, who would then pay three per cent plus a hidden tax on his dozen eggs.

It is important that exemptions be granted only for machinery and materials designed specifically for the manufacture of a certain product. Thus a typewriter, which is incidental to any business but is not designed specifically for the manufacture of a product or the rendering of a taxable service, would be subject to the tax. The tractor on the farm would be exempt.

Mississippi is the only southern state which has a multiple stage sales tax, or one that taxes both wholesale and retail sales.

Most exemptions, other than the pyramiding variety described above, favor one or another group of consumers. For example, exemptions of many services (beauty and barber shops are a common example) favor individuals who make use of those services over those who tend to buy actual goods. Generally, upper income groups spend more on services than lower income groups. Therefore, exempting services accentuates regressivity. If a sales tax is combined with the credit-rebate proposal, the likelihood is greater that all taxpayers will be treated equally, without escape hatches for their particular spending idosyncrasies.

Selective Sales Tax

The regressive nature of selective sales taxes was documented in 1968 in a study of Georgia taxes. Georgia selective sales taxes amounted to two per cent of income for families below $1,000 per year, and only one per cent of income for families earning $15,000 and over.

The average per capita burden of selective sales taxes in all the states in 1967 was $48.97. In three of the eleven southern states, the per capita burden exceeded the national average. In the United States in 1967, the average state selective sales tax burden per $1,000 personal income was $16.62. In each of the eleven southern states, the burden per $1,000 personal income exceeded the national average. The burden in relation to income was greatest in Mississippi and South Carolina, two states at the bottom in per capita incomes.

*The three per cent figure here is used for illustrative purposes only since it is the rate applied in the majority of the southern states.

Robert Carl Cannon and Donald Ray Escarraz, "Sales Tax Equity: Selective Sales Taxes," University of Georgia, 1968 (mimeographed).

The full burden in southern states of regressive general and selective sales taxes combined is shown in columns 7-9, Table I. The average combined sales tax bill in the United States is $32.08 for every $1,000 personal income. In Mississippi, it is $57.72. In all southern states, execpt Texas and Virginia, the burden is higher, relative to income, than the national average. It is emphasized that southern states (1) have lower incomes, and (2) out of lower incomes, take a higher share in regressive taxes than the average state. The actual rates of the southern states on cigarettes, gasoline, and alcohol are shown in Table III.

TABLE III

Major Selective Sales Tax Rates, April, 1969

	Cigarette (Cents per pack)	Gasoline (Cents per gallon)	Alcohol (Dollars per gallon)
Alabama	10	7	(state owned)
Arkansas	12½	7½	2.50
Florida	15	7	3.75
Georgia	8	6½	3.75
Louisiana	8	8	1.68
Mississippi	9	7	2.50
North Carolina	—	7	(state owned)
South Carolina	6*	7	2.72
Tennessee	8	7	4.00
Texas	15.5	5	1.68
Virginia	2.5	7	(state owned)

Source: U. S. Department of Commerce, State and Local Finances, Significant Features, 1966-1969.
*Increased from 5 to 6 cents in 1969 session of the state legislature.
Increased from 11 cents to 15.5 cents in the 1969 session of the state legislature.

3 Income Taxes in the South

State Personal Income Tax

The heavy emphasis southern states place on regressive taxes coincides with their lesser reliance on progressive taxes, or taxes based on ability to pay. In most southern states, income taxes are not as important in the state's revenue structure as is true nationally. In 1932, only four per cent of taxes in the 48 states were derived from personal income taxes, while in 1967 this had risen to 15.4 per cent. Thirty-eight states presently levy a state income tax, producing an average of 22.4 per cent of all state taxes in those states. Among these 38 states are nine southern states. Texas and Florida have no state income taxes.

The percentages income taxes represent of southern tax structures are shown in Table IV. In line with national state tax trends, this percentage has grown. However, in Mississippi, it produces only 3.4 per cent of all state taxes. In Tennessee, where it applies only to dividend and interest income, it raises only 1.7 per cent of all state taxes. The income tax is of major importance in the tax structures of only two southern states: Virginia and North Carolina.

Income tax collections, relative to total available income, are generally lower in the southern states than for all states levying an income tax. Statutory tax rates, exemptions, and definitions of taxable income vary considerably from state to state. Therefore, the comparison of each state's income tax receipts per $1,000 personal income gives a clearer illustration of income tax effort than is appparent in a reading of tax rates alone. Column 4, Table IV, shows that the average amount of state income tax in the 36 states levying the tax in 1967 was $13.33 per $1,000 of personal

TABLE IV

State Personal Income Tax Collections, 1967

	Percentage of Total State Taxes			Per $1000 Personal Income, 1967
	1952	1963	1967
Average of States With Income Tax	9.3%	13.4%	22.4%	$13.33
Alabama	n.a.	9.2	12.0	8.01
Arkansas	4.2	7.4	11.0	7.93
Florida		no tax
Georgia	7.0	11.2	15.1	9.47
Louisiana	n.a.	3.6	5.2	4.35
Mississippi	4.8	3.6	3.4	2.50
North Carolina	13.1	17.7	22.4	16.66
South Carolina	8.2	12.4	15.8	11.80
Tennessee*	2.0	1.9	1.7	.01
Texas		no tax
Virginia	14.8	31.4	30.3	16.55

*Applies only to dividend and interest income.
Source: Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, Tax Overlapping in the United States, 1964 and U. S. Department of Commerce, State Government Finances in 1967.

STATE PERSONAL INCOME TAX COLLECTIONS

Per $1,000 Personal Income, 1967

(in dollars)

income. Seven southern states make a lower effort than this average. Only two southern states—North Carolina and Virginia—make an effort exceeding the average. For every $1,000 personal income, North Carolina obtains $16.66 in state personal income taxes, and Virginia, $16.55.

State income tax rates generally have much less progression (or increasing rate) in the higher income brackets than is provided by federal income tax law. Yet 13 states do progress to rates ranging from eight per cent to 14 per cent at the highest brackets, and two additional states are tied to the federal rates, which are quite progressive. Table V shows that no southern state has a rate exceeding seven per cent at the highest income bracket where progression of rates terminates.

To determine the progressiveness of an income tax, one must not only examine rates, but also the income bracket where progression stops. If State A applies a five per cent rate to all net taxable incomes over $10,000, but State B progresses to a six per cent rate for taxable incomes above $15,000, and State C to a seven per cent rate above $25,000, State C has the steepest progression. Twenty of the 38 income tax states, including five southern states, terminate progression of rates at or below the $10,000 bracket of net taxable income. Seven income tax states continue progression of rates as high as, or above, the over-$25,000 bracket. Included are three southern states. The net taxable income brackets where progression of rates ceases are shown in Table V.

There is considerable variation in allowable personal exemptions under the 38 state income tax laws. Sixteen states use the $600 basic personal exemption as in the federal law. The rest use substantially higher exemptions. Southern states are among those using the higher exemptions. Mississippi has the highest exemption, allowing $4,000 for a single taxpayer, and a total of $6,000 in a joint return. High personal exemptions permit lower income families or large households to avoid or reduce income tax liability. Moreover, generous personal exemptions have the effect of introducing a degree of progressivity into a state income tax which might have little progression in tax rates. However, high personal exemptions may not be compatible with other fiscal aims.

Where citizens are attempting to reform a regressive tax structure that is heavily dependent on sales taxes, they must necessarily place more weight on income taxes as revenue raisers.

Deductibility of federal income taxes from state income is another provision which offers the illusion of state income tax relief, but in reality provides a greater cushion to higher income taxpayers. Federal income tax law already permits deductibility of state income taxes, together with other state and local taxes. Where state income tax law then also permits state deduction of federal taxes, the taxpayer enjoys double deductibility. But the value of this deductibility is greater for the wealthy. It reduces the rich taxpayer's state tax by a higher percentage than the poorer man's. The following example shows the greater reduction for the higher brackets:

Taxable Income	State Tax Rate Where Federal Tax is Not Deductible	Effective State Tax Rate Where Federal Tax Rate is Deductible	Reduction of State Rate by Deductibility Clause*
$ 10,000	10%	9.5%	5%
$200,000	10%	3.2%	68%

*Since state tax is also deductible from federal tax, the larger relative state reduction becomes a lower relative deduction for federal purposes. This results in a partial offset against the regressive effect of the deduction of the federal taxes for state income tax purposes. Advisory Commission for Intergovernmental Relations, Tax Overlapping in the United States, 1964, Washington, D. C., 1964, p. 131.

TABLE V

Top Bracket Income Tax Rates, April, 1969

	Highest Rate In State Income Tax Law Per Cent	Progression of Rates Ends at Taxable Income Level Over:
Alabama	5	$ 5,000
Arkansas	5	25,000
Georgia	6	10,000
Louisiana	6	50,000
Mississippi	4	5,000
North Carolina	7	10,000
South Carolina	7	10,000
Tennessee	6	(applies only to interest and dividends)
Virginia	5	20,000

Source: Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, State and Local Finances, Significant Features, 1966-1969, Washington, D. C., 1968.

TABLE VI

Ability To Pay Taxes in the Southern States, 1967

	Percentage of All State Tax Collections: Personal Income Tax	Corporate Income Tax	Death Taxes	Inheritance Tax	Gift Tax	Estate Tax
U. S., Average, All States	15.4%	7.0%	2.5%	38 states	12 states	49 states
U. S. Average, States With Tax	22.4	9.3
Alabama	12.0	6.2	.5	no	no	pick-up
Arkansas	11.0	8.9	.2	no	no	pick-up
Florida	no tax	no tax	1.3	no	no	pick-up
Georgia	15.1	9.7	.5	no	no	pick-up
Louisiana	5.2	5.0	.8	yes	yes	pick-up
Mississippi	3.4	5.5	.5	no	no	estate
North Carolina	22.4	11.7	1.6	yes	yes	pick-up
South Carolina	15.8	11.0	.7	no	yes	estate
Tennessee	1.7	8.4	2.3	yes	yes	pick-up
Texas	no tax	no tax	2.0	yes	no	pick-up
Virginia	30.3	7.8	1.3	yes	yes	pick-up

Source: U. S. Department of Commerce, State Government Finances in 1967 and Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, State and Local Taxes, Significant Features, 1966-1969, Washington, D. C. 1968.

Of 18 states that allow deductibility of federal taxes for state income tax purposes, three (Alabama, Louisiana, and South Carolina) are southern states.

The amount of revenue produced by a state income tax depends largely upon the effectiveness of enforcement procedures. In recent years, more states have entered into cooperative agreements with the federal government for income tax information and enforcement. The superior enforcement procedures of the federal government insure a higher compliance than most state agencies. Some southern states have not yet availed themselves of cooperative efforts with the federal authorities, and until they do, their collections on state income taxes will not reach full potential. The use of federal taxable income criteria is another recent trend in various states. This is a step in the direction of "catching" as much income as possible under state law. It also simplifies filing procedures for taxpayers.

The Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations recommends that a state income tax should produce at least 20 per cent of the federal personal income tax collections in that state.* The Commission found only one southern state (North Carolina) which met its standard of productivity.

Local Personal Income Tax

Only one southern city (Gadsden, Alabama) uses a city income tax. Although talk is heard everywhere of local revenue needs, and of providing cities with authority for new taxes, the talk is mostly of increased sales taxes.

In order to prevent proliferation of new income taxing units in every small locality, local income taxes can be "piggy-backed" to existing state income taxes, collected at the state level, and returned to the localities imposing the tax. This method is entirely consistent with local option, since the decision to levy the tax remains in the hands of local voters. Only the chore of collecting the revenue is delegated to existing state income tax units. The "piggy-back" local option approach has the added advantage of using a comprehensive tax base, including interest, dividends, and capital gains. This procedure makes the tax more progressive than the payroll tax.

Moreover, the local income tax applies to commuters working in central cities, and thereby enables the cities to derive revenue from suburban residents employed in the metropolitan core.

Corporate Income Tax

Forty-one states and the District of Columbia levy a corporate income tax. Three of these states added corporate income taxes in 1967 (Michigan, Nebraska, and West Virginia). Corporate income taxes in 1967 represented seven per cent of all state tax collections. The percentage has remained steady during the 1960's. State corporate income tax rates are moderate and result in collections which annually average less than *Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, State and Local Taxes, Significant Features, 1968, Washington, D. C., 1968, p. 6.

This includes South Dakota where the tax is applicable only to banks.

10 per cent of federal corporate income tax collections. In contrast to the 48 per cent federal rate on corporate income above $25,000, state rates range from one per cent to 11 per cent. Thirty-two states levy a flat rate on all corporate income.

Of the eleven southern states, only Texas and Florida levy no corporate income tax. The percentages corporate income taxes represent of local tax collections in the southern states are shown in Column 2, Table VI. The corporate income tax generally produces about the same percentage of state collections in southern states as elsewhere in the nation.

Although five per cent is the single most usual rate, 23 states levy a rate (either flat or at the upper brackets) exceeding five per cent. Only three southern states have rates in excess of five percent, Georgia, Arkansas, and North Carolina, all three at six per cent. Rates for the southern states are shown in Table VII.

Deductibility of federal corporate income tax from state income tax meets the same objections which were discussed under personal income taxes. It produces a greater relative reduction of state corporate tax for large, prosperous corporations than for marginal operations. Only two southern states (Alabama and Louisiana) permit this double deductibility. Tennessee, however, permits a related practice of deducting the state corporate tax itself in computing state tax liability.

TABLE VII

State Corporate Income Tax Rates, April, 1969

	Flat Rate or Rate on Lowest Bracket of Net Income:	Rate at Highest Bracket of Net Income:
Alabama	5% - flat
Arkansas	1% - $3,000	6% over $25,000
Georgia	6% - flat
Florida	none
Louisiana	4% - flat
Mississippi	3% - $5,000	4% over $ 5,000
North Carolina	6% - flat
South Carolina	5% - flat
Tennessee	5% - flat
Texas	none
Virginia	5% - flat

Source: Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, State and Local Taxes, Significant Features, 1966-1969, Washington, D. C., 1968.

Death Taxes

There are three major types of state death taxes: estate, inheritance, and gift taxes. The estate tax is levied on the property of the deceased. The inheritance tax applies to the portions of the estate going to each beneficiary, and the gift tax prevents evasion of inheritance taxes by transfer of property prior to death. These taxes are all based on the proposition that an inheritance constitutes a windfall, and that there is greater justification for taxing wealth an individual has been given than income for which he worked. Death taxes are usually thought of as progressive levies, because higher rates apply to larger legacies. However, the true principle of ability-to-pay is not completely followed, because the size of the recipient's own income does not affect the rate on the inheritance left to him. A poor man who inherits a sum pays the same tax as a rich man who is left an equal amount.

Federal tax law on estates has steep progression of rates. It provides that on estates above $60,000, portions of the state tax may be credited against the amount owed the federal government. The portion allowed for credit varies inversely with the size of the estate. Under the credit provision, the state tax on large estates reduces the amount owed to the federal government. In some instances, the state estate tax does not impose a new or additional burden not already produced by the federal law.

The percentages death taxes represent of total state tax collections are shown in Column 3, Table VI. Southern states all obtain a lower percentage than is true nationally. The lower proportions result partly from fewer and smaller estates in southern states. However, they may also reflect more generous tax laws.

The most generous possible provision of a state tax is to levy a tax equal only to the amount which may be credited towards the federal tax. In this manner, the estate pays to the state an amount equal to what it may subtract from federal liability. Beneficiaries are taxed nothing extra. Only four states in the nation are so generous: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, and Georgia, which levy what is called a "pickup" tax. They have no other inheritance or gift taxes. Two additional southern states, South Carolina and Mississippi, levy estate taxes that are only slightly less liberal to the state than the minimum "pickup" tax.

The remaining five southern states supplement estate taxes with either inheritance or gift taxes, or both. Table VI summarizes death taxes in the southern states. Of 38 states with inheritance taxes, five are southern. Of 13 states with gift taxes, five are southern.

Death taxes will not produce substantial new revenues, even if the southern states were all to adopt each type of tax and exceed the minimum "pickup" estate tax. Southern states need to examine their death taxes not so much with the primary purpose of increasing revenue, but rather of promoting equity. The absence of gift taxes is one of the more obvious loopholes permitting evasion of death taxes by transfer of property.

4 Taxes On Business

In comparing taxes levied on business and those levied on consumers, two pitfalls must be considered: (1) taxes initially levied on business may not all be absorbed by business. (A corporate license fee, for instance, is a cost of business and depending on consumer demand for the product of the corporation, this cost may be shifted, completely or partially, to the consumer in the form of higher product prices. The same is true of a public utility gross receipts tax which in effect usually turns out to be a selective sales tax on the consumer.); and (2) differences from state to state in the percentages of tax collections directly from business may not necessarily reflect differences in burdens on business. (State A, raising 20 per cent of its total taxes in the form of "business taxes," in contrast to State B which obtains only 15 per cent in this manner, may just happen to have more business.)

The percentages of total taxes that southern states collect by direct levies on business are given in Table VIII. These include two gross receipt taxes (insurance and public utility); license taxes levied on corporations, public utilities, alcoholic beverages, and amusement establishments and on occupations and business; and corporate income and severance taxes.*

Table VIII shows the percentages of total state tax collections each source of business tax represents, and the total percentage from these sources in each state. These taxes produced 17 per cent of state tax collections in the United States in 1967. The only southern state where this percentage is substantially lower is Florida. This state levies neither corporate income, nor severance tax, and prides itself on the low proportion of "business taxes."

In Texas, the other southern state without a corporate income tax, the severance tax produces almost 17 per cent of state taxes, and brings the total percentage of state taxes from business to 27.6 per cent. Louisiana also has a severance tax, which produces almost one-third of all its taxes. Other southern states, lacking

*Severance taxes are levied on removal of natural resources. They are geared to the oil, gas, and minerals removed or sold, and are levied against the firms removing the resources from the ground.
Florida Development Commission, Florida Taxes, 1968, p. 23.

TABLE VIII

Business Taxes As Percentages of State Taxes, 1967

	All States Avg.	Ala.	Ark.	Fla.	Ga.	La.	Miss.	N.C.	S.C.	Tenn.	Tex.	Va.
Insurance Gross Receipts	2.8	2.6	2.3	3.0	2.4	2.5	3.1	2.6	2.6	3.7	3.2	3.2
Public Utilies Gross Rec.	1.9	1.1		1.6		1.4	.1	5.0	1.9	.5	2.1	4.1
Corporate Licenses	1.9	2.6	.5	.6	.4	3.1	2.3	1.6		2.7	4.4	.3
Public Util. Licenses	.1	.1	.2	*		*	.1		.5	*
Alcohol. Licenses	.4	.3	.1	.2	*	.2	*	*	.2	*	.2	*
Amusement Licenses	*		*					*	.1	*
Occupat. Licenses	1.1	1.0	.8	4.3	.8	1.7	1.4	2.3	1.6	3.6	.8	1.7
Corporate Income	7.0	6.2	8.8		9.7	5.0	5.5	11.7	11.0	8.4		7.8
Severance	1.8	.4	1.6	*		31.2	3.6				16.8	*
Total	17.0	14.3	14.4	9.7	13.3	45.1	16.1	23.4	17.8	19.0	27.6	17.1

*Denotes less than .1%.
Total may not add up because of rounding.
Source: Calculated from U. S. Department of Commerce, State Government Finances in 1967.

these natural resource bounties, produce from 13 per cent to 23 per cent in "business taxes."

Despite the growth of business generally in the United States, the proportion of total state and local taxes derived from business declined 2.2 per cent from 1957 to 1962.* Table 9 shows that four southern states had a decline in business taxes, as a percentage of total state and local taxes, exceeding the national decline. The lesser role played by business taxes is a result both of deliberate attempts by state and local governments to lighten the load on business, and of the lower elasticity of business taxes in keeping pace with economic expansion, as compared to personal taxes. A business license, for instance, usually is a fixed amount and does not produce more revenue as business expands. In contrast, a retail sales tax automatically produces more revenue as business grows.

Some state and local governments have deliberately sought to lighten the load on business in their competitive race to attract new industry. Although there is no unanimity on the importance of business taxes as an influence on plant locations, most economists conclude that tax differentials are outweighed by other considerations in plant location decisions. Southern states have been among the most active competitors in the race to give new industries tax concessions and favors. Of 13 states with constitutional provisions permitting state and/or local tax exemptions to new industry, five are southern states (Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina). Five to ten-year property tax moratoriums are granted by these states. In some instances, the new business is exempted from all property taxes, including school taxes. In that case, the burden of providing schools for the additional children brought into a community as a result of a new plant falls on traditional tax sources. Usually it means increased taxes on homeowners and previously established businesses. In 1965, the Alabama new industry exemption provision was estimated to have cost state and local governments from $500,000 to $1 million in property tax levies. Louisiana goes so far as to permit a "Council on New Industry" to lure new establishments by negotiating contracts to meet the best tax offer received in any competing state!

Industrial development by public authority bond issues is another inducement used by states in the competitive race for new business. An industrial development authority, as a public body, usually enjoys exemptions from property taxes. When it brings an industry (oftentimes a large and powerful corporation) to a particular locale, the authority leases building property to the firm which is then absolved of property taxes. This constitutes a further subsidy to private business over and beyond the financing aid extended through the public authority bond issues. All southern states, except Florida and Texas, now permit industrial authority bond financing.

(It is noteworthy that Mississippi, the state with the earliest provision for industrial development bond financing, ranks lowest among the southern states in terms of manufacturing jobs, while Florida, without this crutch, has had the most rapid expansion of such jobs.)

The outcome of most tax subsidies to lure business is to invite retaliatory action by neighboring states. The result is that nothing has been gained by securing a supposedly favorable business tax climate. Yet lost revenue must be compensated by higher personal taxes. Concessions and tax abatements also inflict discriminatory effects between new and established business firms.

TABLE IX

State and Local Taxes on Business*, as a Percentage of Total Taxes, 1957-1962

	1962	1957	Change 1957-1962
U. S.	31.7	33.9	−2.2
Alabama	24.1	25.7	−1.6
Arkansas	23.0	26.6	−3.6
Florida	29.4	30.6	−1.2
Georgia	26.7	25.4	+1.3
Louisiana	53.3	48.0	+5.3
Mississippi	33.0	32.5	+ .5
North Carolina	29.4	32.5	−3.1
South Carolina	26.6	28.0	−1.4
Tennessee	26.9	26.2	+ .7
Texas	45.2	52.0	−6.8
Virginia	33.6	36.5	−2.9

*Excluding employment taxes
Source: Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, State and Local Taxation, and Industrial Location, Washington, D. C., 1967, p. 38.

*Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, State-Local Taxation and Industrial Location, April, 1967, p. 38.

Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, State-Local Taxation and Industrial Location, Washington, D. C., 1967, p. 47.

North Carolina's industrial authority provisions were ruled unconstitutional. Recent federal legislation restricts tax-free industrial development revenue bonds to small issues to accommodate small businesses. In some localities, the firms holding the lease with industrial development authorities are paying fees in lieu of property taxes. The practice is one that should be encouraged wherever business concerns lease properties from public bodies who are exempt from actual property taxes.

5 The Property Tax

Although its role as a state tax measure has almost disappeared, the property tax in 1967 still constituted 66 per cent of all revenue obtained by local governments from their own sources. It is levied primarily on real estate, although many types of personal property are taxed in various jurisdictions.

Table X shows for the southern states, and the United States average, various comparisons on property tax data; each comparison shows that property taxes in the South are low. Nationally the per capita property tax in the average state in 1967 was $132.81. All the southern states are well below this. For nine states, the per capita figures are less than half of the national average.

With lower available incomes (from which property taxes ultimately must be paid) it is to be expected that southern states per capita property taxes should be lower than the national average. To determine "effort" in relation to lower incomes, by expressing the property taxes per $1,000 personal income, the property tax effort of the southern states still shows up dismally low. The national average is $45.27 in property tax per $1,000 personal income. Only three southern states exceed a $30 effort; two of these exceed a $40 effort.

When each state's effort is expressed as a percentage of the national effort (the index of effort, as shown in Column 4, Table X), seven southern states make less than a two-thirds effort. Effort, it must be remembered, is already expressed in terms of available income.

Still another comparison illustrates the lower level of property taxation in southern cities. Table XI lists median "effective tax rates" on fully taxable houses (without homestead exemptions) in various large cities. The "effective" tax rate is the tax bill expressed as a percentage of the value of the property. This comparison avoids the problem encountered when millage rates are compared on equal value properties that carry unequal assessment percentages. Only three southern cities (all in Florida, where the homestead exemption is $5,000) of 19 southern cities surveyed by the Bureau of the Census had average effective property rates of three per cent or more in 1966. A three per cent effective property tax rate is generally considered to approach upper economic limits, although effective rates exceeding four per cent are levied in many New Jersey communities. Tax rates in the vicinity of two per cent in effect in most large southern cities, cannot be considered "confiscatory" by any economic yardstick.

Property taxes are generally considered to be regressive largely because the value of the housing unit con-

TABLE X

The Property Tax in the Southern States, 1967

	Property Tax as Percent of: State & Local Revenue From Own Sources 1966-67	Property Tax as Percent of: Local Revenue From Own Sources 1966-67	Per Capita Property Tax 1966-67	Property Taxes per $1000 Personal Income "Effort" 1966-67	Index of Property Tax Effort
United States, All States avg.	35.4%	66.3%	$132.81	$45.27	100
Alabama	13.2	29.2	34.12	16.65	37
Arkansas	20.2	56.3	51.23	25.65	57
Florida	30.9	54.4	113.15	44.02	97
Georgia	23.2	52.9	68.81	29.33	65
Louisiana	15.0	45.0	52.51	23.25	51
Mississippi	20.4	48.9	54.36	30.73	68
North Carolina	21.1	62.6	58.62	26.04	58
South Carolina	16.9	58.2	42.28	20.69	46
Tennessee	23.4	51.7	62.96	28.46	64
Texas	34.8	66.4	104.91	41.74	92
Virginia	25.0	56.6	74.20	28.91	64

Source: U. S. Department of Commerce, Government Finances, 1966-67.

THE PROPERTY TAX IN THE SOUTHERN STATES, 1966-67

stitutes a lower percentage of higher incomes than of lower incomes. A study of Florida taxes, for instance, makes the following estimate of income-housing value relationships:

Gross Family Income	Ratio of Value of House to Gross Family Income	Value of House
$ 1,475	6.10	$ 9,000
3,053	3.08	9,400
4,443	2.32	10,300
5,757	2.02	11,600
7,141	1.72	12,300
8,806	1.56	13,700
11,542	1.39	16,000
16,092	1.31	21,000
35,941	1.25	45,000

Source: Peat, Marwick, Mitchell, and Company, Report on the Revenue System of State and Local Government in Florida, November, 1968, pp. vii-6.

TABLE XI

Effective Property Tax Rates in Southern Cities, 1966

	Median Effective Tax Rate, Fully Taxable House
Birmingham, Ala.	.92
Little Rock, Ark.	1.18
Miami, Fla.	3.07
Jacksonville, Fla.	3.38
Tampa, Fla.	3.56
Atlanta, Ga.	1.47
Columbus, Ga.	1.26
New Orleans, La.	.95
Jackson, Miss.	2.37
Winston-Salem, N. C.	1.34
Charlotte, N. C.	1.49
Chattanooga, Tenn.	1.92
Knoxville, Tenn.	2.10
Nashville, Tenn.	1.33
Dallas, Tex.	1.48
Houston, Tex.	1.79
Ft. Worth, Tex.	2.32
Richmond, Va.	1.51
Norfolk, Va.	1.18

Source: U. S. Department of Commerce, 1967 Census of Governments, Taxable Property Values, Vol. 2.

Property taxes, being tied to the value of the house, therefore, constitute a lower percentage of higher incomes than lower ones.

The homestead exemption, instead of alleviating regressivity of the property tax, accentuates it. Lower income groups are more likely to be tenants than homeowners. On rental property there is no homestead exemption. In the absence of a glut of housing on the market, the landlord shifts the property tax to the tenant in the form of higher rent. The tenant ends up paying the property tax, without the benefit of the homestead exemption, while the homeowner, who is likely to earn a higher income, in effect enjoys an exemption which the law does not grant him. Moreover, the property owner is allowed to deduct his tax on the property from income to reduce his income tax liability. The tenant, although he usually ends up paying the tax, may not deduct it for income tax purposes.

Only nine states still use the homestead exemption. Three of them (Alabama, Texas, and Minnesota) apply it only to state property taxes, where it has almost no value. The remaining six states, listed below, apply it

State	Value of Homestead Exemption	Applies to All Local Taxes	Applies to Some Local Taxes
Florida	$5,000	x
Georgia	2,000		x
Hawaii	1,500*	x
Louisiana	2,000		x
Mississippi	5,000		x
Oklahoma	1,000	x

*Plus part of the next $3,500.

Source: Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, The Role of the States in Strengthening the Property Tax, Vol. 1, June, 1963, p. 78.

to all or some local government taxes.

The defense of the homestead exemption is that it provides relief to low income families and retired individuals on small pensions, owning their homes. However, the homestead exemption is not selective and certainly not the best solution for a welfare problem. It provides the same relief to those who don't need it. The tax credit is a better mechanism for providing tax relief to lower income groups. Minnesota and Wisconsin both allow relief to poorer homeowners in the form of credits against incomes taxes, and rebates if the credit exceeds the amount of income tax liability. The credits vary depending on family income, and the amount of property tax paid. Both states recognize that a tenant's rent also includes the owner's property tax, and therefore they allow tenants a credit, geared to their rental payments.

Homestead exemptions are not the only property exemptions which erode the tax base. Throughout the nation there is a proliferation of exemptions: to veterans, senior citizens, and the handicapped; to educational and religious groups; to fraternal, benevolent, and women's associations; to new industrial and special-purpose businesses. Exemptions constitute a constant and growing drain on the tax digests of local governments. The incongruity of an exempted church parking lot, used commercially during the week but for church purposes on Sunday, points up the irrationality of special benefit exemptions. Exemption for a veteran who owns a house favors him over another who owns stock. Exemptions in effect are subsidies and often they tend to get lost from public view.

Exempted institutional property is largely concentrated in central cities and leaves the remaining property tax base to carry the added burden of exemptions. In Dade County (Miami), it is estimated that property worth $130 million is exempted, not counting church and government property.* A constructive answer to the current clamor over high property tax rates might be a complete public inventory in each area of all tax-exempt property, with a subsequent evaluation of each exemption.

The greatest failure in the equitable administration of property taxes lies in the unequal assessment levels for different types of properties. This may come about through unequal valuation practices and unequal assessment percentages.

The valuation of a piece of property is the determination of its market value. Where assessors do not keep up to date on changing values, new property tends to be valued at current market values, but old properties are not updated to rising values. Application of assessment percentages to outdated values extends the inequities. An example to clarify this problem follows:

	Old House: Sold for $25,000 in 1968	New House: Sold for $25,000 in 1968
Valuation for Tax Purposes	$20,000	$25,000
Prescribed Assessment Percentage	40%	40%
Assessed Value on Tax Digest	$ 8,000	$10,000

In effect, the assessment of the old house is 32 per cent, instead of the prescribed 40 per cent, as applied on the new house.

In the above example, at least the same prescribed assessment ratio (40 per cent) was applied to both pieces of property. Obviously if different assessment ratios had been applied, the inequity from outdated valuations would be magnified. Ironically, in some states, attempts have been made to classify property into various groups, and to apply different assessment ratios. This provides a semblance of legality in extending favoritism to owners of one type of property over those with different classes of property. In Tennessee, court decisions interpreted the existing constitution to require equal assessment ratios for all types of properties. In order to avoid equal application, Tennessee, in 1968, amended its constitution to include different classes of property and to assess the farm class at 20 per cent, residential at 25 per cent, industrial and commercial at 35 per cent, and utilities at 45 per cent. The effect of this classification is to grant different favors to various property owners, with the greatest favor going to the rural areas.

A similar proposal to classify property failed in Alabama in 1967. Although the other southern states do not go so far as Tennessee in granting outright legislative favoritism to different groups, all the states in effect grant a property tax subsidy to farm and vacant landowners through unrealistically low valuations by assessors of farms and vacant lots.

Table XII shows the result of United States Bureau of Census comparisons of tax digest values with market values (or effective assessment ratios) for residential, farm-vacant, and commercial or industrial properties. In each state, the effective assessment ratios are much lower for farms and vacant lots than for any other kind of property. In Alabama, for instance, the average residential property checked in the study was on the tax books at 22 per cent of its sales value. The average farm, however, was listed at only nine per cent of its sales value. Although farmers are granted favored treatment throughout the United States, their relative subsidy in southern states is higher.

The only southern state where effective assessment ratios for farms exceed the average for the United States is Florida, where a 1965 court decision held that

*Atlanta Journal-Constitution, January 26, 1969, p. 1-F.

TABLE XII

Assessment Ratios by Types of Property, 1967

	Average All Types of Property	Residential	Acreage & Farms	Vacant Lots	Commercial and Industrial
U. S. Statewide	32.6	34.9	17.8	24.1	33.9
(SMSA)*	32.1	35.6		24.9	33.4
Alabama Statewide	19.1	22.4	8.8	17.6	11.0
(SMSA)	22.3	24.0		19.0	12.5
Arkansas Statewide	12.2	16.0	6.7	6.8	14.9
(SMSA)	16.4	17.6		14.2	15.2
Florida Statewide	68.9	78.1	32.0	44.4	57.2
(SMSA)	71.5	79.8		49.6	63.3
Georgia Statewide	34.9	39.3	13.2	22.1	24.5
(SMSA)	38.2	40.8		20.5	23.8
Louisiana Statewide	17.1	18.0	10.0	9.7	18.2
(SMSA)	17.8	18.6		9.3	18.8
Mississippi Statewide	13.5	16.6	7.9	10.8	14.3
(SMSA)	18.8	19.7		9.9
North Carolina Statewide	48.0	53.3	23.9	32.1	52.6
(SMSA)	53.5	58.6		32.1	58.6
South Carolina Statewide	5.0	5.3	3.6	4.3	5.2
(SMSA)	5.3	5.5		3.5	5.7
Tennessee Statewide	26.2	28.9	11.6	21.9	23.7
(SMSA)	35.2	36.3		25.5	28.6
Texas Statewide	19.1	21.6	10.6	15.7	19.6
(SMSA)	20.4	22.3		14.7	20.8
Virginia Statewide	29.9	33.7	14.1	25.1	26.6
(SMSA)	32.9	35.4		21.5	23.1

*Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area.
Ratios are obtained from properties sold during the year of the survey.
Source: U. S. Department of Commerce, 1967 Census of Governments, Taxable Property Values, Vol. 2.

all property must be assessed at 100 per cent of its market value.

Although low farm income is the customary plea to justify lower farm assessments, the fact is that such assessments not only help the small farmer, but provide tax shields for more wealthy landowners who are thus allowed to shift local tax burdens back upon the state. Southern states, as we have noted previously, usually respond to any need for increased revenue by raising sales taxes.

Current suggestions to reduce property tax rates with offsets in increased sales taxes are advantageous to the large landowner, but of no help to the average homeowner, as the following example indicates:

	Owner of 10,000 Acres of Farmland	Owner of $25,000 Home
Assessed Value	$1,000,000	$10,000
Value of Five Mill Property Tax Reduction	5,000	50
Offsetting Increase of One Per Cent Sales Tax on $8,000 Annual Expenditures	80	80
Net Tax Change	$ 4,820 Reduction	$ 30 Increase

The lower effective assessment ratios on vacant lots, relative to all property, illustrate the lower tax burden enjoyed by suburban landowners. Low tax bills on suburban lots with rising values permit owners and speculators to hold the land off the market, and thereby further increase the price of land. Tax policy in this way abets land speculation and increases the cost of housing.

Table XII also shows that effective assessment ratios within metropolitan areas invariably exceed the assessments on a statewide basis, for similar type properties. This is another indication that rural local governments do not administer the property tax as fairly as the urban centers. Where state aid to various local programs is provided as a result of a county's unwillingness to raise sufficient revenue through equitable property assessments, the county in effect is allowed to parlay poor tax administration into a subsidy from urban areas.

Improved assessment practices throughout each state (most knowledgeable observers agree) will depend largely upon the availability of professional non-elected assessors. Small local governments are financially unable to attract such personnel. Moreover, impartiality of assessments may be more easily obtained from officials less closely tied to the politics of small local jurisdictions. State training and supervision, with strict qualifying standards of appointed assessment personnel, and reorganization of small assessment districts into areas large enough to afford qualified professionals might be a means to bring about more equitable property assessments.

6 Charges and Fees for Services

In addition to taxes, governments at all levels make charges for various services to obtain additional revenue. Examples at the state level are state park admission fees from campers or tolls for new highways. At the local level, general revenue (which excludes money derived from the sale of water or other utilities) includes a variety of charges of which inspection fees, golf course and swimming pool admissions, and auditorium rentals, are a few examples.

Table XIII summarizes the role of charges and miscellaneous revenue as a revenue source for state and local governments. Local charges constitute a higher percentage of local revenue in all the southern states than the national average, except in Virginia. It is also important to consider charges relative to lower incomes in the southern states. Column 4 shows that charges and miscellaneous revenues per $1,000 personal income exceed the national average of $25.63 in nine of the southern states. Only North Carolina and Virginia have lower charges relative to available income than the national average.

The data show that generally it is local governments, rather than state governments, which are laying the heavier stress on charges in the southern states. This reflects the failure of most southern states to permit local governments to levy taxes sufficient to obtain revenues. It is also indicative of the inadequate sharing of state taxes derived from other sources.

TABLE XIII

The Role of Charges and Miscellaneous Revenue in State and Local Governments, 1966-67

	Charges and Miscellaneous Revenue as a Percentage of Revenue from Own Sources for:			State and Local Govt. Charges and Misc. Revenue per $1000 personal Income
	State & Local Governments	State Governments	Local Governments
United States, All States, avg.	19.5%	15.5%	23.5%	$25.63
Alabama	25.6	15.2	42.9	32.29
Arkansas	21.5	11.4	39.7	27.24
Florida	25.0	11.7	36.0	35.68
Georgia	24.3	11.8	40.6	30.77
Louisiana	25.6	23.1	31.1	39.84
Mississippi	26.0	16.9	39.4	39.15
North Carolina	19.6	12.2	35.6	24.24
South Carolina	21.2	14.5	37.7	25.90
Tennessee	21.4	10.5	34.6	26.04
Texas	24.1	18.9	29.4	28.93
Virginia	19.3	17.3	21.9	22.28

Source: U. S. Department of Commerce, Government Finances, 1966-67.

CONCLUSIONS

The review of the various taxes and tax structures of the southern states has shown that many major taxes bear little relationship to the ability-to-pay principle. General and selective sales taxes weigh most heavily on the poor. Property taxes are no respecters of poor families or senior citizens, and corporate income tax structures fail to meet generally accepted standards of progressivity.

Three major approaches would tend to correct inequities of the present southern tax structures:

(1) Increased use of the income tax with more progressive rates at both state and local government levels provides the major possibility of reform of southern tax structures which now lean heavily on regressive sales and property taxes.

(2) Sales and property taxes, as major revenue producers, are not likely to be abandoned by governments hard pressed for revenue. Tax credits and rebates offer an alternative to offset the regressive effects of property and consumer taxes on low income families.

(3) Equalized property assessments would not only raise the revenue potential of this tax source, but distribute the tax burden more equitably.

Student dissent

SEMINAR ON MANPOWER POLICY AND PROGRAM

"Sissies! Where's Your Anti-School Spirit?"

Copyright 1968 Herblock in The Washington Post (reprinted by special permission).

American Student Activism in Comparative Perspective

by Seymour Martin Lipset

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR MANPOWER ADMINISTRATION

Student Dissent

Youth: protest and the democratic process

by Tom Kahn

What's with these crazy kids? That's the way the question usually gets posed nowadays—as if some alien and mysterious force had suddenly appeared in our midst, some inexplicable phenomenon for which there is no precedent in the annals of western civilization.

And it must be admitted that some of the antics of some of the New Youth (everything today is New) seem so far out as to defy rational analysis. Take the weird costumes, for example, or the fascination with identity-changing chemicals, or any of the other systematic and self-conscious efforts to exchange old personalities for new.

Yet like it or not, the young are here, in droves, and they will make their mark felt on the labor movement as on every other major institution in American life. Many of them are young workers who are just coming into trade union ranks. They often have special problems and they need to be educated and trained for future leadership. They are a great challenge to the labor movement.

Many others are college students who will be the writers, journalists, professors, politicians and other public opinion molders of tomorrow. How they think and feel will be an important factor in the future of the liberal-labor coalition in national politics. Moreover, as the economy—and in turn the collective bargaining process—becomes more complex, unions will increasingly find it necessary to draw on the skills of college-trained experts.

So the young are important.

The first thing to be said about the young in America is that there are so many of them. Thanks to the post-World War II baby boom, nearly half the entire population is now 25 years of age or younger.

The ways, interests and tastes of young people have always constituted a kind of subculture; today it has grown into a mass culture—and a mass market. In music and clothes, radio and TV programming, commercials and advertisements, books and magazines, the accent is on youth. Our very vocabulary and the way we use it has been forever transformed. Thus quantitative reasons alone would dictate that this current younger generation, whatever its distinctive characteristics, would have a tremendous impact on the rest of society.

The second point is that today's youth are the best educated of any in the nation's history. There are nearly 6 million students in the colleges and universities today, compared with only 3.5 million in 1960. Moreover, a larger proportion of young people are going to college than ever before. About one out of every two high school graduates will apply to college this fall.

One doesn't have to be a sociologist to recognize that education can be a source of friction between the generations. It has become a legend that every Ameri-

TOM KAHN is Executive Director of the League for Industrial Democracy. The LID has been active in strengthening the ties between the labor movement and the intellectual and student communities.

Henry Wilhelm, Black Star

New Youth. SDS, small but vocal, takes to streets of Chicago in Election Day demonstration last November.

can father wants his son to have a better education than he had and to get a better job. But it is also true that once junior has read a little Plato or Aristotle (not to mention Karl Marx), there sets in a "communications gap" (as it is now euphemistically called), which in turn leads to a "generation gap."

And yet, it seems to me, the phrase "generation gap" has been overworked, used alike by despairing parents and their rebellious children to describe their troubles with each other. Like most cliches that begin by trying to explain everything, it ends up explaining nothing. After all, there must always be a generation gap, since nature decrees that parents must be older than their children. It is also in the nature of things that each generation is smarter and healthier than the last and that it has access to the lessons accumulated by the last. The phrase "generation gap" doesn't tell us what the gap consists of. It is like saying, "Tomorrow we will have weather."

Wide generational gaps have appeared before in American history. One thinks of the gap separating the immigrant father from the first-generation son, a classic American drama that has been unfolding for over a century; and one thinks of the transition from the rural South to the urban North, a process that continues to disrupt families, to make fathers and sons strangers to each other, the products of different worlds.

Yet none of these dislocations seems to have produced so sharp an intergenerational separation as we are now witnessing. Why? One perceptive writer has tried to sum it up this way:

". . . the train ride from an Iowa cornfield to Chicago was never so far as that from the Depression to the postwar world. . . . The transformation has been astounding. Go back home sometime and take a look —a real look. Most of the buildings are gone, almost all of the homes have been gutted—and then refurbished with the contemporary paraphernalia of Consumerism. Most striking of all, this is a national fact. North, South, East and West, inside the home and on the street—all the same. The fact of the matter is that several hundred national corporations have remade this nation physically since the war and on standard patterns. With their advertising culture, especially as purveyed through street signs and television, they have gone far to remake us spiritually as well. Imagine a human being who never knew anything but this perfected order of life; imagine your son." *

In other words, a marvelously inventive technology and an expanding economy have combined to produce extraordinary physical and social changes in American life. Agricultural mechanization has sent millions of people from the farms into the cities; millions of others have migrated along new highways from the central cities into sprawling suburbs. A growing number of Americans—and their children—found themselves enjoying a new prosperity as the ranks of the middle classes swelled.

Of course, not all Americans shared in this postwar prosperity. Unemployment reached high levels during the Eisenhower years in the absence of government programs to counteract the loss of jobs from technological change, and conditions of life in the slums and ghettos continued to deteriorate through neglect. But it was not from the families of displaced workers or slum dwellers that the New Youth emerged. They were cradled, by and large, in the affluence of the middle classes and many of their most basic attitudes and drives can be understood only in this context.

(If the term "New Youth" is conventionally reserved for the offspring of the affluent middle classes, it is nonetheless obvious to anyone who reads the newspapers and watches television that there is also a New Youth in the black ghettos of America and that they constitute the backbone of much of the current "Black Power" militancy. This, however, is a subject for another article.)

* David T. Bazelon, "A Writer Between Generations," Commentary magazine, February 1969.

Invisible Youth. Dispersed through the community, many young people live quietly, hold jobs, raise families.

But there is a very large number of youths who do not fall into this highly-publicized category. Not all youth are middle class; not all go to college. A good half of the young go directly from high school into the labor market. They marry, establish households, have children, go to work in factories and offices, and join unions.

Today these seem to be the Invisible Youth. Nobody writes articles about them; there are few studies of their habits, attitudes and life styles. For this there are probably several reasons.

First of all, the Invisible Youth are residentially and occupationally dispersed: they do not live in clusters and they are diffused throughout the industrial and clerical workforce. The New Youth, on the other hand, are institutionally concentrated in colleges and universities, segregated, so to speak, by age and largely by social class. They are consequently more conspicuous—and easier to study. It also happens that they are closer, physically and in other ways, to those who do the studying, namely, academic sociologists and other adult intellectuals.

Another probable reason for the lack of attention paid the Invisible Youth is that all of us tend to be more interested in what is new and different in our society than in what we take to be commonplace. It seems to be true that what is new and different—in the way of inventions, values and cultural styles—is acquired first by society's chief beneficiaries, the well-to-do and their children. New fashions, whether in clothes, ideas or behavior, are slower in reaching the children of workers. The latter seem to follow more closely in the familiar footsteps of their parents and are therefore presumed to be less interesting objects of study.

Yet it is possible to peer beneath the veil of darkness that enshrouds the Invisible Youth and perceive some general features. We will find that there are some characteristics that they share with the New Youth and some in which they are quite different. What they share are the products of a common generational experience; what they do not share are the products of a common class experience.

One thing that both groups share is a non-experience—non-experience of the Great Depression. Having myself just turned 30 and, therefore, having no memory of the economic collapse, I am convinced that this is the great dividing line between the generations. (Although I have gone through periods of personal poverty, and thus try not to be reckless with my paycheck when it comes, I do not have the same frugal attitude towards money, the same saving instinct, that my parents have. I may worry about the economic policies of the Nixon Administration, but deep down I do not really fear that the economic bottom can fall out from under me—a fear that lingers among people who suffered through the Depression.)

Among the New Youth, as we shall see, this non-experience of the Depression often takes the form of a lack of interest in the material aspirations and needs of ordinary people. Among the Invisible Youth, who generally have had a harder time of things, it takes a different form, one which is familiar to older trade unionists—a lack of identification with, and appreciation for, the past struggles and achievements of the labor movement. These struggles and achievements were won before the young worker entered the labor market and he cannot see how his life was transformed by his union. For him, the union is simply an instrument for winning periodic wage hikes and even in this he may feel it is not doing a good enough job.

There is some evidence of a growing resentment among young workers, a feeling that they are being left out of the "affluent society." While not caught in the extremes of poverty, they feel the pressure of all the expenses that are involved in beginning a family. They feel the pinch of inflation, they have a hard time finding a home they can afford, they have no savings to fall back on in an emergency, etc. And all the while the TV commercials and newspaper advertisements keep beckoning them into the world of Florida vacations, color television sets and other luxurious sensations. All of this breeds a restlessness, a fear of becoming marginal to "the action," that I suspect is behind the recent tendency of many young workers to vote down contracts negotiated by their union leaders.

This same fear of being left behind while others are "making it" also accounts for why young workers appeared to be especially vulnerable to the demagoguery of George Wallace during the 1968 election campaign. Wallace articulated the belief of a considerable minority of less-than-securely-affluent working people that they were being made to bear the burden of financing a war on poverty and improving conditions for Negroes while their own needs were being ignored. Whether or not this belief was grounded in fact, it is true that without sufficiently massive government programs in the fields of job creation, housing, education, health care, etc., initial efforts to alleviate poverty can touch off a scramble between the have-nots and the have-littles over scarce resources. Thus the votes that Wallace picked up from young workers cannot be attributed to racism pure and simple. They must also be seen, at least in part, as an expression of rebellion—a misguided rebellion, to be sure—against the circumstances of relative economic insecurity.

This is something the New Youth find hard to understand. Not having experienced economic hardship, they often demonstrate a cavalier insensitivity to the material aspirations of others, including the Invisible Youth. (With all the talk about the "generation gap," we are apt to forget that there are gaps within generations as well as between them.) This is especially true of many young radicals who, having abjured economic motives for themselves, cannot abide them in others—and who consequently have made themselves what must be the first generation of radicals in American history who are fundamentally out of sympathy with the organized working class movement.

Similarly, it is noteworthy that many New Leftists who have joined community organizing projects among the black and white poor have not focused primarily on economic reform. Rather their goal, for the poor, has been greater "participation in the decision-making process." They have been more interested in "community control," "self-determination" and "decentralization" than in massive government programs to destroy the ghettos, abolish slums and provide adequate funds for public education.

Sometimes, of course, this emphasis on "participatory democracy" springs from certain theories about political action—as when New Leftists try to get higher payments for welfare clients, not mainly to alleviate their immediate poverty but to destroy the welfare system by overloading it, in the hope that it will give way to some form of guaranteed income. (The trouble with this tactic is that if it fails the consequences of wrecking the existing system will be suffered not by the young middle-class radicals but by the poor themselves.)

Very often, the young activists seem blind to the fact that the poor are really more interested in escaping from poverty than in joining committees and experiencing the dubious pleasure of endless meetings and discussions. They are more interested in changing their economic status than in overcoming the "powerlessness" that the young radicals insist is the root of their problem.

When the New Left talks about powerlessness, it is hard to avoid concluding that they are in fact projecting onto the poor their own strongly felt grievance, one that grows out of their own economic and cultural backgrounds. More than one observer has noted that a high proportion of New Leftists come from permissive, upper-middle class families, usually of a liberal persuasion. Their parents did not scold or spank; they reasoned. Democratic discussion took the place of nakedly exercised authority; family decisions were arrived at collectively, not by decree.

John Gordon Empire, Black Star

Student confrontation. Delegates to Students for a Democratic Society conference find themselves the target of ridicule.

As such a youngster grows up, however, he is confronted with the hard reality that society is not organized along the lines of his family. Authority is clear-cut and often peremptory—in the form of policemen, bosses, bureaucrats, the military and even professors. And none of these authorities has as his primary purpose the flowering of the youth's individual personality. The youth's bewilderment, then indignation, is not a put-on. It is genuine.

His distrust of authority applies not only to the outside world but also to his own organizations or movement, where ostensibly there are to be no leaders, no spokesmen, no discipline—just everybody doing his own thing. Indeed, the New Leftist resents hierarchy in his own movement most of all, for nothing is worse than authority that is masked by democratic forms. That, after all, was the trickery, the hypocrisy, of his parents.

But family upbringing is only one factor in the molding of the young activist. Two other factors must be looked at: the condition of higher education and the overall social and political climate in the country.

The Colleges and Social Change

The enormous growth of higher education in the post-Sputnik years has created serious problems for colleges and universities. The old-fashioned notion of the university as a training ground for leisured gentlemen—a liberal arts education was intended for young men at liberty, that is, free from the necessity of work—had to give way before the onrush of new waves of students. Instead of small, cloistered seminars, the students found themselves in large, crowded lecture halls. Instead of intimate contact with famed professors, they encountered graduate assistants and instructors wired for sound. The famed profs were confining their teaching to small groups of graduate students or else they were busy on research projects.

What the students found, in short, were impersonalized, bureaucratized and computerized institutions which, to make matters worse, often insisted also on exercising an almost parental control over the young—the principle of "in loco parentis" (in place of the parents).

An adolescent reared in a permissive family is not apt to enjoy petty rules and regulations in any case; but when they are administered by an impersonalized institution through a regimentation that denies his individuality and in a unilateral way that denies his maturity, trouble is in the making. And, without going into detail, one must recognize that many of the precepts of college administrators were indeed outmoded, remnants of an earlier American culture and its values which had been radically transformed.

Another sharp criticism could have been made of the colleges and universities throughout the 1950s and early 1960s, but it did not come to light until a year or two ago: Institutions of higher learning were doing little or nothing in the way of programs for working class or slum youth, black or white. If academia had opened its aristocratic doors to the great white middle classes, it seemed prepared to go no further.

All these conditions pointed to the need for far-reaching university reform. Yet throughout the 1950s, the campuses were relatively quiescent. The complacency and apathy of the Eisenhower years were reflected among the students—the "silent generation," they were called. McCarthyism (Joe) had frightened many academicians into intellectual conformity. It took momentous events off the campus to reawaken reformist zeal on the campus; and, ironically, under the pressure of these events, the most active students bypassed meaningful university reform and plunged into other issues. Even now it is clear that the upheavals that have been rocking the campuses in recent months are aimed less at changing educational policies than at altering the institutional relationships of the university to external forces and issues.

Foremost among the events that reawakened the campus was, of course, the sit-in movement launched by southern Negro students in early 1960. Its significance lay not only in its spotlighting of an enormous social injustice, racial segregation, but in the lesson it seemed to convey that students, utilizing direct action, could by themselves bring about institutional change. For many young people, this was a deeply personal revelation, one that suggested an effective shortcut around the cumbersome political process. (It did not then occur to them that there were profound social, economic and political reasons why lunchcounter segregation would yield to direct action, that a great many complex forces had to converge before this tactic could become successful, and that not all forms of inequality and injustice could be rooted out in the same way.)

The next "event" was the belated discovery of poverty. For the first time, many young people began to see the vital connection between segregation and economics, between race and class. They perceived that the ghettos were products not only of color barriers but of poverty, too, of a maldistribution of wealth, of decades of social neglect. They saw that the poor were white as well as black and brown; and they began to grasp the full consequences of the do-nothing and do-wrong policies of the Eisenhower years—subsidies to the rich, technological unemployment, deteriorating housing, suburban sprawl and a swelling backlog of unmet needs in mass transit, education, medical care, etc.

To the labor movement, these facts come as no surprise; fighting poverty is its day-to-day business. But to the idealistic children of affluence, the discovery of vast economic inequality in America, of the coexistence of extreme wealth and extreme poverty, came as a shock.

Whereas the labor movement, out of its long experience, had developed a broad, comprehensive social and economic program for a more democratic distribution of wealth, the response of the students was moral outrage.

And whereas the labor movement had created economic organizations through which the collective power of the have-nots could be mobilized to get more, many of the young activists, concluding that American society was fundamentally corrupt, sought to divest themselves of their middle-class origins by going to live among the poor in the slums, sharing their conditions of life and their freedom from the corruptions of prosperity. Just as radical intellectuals in the 1930s tended to idealize the proletariat, so did many of the New Radicals of the 1960s find the poor possessed of a warehouse full of unique virtues and strengths. (Of course, the best of the young activists came to see that poverty does not ennoble but corrupts, and they are much the wiser and more valuable for their experience in the slums.)

The third major "event" in the shaping of the modern student movement was the war in Viet Nam. There is no need to discuss here the pros and cons of American policies in Southeast Asia, except to say that the problems there must strike any intelligent democrat as exceedingly complex.

For many of the New Youth, however, they were not complex at all. After all, how could a racist society, in which the rich were getting richer and the poor poorer, be anything but imperialist in its foreign policies? We have seen that America is not a genuine democracy; how can we believe the government when it says the Viet Cong is totalitarian? Et cetera, et cetera. Thus went the strange logic that led some young people (a tiny minority, to be sure), who bravely fought in the struggle for Negro voting rights in Mississippi, to march in demonstrations with the flag of the Viet Cong, which does not believe in free elections. And, of course, there were always Old Leftists around —Stalinists, Maoists, Castroites and assorted fellow travelers—to encourage a simple-minded anti-Americanism along with the notion that "the enemy of my enemy is my friend."

Rebellion and Response

So far we have been talking about the students as if they were one ball of wax. Of course they are not, although I believe the trends and attitudes I have been describing have affected most young people in one way or another. But it is time to start making some distinctions.

There are approximately 23 million Americans between 18 and 24 years of age. About 8 million of them are either now in college or have already been there. Of these 8 million, according to the January issue of Fortune magazine, 40 percent are defined "mainly by their lack of concern about making money." They would prefer to teach or perform other social services than to pursue careers in business or the lucrative professions.

In other words, while there has been a marked growth of social idealism on the campuses, the majority of students—60 percent—pursue the conventional materialism.

Of the other 40 percent, Fortune estimated two-thirds were in favor of draft resistance and two-thirds also thought it appropriate to engage in civil disobedience. Thus, of the 8 million college youth, about 2 million—or 25 percent—may be said to look favorably on radical forms of protest.

This does not mean, of course, that there are 2 million New Leftists around the campuses. The term "draft resistance" covers a wide range of activities—all the way from counseling youth to become conscientious objectors to burning draft cards or running off to Canada. It is perhaps not surprising that, considering the unpopularity of the Viet Nam war and the many criticisms that have been leveled at the draft, by hawks and doves alike, there should be large numbers of students who would look with favor upon those of their peers who engage in "draft resistance." Nor should we be surprised that there are lots of students who simply don't want to let their lives be interrupted by military service.

Similarly, the philosophy and practice of "civil disobedience" has a long tradition in America that far predates the New Left. Civil disobedience that is governed by non-violence, by respect for the civil liberties of others and by a willingness to accept the consequences of breaking the law as a sign of respect for law—that is, civil disobedience of the kind practiced in the early days of the civil rights movement—is a far cry from the violent, obstructionist and undemocratic tactics of confrontation that have characterized recent New Left campus demonstrations.

Bearing these distinctions in mind, one may safely estimate that of the 2 million college young who "look favorably on radical forms of protest," the majority do so from a vantage point that could be described as liberal or democratic-radical rather than as New Left. Thus I would doubt that more than 10 percent of the college population identifies with the New Left, and even for most of them the identification is more passive than active.

This does not mean that many liberal students are not sometimes attracted to the New Left. For the latter are relatively well organized and are able to respond to issues and events more rapidly than their less fanatical peers. Unfortunately, the New Left, because of the publicity given to its increasingly extremist tactics, will continue to serve as the self-appointed spokesman for this generation of students—until the liberal majority can be organized into a more coherent and effective force on the campus.

For the fact is that you cannot beat a movement with no movement. A return to the apathy of the 1950s is no answer. Indeed, the current New Left is largely a product of that apathy. Had conservatism and complacency not dominated the campuses in the 1950s, there would have emerged during that decade an intermediary generation of idealistic and democratic liberals and radicals—who would now be in their mid-30s—who could have tutored and guided the young radicals of the 1960s. If there is a generation gap, one of the reasons for it is that there is in fact a "missing generation" and it was smothered by the "silent generation."

If "calming the kids down" is no real solution, neither in the final analysis is repression. Strong measures must be taken to prevent a handful of students from obstructing the rights of the majority. But a sustained policy of repression may well strengthen the hands of the extremists as well as transform the institutions of higher learning into armed camps in which real education becomes impossible. Moreover, it is in the nature of repression that it is contagious and that it can create a climate in which reactionaries who are anti-labor, as well as anti-New Left, can flourish and acquire respectability.

What is needed is not less student organization and activity, but more—of the right kind.

There are grounds for optimism. There are signs of disintegration in the New Left and there are promising efforts under way to provide alternative routes for students interested in democratic social change.

When Students for a Democratic Society, the most important New Left organization, was formed in the early 1960s, it proclaimed its independence from old dogmas of the Left and opened up an umbrella for student radicals of all kinds. Rejecting the rigid ideologies and sectarianism of the "Old Left," it adopted a kind of populist vocabulary and was hailed as the voice of a new spirit among the young, an authentic indigenous radicalism growing out of an intimate involvement in the problems of modern American society.

Ted Cowell, Black Star

Behind the barricades during strike at Columbia University.

Starting out with a few hundred members, SDS grew rapidly, riding the wave of the new radicalism. It now claims some 30,000 members, a claim difficult to substantiate or deny. But, paradoxically, as its membership begins to peak, SDS finds itself torn by internal factionalism, immersed in the most infantile political sectarianism and increasingly isolated from the liberal forces both on and off the campus.

There isn't space here to describe in detail how SDS got to this point, but the process can be summed up like this: Having begun with a broad liberal-radical appeal, the organization consistently rejected a majoritarian strategy for change; in its eyes, the unions had been corrupted by prosperity and the liberals were hypocritical; the agents of social change would be the students themselves or students in alliance with the poor.

If there was a kind of romantic charm in this approach, it also contained the seeds of a dangerous elitism, a prescription for social change by militant minorities. The result was predictable. The history of American radical movements suggests that when they reject coalition with the broad-based mass liberal forces in the country, they end up in a ditch on the side of the road, their frustration generating ever more desperate tactics and extremist ideologies.

This is where SDS is today. A number of its chapters have been taken over by the Progressive Labor Movement, the voice of Maoism in the U.S. The "first generation" of SDS leaders (now about 30 years old) are themselves somewhat appalled to see SDS conferences given over to raucous faction fighting among Maoists, Castroites, anarchists and assorted "crazies."

Another sign of disintegration is that in the last couple of years a good many New Left activists have dropped out of politics altogether for the pleasures of hippiedom. At the same time, SDS itself seems to have taken on more and more of the characteristics of the hippies and yippies, including a taste for the bizarre and theatrical. Their version of radical politics seems to be degenerating from a commitment to transforming society to a delight in shocking it. This in itself could be a source of humor, were it not that a hateful violence has been added to their arsenal of devices designed to petrify the bourgoisie.

In this connection, it should be mentioned that SDS has failed to attract or win the respect of young black extremists who adhere to the view of Franz Fanon that violence is a healthy purgative on the road to revolutionary manhood. The young black militants prefer to run their separate organizations and look with mild contempt upon the white militants from the suburbs.

What may prove more troublesome to the New Left than its internal difficulties is the external opposition it has begun to face on the campuses. A couple of years ago, few liberals and democratic-radical students were willing to take on the New Left. Although disturbed by its alienating tactics and its mindless revolutionary rhetoric, they tended to regard it, with resignation, as the wave of the future or at least the near future; and besides, they felt, the real problem on campus was not activism, however misguided, but the apathy and indifference of the majority.

There are signs that this is changing as a growing number of young people, while sympathetic to the need for social change, including university reform, recognize that the results of New Left action are counter-productive, that they invite not progressive reform but repressive disorder. They also see—at campuses like the University of Connecticut, San Francisco State College, Brandeis and the University of Wisconsin—that the New Left activists are all too willing to trample on the civil liberties and academic freedom of others. Thus at the University of Connecticut some 2,000 students signed petitions demanding stern action against the few score demonstrators who seized campus buildings and obstructed education for everyone else.

The New Leftists will no doubt contend that opposition to them springs from conservative, careerist or apathetic students, but the facts are otherwise.

The national student group that has most effectively and consistently challenged the New Left has been the Young People's Socialist League, the youth affiliate of the Socialist Party of the late Norman Thomas, which can hardly be described as right-wing. The YPSL has vigorously attacked the go-it-alone confrontationist line of SDS, with its overtones of elitism and violence, and has urged students to join in the building of a democratic, majority movement for social change based on a coalition of liberals, labor and the civil rights movement. The YPSL also has pushed a strong position against racial segregation, including the black nationalist and "black power" varieties.

Students of the "democratic left" have not confined themselves, however, to ideological warfare with the New Left. They also organized young people into new forms of practical action. Thus, in the winter of 1967-68, the United States Youth Council—representing a wide range of student organizations, including the NAACP Youth Council, the College Young Democrats, the Young Christian Movement and the YPSL—launched a project called "Frontlash '68." Its purpose was to involve young people in alliance with labor to combat the racial backlash and to help expand political participation through voter registration and education in poor and working class communities.

With the help of several adult groups—the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, the A. Philip Randolph Institute and the League for Industrial Democracy—"Frontlash" set up voter education projects in ten cities and suburban areas in the states of California, New York, Michigan, Ohio and Massachusetts. In Los Angeles and Long Island, especially, the "Frontlash" effort was largely responsible for the reelection of liberal congressmen.

The "democratic left" groups have been growing, recruiting both from the ranks of the disillusioned New Left and from among that 40 percent of the student population for whom the pursuit of the fast buck is not the highest aim in life. Many of this latter group entered mainstream politics for the first time in the 1968 primaries and elections. Troubled by the unresolved problems of the society, worried about what the next four years of the Nixon Administration may bring, yet "turned off" by what they have recently seen of the New Left, these young people can make a valuable contribution to the reconstruction of American society in the decades ahead.

But if they are to succeed, they need help in organizing and in getting their point of view across on the campuses of the country. They want and need the counsel and assistance of adults who have experience in the struggles for a more democratic social and economic order. They need, perhaps above all, to be able to relate their own needs and ideals to the larger issues that affect the daily lives of American working people.

Of all the institutions of American life, I believe the labor movement has the most to offer these young people who want a meaning and sense of purpose in their lives, who want to join in the building of a better society. Historically, the labor movement has found valuable allies among idealistic and socially conscious young people. That alliance was weakened by the conservatism of the 1950s and shaken by the rise of the New Left. Now is the time to begin anew the rebuilding of the bridge.

Most students take conventional course, shy from protest.

Student Protest

Collision on campus

Student revolt spurs protests by businessmen

As trustees, alumni, or employers, executives are caught in university crossfire. Some blame administrators, and threaten to cut aid

After Cornell storm, student leader Edward Whitfield discusses pact with acting dean Ernest F. Roberts, Jr.

The U. S. businessman is listening with increasing concern this spring to the shrill voice of dissidence rising from the American campus. He has to, because, like it or not, he's involved.

More and more, from Harvard to Stanford, he, his business, and even his principles are coming under fire. Anti-war factions condemn his defense work, and plague his recruiters. If he's a trustee, he is suspected of maintaining the university as an employment pool for the "military-industrial complex." Black militants are quick to add the charge of racism.

This week, whether they be trustees, alumni, or simply never-wents, U. S. businessmen were reacting with varying degrees of dismay to the campus revolt—and particularly to the racial overtones of an ugly week at Cornell University in which black students holed up with guns, and a cross was burned KKK-style in front of a black women's dormitory.

While many businessmen recognize merit in some of what the students say, they bridle at the violence of recent protests. Their concern was echoed in high places when President Nixon, addressing the U. S. Chamber of Commerce earlier this week, condemned "lawlessness" on campus, and declared its time for the colleges "to have the backbone to stand up against this kind of situation." His Chamber audience applauded long and loudly.

An education. Certainly, the businessman most deeply immersed in university affairs currently is Robert W. Purcell, chairman of Cornell's trustees and chairman of the finance committee of the International Basic Economy Corp. Since the explosion at Ithaca, N. Y., he has spent 90% of his working time on the problem. It has been an education, he feels, for all concerned.

"In a situation as complex and tense and fast-moving as this one, where firearms appeared for the first time on a campus," he says, "the Cornell administration was faced with a whole new and unprecedented situation which no one was trained to handle. Looking back, everyone might say to himself that perhaps if they'd done a little differently we would have had a better result."

His fellow trustee, New York advertising executive H. Victor Grohmann, is frankly relieved that Cornell survived without actual bloodshed or even interruption of classes. Toward the rebels he takes an elder's view: "They'll grow up someday."

The cost. Will the trouble hurt Cornell? "No question about it," Purcell says gloomily. He is particularly concerned about the impact it may have on contributions, and he is not alone.

George E. Smith, president of Atlanta-based J. M. Tull Industries, Inc., says: "I think what is happening in the colleges may result in their losing a lot of the businessmen's support. Businessmen are beginning to lose their enthusiasm."

The University of Pittsburgh's chief trustee, William H. Rea, chairman of Oliver Tyrone Corp., real estate developers, fears similar consequences for U. S. higher education in general. "It's very expensive to run," he says, "and if the public, which holds the final purse strings, cuts off support, everyone will lose, and we'll be playing into the hands of the destructive anarchist group."

Reaction. If the campus radicals, such as the aggressive Students for a Democratic Society, view businessmen with distaste, businessmen are quick to declare the feeling is mutual. B. J. Bandy, executive vice-president of Coronet Industries, Inc., Dalton, Ga., snaps: "I am convinced they should be put in jail—or under it."

Dillard Munford, chairman of Jackson-Atlantic Co., Atlanta, and a trustee of predominantly Negro Morris Brown College, is particularly irked by rebel professors. "They're about to wear out this academic freedom bit," he says. "I think life, perhaps, is too easy for them."

A Cleveland businessman, who pooh-poohs the intellectual pretensions of SDS and others, declares: "The main problem is that too damned many kids are going to college these days. In years past, these kids left high school and went into the Army or to apprentice butcher's school or something. Now they go to college. It's little wonder they want to burn the place down."

Positivism. The University of Pittsburgh's Rea separates the black dissidents from the rest, and feels their complaints are legitimate. He also sees some merit in changes other students

Troubles on the U. S. university scene impinge on the businessman directly in his role as college trustee, alumnus, or just as community leader. The turmoil also hits him in at least two other areas:

- As a recruiter of new talent for management ranks, the businessman returns from a year on campus and reports business more or less as usual Page 30
- As an industrial employer, he worries about reports that student dissidents plan a summer 'work-in' to convert his plant force to radical change Page 31

seek to make in the American university. On the other hand, he says: "The SDS is an organization that is not going to go away. The best way for students and faculty themselves to overcome it is to discredit it by pushing positive programs." The prospect of this happening, however, he finds "not encouraging."

Donald S. Bittinger, president of the Washington Gas Light Co. and a trustee of American University, makes no bones about it: He considers SDS "just a bunch of anarchists," and sees no sense in dealing with them, now or ever. "I wouldn't hire a member of SDS under any circumstances," he declares.

Balance sheet of blame

Generally, businessmen lay the campus troubles as much to the permissiveness of administrators as to the radical students, and would like to see discipline tightened all around.

"Have a sensible set of rules," advises Mark Shepherd, Jr., president of Texas Instruments, Inc., Dallas, and a trustee of Southern Methodist University, "and then be firm about maintaining them."

"I am deeply concerned over university heads who have, in some instances, abdicated their responsibility for control," says Eugene P. Berg, chairman and president of Bucyrus-Erie Co., South Milwaukee. "Whatever the faculty votes, that's the way it's done. That's a poor way to run a railroad."

Hard line. A business favorite among university administrators is Maurice B. Mitchell, chancellor of the University of Denver and former president of Encyclopaedia Britannica, judging from how often he is asked to address business meetings. Mitchell established his no-nonsense reputation when Denver students attempted a sit-in at the registrar's office. Mitchell declared, "The proper length of a sit-down strike is about five minutes," and called the police.

His trustees are solidly behind him. One, Denver businessman Richard H. Olson, says: "We've seen around the country what can happen when these things are not handled properly."

In their role as trustees, many businessmen do not consider campus discipline their direct responsibility, but rather that of the administrators. Houston businessman Gardiner Symonds, a trustee of both Rice and Stanford Universities, detects among his business associates "a mounting irritation and impatience with the inability of administration and faculty to come to grips with the problems."

Stanford has had its problems. Spearheaded by SDS, students ousted recruiters of Dow Chemical Co., whose products include napalm, a prime target of anti-Vietnam war protesters. Mysterious fires have twice burned a building under construction for the Naval ROTC. Former President J. E. Wallace Sterling's office was put to the torch.

Embattled trustees. Lately, Stanford's activists have turned their guns on the trustees, and in January disrupted a board meeting, demanding an end to military-related research at the university and at its Stanford Research Institute. Last week, U. S. marshals carted away classified material from the university's Applied Electronics Laboratory for safekeeping.

The pressure resulted in a face-off between a five-man panel of trustees and student activist spokesmen. It was a disaster for the trustees. They were asked, among other things, if they would make the resources of the university and their companies available to those opposing the U. S. in Vietnam, and at one point were urged to resign "and let the community replace you with men who will lead by strength of their vision and not by their power."

A failure to communicate

While most businessmen agree that improved communication between business and students is needed, efforts at face-to-face talks have been generally disappointing. A session called in St. Louis last week to discuss campus unrest drew 200 students, educators, and clergymen, but only 65 businessmen. The arrangers say they asked 1,200 companies to come.

Indications that the next generation of managers may take a keener interest in the changes being worked on the campuses and U. S. society in general were evident last week at Harvard Business School. A symposium on campus ferment, at which President Nathan M. Pusey made his first public appearance since student unrest flared at Harvard a couple of weeks ago, drew some 1,200 members of the business school community.

How to cope. Presumably, the B-school graduates will have to cope with the campus activists when, if ever, they and their ideas enter the business world, a prospect many businessmen view with mingled hope and despair. Max Palevsky, president of Scientific Data Systems, Inc., remarks: "It certainly bodes ill for industrial discipline. If this kind of irrationality spreads to industry, it would be disastrous."

H. Russell Smith, president of Avery Products Corp., on the other hand, says: "I think they [the students] will become responsible with maturity. I think there will be more push for the bright ones who come into industry to have responsibility, and industry is going to have to be responsive to that."

Robert W. Purcell, top Cornell trustee, gives campus crisis 90% of his time.

"What happens to these people when they get into business," J. E. Finley, Continental Oil Co.'s group vice-president for North American exploration and production, believes, "depends on what happens to the economy. Ideals don't get as much attention in depressions as in good times."

All things being equal, he expects the students will bring their ideals with them, and perhaps make the business world a more exciting, if chancier, place. "These people aren't going to spend all their extra time on the beaches," he says.

H. Victor Grohmann, adman on Cornell board, is relieved bloodshed was averted.

Student Protest

Will SDS crash plant gate?

Indications that students plan summer 'work-ins' stir concern in industry

SDS headquarters is in building at right on bleak Chicago street.

Industry is receiving disturbing warnings that campus unrest may spread this summer to plants, under the direction of Students for a Democratic Society. The Illinois Manufacturers' Assn. recently sent its members a special bulletin alerting them to SDS plans for "a summer work-in."

"The Students for a Democratic Society is apparently preparing to try to branch out into manufacturing plants," the association warned. "Employers should be alert to the problems posed by this program, and should make plans as to the best manner of handling suspected troublemakers."

Alliance. The "program" mentioned by the association is intended, according to an SDS manual, to close ranks between "intellectual students" and "the largest section of the population—the workers." An SDS bulletin urges students to end their isolation. "We should not and cannot remain in our 'ivory tower' . . . SDS is planning a program that will help students get summer jobs in an attempt to break down barriers for a student-worker alliance."

The organization suggests the kind of job to look for (places that have several hundred workers, the majority white if the SDS member is white, black if he is black); how to get a job (try not to mention you are a student, if you take an aptitude test don't show off, don't dress like a slob or hippy), and what to expect and do in the plant.

"Don't be shocked by racist remarks of the white workers, by confused political impressions, pro-war talk, 'keeping up with the Joneses' talk. If the workers understood racism, the war, middle-class morality, capitalist manipulation, etc., things would not be the way they are," the SDS says.

"We can't expect wild things in three months, but we can begin . . . Try to make friends and get addresses and phone numbers . . . to contact them again later," says SDS.

Question. An attempt to find out more about SDS's plans produced nothing concrete or startling. The national headquarters in Chicago emphatically denied any knowledge of a national program for a summer work-in. A girl in bell-bottom jeans in the Skid Row office of SDS scoffed: "Kids have been getting summer jobs with the working class ever since 1964. It's nothing new." Others said that a national program would be against SDS policy. "Ours is a participatory democracy," explained a member.

In other parts of the country, SDS leaders said much the same thing. In Ohio, leaders said, "it's in the investigation stage."

"We're kind of putting this together collectively," said Bernie Donanberg, an SDS leader—but not a student—at Ohio State University. "We're trying to figure out how many can participate, how many we can put up in a plant community, and so forth." He added: "Most of us would be getting jobs anyway."

In Philadelphia, a Temple University SDS group conceded that it has some plans to enter industry "quietly" this summer and "talk to the workers about the ABM, the war in Vietnam, and racism." But the group, which claims 30 members, doesn't plan demonstrations.

Talking. In other cities, small but militant SDS groups say they are considering work-in programs, but that they don't intend to create trouble. The aim is to talk to workers and enlist their support for "positive" programs. One SDS leader said, "Our efforts will be educational only, for our own benefit mostly. We will not implement strikes, but if they are going on we will get involved and support them strongly. We believe that one of the biggest problems workers face today is the corruption of union bosses."

The SDS attitude toward unions, and a wariness of youth rebellion generally, have earned the organization a cold shoulder from unions. Labor has its own internal problems with young members—ambitious, impatient with seniority systems, generally more militant. Union leaders see "some threat," as one put it, in SDS getting into plants to meet labor's young militants.

The United Auto Workers is a target of black militants across the country. This week, when 500 of them at Mahwah, N. J., closed a Ford Motor Co. plant over an alleged racial slur, a militant SDS leader was on hand quickly—offering support. Unions see it happening again, wherever there's discontent, during work-ins.

Worries. Employers agree. According to E. Edgerton Hart, executive vice-president of the Illinois Manufacturers' Assn., the SDS program is "insidious . . . It's well organized whether SDS wants to admit it or not."

Hart and many employers are concerned that wariness of SDS job-seekers could cause hardships for "the good kids" who want and need jobs. "Who will be willing to take chances?" he asks.

Still not known is when the work-in program was first drafted. Some reports trace its origin to an SDS conference last December. But copies of the SDS plan are known to have existed as long ago as last summer, when some SDS strategists were talking—as now—of linking the "intellectual" and the "proletariat." One SDS leader called the present plan "an old program with a new blue ribbon."

Business Week reporters in a number of cities said they found a lot of talk and not actual planning. Reported one: "When we asked about work-in plans, one SDS leader thought a minute and said, 'Why the hell not? We've got to be doing something, anyway.' "

SPC

Southern Taxes Not Related To Principal

11-17-69

The State

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — An Atlanta research consultant, specializing in fiscal problems, says in a report that tax structures of southern states "bear little relationship to the ability-to-pay principle."

The report, by Dr. Eva Galambos, was released by the Southern Regional Council, Inc.

Dr. Galambos also charged that "property taxes are no respecters of poor families or senior citizens . . . and corporate income tax structures (in the South) fail to meet generally accepted standards of progressivity."

Her study included 11 states: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Her conclusions are that three major approaches are necessary to correct present inequities of southern tax structures.

These include:

—Increased use of the income tax with more progressive rates at both state and local levels provides the major possibility of reform of tax structures which now lean heavily on sales and property taxes.

—Sales and property taxes as major revenue producers are not likely to be abandoned . . . but tax credits and rebates offer an alternative "to offset the regressive effects of property and consumer taxes on low income families."

—Equalized property assessments would not only raise the revenue potential, but also would distribute the tax burden more equitably.

According to Paul Anthony, council executive director, the report stemmed from "a conviction that state and local governments, because of outmoded tax structures, were not adequately equipped to deal with a host of unmet public needs."

According to Anthony, priorities which suffer most from insufficient financing in the South include public education, public assistance, mental health programs and penal reform.

TAXES IN SOUTH REPORTED UNFAIR

Chattanooga Times

Research Consultant in Atlanta Critical of 11-State Area

4-17-69

ATLANTA (AP)—An Atlanta research consultant, specializing in fiscal problems, says in a report that tax structures of southern states "bear little relationship to the ability-to-pay principle."

The report, by Dr. Eva Galambos, was released by the Southern Regional Council, Inc.

Dr. Galambos also charged that "property taxes are no respecters of poor families or senior citizens. . .and corporate income tax structures in the South fail to meet generally accepted standards of progressivity."

Her study included 11 states: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Her conclusions are that three major approaches are necessary to correct present inequities of southern tax structures.

Income Tax

These include:

—Increased use of the income tax with more progressive rates at both state and local levels provides the major possibility of reform of tax structures which now lean heavily on sales and property taxes.

—Sales and property taxes as major revenue producers are not likely to be abandoned. . .but tax credits and rebates offer an alternative "to offset the regressive effects of property and consumer taxes on low income families."

—Equalized property assessments would not only raise the revenue potential, but also would distribute the tax burden more equitably.

According to Paul Anthony, council executive director, the report stemmed from "A conviction that state and local governments, because of outmoded tax structures, were not adequately equipped to deal with a host of unmet public needs."

According to Anthony, priorities which suffer most from insufficient financing in the South include public education, public assistance, mental health programs and penal reform.

Death Cause

11/17/69 Atlanta Journal

RDC — Tax Chips

Dixie Tax Inequity Rapped by Expert

By The Associated Press

Tax structures of Southern states "bear little relationship to the ability to pay principle," an Atlanta research consultant says.

Dr. Eva Galambos, a specialist in fiscal problems, said in a report that "property taxes are no respecters of poor families or senior citizens . . . and corporate income tax structures (in the South) fail to meet generally accepted standards of progressivity."

Her study included 11 states: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Dr. Galambos, whose report was released last weekend by the Southern Regional Council, Inc., concluded that three major approaches are necessary to correct present inequities of Southern tax structures.

THESE ARE:

—Increased use of income tax at state and local levels, with more progressive rates. This would provide the major possibility of reform of tax structures, which presently rely heavily on sales and property taxes.

—While sales and property taxes as major revenue producers are not likely to be abandoned, tax credits and rebates offer an alternative "to offset the regressive effects of property and consumer taxes on low income families."

—Equalizing of property assessments not only to increase revenue potential but for more equitable distribution of the tax burden.

Paul Anthony, council executive director, said the report stemmed from "a conviction that state and local governments, because of outmoded tax structures, were not adequately equipped to deal with a host of unmet public needs."

Anthony said priorities which suffer most from insufficient financing in the South include public education, public assistance, mental health programs and penal reform.

SRC

SOUTH 'UNFAIR' IN TAX SYSTEM

11-20-69

Disproportionate Burden Is on Two Groups, Report Says

Special to The Chattanooga Times

ATLANTA — A study of the tax structure of the Southern states by the Southern Regional Council finds that the South is bound to a system of taxation that places a disproportionate burden on poor and middle income citizens.

The report, written by Dr. Eva Galambos, an Atlanta research consultant specializing in fiscal problems, notes that regressive sales taxes, which weigh most heavily on lower income groups, represented 58.1 per cent of state taxes nationally.

In the Southern states this figure ranges from a low of 46.8 per cent in Virginia to 77.9 per cent in Mississippi. Both general and selective sales taxes are included in the total.

By contrast, the South's heavy emphasis on sales taxes is "lesser reliance on progressive taxes, or taxes based on ability to pay," Dr. Galambos adds.

Nationally, states with income taxes draw 22.4 per cent of their revenue from income taxes. In the South only Virginia with 30.3 per cent exceeds this national average.

Unequal assessment levels mark the greatest failure in property tax administration, according to Dr. Galambos.

"All the states," she observes, "in effect, grant a property tax subsidy to farm and vacant land owners through unrealistically low valuations by assessors."

Local governments gain revenue from charges and fees for services far in excess of the national 23.5 per cent average. In Alabama 42.9 per cent of local government financing comes from this source.

Local governments in Georgia are next with an average of 40.6 per cent followed by South Carolina (37.7 per cent) Florida (36.0 per cent) North Carolina (35.6 per cent) Louisiana (31.1 per cent) Texas (29.4 per cent) and Virginia (21.9 per cent.

Dr. Galambos attributes the dependence that local governments place on this revenue source to "the failure of most Southern states to permit local governments to levy taxes sufficient to obtain needed revenues. It is also an indication of the inadequate sharing of state taxes derived from other sources."

According to Paul Anthony, executive director of the council, the report "grew out of a conviction that state and local governments were not adequately equipped because of outmoded tax structure to deal with a host of unmet public needs."

Among priorities which suffer most from insufficient financing in the South, Anthony named public education, public assistance, mental and penal institution reform.

The study does not offer specific legislative remedies. Rather, Anthony observes, its concerns are twofold—"tax equity for the sake of simple justice, and finally, as a means to make the South a more livable region for all."

RDC – Tax Study
Clips

Study Shows Taxes In South Hit Poor

Ala Journal 11/23/69

SRC

Janet's copy

By MILO DAKIN
Advertiser Staff Writer

A study of the tax structure of the Southern states by the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta finds that the South is bound to a system of taxation that places a disproportionate burden on poor and middle income citizens.

"It is ironic that the lowest income states make the greatest use of those taxes which weigh most heavily on the poor," states the analysis report by Dr. Eva Galambos.

The study shows that the Southern states do not take full advantage of "more progressive sources," such as personal and corporate income taxes.

"Why this should be is beyond the scope of the present study," says Paul Anthony, executive director of the Southern Regional Council.

Dr. Galambos, a consultant specializing in fiscal problems, found that nationally, states with income taxes draw 22.4 per cent of their revenue from this source. In the South, only Virginia exceeds this national average.

The report shows that Alabama in 1967 drew 11 per cent of its revenue from personal income tax collections.

Since income tax is based "on the ability to pay," the report concludes that "regressive taxation and inadequate state services seem directly to coincide.

"It is in the South, for instance," reads the report, "that public education suffers the most from insufficient financing. It is in the South that public assistance to welfare recipients is the least. It is in the South that living conditions in mental and penal institutions are the most wretched.

"Unequal assessment levels mark the greatest failure in property tax administration," the report continues. "All the Southern states, in effect, grant a property tax subsidy to farm and vacant land owners through unrealistically low valuations by assessors."

Local governments gain revenue from charges and fees for services "far in excess" of the national 23.5 per cent average. In Alabama 42.9 per cent of local government financing comes from this source, according to the report.

